A Bell That Sells Well.

More sales and abundant satisfaction make a pretty good criterion of success in manufacturing, and the year just past shows such a record for the C. S. Bell Company, of Hillsboro, O., in the manufacture of Steel Alloy Bells. This old-established house takes pride in the many letters it receives from purchasers of the Steel Alloy Bells, praising them in the highest degree, proving that the highest standard of quality set for these bells in the beginning has been more than maintained. Notwithstanding the fact that the materials of which these bells are made has nearly doubled in price the makers will continue their donation of one half of the price while the present stock lasts.

NAPOLEON LOST THE BATTLE OF LEIPSIC because of a fit of indigestion. One dose of DICKS' MUL-EN-OL would have given him instant relief, and the fate of the kingdoms of Europe been decided differently. It is really marvelous how quickly a colicky pain will vanish when a teaspoonful of Mul-en-ol in a wineglass of hot water is taken. Try it; you will never suffer from colic.

We invite special attention to the advertisement of W. H. Clarke in this issue. We heartily commend Mr Clarke to our readers as a high-toned, honorable man, who may be implicitly relied upon always to do the right thing. Those who need anything in his line can not do better than to place their orders with him.

"The old oaken bucket, moss-covered bucket that swings in the well," laden with cool, refreshing, thirst-quenching drink, is not more grateful to parched throats than a few drops of delicious MARSDEN'S PECTORAL BALM to relieve a cold which has settled in the throat and chest. It is a sure cure.

EAST MISSISSIPPI FEMALE COLLEGE.

MR. EDITOR: Many of your readers will be interested in a report from us as to the work with which we are entrusted. I had intended giving you a report earlier, but have been away from home most of the time for six weeks. We have completed a concert tour which we made with our director of music, assisted in some places by some of our students in music and elocution. We visited many towns in Mississippi and Louisiana, and gave concerts at the Chautauquas and most of the Summer Normals of both States. We were received with great enthusiasm wherever we went, and made many friends. Especially was this true wherever we met a cultured audience that could recognize fine talent when they meet with it. We thought that, since most of the college catalogues read about alike, it would be well to make a concert tour, and thus let the people see and hear for themselves what kind of talent we have, and it has proved to be an excellent plan. Of course, we could not display our talent except along the lines of music and elocution; yet, when the people know that we are getting the same character of talent in all departments, they can form some estimate of our advantages in the other branches.

We had the most prosperous and the most satisfactory session this year in the history of the college. We enrolled over 300 students, 201 being in the college proper, 130 boarders in the college, 178 in music, 34 in elocution, quite a number in art, dress-making, stenography, typewriting, book-keeping, etc We had only seven graduates, and all of these took only English diplomas. No degrees were conferred at all. It would take each one of these girls who took English diplomas from one to three years to take any degree here. Of course, this is due to the fact that we have raised the course of study so much within the last three years. We have raised it again since commencement. The curriculum in the catalogue is the one we had last year. We have to raise it by degrees in order not to discourage students who entered under the old course of study.

Our college is growing each year in numbers, in influence, and in usefulness. We are getting students from many of the Southern and Western States. Many things contribute to the growth of the college. The excellent health record, the pure water from the deep bored well, the excellent home comforts, the fine table fare, good fires in Winter, the careful oversight of the girls entrusted to us, the home-like surroundings of the college—all add to its attractiveness. The excellent talent we employ has much to do with our success. We are employing such as have studied in some higher institution and made special preparation for their work. But especially are pupils attracted to the college by the fine religious influence that somehow seems to surround them while here. The spiritual atmosphere of the college has been something wonderful. No person has long remained in the college without feeling the very presence of the Holy Spirit. Visitors who have been here for only a short while have remarked upon the spiritual influence they have felt within the college walls. Many girls have said they do not see how it is possible for a girl to remain here a session and not become a true child of God, and we had only about six who held out against the Spirit till the end of the session. We sent out some as fine religious workers and as high a type of Christian young womanhood as I have ever seen anywhere. I am told that they are of great help to their pastors. To God be all the praise! We claim no merit, no peculiar gifts, except what he gives. It is Christ working in the college when we give him the right of way. There is nothing compulsory about religion here. There is nothing fanatical, or extreme, or eccentric. There is simply a deep undercurrent of the Holy Spirit working in the hearts of the girls and teachers. This makes the ponderous machinery run smoothly. There was hardly a jar the whole session. There was scarcely a case of discipline during the entire year more than a few demerits. Love seemed to reign in the college, and it was truly a pleasure to live in this spiritual atmosphere. We are trying to give our girls the advantage of the highest in the intellectual, the physical, and the spiritual life. We leave it to our patrons and our girls to say how well we have succeeded. At any rate, we know that the Holy Spirit is present with us, and that he has set his seal upon the work.

Our prospects for next session are still brighter than for any past session. We have made arrangements for more room to accommodate the increased attendance. We open Sept 20. May our Father send us just the girls he would have us train for him! is our prayer.

J. W. BERSON.

ENCOURAGING.

Bishop Candler writes approvingly of what is being done in Mississippi. North Mississippi preachers must not disappoint him at Greenwood. He is expecting great things of us.

Rev. R. A. Burroughs, P. E, in writing of the success attending efforts made in one of his Quarterly Conferences where the people made a generous contribution beyond any per capita idea, says: "It did us good to see the people so willing to respond. This district must come to the front."

A like determination on the part of every presiding elder and preacher in charge in Mississippi will put us beyond the one-hundred-thousand-dollar line. Let none falter.

Rev. H. G. Hawkins, Madison, Miss., has remitted forty-one dollars to the treasurer, and says "it will be increased."

My recent circular letter has met with a most gratifying reception, and brought very encouraging responses. The first is from Nashville, Tenn. (For be it known, when I go after the Mississippi preachers, I do not neglect the connectional magnates who are so fortunate as to hold their membership in one of the Mississippi Conferences.)

Rev. Jno. W. Boswell, D. D, who is given to doing the right thing at the right time and in the right way, in giving expression to his hearty approval of our work, and of his desire and purpose to have a part in it, says he will contribute with the good people of Holly Springs station, where he holds his Quarterly Conference membership. This is eminently proper, and when Dr. Price adds to it the contributions of his family and flock, we will have a good report from that fine old town.

Rev. C. P. Moss, Nesbit; Rev. W. S. Lagrone, Water Valley; Rev. J. D. Cameron, D. D., Coldwater; Rev. E. F. Edgar, Barlow; Rev. J. P. Drake, Bay St. Louis (his second report)—all write, giving assurance of earnest, active, continuous work for the cause.

Revs. J. M. Wyatt, W. S. Shipman, J. W. Honnoll, T. L. Mellen, are pushing the work in their respective districts.

The preachers in the Forest district will devote October to the interest of this work.

Rev. G. W. Gordon, Ethel, sends an additional report of ten and 30-100 dollars, and "two other churches yet to hear from."

Dr. W. T. J. Sullivan reports thirty-seven and 25-100 dollars from Kosciusko, and says, "This is the beginning."

Rev. W M. Stevens reports forty-nine and 10-100 dollars from Lake.

Rev. T. W Dye, Grenada, reports more than two hundred dollars, and "more to follow."

Rev. M. L Burton, manager Mississippi Orphans' Home, writes there are between twenty-five and thirty orphans in the home who are members of the Methodist Church. They will each, by their own efforts, earn one dollar, and contribute it to the Twentieth Century Fund. And so we enter on the list, "Mississippi Methodist Orphans' Home, thirty dollars!" Who said the members of his charge were too poor to give to this cause?

J. R BINGHAM.

Carrollton, Miss., Sept. 1, 1899.

THE OLDEST FEMALE COLLEGE IN THE WORLD.

Among the beneficent agencies that have given to our Southland its splendid type of cultured womanhood none stands forth in greater prominence than the Wesleyan Female College at Macon, Ga This pioneer in the work of the higher education of women has, during its career of more than sixty years, sent forth such women as Miss Laura Haygood, Mrs. Young J. Allen, Mrs. Colquitt, and scores of others equally prominent and equally influential in molding the social and religious life of this and other lands. Never in its history has the college had better equipment, never a more pleasing outlook. It has a course of study equalled by only two other Southern female colleges, namely: the Randolph-Macon Woman's College and the Baltimore Woman's College, and it enjoys the eminent distinction of ranking with the fifteen best female colleges of America. It has a literary faculty whose successful work in their special departments furnishes an ample guarantee of their high scholarship and excellent character. Its special departments form an unusually attractive feature of its work. There are in all about twenty-five members of the faculty, but our space will not permit us to speak of them in detail, or of the healthy religious tone of the college.

According to the National Mortality Reports, Macon holds second place in healthfulness in the United States. The college building, which is the best and most commodious in the South, is located on the loftiest spot in the city and in the midst of the best residences. It is heated by steam and well lighted by city gas. Electric elevators convey the pupils from floor to floor. Abundance of the purest water, both hot and cold, is supplied on every floor; toilet and bathing arrangements are complete. During the past Summer every inch of plumbing in the building has undergone examination, and wherever needed repairs have been made. Its sanitary condition has been pronounced by experts to be perfect. The building is being entirely refurnished and recarpeted, and everything put in condition to contribute to the health and happiness of the pupils.

BRO. TINNIN'S INACCURACIES AGAIN.

It pains me much to be compelled to correct the erroneous impressions that Bro. Tinnin's rejoinder might create, but the cause of truth demands it.

Bro. Tinnin recounts, with partial accuracy, the trouble at Butler's School-house, once on the Adams circuit, and now on the Summit work, but he fails to tell that he was the real cause of the disaffection there. Of this I have abundant proof.

He tells that I tried to get a deed to the church lot at Whitestown, and failed, but he does not tell that I failed because of the bargain he had made with the owner of the land upon which he had built the church. This gentleman gave me to understand that "they"—i. e., Bro. Tinnin and his helpers in the church enterprise—did not want a deed. Here was the mismanagement: He had gathered up money from the membership of our church in Whitestown and McComb City, and with it had built a church on land we do not own and can not own until he and a few men under his dominance consent, and they have not consented. Neither does he tell that he now proposes to carry with him into the Methodist Protestant Church the building built with money raised to build a M. E Church, South.

He tells of what he did at Fo[illegible]wood, but fails to say what we here know—that what he did is as nothing compared with what he might and ought to have done.

He insists that he did much on the Providence and Adams circuits, but it is very evident that the seeds of dissension sown on those circuits during his pastorates have resulted in a harvest of disorder and decadence, from which they have not yet recovered.

The presiding elder discovered that for some time Bro. Tinnin had been contemplating withdrawal from our church, and that he purposed carrying with him just as many members of our church as he could; and it was very evident that the longer he remained with us, the larger would be that following, and the more injury would he do to our church. This induced the presiding elder to bear no longer with the mismanagement and wrong-doing of the brother, but to remove him at once to a charge where he could do the least harm; hence he ordered him to Pleasant Grove circuit.

Nobody that I know of objects to Bro. Tinnin's going from our church. We have sweet peace in the Brookhaven district now. He was our only note of discord. Why can not he go without trying to make it appear that he was driven to do what he has been so long planning to do?

The whole correspondence on this matter—letters written by himself and others, and mine to him—are in my possession. I shall give them to the public if it becomes necessary.

H. WALTER FEATHERSTUN.

The Tri-State League Assembly.

The Seashore Camp Ground, on the coast of Mississippi, is an ideal place for a great League assembly. The beautiful outlook on Mississippi Sound, with the shipping of the Gulf islands in view, the unsurpassed surf bathing, the picturesque background of ancient live oaks and magnolias and the superior improvements planned and completed by the Camp Meeting Association through a series of years, make up an inventory of attractions which, when there is added the advantages of a delightful climate and cooling, invigorating sea winds, leaves little to be desired. It was a happy conception on the part of New Orleans Leaguers and others to call a Conference or assembly of the Louisiana, Mississippi and Alabama Leaguers for this ideal spot during the days of August. The Tri State Conference opened on the fifteenth instant. We believe this is the beginning of a great and permanent movement in Southern Methodist Leaguedom. The plan and purpose of the meeting is a Chautauqua for the teaching and expounding of League ideas and methods and the founding of a permanent institute for the study of the Bible. We saw at once, when the place and the idea were brought together in our view, the large possibility of the scheme. Future seasons should see tens of thousands of our young Methodist lay people here for a month combining study and recreation, for we declare that as to temperature and general comfort we have found no place on the whole South Atlantic coast superior to it. To the great States of Texas, Georgia, Alabama, and Tennessee it is most convenient, and these hold a large proportion of our League membership. The "Seashore" has the advantage of being well equipped with hotels, restaurants, and a line of most comfortable modern built cottages.—Epworth Era.

LITTLE THINGS.

BY HENRY VAN DYKE.

Only a little shrivelled seed—
It might be a flower or grass or weed;
Only a box of earth on the edge
Of a narrow, dusty window ledge;
Only a few scant Summer showers
Only a few clear, shining hours.
That was all. Yet God could make
Out of these, for a sick child's sake,
A blossom wonder as fair and sweet
As ever broke at an angel's feet.

Only a life of barren pain.
Wet with sorrowful tears for rain:
Warmed sometimes by a wandering gleam
Of joy that seemed but a happy dream.
A life as common and brown and bare
As the box of earth in the window there;
Yet it bore at last the precious bloom
Of a perfect soul in a narrow room—
Pure as the snowy leaves that fold
Over the flower's heart of gold.

THE LEAGUE AS JUNIOR PASTOR.

(Concluded.)

We want now to consider the Epworth League in its relation to the pastor. Its purpose is to aid in the church's work; not to aid in keeping the League alive, but to aid in saving souls, and doing good in other ways. It is to be, not a burden to the pastor, but a burden-bearer. No society in the church should increase pastoral burdens, but should be a more efficient way of bearing these burdens. We sometimes excuse ourselves from organizing and operating societies because we think we have all we can do. Suppose, when reinforcements reach Gen. Otis, he says, 'I can't take them; I have all that I can do," and, setting them aside, attempts to whip the Philippinos all by himself, is that not like the pastor who would ignore all these aids and try to do all the church's work by himself? No untrained army can be relied on. The church must train its members in Christian activity before it can battle successfully with the enemy. A sad mistake has been made by the church in waiting until the members are old to train them. In all walks of life youth is the training-period, and a reason why so many church members kick out when harnessed is a lack of early hitching.

The League fills this long-felt want. It is a training-school on the field of battle; a theological school in which all may matriculate. It trains to Bible study, it stimulates to private devotion, it encourages to service in the congregation, and prepares for leadership during life's training-period. Do not neglect the young people—the greater part of the church's capital.

DEVOTIONAL DEPARTMENT.

There should be purpose in all the work of this department. That the periodical meetings be held is not enough. Make them feel that they are an important part and parcel of the church's work.

At Benton the League members make our prayer-meeting crowds, and I gave them that hour for devotional meetings. The result is larger crowds, more people conducting the meetings and leading in public prayer, and Leaguers feeling that they are a part of the church. The pastor is not so much exhausted, and a part of the church has gotten out of the wagon and are now in the shafts. By giving purpose and aim to these meetings they can be turned to great profit in the conversion of sinners. Let call for penitents be made, and encourage the young people to kneel about the altar, and labor and pray with the convicted soul. Their faith will be strengthened, their zeal quickened, and their souls made to rejoice, and God will be honored. A religious service without aim should never be held.

DEPARTMENT OF CHARITY AND HELP.

The prime purpose of this department is to look after the poor and needy in large congregations, and to be on watch for strangers coming in. This would be great help to anyone, and would take many cares and much labor from the pastor's heart and hand. It would unlock for many the secret of a happy life. But a large per cent. of Leaguers are in the country and small towns, where such work is not so imperative. Let the term "help" be very flexible—a servant of many gifts, a horse that will work anywhere.

We will assign to this department of our Leagues the collection of the Twentieth Century Educational Fund. The plan is for an Educational Rally Day, and the use of the programs sent out by the Board of Education—the exercises to be gotten up by members of the League. The pastor, or some one chosen by the League, will take a subscription for the fund, which subscription will be turned over to the second vice-president, to be collected under the direction of the business meeting of the League, which will also provide for a canvass to reach all members who have not subscribed. This department can be used in securing any collection ordered by the Annual Conference.

The second vice-president of one League has arranged to send out a card of the following form:

THE COMING REVIVAL.

BENTON CHURCH.

Geo. H. Thompson, Pastor.

1st. I will, from the start, attend, as far as practicable, and take some part.

2nd. I will endeavor to interest and secure the attendance of others.

3rd. I will commence to pray: (1) for myself, (2) for the pastor, (3) for the general interest of the meeting, (4) for one, or more, persons whom I am especially anxious to see converted.

This young lady undertook this without a request from anyone else, and had the cards printed at her own expense. This is Epworth League life.

LITERARY DEPARTMENT.

This department can be made to fill a want which nothing else can supply. Every League should have the reading course. The department is without form and void without it. Under the skill of an efficient chairman the course can be used as a text, with a great deal of parallel reading added. The average Methodist is as ignorant of Methodist literature as of the Koran. Let this department be made useful in stimulating this kind of reading, which can be done by using care in the arrangement of a literary program. A good plan is to provide a paper on some conspicuous figure in Methodist history. When possible, arrange for an occasional lecture on such themes. Where practicable, arrange for some visitor to lecture on Susanna Wesley, George Whitefield, Francis Asbury, Jesse Lee, or some other Methodist pioneer.

This department should be made useful in circulating literature, church periodicals, etc. Let one committee work for the Conference organ, another for the general organ, and another for missionary literature. Use this department in spreading missionary intelligence.

Give your League something worth doing, and make them feel that it must be done, and your League will run itself, and not run the pastor down to keep it running.

GEO. H. THOMPSON.

LETTER FROM RUSTON, LA.

MR. EDITOR: The Louisiana Chautauqua can most certainly take her place among some of the older Chautauquas of some of her sister States. When Bishop Vincent originated the first one, even with the ken of his prophetic vision he could scarcely have foreseen the great things that have been accomplished in so many States in this, our day.

The one here at Ruston will soon be in her teens. I am told by those who have been able to judge that it is on the up-grade, and steadily advancing every year. This year the program was a very elaborate one, and promised many grand things to those who came for study, pleasure, or amusement, or only as "lookers on in Venice," to the last of which class this scribbler belongs. It was quite a novel sight to see the large tabernacle, nestled among the hills and beautiful trees, surrounded by a veritable hive of halls of cuit, science, philosophy, history, mechanics, art, kindergarten, and music, with its throngs of busy bees all bent on extracting and laying by all the honey that could possibly be stored up in the course of a month's sojourn in such an uplifting atmosphere.

The motto written on the large blackboard in Tulane Hall was quite unique and suggestive.

"Life without industry is a crime; Industry without art, a brutality."

The ladies and gentlemen who have the management of the whole have enlarged the boundaries of their phylacteries this year in some respects, inasmuch as they allowed dancing and its concomitant evil in the shape of card-playing. It came, too, "in such a questionable shape," that even some of the church members were in a quandary, and seemed to think that in such an intellectual atmosphere the cranium might be in danger of cerebrum enlargement, unless there was a corresponding exercise of the heels.

Some of the former attendants thought the religious element was not up to what it had been in the observance of the Sabbath services. When there was no distinguished divine on the program there was no Sunday-school or services, unless it was a song service, and there seemed to be lacking any reverence of the day on account of there being no religious services.

Ex-Gov. "Bob" Taylor delighted over two thousand people on the twenty-eighth with his inimitable lecture on "Love, Laughter, and Song." It was the day that drew the crowd, and the crowd enjoyed "the feast of reason and flow of soul." He was full of his theme, and that seems to be the secret of his power over the audience.

After the closing of the Chautauqua, Miss Mary Stuart Cundiff, of Albany, Oregon, died at Ruston, at the home of Prof. Carson, whom she was visiting. She had been away from home studying at the Columbia School of Oratory at Chicago. She entertained the audience at the Chautauqua on several occasions. The last time she rendered Tennyson's poem, "Crossing the Bar," to the delight of all lovers of oratorical and elocutionary skill. Little, perhaps, did she or the audience think how soon the sweet young lady would herself be "crossing the bar." At the funeral at the Methodist Church, which was crowded, Sunday evening, Aug. 13, Bro. T. B. White, who spoke to the audience in praise of the young lady's fine character, requested Prof. Carson to recite "Crossing the Bar." He did so, and Mrs. Arnold, her friend, who is Bro. White's daughter, sat at the organ and sang, "Thy will be done," and "Nearer, my God, to thee." At the cemetery, just as the sun was going down behind the clouds, a magnificent scene loomed up in the west. A large crown-shaped cloud towered just above the cemetery, and it was edged with golden gleams that fairly dazzled the eyes of the beholders. To the right and left were long stretches of deep purple, crimson, silver and gray cloudlets, as if nature had sympathized with us, and in her grandeur tried to give us a glimpse of glory "beyond the clouds and beyond the tomb," into which the soul of Miss Mary Stuart Cundiff had entered—over there in the sun-bright clime. MRS. L. CRARY SADLER.

LETTER FROM ILLINOIS.

MR. EDITOR: One evening last May I bade adieu to the Crescent City for a Summer's vacation in a more northern latitude. The night wore away slowly. Sleep was sought, but was not found. But I dozed, and when I awoke it was with a shiver, occasioned by the wind blowing through a raised window. Self-comfort of a lady passenger prompted the raising of the window. Could she have known what I suffered from it for about ten days, she would not have raised it.

The State of Illinois is entered at Cairo, the largest town in the southern part of the State. It has fifteen thousand inhabitants, a large part of whom are negroes, if we may judge by the number of them who swarm the streets. The drummers and porters are met everywhere—about eating-houses, hotels, and railroad depots. They seem to have crowded the white man out of this avocation. Business seems to be as active for the Summer as almost anywhere else.

This is a great railroad centre, which adds much to the town's prosperity. In 1860 it had only three thousand inhabitants. In nothing has it grown more rapidly than drinking-saloons.

South Illinois is broken, rendering farming in many localities difficult. It is called Egypt, from its supposed fertility, but this is a misnomer, as many other localities in this and other States yield more abundantly the cereals adapted to the soil. The population is settled everywhere—on the hills, hill-sides, and in the valleys. Its denseness, however, does not over-burden the soil, as all seem to have plenty, if not great abundance. Few have attained much wealth.

South Illinois is a malarial region. Chills, fevers, and other diseases of a like character, visit the people during the months favorable for their propagation. The malarial district embraces nearly, if not quite all, that portion of the State bordering on the Ohio river.

Many churches have a foothold in the country places and in the towns. The M. E. Church seems to be stronger and more deeply infixed in the centres of the population than any others. The Baptist are next in number and strength. The others are neither numerous nor wealthy. I have not found a Southern Methodist organization yet, though I have not traveled over the State a great deal at this visit. The nearest one to me is at Cairo, twenty-eight miles away, and it has neither pastor nor house to worship in. For the ministrations of the Word I am dependent upon the Baptists, the Lutherans, and the Congregationalists. Whilst I attend their services and derive good from them, yet it is not like being among one's own people and enjoying their communion. The Lutherans in the town of Dongola, where I am stopping, often sing some of our good old Methodist hymns. And now and then some of our Sunday-school pieces found in "Living Songs," which we used at Moreau Street, with their touching melody, float out on the air. When I hear them my mind runs back to Dr. Adams and the Morean Sunday-school. The inspiration to my own soul lifts me above the darkness of this world, and brings me into the purer atmosphere of heavenly communion. There is not a saloon in the place. There is not a place where a drink of whisky can be bought, except for medicinal purposes. Social drinking, if carried on at all, must get its supply from other places. The town council were whisky men, but they dared not issue any license to saloon keepers. From the fact that there are no saloons here, the town has quietude from the midnight revelry, drunkenness, and altercations.

My enforced retirement from the regular pastorate has not been so monotonous and lonely as I anticipated. To one who has been an active pastor superannuation has a touch of sadness about it. There is an inspiration to the soul in preaching the unsearchable riches of Jesus Christ; but when one's mouth is sealed from physical disability, much of that is lost. In his hours of rest and loneliness he will, of necessity, scrutinize very carefully his past life and labors, asking himself, "Did I do everything within my power?" and, "Was I actuated by the purest motives in all I said and did?" But these hours of enforced retirement offer opportunities daily for quiet reflection, and for the exercise of patience. Our light afflictions, which continue but for a moment, will work out for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory. Thus far I have had much to make me hopeful and to encourage me. I thank God for the grace which he has given to sustain me up to this hour. Here I am with my sun going down in a clear sky, throwing a halo of light behind as it sinks beneath the horizon. J. F. SCURLOCK.

BLUFF CREEK CAMP MEETING.

MR. EDITOR: The following account of the Bluff Creek Camp Meeting was furnished me by the president of the camp meeting association:

The eleventh annual camp meeting at the Bluff Creek Camp Ground opened on Friday, Aug. 11, at 8 P. M., with an excellent sermon by Rev. C. C. Miller, of Wilson, La., and closed on Sunday night, Aug. 20, with a very forcible sermon by Rev. P. M. Brown, of Greensburg, La.

The following ministers were present and took part in the services during the meeting: R. W. Tucker, Dr. I. W. Cooper, J. F. Wynn, F. N. Sweeney, C. C. Miller, J. I. Hoffpauir, H. W. Rickey, A. S. Lutz, J. M. Alford, P. M. Brown, and J. L. McManus.

The preaching was excellent from start to finish, and while the visible results were not what we would like to have seen, we believe much good was done. Christians were strengthened and built up, good resolutions were formed, and promises made to lead better lives.

This camp ground is situated in the southeastern part of East Feliciana parish. The tabernacle is located in a beautiful grove of sweet gum and oak. An inexhaustible well of pure water furnishes the multitude with refreshing drink. The camp ground association own ninety-four acres of land, and are yearly making improvement.

Owing to the excellent fare furnished, the hotel was crowded, taxing the proprietor to the utmost, but we believe all went away satisfied.

The attendance on the services was good, over 1,000 having registered at the gate. The order on the grounds, and behavior and attention under the tabernacle during preaching hours, was of the very best.

J. I. HOFFPAUIR.

Greensburg, La.

TOPISAW CAMP MEETING.

Topisaw Camp Meeting began Thursday, Aug. 10, at 8 P. M., and closed the following Thursday with the night service. The congregations were good, though not so large as last year. This is accounted for because of sickness and daily rains, which hindered the attendance from the surrounding country. The visible results of the meeting were not what we desired and had hoped for; yet we are sure that the future will reveal larger results in answer to the earnest and faithful preaching done. Seeds were sown that will surely bring forth a harvest of good.

The following preachers were present and rendered faithful service in the meeting, namely: Revs. H. Walter Featherstun, P. E; T. W. Adams, P. Howard, J. M. Morse, Robt. Selby, J. A. B. Jones, J. W. Sandell, M. A. Thurman, G. W. Roberts, and Bro. Hatch, of Summit.

Mrs. R. C. Howell, of McComb, presided at the organ, whose well-known skill in this capacity attests that the music was good. She was ably assisted by Miss Ida Felder, of Topisaw Church. Bro. Magee, of Tylertown, rendered valuable service with the cornet. We have adopted and will strictly adhere to our standard hymns, supplemented with the Young People's Hymnal.

The association is planning larger preparations for another year. The following officers were elected: President, M. R. McEwin; vice-president, B. S. Alford; secretary, J. H. Felder; treasurer, Robt. H. Felder.

In the Woman's Missionary Advocate, for August, there is a significant statement from the treasurer of the W. B. F. M. which appeals to every woman who belongs to the society. We have pledged a support for our missionaries in foreign lands, and "the disbursements necessary for their support are largely in excess of the quarterly receipts." What shall we do to redeem our pledge? Our faithful workers are at the front—in our stead. Must they throw down their arms and yield the field to the powers of darkness, or will we come to their rescue? The alternative demands an answer.

I have a suggestion to make. If I were hungry and thirsty, and you were to give me food and drink, I would be worse than a heathen if I did not thank you. We are all hungry every day of our lives, and the God who sends the rain and sunshine feeds us. Can we do less than thank him? We do thank him by a verbal utterance, perhaps, when we think of it; but when we realize our dependence, and feel that every good and perfect gift comes from God, we want to honor him with something more than word-service. He has told us how our thanks may reach up to the very white throne and bring down a blessing from him. "Inasmuch as ye do it unto one of the least of these, . . . ye do it unto me."

Acknowledging our debt of gratitude for countless daily blessings, do our hearts not burn with a great desire to substantiate our thanks by a continual offering? Even the veriest mite contributed daily would multiply the loaves and fishes until "the millions" would be satisfied on the "bread of life."

I suggest that we establish the habit of saying "Thank you" to God by a daily offering in proportion to our gratitude and ability, and let us see if we can not thus solve this vexed problem of supporting our missionaries. When we have reached the utmost of our ability (be it large or small) our hearts will overflow in praise; but, ah! who of us ever has gotten, or ever will get to the feeling-point in our offerings?

Do not lay this suggestion aside as a thing too small for the attention of grown women. The "mite-boxes" are designed especially for the children, but the same principle embodied in the "thank-you box" is worthy the attention of the wisest and oldest of us. Daily giving, like a daily "grace," should be an obligation. Indeed, there is no other way appointed by which the soul realizes a continual shower of blessing. Emotion is well as far as it goes, but unless emotion expends itself in some good work, it crystallizes the mainspring of feeling, and eventually benumbs and hardens the heart.

"Thank you, dear Lord," with its accompanying deed of passing the blessing on to another, keeps the heart pure, fresh, and responsive to every breath of the Holy Spirit.

If every member of the adult societies in our Conference would give as a daily offering three cents—one for food, one for drink, and one for clothes (and it would be hard to give less)—the aggregate amount would support two missionaries. Let us hear from those who will adopt this beneficent plan, and thereby more than double our present yearly receipts.

THE MANY-SIDEDNESS OF THE WOMAN'S HOME MISSION SOCIETY.

BY MRS. J. W. BRISTER, NASHVILLE, TENN.

(Concluded.)

Another member of our auxiliary praised the Settlement Work. She mentioned the old remark that if the mountain wouldn't come to Mahomet, Mahomet must go to the mountain, and added: "The Christian church certainly ought to be as wise as the Moslem prophet; and if the people will not come to the church, then the church ought to go to the people. I am so glad," she continued, "that our people are coming to realize this; that schools are being established in the very midst of poverty and ignorance; that mind and heart are being together taught that by personal contact with godmen those in sin are being elevated and ennobled, and their souls are being saved from sin. This is indeed a noble feature of our work and I shall rejoice to see it developed until thousands shall be saved."

If I had time and space, I could tell what other members said. I wish I could picture the delight in that young mother's heart as she spoke of the Baby Roll, and the happiness it gave her to add a name to the little ones whose names were already enrolled.

I wish I had time to tell of the consecrated woman, loyal to her church and thoughtful of the needmen who fill her pulpits, who told me that the parsonage work was nearest her heart; that preachers, all men, needed some one to prepare homes for them, because, being compelled by the nature of their work to move so often, they have not the opportunity to do it for themselves.

All were more or less interested in the local work, and felt not only a joy, but a pride in ministering to the needs of those who, in the name of humanity, had claims upon them. It proved to me as I went about in preparation of this paper, as it resulted the various members, that it was not mistaken in lauding the work because of its many-sidedness.

As set forth in the beginning of this article, this is what makes the society so useful, for its various departments, its noble principles touch human nature in many ways and somehow and somewhere make appeal to every woman who has a heart that loves her Savior and is capable of intelligently considering the work. All of it tends to develop the selfish and to develop the noble in womanly nature.

May the membership of the societies largely increase, and may the work of the womanhood of the church be of such a character as to merit the Master's plaudit, "Well done."

Our grand business is not to do what lies dimly at a distance, but do what lies clearly at hand.—Lyle.

FROM W. L. ANDERSON.

MR. EDITOR: Sonth Union Camp Meeting closed this morning. It was a great victory. Revs. J. S. Oakley, P. E.; L. M. Lipscomh, W. B. Murrah, and W. M. McIntosh assisted this pastor in dispensing the Word. We have not had greater conscionsness of the divine power in onr lives. Tnesday, at 11 A. M., was simply awe-inspiring. Many were convicted and converted. Twenty-three were added to onr church. Eighty-two up to date on this charge—seventy-five hy profession of faith and seven by certificate.

We missed some familiar faces from the camp ground, which occasioned much enquiry among the tent-holders. Among others our faithful Bro. Bachman, who has attended there regnlarly for some time. He has faithfully spent nearly two weeks already with us this year, preaching, singing, and selling good books; so he could not give us more of his valuable time. A more usefnl man doesn't beleng to onr Conference than Bro. Bachman. If yon want a revival to do lasting good, brother preacher, yon shonld have Bro. Bachman present to sow down the virgin soil, newly broken, with such good books and confirmatory sermons and exhortations as he is always ready and able to dispense. He helped ns at Antioch and Cook's S. H.

Another absent one was Rev. W. A. Dollar, lately bnried within a stone's throw of the pulpit-stand where he has often stood hefore a crowded arbor. Died just a week ago.

The following preamble and resolutions were adopted by the Qnarterly Conference of Chester charge, which meets annually in connection with the camp meeting:

Whereas, In the providence of God the last days and labors of onr brother, Rev. W. A. Dollar, were spent among us, and his godly life on earth has come to an end here, and his last remains are deposited in onr Sonth Union Cemetery, and we have been privileged—many of us—to attend him in his last illness and death; therefore, be it

Resolved, By the Qnarterly Conference of Chester charge, that in his death the church has lost one of her faithful and self denying ministers, the people a true and sympathizing pastor, and the community a loyal and faithful citizen.

Resolved, We hereby extend to the sorrowing family onr deepest sympathies in their sad bereavement, and, in view of South Union being his last resting-place, we cordially invite them to place their church membership here.

REV. W. C. BLACK.

INDIAN MISSION.

I wish to tell you what we poor Choctaws are doing. The Lord has been very good to us this year, and, oh! how thankful we are! I know I am a better man than I ever have been, and I give God the praise for it. It is my daily prayer that God may convert every Choctaw in Mississippi.

My preacher wants me to give my whole time to the work. I am ready to go at the bidding of the good old Methodist Church, which has done so much for me and my people. And I do say from the great deep of my heart, God bless this good old church! I am doing all I can to get my people to quit dancing and playing ball, and quit everything that is unclean; and my wife has quit using snuff, and she is ready to help me in anything that will advance the cause of Christ, and to get our people to live a Christian life. I will say for all the Choctaws, We all like our little preacher. We think he is doing a great deal of good among us.

Your Choctaw brother,

SIMPSON J. TUBBY.

Coles, Miss., Aug. 26, 1899.

FROM THE WORK.

Rev. J. S. Sanders, Many, La., Aug. 28, 1899: "We have just closed a ten-days' camp meeting at New Hope, Many circuit, with at least 130 bright conversions, and 75 sanctified, and 30 accessions to the church. This is our first camp meeting, and God has put his seal upon it. We were assisted by R. M. Tucker, R. P. Howell, and W. W. Tucker, and A. R. Hodges, of Marshall, Texas. God has greatly blessed us this year. We have completed our new parsonage, and the finances are coming up well. We are planning for other meetings."

Rev. W. J. Porter, P. C, Prudhommo Charge, Opelousas district, Aug. 28, 1899: "We closed a good meeting in Prudhommo City at eleven o'clock last night. We were assisted by Bros. Penny, of Lake Arthur, La.; Vail, of New Orleans, and Sloane, of Grand Chenier. The latter was with us but two days. All did efficient work, aided by the Holy Ghost. With pleasure I add the name of Bro. Sligh, president of Mansfield Female College, who reached us in time to help bring souls to Christ, being present at the last four services, and conducting one of them. Results: About forty conversions, seven sanctifications, and six additions, with more to follow. Praise the Lord. Last, but not least, Bro. Sligh got the promise of three pupils."

Rev. R. P. Goar, P. C., Paris, Miss., Aug. 26, 1899: "We commenced our meetings at Spring Hill the third Sunday in July. There the Lord met us in great power. The church was greatly revived; two conversions and seven reclaimed. We then went to Liberty. There we had five conversions and twenty-three reclaimed. From there we went to Paris, and the Lord met us in power. Christians shouted aloud for joy, and many promised to lead better lives. Several converted and eight added to the church; some ten or twelve promised to have family prayer. We held at Sarepta the fifth Sunday in July. Two converted; church revived. At Hunter's Chapel we had several conversions, almost a general revival in the church, and about twenty reclaimed. Last at Mt. Liberty. I never have been in such a meeting. The Holy Ghost came in power, forty or fifty reclaimed, and at least twenty-five converted; twenty-four joined the church. Some most wonderful things happened in this meeting. Good women told of things they had prayed for six or seven months that came to pass in the meeting. Bro. Tucker, one of our best members, told of a dream that he saw before the meeting that really came to pass in the meeting. The preacher left for home with money in his pocket and glory in his soul. God be praised for it all."

Rev. W. R. Harvell, Bonita, La., Aug. 28, 1899: "We have just closed a glorious meeting on this charge at Bartholomew Church. We began Saturday night, Aug. 19, and continued until the following Friday. Bro. Harper dropped in and preached a strong sermon Sunday night; then Bro. Dan Barr came to our rescue and preached with great power, to the delight of all. It has never been our privilege to listen to a preacher who had more of the spirit of Christ. It is the general verdict of those that live in that community that this is the best meeting held there since 1879. Results: 11 children baptized, 8 accessions, everyone soundly converted, 20 conversions, several backsliders reclaimed, and the church gloriously revived. Truly this was a meeting baptized with the Holy Ghost."

Rev. Ira B. Robertson, P. C., Montrose, Miss., Aug. 25, 1899: "The Lord is doing great things for us at Montrose. We have just closed a protracted meeting here. Bro. J. H. Foreman, of Rose Hill, assisted me. He is an efficient helper. He has the spirit of the Divine Master. We had eleven accessions and a general spiritual uplifting, notwithstanding there was considerable political excitement and intense heat prevailing. Although we had to part with our former efficient principal of our high school, Prof. G. W. Burton, I think the trustees have shown much wisdom in electing Prof. O. H. Wingfield principal of the literary department, and Miss Josie Crisler, of the musical department. We expect our district high school to flourish the next session."

Rev. W. T. Griffin: "Mayersville circuit is a light work in many respects. Most delightful have been our near four years here, and some advance has been made in the Lord's kingdom in these ends. The membership is larger, and some are more religious; a few have been converted. There are not many here who are likely to join the church. Both churches have been put in good condition inside and out. One recarpeted, the other will be soon, and both refurnished. Congregations are good; three Sunday-schools; one prayer meeting well attended. W. F. and Juvenile Missionary Societies and Aid Societies doing good work. Collections coming up as usual. Our health was never better than during our stay here. Have had two good meetings this season, and have had time to evangelize some, and it has been delightful and profitable to me. The Lord hath done much for us."

Rev. R. L. Webb, Brooklyn, Miss., Aug. 25, 1899: "There was a storm in the little town of Brooklyn on the eighteenth; but, strange to say, it only struck the Methodist parsonage. About 4 o'clock P. M. two good sisters, each with a long list of names and a handsome purse, together amounting to $14 in clean cash, swept down upon us, making us the happy recipients of the same. That night there was a most joyful giving of thanks to God, who had put it into the hearts of those good people to do so much for us. And it was not on quarterage, either. We expect for this church and others to come up in full before the end of the year. We have a very neat and comfortable little parsonage, which has been built this year at Brooklyn, the most important place on the G. and S. I. R. R. We hope soon to begin our new church here. Occasionally we hear men cry out against the truth as I preach it, but I have determined that no soul shall perish over whom I have been placed as a watchman without he first hear the trumpet of warning."

WESLEY CIRCUIT, LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

We observed Children's Day at Wesley Church, Sunday, Aug. 13. The children and young ladies were assigned the subject of "Missions," selections being made principally from past programs issued by our Publishing House. Right well did the little tots perform their part, while the young ladies very creditably interested the audience with their readings and essays. All the members of the Sunday-school were present, and everyone on duty was well prepared to respond.

There were two addresses on education: one by Mr. B. C. Lee, the other by the pastor, Rev. Geo. D. Purcell. Both presented many facts worthy of careful and prayerful consideration by all our young people. The collection amounted to five dollars and fifty-five cents.

An attractive feature of the day was the bountiful baskets of wholesome viands spread in the cool shade of the beautiful grove surrounding the church. Notwithstanding the severe drouth from which our people are suffering, they generously brought forth the best contents of their larders in great profusion.

The afternoon was spent in a cordial, old-fashioned handshaking manner, with many soul-stirring songs by the young people. From child to grandfather all seemed to feel at liberty to use the opportunity for a closer fellowship with his neighbor.

THE BIBLE AND THE CRITICS.

It is scarcely an over-statement to say that the Bible has within recent years been the subject of closer examination and more thorough investigation than ever before in its history. Scholars of great reputation and ability have for some time been probing anew questions as to the date, authorship, and authenticity of the several books composing the Sacred Canon, particularly the Pentateuch, the prophecies of Isaiah and Daniel, and the Gospels, the conclusions in some instances being so radical as to occasion no little alarm among the orthodox and the conservative. In the search for proof of so-called advanced theories, many of which are so fine-spun as to appear ridiculous, portions of the Sacred Volume have been subjected to a microscopic analysis, as it were, and sometimes it has seemed that the aim of the higher critics was not so much to prove the truth of the Bible as to find therein difficulties and contradictions, and then magnify them, despite their trivial nature. One unfortunate result of this destructive criticism has been the lessening in certain quarters of reverence for the Word of God. Wherever this is the case, the obligatory nature of its teachings is sure to be felt less keenly.

We are far from believing that the Bible ought to be regarded with such a degree of awe as to forbid investigation as to its trustworthiness and genuineness. If it is a true book, it will stand the search-light of honest inquiry, and when tested fully and fairly, will be found to satisfy the demands of reason as well as of conscience. Nevertheless, it should never be forgotten that God is his own best interpreter, and that the study of his Word, whether critical or otherwise, without the enlightening aid of his Spirit, is like digging in a mine without the aid of a lamp or torch.

While we are by no means in sympathy with all the methods of the higher critics, many of whose theories and conclusions we reject in toto, their investigations have, on the whole, we think, been a benefit to the cause of religion. Not a little of the rubbish of tradition and superstition which had gathered about the Word of God has been cleared away, and the truth of God shines all the brighter in consequence. While some timid souls have imagined, as they heard from afar the din of controversy and saw the smoke of fiery criticism, that the very foundations of religion were giving away, their fears have not been realized. Faith has, in spite of the attacks of agnostic scholars and scientists, a firmer foundation than ever. Thus, though for a considerable time the storms of disputation have been raging about the mountain of God's truth, and thunderbolt after thunderbolt of criticism has fallen upon its lofty crest, the mists and darkness have now well-nigh disappeared, and in solitary grandeur the heaven-crowned peak of Revelation is seen towering unscathed above the wisdom and pride of man.

It is a most remarkable confirmation of the truth of the New Testament that among the two thousand and more ancient manuscripts containing different portions thereof, while hundreds of variations in the text of Scripture have been found, they do not affect in the slightest degree a single one of the fundamental doctrines of Christianity. No complete copy of Homer, it is said, dates back further than the thirteenth century. The earliest extant manuscript of Herodotus, the most ancient of historians, is no older than the ninth century, while there is but one copy of Virgil that goes back to the fourth century. Yet, of the New Testament we have many translations which date back within two centuries of the sacred writers themselves, and, without doubt, these translations were made directly from the originals. Modern scholarship has made it clear that no other ancient book can be traced back so certainly and so nearly to the original manuscripts as the Word of God.

The following testimony from the late Prof Stearns, one of the recognized authorities among the Congregationalists, a man who was thoroughly orthodox in belief and deeply pious withal, is well worthy of consideration: "Much of the disquietude which is felt in our times respecting the work of biblical criticism arises from a tacit and unconfessed distrust in the Bible. And it will disappear when Christians come to see that the very methods which at first alarm them are leading to the complete and invincible proof of the truth and unfailing efficacy of the Sacred Book." As the editor of the Central Christian Advocate, well says: "Is it not a distinctive gain when a man like Dr. Alfred Plummer (Master of University College, Durham, England), after spending years in the study of the third gospel and the Book of Acts, and after applying to them all the canons of criticism and all the tests, literary, historical, linguistic, which the whole critical world affords, is able to say that his investigation justifies him in accepting the unswerving traditions of the first eight or nine centuries, that the writer of these two books is Luke, the beloved physician?" Speaking of other benefits of biblical investigation, the same editor says with truth: "The prophets have been lifted out of obscurity, their environment has been recovered out of the past; their training, mission, functions as political counsellors—all these have been studied afresh under the influence of modern spirit of inquiry and with the helps which no former age ever possessed for the explication of Scripture."

While some of the higher critics are undevout extremists, there is a large and increasing number of devout conservatives among them.

Christianity invites investigation. It is falsehood that fears its light. The Master says, "Search the Scriptures, for in them ye think ye have eternal life, and they are they which testify of me." As Dr. David Gregg remarks: "It is with religion as it is with other things in the world. Scientific theories have been shaken, but science remains and, unabashed, continues to utter its affirmations. Astronomical theories come and go, but the sun shines on. This and that theory of inspiration fails, but the inspired Book remains, and its pages enshrine the thoughts of God."

Even if it should be established that more than one writer had a hand in compiling and comparing the Pentateuch and several other parts of the Old Testament, this would by no means invalidate their trustworthiness. The truths stated are truths, by whomsoever written. It is hardly reasonable to suppose that Solomon originated all of the Proverbs, or that all of the Psalms are Davidic. There is great need in the study of the Bible that "we should make a distinction between what a book claims for itself and what others reading it claim for it by way of inference from what it says."

While, undoubtedly, the tendency of the "higher criticism" has been to undermine the faith of some who were not well grounded in the evidences of Christianity, the outcome will be the confirmation of faith and the more triumphant vindication of the claims of the Bible. The best summing up we have seen of the situation is the following timely and clarion-like utterance by President W. F. Warren, of Boston University, in the Methodist Review for May-June:

"After more than twenty-five years largely devoted to the study of the sacred books of all nations, the writer has reached three decidedly firm convictions. The first is, that if a nation's traditions are trustworthy with respect to anything, they are pre-eminently so with respect to its own sacred rites, and the laws under which those rites are perpetuated and safeguarded. In no other matters is a tribe or people so conservative as in these. As a consequence, the traditional view of the origin and age and purpose of any religious rite or code, particularly in a nation employing the art of writing, must be assumed to be the true one until the clear evidence of error can be produced. The second conviction referred to is that, granting the composite authorship of Genesis, or of the Book of Joshua, or of the Book of Isaiah, no critic's analysis at this date, if based solely on verbal or stylistic peculiarities, or on what that particular critic thinks the writer ought to have said, will ever satisfy all other critical analyzers, or attain such a recognition in the world of sober scholarship as to justify the historian in changing the date of the document by centuries, and in then employing it as authority for reconstructing the history of a nation in square contradiction of its own immemorial traditions. The third of the three convictions is that, whatever may have been the time order or the time-period in which the law and the prophets and the Ketubim slowly grew to the compass and form in which we find them in the present Hebrew canon, the right understanding of the total process and of the significance of the whole for the Christian church is likely to come less from the ingenious conjectural hypotheses of isolated closet philologists than from that ever growing insight of the living church into her own continuous life-processes which normally accompanies her own supernatural, her own theopneustic, life. Anchored in these firm convictions, we feel no anxiety whatsoever as to the outcome of the critical study of the Old Testament. We decline to be scared by anybody. And any church that will thoroughly anchor herself in these firm convictions may blandly dismiss the shuddering alarmist. We believe our own church is so anchored."

LIBERALITY.

The spirit of liberality is abroad in the land. Our exchanges teem with accounts of bequests and donations to religious and charitable institutions of every sort. It would take considerable space to chronicle these each week. A. F. Page, of Raleigh, N. C., recently gave $6 000 to the Methodist orphanage located in that city. G. W Mallory, of New Haven, Conn., has bequeathed his entire estate, valued at $60 000 to benevolent institutions. John Hillyard, of Brooklyn, N. Y., makes a similar disposition of his property after the death of his wife. His estate is worth $40,000. Of similar character is the will of C. J. Still, of Philadelphia, whose estate is worth $158 000 Bishop Newman's estate, worth $50,000, goes, at his wife's death, to Drew Theological Seminary. Charles A. Atchison, of Glasgow, Scotland, has donated $350 000 for the education of Bible women and religious teachers.

These are only a small fraction of the generous bequests and donations reported through the press last week.

A PRESENT-DAY PROBLEM.

There are 550 Mormon elders at work in the South, and their official reports show that they are making converts at a rapid rate. That something ought to be done to counteract the efforts of these emissaries of the Evil One will be generally admitted but precisely what steps should be taken, who knows? The church press can do nothing except in an indirect way, for the people among whom the Mormons are making their converts, as a rule, never see a church paper. The only way in which the church press can do anything is to call attention to the matter, and stir up our preachers and leading laymen.

Here is a problem, the solution of which will tax the wisdom and resources of the church. Let no one suppose that this Mormon propaganda will be short-lived. The Mormon elders are here to stay, and they display a zeal and industry worthy of a better cause.

Dr. J. C. C. Newton, our Japan missionary, will soon publish a book entitled, "The Country, Court and People of Japan."

THE SHREVEPORT RALLY.

The Educational Rally at Shreveport was held Aug. 30-31, Bishop Galloway presiding. The opening sermon by Dr. J. L. Pierce was strong and appropriate. There were three sessions each day. Bishop Galloway spoke each night, each address measuring up to his usual high standard. Dr. I. W. Cooper made a forceful presentation of the claims of Centenary and Mansfield.

The following brethren were heard from on one or more of the various topics discussed: W. H. La Prade, S. S. Keener, C. W. Carter, B. F. White, J. A. Parker, W. T. Bolling, R. W. Tucker, J. F. Foster, B. T. Crews, J. D. Harper, S J. Davies, C. D. Atkinson, J. M. Brown, S. H. Whatley. Other ministerial brethren present were J. T. Sawyer, A. D. McVoy, J. O Bennett, Thomas Carter, Robert Randle, W. G. Evans, C. P. Smith, C. F. Staples, A. W. Turner, H. W. Bowman, P. O Lowry, J. M. Martin, G. D. Parcell. Among the prominet laymen present were T. S Sligh and W. W. Nelson. Though less largely attended than many similar gatherings have been, the occasion was a success.

An enthusiasm in the cause of education was generated which will doubtless tell beneficently upon the Twentieth Century Thank-offering. A fuller report will appear next week from the pen of Dr. J. A. Parker. See notice from Bishop Galloway on this page.

LITERARY NOTES.

BY W. F. B.

Scribner's, for September, opens with an account by Frederic Irland of what he calls "the finest canoeing country in the world." There is a story of life and adventure in the Arctic regions by Albert White Vorse. It is entitled "The Education of Praed" (illustrated by Henry McCarter), and tells how a Western college professor learned something of value from the Esquimaux.

The American Monthly Review of Reviews, for September, contains a remarkably attractive group of contributed articles. The war in the Philippines is summed up by John Barrett; the outcome of The Hague Conference is set forth by W. T. Stead; the subject of trusts is discussed by George E. Roberts and by Henry Macfarland; Hezakiah Butterworth writes of "The Future Value of the New England Farm," while Prof. L. H. Bailey answers affirmatively the question, "Does Farming Pay?" Sylvester Baxter tells of the progress made by the State of Massachusetts in her public library system, and Gilbert K Harroun describes the work of the Cuban Educational Association of the United States; a sketch of "The New Secretary of War" is contributed by Henry Macfarland.

NOTES.

Rev. A. S Lutz was present at the Preachers' Meeting on Monday morning.

Bishop C. B. Galloway is booked for the opening address at Cornell College, Sept. 13.

By request we will continue our reduced rates on Minion and Emerald Bibles until the first of October.

We regret to learn through the Nashville Advocate that Dr. W. M. Baskerville, of Vanderbilt University, is seriously ill.

The numerous friends of Rev. J. W. Chambers, president of Whitworth Female College, will be pleased to learn that his health is steadily improving. He writes that the outlook for the college is decidedly hopeful. The college will open Sept. 13.

The saints at the Seashore Camp Ground were edified last Sabbath by a sermon from Rev. E. N. Evans.

Rev. J. F. Foster being absent from the city, his pulpit was occupied last Sabbath by Rev. G. D. Parker. Dr. Keener preached at Carrollton.

Rev. J. E Green, of the Texas Conference, honored the ADVOCATE office with a call en route home from the Bethel Camp Meeting, near Woodville, Miss.

Dr. S. A. Steel has been transferred by Bishop Candler from the North Mississippi Conference to the Virginia Conference. So says the Richmond Advocate.

Rev. A. S. Lutz will enter Vanderbilt University at the opening of the session. His place as preacher in charge of Slaughter circuit will be supplied by Rev. E. L. Alford.

Rev. T. J. Norsworthy writes, under date of August 29: "We are now engaged in a tent meeting in Camden, having begun last Sunday. Interest increases with each service."

Prof. W. S. Fitzgerald, of Roswell, New Mexico, youngest son of Bishop Fitzgerald, was married, on the twenty-fourth, to Miss Rachel Thomas, of Nashville, Bishop Fitzgerald officiating.

Mr J A. Woodville, president of the Board of Trustees of the Seashore Camp Meeting, has gone with his family to Honduras to spend some weeks, Honduras being the land of his nativity.

On Sunday, Aug 26, while Dr. S. S Keener was dispensing the gospel in one of our city churches, burglars entered his residence and relieved him of his pocket-book containing $35 and a railroad ticket of considerable value.

Carondelet Street Church some two months since started a Chinese Sunday-school, which now has an attendance of twenty or more Celestials, who take great interest in the exercises. The new venture promises to be a success.

Rev. R T. Nolan writes: "We are in the midst of a glorious meeting at Shady Grove Church, Cumberland circuit. Bro D. M. Miller (L E.) is doing the preaching. He is a strong preacher. Souls are being converted, and the church greatly revived."

Prof. Geo Lott Harrell, who has had charge of the Millsaps College Summer School, and who was adjunct professor of mathematics and history in Millsaps College during the session of 1898-9, has been elected professor of science in Whitworth College. Young and vigorous, this well-qualified teacher will add strength and efficiency to Whitworth's excellent faculty.

Under date of Aug. 29, Rev. J. H. Penix writes: "That untiring servant of God, Rev. H. W. Ledbetter (assisted by myself), has just held a meeting at New Hope, on his work. A few accessions, eleven conversions, and the members greatly revived. Especially did the younger members show great zeal in the Master's cause. The church at this point is on a firmer footing than ever before."

Rev. W. A. Bowling, of Buena Vista, North Mississippi Conference, writes: "I have held four revival meetings in my charge, with fine results at each. I have had twenty-four accessions to the church, with more to follow. Rev. E. G. Kilgore is a member of my charge, and is a great help to me. Sister Kilgore's health is improving, and we are very hopeful of her recovery."

On the twenty-eighth of August the Nashville Advocate received the following cablegram from Bishop Hendrix, who, as our readers know, is now in Brazil: "Brazil's thank-offering, ten thousand dollars." If a Conference with such meagre resources as the Brazil Mission Conference, with its meagre resources, can raise ten thousand dollars for the cause of education, what amount ought to be raised by Mississippi and Louisiana? Who is mathematician enough to say?

The Presbyterian Church of Ireland has undertaken to raise $5,000,000 as a Twentieth Century Thank-offering, and one-half the amount has already been subscribed. The Southern Methodist Church, with three times as large a membership, has undertaken to raise $1,500 000. Our per capita, if it should all be raised, will, therefore, be only one-ninth that of the Irish Presbyterians. Shall we fail to raise the full amount? Nay, let us go beyond the assessment.

Two cases of yellow fever were reported in this city last week. Up to the time of going to press, Tuesday afternoon, there have been no others, and the health authorities report that there are no indications of a spread of the disease. This is the opinion not only of the Louisiana Board, but also of Drs. Gant and Harrailson, of the Mississippi Board, now in the city. The Louisiana Board has requested the co-operation of the U. S. Marine Hospital Service in a house-to-house inspection.

Rev. C. McDonald writes: "On the fourth Sunday in August, and for two days after, Bro. V. V. Boone held a meeting for me at Bahala Chapel. There were three valuable accessions and a great uplift to those who attended. There was so much sickness in the neighborhood that we could not well continue. The pastor was down with fever, and did not attend a single service. My people were delighted with Bro. Boone, and say they would like, after three years, to have him for four years."

During our brief stay on the Mississippi sea coast we enjoyed a half hour's call on Bishop Keener at his quiet and beautiful home "Cherry Wild," at the very verge of the summer sea. The Bishop, in this loved retreat, is passing a peaceful and happy old age. Charming in conversation and encyclopedic in knowledge is this venerable master in Israel.—Bishop Galloway's sermon at Chautauqua produced a profound impression.—Bishop Morrison has entirely recovered his health, and is hard at work preaching and attending to episcopal visitations.—Epworth Era.

Under date of Sept. 4, Rev. G. W. Bachman writes: "Rev. Geo. E. Lipscomb has been seriously ill for the past ten days. His condition has been such as to cause his friends much solicitude. He is somewhat better now, and we are hopeful for his recovery. Let continued prayer be made in behalf of our afflicted brother and most useful minister of the gospel. Rev. R I. Allen has been appointed assistant pastor for Winona station during Bro. Lipscomb's disability. Rev. W. M. McIntosh was here last Saturday securing pupils for Grenada College. He expects a good opening on the twelfth instant."

From a private letter from Dr. W. Featherston we quote as follows: "Bro. C. McDonald, of Providence circuit, and several of his children have been quite sick. Rev. G. W. Hiveley is doing good work on the Pleasant Grove circuit, which he is supplying in place of Rev. J. W. Tinnin. Rev. M. A. Thurman is doing most excellent work on the Whitestown charge. The place is a trying one, but Bro. Thurman shows himself to be the man for it. The church will lose practically nothing notwithstanding Bro. Tinnin's effort to carry with him not only the new church-building, but the entire membership as well."

Rev. J. T. Cunningham writes: "This has been a red-letter day in Verona. Bro. Anderson and his people are happy in the consummation of a work which has engaged their minds and hearts for many months. Upon an eligible site stands our new temple of worship, in which our first services were held to-day (Sept. 3). The occasion was one of inspiration, and our people measured fully up to the responsibilities of the hour. The house is a gem—a thing of beauty, and presents quite an imposing appearance. Our fourth Quarterly Conference embraces the third Sunday of September, at which time the house will be dedicated to God."

EPWORTH LEAGUE DEPARTMENT.

"ALL FOR CHRIST."

LOUISIANA.

REV. THOMAS B. CLIFFORD, Jackson, La., EDITOR.

The apostle declared that under the gospel plan there is "no difference"—"the same Lord is faithful unto all who call upon him."

This leads us to remark that the colored people in our midst are included in the "plan," and we ought to realize our duty regarding them.

We do not need the suggestions and intermeddlings of our friends (?) of a Northern clime, who, in many instances, have directed their efforts toward prejudicing the blacks against the whites, instead of bringing them to Christ.

We are much surprised at many of the recent utterances of Dr. Berry, the otherwise efficient editor of the Epworth Herald. We hope he will see proper at an early date to desist from his lectures on the "color line."

We think the mistake made at the International meetings heretofore has been in allowing the extremists (fire eaters) to occupy a place on the programme.

How different the course pursued by Bishop Fitzgerald, who, by his love and tenderness, made all to feel, more than ever before, that "one touch of nature had made the whole world kin."

We sincerely hope and pray that at this late day the young people of these United States (particularly the Methodists) may not be estranged and divided. Rather may they be brought closer together in the bonds of sympathy and love, and march forward as a united band to the music of celestial song to take this world for Christ.

The New Orleans Epworth League Union will meet in monthly session in Burgundy Street Methodist Church, Tuesday night, Sept. 12, at 7:45. All are cordially invited to attend. Music will be furnished during the evening by the Burgundy Street League orchestra.

MISSISSIPPI.

REV. HENRY G. HAWKINS, Madison, Miss., ASSOCIATE EDITOR.

Are you arranging for your League to take the reading course, beginning in October?

If you have had recently a helpful program rendered in any department of your League, we should like for you to send a copy, in order that it may be published for the benefit of others.

Give your members something to do. Lay your hand upon that boy, and let him know that you expect a certain work from him, and shall depend upon him alone for it. He can do it.

If you will send the account of it, we will publish in this column even the little, almost insignificant things your League has been doing.

Young man, young lady, the schools will be opening in a few days. It is your duty to yourself and to the country to take the training that these institutions afford. Give your parents the assurance that, if they, upon their part, will make the sacrifice of money necessary, you, upon your part, will strive to make it count tenfold in your life.

Rev. W. G. Backus, pastor at South Side, Meridian, writes as follows: "DEAR BRO. HAWKINS: The League at South Side is doing good work, especially in the devotional department. At a meeting not long since Bro. W. D. Hawkins asked all to stand up who were seeking salvation, and eight young men of promise asked the prayers of the church. The Lord was present in power, and we feel that God is working through these meetings to bring men to a better life. Bro. W. D. Hawkins, as you know, is a faithful, untiring Leaguer."

Madison Station League has sent forward the amount that the Quarterly Conference asked from it on fund for repairing the district parsonage.

Barbee & Smith, Nashville, Tenn., will send the Epworth Era to any address from now until Jan. 1 for 25 cents. The Era's circulation is nearing the fifteen-thousand mark, and the expectation is to make it twenty thousand by 1900.

It ought to be a matter of pride to the alumnæ and friends of Whitworth to know that its A. B Class of this year will graduate in the full course as given by the committee of our last General Conference. Graduates of its conservatory hold positions in the leading schools of Alabama, Kentucky, Tennessee, Arkansas, Texas, Louisiana and Mississippi, while its alumnæ grace chairs in many of the leading colleges of the South. To be a graduate of Whitworth is to have an open entrance to the best positions.

PORT GIBSON FEMALE COLLEGE.

The next session of the Port Gibson Female College will open the second Wednesday in September, 1899, and close the fourth Wednesday in May, 1900

This institution, which is the property of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and under the patronage of the Mississippi Annual Conference, has for more than fifty years annually opened her doors to the young women of the State and invited them to enter her sacred precincts where religion and learning have joined hands for the production of the highest type of Christian womanhood.

From her halls of learning many of the daughters of Mississippi and other States have gone forth to adorn and brighten homes and to bless State and Church. Among her daughters are numbered many of the leading women of the country—women who stand for God and right and home.

Upon the good solid work done by our predecessors, we hope to build so well that our school shall be second to none in the State for the high grade of work we purpose doing.

It shall be the untiring purpose of the present administration to make and maintain for our patrons a school in which their girls may have a real home life, and in which they may be prepared intellectually, physically and morally for the duties that devolve upon womanhood.

We make the lowest rates possible.

The following are our prices per half session:

Board, including lights, fuel, laundry and tuition	$70 00
The above with any extra selected	95 00
$50.00, or 2 extras
Music or Piano, Violin, or Pipe Organ, each	22 50
Music on Mandolin and Guitar, each	12 50
Voice	22 50
Elocution and Expression	20 00
Tuition in Primary Department	10 00
College Classes	15 00
Intermediate Department	12 00
Painting in Oil and Drawing or Pastel and Drawing, each	20 00
Painting on China and Drawing	20 00
Embroidery	15 00

Sight-Singing free to all pupils.

Extras, when not taken with the literary course, can be paid for at the beginning of each month. Students are expected to pay one-quarter in advance, and at the end of each quarter to pay in advance for the succeeding quarter.

Liberal reductions will be made on extras to parents sending more than one daughter.

If you will give us your daughters we will try to return them to you with the jewels of true learning and genuine piety.

SANITARIUM NEEDED.

The city of Meridian, Miss., in fact the State, needs a sanitarium. I have a large college plant located on a beautiful, healthy ten-acre site, amid the pine forest, with purest of water. I wish a capable physician to join me in using this plant as a sanitarium. The buildings are large and well constructed for the purpose. Hundreds of patients in this State need convenient accommodations for special treatment.

Then, I have discovered a remedy, by accident from a human standpoint, that will cure any drug disease in 3 days without suffering or craving for the drug. It is marvelous. No harm in it all.

The best accommodations and comfort will be furnished all patients who desire medical attention from any of our city physicians. Being retired, quiet, elevated, with the purest of water, cool breezes, invalids, persons overworked, or any other class needing rest and recuperation, may do as well here as any where else in the States.

Drug habitues will be treated privately and cured in three or four days without pain, suffering for want of the drug, or in any other way. The remedy is absolutely harmless, causing no ill effects whatever, and producing a thorough cure, which is guaranteed. Apply for particulars at once. SANITARIUM,

A DEMONSTRATION.

Bro. Smith, pastor of Wall Hill circuit, has demonstrated the fact that a Twentieth Century Educational Meeting can be successfully held in the country. His first meeting was held at Wall Hill, and the collection was over fifty dollars. His plan is to hold an educational meeting at every church. This work is largely done under the auspices of the Epworth League.

Bro. Smith appointed four of his most intelligent young people to read papers on different phases of education, the first being a general paper on the subject of "Education;" the second, "Christian Education;" third, "Christian Culture and Growth in Grace;" fourth, "The Twentieth Century Educational Movement."

Along with this program are songs and recitations. These meetings are not only helpful to the cause of Christian education, but prove very interesting to the people. With a live preacher like Bro. Smith, and a strong layman like Dr. Sharp to back him, such a meeting can be held most anywhere with a great profit to the cause of Christian education. I find that Bro. Smith looks after all the general interests of the church. He is having fine revivals all over his circuit, and has just finished building a nice new church.

Twentieth Century Up-to-Date Map of the World.

FOR SCHOOL, HOME, OFFICE, AND LIBRARY.

The Royal Geographical Society of London recently completed a survey of the world, made necessary by the political and geographical changes that have taken place in the United States, Alaska, China, Africa, and South America, and now furnish the public with a map as valuable as it is ornamental, useful and instructive. It shows the ocean currents, steamship lines, international date line, new counties, railway stations, shipping points, thousands of new towns, cable routes, boundaries and new United States possessions. It is complete in every detail. There is nothing more useful at all times than a good map. It has already found a place in 3,000 offices and homes in Chicago, and is for sale by publishers' agent, 532 Gravier street. Agents wanted.

SPANISH-AMERICAN WAR PANORAMA

is one of the war books which is likely to be in continuous demand. It is a panoramic record of the triumph of Yankee Doodle. The eagle flaps his wings on every page, and "Old Glory" waves around and above every scene. Prominent officers connected with the war are here portrayed, as well as many of the "men behind the guns." Military life is pictured to the eye, from recruiting to guard mount and skirmish line. Nor is the ludicrous omitted. The company cook receives the attention due to his importance; the mess is shown; cavalry scenes are given; the hospital arrangements are depicted; the heroines of the Red Cross service are displayed; street scenes in Havana, Santiago and elsewhere are unrolled, the new citizens or subjects (which are they?) of Uncle Sam appear and disappear as the leaves are turned.

In a word, the gazer visits the new localities and sees the tumultuous new life, without the risk or expense of a sea voyage.

The Album is 5½x8 inches, weighs 12 ounces, printed on finest coated paper.

THE TONE OF VOICE.

It is not so much what you say
As the manner in which you say it;
It is not so much the language you use
As the tones in which you convey it.

"Come here!" I sharply said,
And the baby cowered and wept.
"Come here!" I cooed, and he looked and smiled,
And straight to my lap he crept.

The words may be mild and fair,
And the tones may pierce like a dart;
The words may be soft as a Summer day,
And the tones may break the heart.

For words but come from the mind,
And grow by study and art;
But the tones leap forth from the inner self
And reveal the state of the heart.

Whether you know it or not,
Whether you mean or care,
Gentleness, kindness, love, and hate,
Envy and anger are there.

Then, would you quarrels avoid,
And in peace and love rejoice,
Keep anger not only out of your words,
But keep it out of your voice
—Youth's Companion.

GENERAL WOOD.

Great catastrophies, such as war, fire, shipwrecks, often develop giants and heroes where least expected. General Leouard Wood, governor of Santiago, from an assistant surgeon in the army but a short time ago, has advanced to the front rank by developing positive genius as an administrator, and is now spoken of for the office of goverunor-general of Cuba.

General Wood is a man of few words and very little pretension. Without the least military show, he may be seen early each morning on his horse, riding about the streets of Santiago, often without a single attendant, looking this way and that, constantly on the alert for the improvement of the city.

The transformation of Santiago under General Wood's rule, especially in a sanitary way, has been little less than a miracle. His government, too, has been marvelous. He understands the Cuban character apparently better than either Governor Ludlow or Governor Brooke. Recognizing the effect of centuries of Spanish rule, he acts accordingly, and does not antagonize the Cubans by constantly telling them they are liars and thieves. He knows that, in their present condition, they are absolutely incapable of self-government, a fact which other officials do not yet seem to have discovered. General Wood realizes that the Cubans are now in the same position as a schoolroom full of children without a teacher.

Any one, no matter how humble, can approach him with his complaints or troubles and be sure of a hearing. Nothing which in any way affects the interests of the inhabitants of Santiago seems to be too small or trifling to command his attention. He has a rare combination of the qualities of firmness, tact and progressiveness which fits him in an especial manner for the difficult task with which he has been intrusted.

The fact that General Wood recently declined an offer of thirty thousand dollars a year to become president of the Washington street railway system, because he prefers to do what he considers his duty, at six thousand dollars a year, is another evidence of his greatness. It recalls the reply of Agassiz to people who reproved him for not using his talents to make money. "I have no time," he said, "to waste in making money. Life is not sufficiently long to enable a man to get rich and to do his duty to his fellowmen at the same time."

To have nothing is not poverty. Whoever uplifts civilization is rich, though he die penniless, and future generations will erect his monument. Fortunately, there are, even in this dollar-chasing, wealth-worshiping age, men who think there is something in the world better than money. There should be something in a man's life greater than his occupation or his achievements, grander than acquisition or wealth, higher than genius, more enduring than fame.

To regenerate the beautiful island of Cuba, to bring peace, prosperity, and happiness to a people who have been in mental and moral slavery for centuries is certainly a greater work than to accumulate a fortune.—Success.

READING.

Reading lies largely at the bottom of education. Carlyle said: "The true university is a collection of books." With access to the best literature, one may without professional instructors educate himself. The right sort of reading necessarily involves earnest thought, and the mind thus constantly taxed expands and acquires power. Thus information is secured, discipline attained and culture taken on. It would be impossible for a naturally strong intellect to read the masterpieces of wisdom and beauty without growing and developing force. In school and college we learn to read and think, but the best part of education comes with the maturer studies of our post-graduate career.

Reading puts us into communication with truth. In literature is the best that has been thought and said by man. Here the results of profound investigations are treasured. Here the wealth of patient research is embalmed. Hallam was no doubt right when he rated the invention of printing as the greatest invention of the race. In books the wisdom of man is preserved and transmitted. To know the truth is one of the mightiest passions of the soul. Philosophy is the English of the words which mean the love of wisdom. To discern the truth, the realities of nature, life and God is one of the motives to reading. Thus we satisfy the instinct for knowledge. Thus we commune with the master-spirits of the ages.

Reading is a perennial and inexhaustible source of innocent pleasure. We are rapt into ecstacy when the panorama of literature unrolls before the mind's eye. In science, the truth of nature is revealed; in philosophy, the doctrine of first principles is taught; in history, the thoughts and deeds of men are displayed; in religion, the knowledge of God and the secret of life and happiness are set forth. The contemplation of this vast wealth of truth and beauty can not but thrill the soul to its profoundest depths. Lady Jane Grey preferred Plato to the fashions and revels of a ducal court; John Wesley beguiled the tedium of his long journeys by reading Homer and Virgil. He who once tastes this bliss at its best will, like the fabled lotus-eaters, forget his former pleasures and pursuits.

Reading is a direct and fruitful contribution to the development and refinement of the spiritual life. It brings with it light and strength and consolation. The best literature is pervaded by a moral vein. The ethical element is prominent in all the standards. He who has read only the best will confess himself under everlasting obligations thereto. It was through this instrumentality his problems were solved; through this channel life and power were poured into his heart; through this medium consolation and balm overflowed his spirit. Thus his lonely hours were brightened and his bitter cups were sweetened. When overcome and disconraged, the vision of the struggles and conquests of others cheered his fainting heart. Such wisdom and inspiration are priceless. We are all debtors to the thinkers of our race.—Texas Advocate.

THE ART OF NOT HEARING.

The art of not hearing should be learned by all. There are so many things which it is painful to hear, very many which, if heard, will disturb the temper, corrupt simplicity and modesty, detract from contentment and happiness. If a man falls into a violent passion and calls all manner of names, at the first word we should shut our ears and hear no more. If in a quiet voyage of life we find ourselves caught in one of those domestic whirlwinds of scolding, we should shut our ears as a sailor would furl his sail, and, making all tight, scud before the gale. If a hot, restless man begins to inflame our feelings, we should consider what mischief the fiery sparks may do in our magazines below where our temper is kept, and instantly close the door. If all the petty things said of a man by heedless and ill-natured idlers were brought home to him, he would become a mere walking pin-cushion, stuck full of sharp remarks. If we would be happy when among good men, says the Presbyterian Banner, we should open our ears; when among bad men, shut them. It is not worth while to hear what our neighbors say about our business, our dress or our affairs.—Selected.

HOW TO MANAGE A WIFE.

The above was the subject of the following prize essay obtained by the late Dr. C. F. Deems, of New York:

"Manage? What is that? Does it mean to control? We manage a horse. We use our superior human intellect to control and guide his superior physical strength so as to obtain the best results. But a wife is not a horse. When two persons are well married the wife is as superior to the husband in many respects as he is superior to her in others. If happiness is to be the result of the union, the first business of the husband is to manage himself so as to keep himself always his wife's respectful friend, always her tender lover, always her equal partner, always her superior protector. This will necessarily stimulate the wife to be always his admiring friend, always his affectionate sweetheart, always his thrifty housewife, always his confiding ward. And this will so react upon the husband that his love for his wife will grow so as to make it easy for him, with all his faults, to bear with all the infirmities of his one and only wife."

After the only surviving daughter of William Wilberforce died, he wrote: "I have often heard that sailors on a voyage will drink to the health of friends astern until they are half-way over; then friends ahead for the rest of the voyage. With me it has been friends ahead for a long time." And so with some of us. The sun has passed across the zenith. We are more than half-way over the voyage of life, and we begin to think of the friends we shall meet again, "whom I have loved long since and lost awhile." Friends ahead! their number increases each year. "In heaven grows our store." Sometimes this thought so possesses the soul that it desires to hasten to the harbor. It longs to depart and be with Christ and its friends. They are waiting to greet us. And then we shall know that the Lord is risen, for we shall see him as he is.—New York Observer.

Hygiene.

PERSPIRATION A HEALTH ESSENTIAL.

"Perspiration is essential to health," writes Edward B. Warman, in the Ladies' Home Journal. "A person in good health never suffers from the heat or the cold unless unduly exposed. One may be inconvenienced by excessive perspiration, but it is a condition of health rather to be sought than to be avoided. Too much of a good thing, however, is not desirable. Proper care of the body, proper diet, proper exercise, with proper bathing, will produce the normal condition—in which condition the heat will not oppress anyone. Let me especially caution against the too sudden checking of perspiration. Millions of canals or tubes from the inner part of the body open their little mouths at the surface, and through these channels, as ceaseless as the flow of time, a fluid containing the wastes and impurities of the system is passing outward and is emptied out of the skin. This fluid must have exit, or we die in a few hours. If it does not have vent at the surface of the body, it must have some internal escape. Nature abhors shocks as she does a vacuum. Heat distends the mouths of these ducts and promotes a larger and more rapid flow of the contained fluid; on the other hand, cold contracts them, and the fluid is at first arrested, then dammed up, and then it rebounds. If these mouths are gradually closed, Nature has time to adapt herself to the circumstances by opening her channels into the great internal water-ways of the body, and no harm follows; hence the wisdom and safety of cooling off slowly after any exertion, and the danger of cooling off rapidly under the same circumstances. Encourage perspiration, under proper conditions and with proper precautions. Always keep the surface of the body warm and clean, and at the end of the season you will be mentally, morally and physically sound."—Zion's Herald.

OUR $1 OFFER.

Much has been said about reducing the subscription price of the ADVOCATE. The only way in which a reduction can be brought about is by an increase in the number of subscribers. In order to facilitate this result, we make the following offer: Until further notice we will take new subscriptions at the rate of $1 for eight months. When seven thousand five hundred new names have been sent in at this rate with the cash, we will extend the time four months longer, thus reducing the price to $1 per annum. When the extension is made, old subscribers will get the benefit as well as new ones, provided they first pay up all arrearages. Of course, no commissions can be given under this offer. Address

YEAGER—W. C. YEAGER was born in Lincoln county, Tenn., on March 4, 1831. He lost his father in his early life, and, consequently, learned young to meet and cope with the cold realities of the world. Perhaps on this account he always was kind to those who suffered, and his charity was marked to those who were in distress. He came to the State of Louisiana in 1858, where he remained until the war between the States broke out. When the war broke out he joined the Texas Cavalry, with which troop he served with marked distinction during the first part of the war. He was greatly loved and respected by his comrades, and was trusted and honored by his superiors. He was many times entrusted by his superior officers with very dangerous duties as a scout and messenger, which was always performed with so much fidelity and bravery as to win the highest commendations of those in authority. Later he was sent back to Louisiana to raise a company, which was to operate in the trans-Mississippi department. He was elected to lieutenancy in this company, in which capacity he served with his usual bravery until the close of the war. After the war he returned to his adopted State and engaged in planting. By diligence and perseverance he soon forged his way to the front in his chosen occupation. In 1880 he moved into Adams county, Miss., where he lived until the close of his life.

As a man, he was always very highly respected; as a citizen, he stood in the front rank; as a member of the church, he occupied places of honor and trust. He built a chapel church on his plantation (Quitman), which he largely supported until the close of life.

He was sick for fifteen months before his death, and though he talked of plans for the future, he would say that he was fully prepared when God should call him to go. Like Job of old, though he suffered great bodily pain, he showed that his faith was fixed on God, and that he was willing at all times for God's will to be done.

He leaves a loving wife and four children, all of whom are grown, to mourn his death; but they mourn not as those who have no hope. May God's grace be sufficient for the wife who walked by his side thirty years, and for the children who will so sorely miss so good and true a father! May his mantle fall on shoulders that will wear it as worthily! May the inspiration of his noble life live in the lives of all his friends! May the church, so greatly bereft by his death on the thirty-first of May, 1899, be blessed by his noble life and prayers! We often feel that his place can not be filled, but, as this great workman has fallen, may God raise up others to do his work!

GEO. M. HULL.

BARNES—Miss ANNIE MAY BARNES, daughter of Bro. and Sister W. S. Barnes, was born six miles east of Crystal Springs, Jan. 6, 1883; died at the same place of typhoid fever, Aug. 4, 1899. She joined the M. E. Church, South, when she was seven years old, and has been a consistent member till her death. During our meeting last year at Mt. Pleasant Church, of which she was a member, she was greatly blessed. Since that time she has been a happy, consecrated Christian, ready to pray anywhere, and do anything that was well pleasing to her Master. She established the family altar in the home, and through her influence the whole family were brought nearer to Christ. She was a student of Whitworth College this last session, and her room-mates and class-mates all testify to the purity of her character and life. She was sick for nearly two months, but never murmured or complained. Surely her life is a rebuke to every sinner and an inspiration to every Christian. She was ready for the Master's call. It is a great comfort to her loved ones to know that she died in the Christian's faith, and has received her crown of eternal life.

W. M. WILLIAMS, P. C.

Gallman, Miss.

ROBERTS—Mrs. ELIZA A. ROBERTS died in East Feliciana parish, July 31, 1899. Born in Sumpter district, S. C., Jan. 9, 1825, Eliza McLeod came to Louisiana, Oct. 31, 1839, the bride of Richardson M. Roberts, and for more than fifty years they lived most happily together. They were, in years past, of ample means and whole-souled generosity. Their hospitality and beneficence were unexcelled. They were old-time Methodists, and their home was the preacher's resting-place. I never heard Mrs. Roberts complain or worry. She passed through many changes, knew many bereavements, and in old age her circumstances were widely different from early life. She seemed to exemplify the Scripture, "Casting all thy care on Him, for He careth for thee." She was never too poor to give, but always felt rich. She was very robust, though extremely fleshy. She seemed in her usual health when, one afternoon, sitting in her rocking-chair on the front gallery, she was stricken with apoplexy.

The noble couple passed to the life eternal in four years of each other. May their lives, so truly spent in the Master's service, be an inspiration to the loved ones they leave!

A FRIEND.

PURNELL—WM. PURNELL was born in Christian county, Ky., Aug. 21, 1834, and died in Vicksburg, Miss., March 9, 1899.

Bro. Parnell came from a home kept radiant with the love of God by family prayer and the study of God's Word. His mother was a most exemplary Christian, and raised her children "up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord," and this teaching and training never left him.

He was converted while at school in Summerfield, Ala., while pleading with God for salvation, and from that day to the day of his death "his heart was fixed" on God by simple, child-like faith.

For many years he lived at his home in Issaquena county, conducting a large cotton plantation, for which he was eminently fitted. His sterling qualities and good judgment gave him the confidence of all who knew him, and many positions of trust were tendered and held by him. Being of a cheerful and friendly disposition, he made many friends. His home was an ideal one, where old-time hospitality was dispensed to friend and stranger. His life-work was to do good. He loved his church and was loyal to all her institutions; was Sunday-school superintendent at the time of his death. The children had a sure friend in him. He left a bereaved wife, two sisters and five sons to follow him to their final meeting-place. His life and death was a triumph for Christianity.

W. T. GRIFFIN.

Mayersville, Miss.

CURRY—Mrs. ELIZABETH CURRY (nee Scarborough) was born in Louisiana, Jan. 27 1874, and died in Fort Adams, Miss., April 4 1899.

She was left motherless at an early age. Although deprived of a mother's love and training ere she reached womanhood, she heard the voice of God bidding her give him her heart. She early heeded the call and united with the Baptist Church. For several years being deprived of pastoral instruction and of the ministry of the Word, her religious experience was not so bright and satisfactory as it might have been under more favorable circumstances. In 1897, under the ministry of Rev. E. T. Breland, her religious experience was revived and deepened. Having no pastor of the Baptist Church, she united with the M. E. Church, South.

Although her summons came suddenly, we believe she was ready. She leaves an aunt (Mrs. S. G. Bell), one brother, a husband, two little children and many friends to mourn their loss. Their loss is her gain. Sorrowful ones, look up through your tears and grief, and remember she is not dead, but is at the beautiful gate waiting and watching for you. May she not wait and watch in vain! Let us all meet her in the New Jerusalem.

WALDO W. MOORE.

GREENE—Capt. J. H. GREENE was born Jan. 14, 1829, in Statesburg, Sumpter county, S. C., and died Aug. 1, 1899 in Jackson county, Miss.; was converted and joined the church in the Winter of 1882. He was a faithful member of the M. E. Church, South, the rest of his life. It is said he felt unusually well the day before his death. He was a fond and affectionate husband, and a loving father, never failing to hold family prayers night and morning. Truly, he was a man of God. He was a dear lover of his church and Methodism. He was his pastor's friend, and ever ready to help the cause of Methodism for Christ's sake.

Weep not, loved ones, for he's only preceded you to that bright, happy shore to await the coming of loved ones left behind. "There remaineth, therefore, a rest to the people of God." Praise his name for that glorious rest!

PERKINS—On the night of Aug. 17, 1899, God summoned from the home of L. B. and Annie M. Perkins their little daughter, ANNIE MILDRED PERKINS, aged six years six months and nine days.

This little bud was just in sight of the pleasures and possibilities of its seventh Autumn, but God thought best to harvest her with the redeemed of earth. Oh, may he comfort the bereft family!

Deafness Can Not Be Cured

by local applications, as they can not reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result; and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever. Nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that can not be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

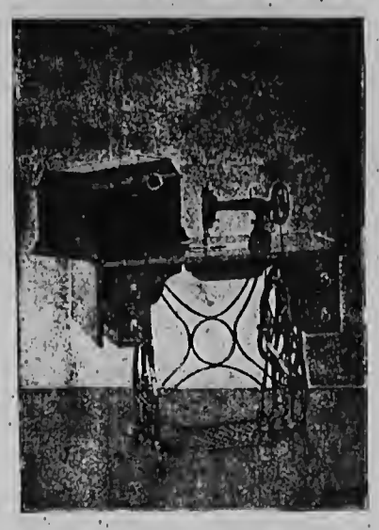
New Machine Offer.

By Far the Best We Have Ever Made.

Always on the watch for something good for our subscribers, we have succeeded in making arrangements whereby we can make a sewing machine offer which is far better than any we have been able hitherto to make. Read the following description and then read our offer:

No. 4 IMPERIAL.



THE IMPERIAL HIGH-ARM SINGER will be found the perfection of mechanism as regards simplicity, durability and adaptability to the wide range of work embraced in the general family needs.

A Handsome, Light-Running, Lock-Stitch, High Arm Machine that will not fail to please the most fastidious. Embracing all the advantages with all desirable improvements of other first-class sewing machines, so simple in mechanism that the most inexperienced need no assistance in operating it. Book of instructions with every machine. Any child can learn to run it.

Extra Set of Attachments also free with each machine consisting of the following: One Tucker, One Foot Ruffler, One Set of Plate Hemmers, four different widths up to ½ of an inch, One Binder and One Thread Cutter.

No. 3 Machine, drop leaf table, gothic cover, case of two drawers at one end and center drawer. Dealer's price, $21. Our price, $14.75.

No. 4 Machine, drop leaf table, gothic cover, case of two drawers at each end and center drawer. Dealer's price, $25. Our price, $15.50.

No. 5 Machine, drop leaf table, gothic cover, case of three drawers at each end, making seven drawers in all. Dealer's price, $26. Our price, $16.25.

Furnished Free with every machine are the following named accessories: One Foot Hemmer; One Screw Driver, One Wrench, One Oil Can and Oil, One Gauge Screw, One Extra Check Spring, One Package of Needles, Five Bobbins and One Instruction Book.

No. 4 Columbian

EXCELLENCE OF THE COLUMBIAN.—All wearing parts are of case-hardened steel possessing great durability, and by the turning of a screw all lost motion caused by wear can be taken up. All parts are fitted so accurately that the machines are absolutely noiseless, and as easy running as fine adjustment and best mechanical skill is possible to produce. No expense or time is spared to make them perfect in every respect, as every machine passes a rigid inspection by competent men before leaving the factory.

NICKEL PLATED.—The balance wheel and many of the fine parts are nickel plated, with other parts finely enameled and ornamented, giving it a rich appearance.

A Self Setting Needle and Self-Threading Cylinder Shuttle are used in the Columbian High-Arm Sewing Machine. They are so simple that any one can easily operate them in a few minutes' time, as our Instruction Book is fully illustrated, showing how to do all kinds of fancy work with attachments.

Extra Attachments, in velvet-lined case, sent free with each machine: 1 Tucker, 1 Ruffler with shirring plate, 1 Hemmer set (4 widths) and Binder, 1 Braider (Foot and Slide), 1 Thread Cutter.

ADDITIONAL ACCESSORIES.—Each machine is supplied with the following outfit: 1 Hemmer and Feller (one piece), 10 Needles, 6 Bobbins, 1 Wrench, 1 Screw Driver, Oil Can with Oil, Cloth Gauge and Thumb Screw, and a Book of Instructions. The Book of Instructions is profusely illustrated, and answers the purpose of a competent teacher.

No. 3—Drop leaf, Bent cover, case of two drawers at one end and center drawer. Dealer's price, $29. Our price, $17.

No. 4—Drop leaf table, Bent cover, case of two drawers at each end and center drawer. Dealer's price, $31. Our price, $17.75.

No. 5—Drop leaf table, Bent cover, case of three drawers at each end and center drawer, making a seven-drawer machine. Dealer's price, $33. Our price, $18.50.

The chief difference between Numbers 3, 4, and 5 is in the furniture, i. e., in the number of drawers. If you do not want to pay for the extra drawers, you need not do so. We sell these machines under a ten years' guarantee, by which we mean that if any part gives out by reason of any defect therein, the manufacturer will replace the same free of charge. Moreover, we allow the purchaser to test the machine ten days. If at the end of ten days you are not satisfied, you have only to drop us a postal card, and your money will be refunded.

OUR OFFER.

We will send any one of the above-described machines at the prices named, and also send the ADVOCATE free for six months. The only condition attached to this offer is that subscribers who are in arrears must first pay up all arrearages to date. It would be well to avail yourself of this offer at once, as we can not promise that it will last very long. Notice that you take no risk whatever. We do all the risking. Address

The Dental Department of the Atlanta College of Physicians and Surgeons.

We take pleasure in referring to the advertisement of the above school which appears in this paper. This school is what was formerly the old Southern Dental College, or the Dental Department of the Southern Medical College. An advance of importance as regards Dental education was made one year ago when the old Southern and Atlanta Medical College combined forming the present college of P. and S. By the united influence of these two schools, which have at all times maintained a high standard, the course of instruction and clinical advantages accruing to the students in this, the Dental Department, are of the very best. We commend this school to any contemplating the study of Dentistry.

MR. EDITOR: In my write-up of the Rapides Camp Meeting I neglected to say that Bro. George Jackson was there. He preached the opening sermon and was with us the first two or three days of the meeting.

We were all glad to see him looking so well. He is now in his seventy sixth year. JNO. B. KENT.

SOME OTHER DAY.

There are wonderful things we are going to do
Some other day;
And harbors we hope to drift into
Some other day.
With folded hands the oars that trail,
We watch and wait for a favorite gale
To fill the folds of an idle sail
Some other day.

We know we must toil if ever we win
Some other day;
But we say to ourselves there's time to begin
Some other day;
And so, deferring, we loiter on,
Until at last we find with rawn
The strength of the hope we leaned upon
Some other day.

And when we are old and our race is run,
Some other day,
We fret for the things that might have been done
Some other day.
We trace the path that leads us where
The beckoning hand of grim despair
Leads us yonder out of the here,
Some other day.

THE SHREVEPORT RALLY.

In obedience to the call of Bishop Galloway, there was quite a gathering of the Louisiana Conference preachers at Shreveport, La, Aug. 30 and 31. All the presiding elders of the Conference were present, together with a very encouraging number of the pastors. Bishop Galloway called the meeting to order at 9 o'clock A. M. The object of the meeting was explained, and your scribe was elected secretary. The Bishop announced that the first day of the meeting would be devoted to the religious side of the work, and after several songs and prayers Dr. Pierce, of Monroe, preached a sermon of unusual depth and power on the necessity of spiritual enduement as a necessity to success in the work of soul-saving. The sermon was followed by Bishop Galloway on "The Great Need of the Church in Order to Make It Powerful in the Conversion of the World" Consecration to God, personal character, a yearning love for souls of men, faith in the power of the Word, preaching more directly to sinners—not ceasing to rebuke sin in the church, but appealing to sinners—were some of the points stressed by the speaker. To many who heard it the declaration of the Bishop that we need a restatement of the doctrine of sin was most opportune and significant.

The afternoon session was devoted to the discussion of the New Testament idea of brotherly love. Dr. Cooper lead in the discussion, and was followed by Dr. LaPrade, Rev. B. F. White, Rev. J. F. Foster, Dr. C. W. Carter, the secretary of the meeting, Dr. Bolling, Dr. Sawyer, Dr. Keener, and Rev. S. J. Davies. The end of the labors of the first day found some of us very much advanced in our plans, increased in zeal, and lifted up in hope of success.

The second day's work, which was devoted to educational plans, especially as related to the Twentieth Century Movement, was begun with religious services conducted by Dr. Bolling, the congregation singing, "All hail the power of Jesus' name!" Bishop Galloway explained the origin and progress of the Twentieth Century Fund Movement. To assure success among us, he advised that some amount, great or small, be secured from each member of our church. These schools are as necessary to our success, the Bishop said, as the great battleships are to our navy. To meet the advanced literature of our enemies to-day with the equipage of our fathers would be like meeting the new navies of the world with the canvas power and wooden hulls of our forefathers.

Dr. Cooper spoke after Bishop Galloway on the importance of the Twentieth Century Fund as a monument of our church to the twentieth century.

Dr. Bolling followed Dr. Cooper in an eloquent address on "The Opportunities of the Church of the Present Day."

The following resolution, offered by J. A. Parker and W. T. Bolling was unanimously adopted, viz.:

Resolved, That, as members of the Louisiana Conference, M. E. Church, South, and as members of the said church within the bounds of the Louisiana Conference, we endorse the Twentieth Century Movement, and accept our share of the fund to be raised.

Resolved, That, as ministers, we will do all we can to collect the same before the close of A. D. 1900.

The afternoon session was mostly occupied in the discussion of methods for raising the Twentieth Century Fund. While there were many methods suggested, the idea seemed to crystallize in this: Something from everybody.

Dr. LaPrade was appointed by Bishop Galloway to conduct the campaign on behalf of the Louisiana Conference.

The following resolution was adopted, viz:

Resolved, That this Educational Rally fix the third Sunday in October as a day of special consecration and service in the interest of our Twentieth Century Thank-offering, and that we ask all our pastors in the Conference to urge that their people observe the day.

Resolved, That where subscriptions have not been previously taken, they be taken on that day.

B. T. CREWS,
W. F. HENDERSON,
C. P. SMITH.

The rally was not without good results, and only need that the people of Shreveport and elsewhere were not brought more directly in contact with the inspiration of the occasion.

Those wanting further information as to plans of operation will do well to confer with Dr. W. H. LaPrade, New Orleans, La.

The rally was adjourned sine die at 5:30 P. M., Aug. 31.

LETTER FROM "GILDEROY."

The sickness of a member of my family kept me in the town of Winona ten days. The people were kind, generous, sympathetic, and attentive. The preachers—four live in the town—and their families were just as kind as they possibly could be. Bro. Shipman, the presiding elder, was abundant in kindness, taking my sick and the members of my family present into his home, and caring for us as for his own.

What a beautiful new church our people have in that town! It is a gem in every particular, inside and out. It is one of the prettiest churches in the bounds of the North Mississippi Conference. When the day for dedication came the house was paid for, and some money remained in the treasury, and so there was no collection to be taken. This was out of the usual order of things. The pastor tells me the collections ordered by the Conference are nearly all in hand. The pastor and presiding elder—so I was assured—will be paid up in full. This is a good showing.

The conditions are good for a great work in Winona. They have the house, the means, the zeal and the numbers to do a mighty work for God. When the membership of a church are united, heart and hand, there is no telling the amount of good they can do. This is the prime condition for successful work for God and souls. "Behold how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity." It is the oil of grace on the head, beard and body of the church.

The preachers and people were so kind to me and mine that my whole heart was drawn out in prayer for the health and prosperity of the church in Winona.

The pastor was sick, and I tried to fill his pulpit on Sunday, but a common preacher seems out of place in a fine house like that. It were better for me to stay in the backwoods among the common people, to which class I belong.

The Baptist people at New Albany—the other end of my double-barrel charge—are building a new, beautiful brick church. When done it will make our old frame building look shabby. Our people have begun to plan for improvements on the old house. They must improve. It will nearly kill me to make up in preaching what we lack in house. The difference will have to be made up in some way. A fine church calls for a fine preacher. When the Baptists get that fine church they will get the people, unless we improve our house, or put more and better salt on our lick-log. I am doing my best now, and I don't see how I am to do any better. Already one or two at Winona have said to Bro. Lipscomb, "Now that we have this fine church, we will have to get us a thousand dollar preacher." That is the way it goes A good builder may build himself out of a charge. Well, I suppose one can build and another can fill. Anyway, I am glad to see these good churches going up here and there all over the land, and I am glad to see a crop of preachers coming on able to fill them. The conditions for good and great works are growing better every day. I do not want to go backward, but forward. We have dwelt in cabins and uncelled frames long enough. We ought to have houses of worship, and good ones. It looks like we meant to stay, and to honor the Lord with our substance. I would not care if all our churches were too good for common preachers to preach in only occasionally in passing, or providentially, as I did in Winona. The people are good enough to listen to common men along at long intervals. Thank God for that. GILDEROY.

NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE NOTES.

Rev. R S. Lawson, P. C., of Tatum circuit, is sick with slow fever.

Rev. Geo. H. Lipscomb is yet very sick. He is in a precarious condition, but we are still hopeful for his recovery.

Let prayer be made throughout the church for these brethren.

The Water Valley Camp Meeting begins to-day. We hope all conditions will be favorable for its continuance, and that great good will result.

"The Epworth League Reading Course" for 1899-1900, beginning Oct. 1, will be ready in a few days. It is excellent, and should be read by every Leagner, and many others as well. It consists of the following four books: "Our Island Empire," by Charles Morris, $1 50; "Among the Forces," by Bishop Warren, $1; "Great Books," by Dean Farrar, $1 25; "Studies of Bible Truths," by Bishop Keener, $1. The set sent postpaid for only $2 50. This is marvelously cheap, and affords an opportunity for many homes and individuals, as well as League chapters, to supply themselves with choice reading matter for the Fall and Winter days and nights.

I shall be glad to fill all orders for the Mississippi as well as North Mississippi Conference.

We are into the fourth quarter of the Conference year. As a recent correspondent expresses it: "To the younger preachers it may seem a long time from Conference to Conference, as once it did from Christmas to Christmas; but many there be of us—not only old, but young—who realize that time flies, and flies faster and still faster as the years go by." It seems but yesterday that we were in session at Aberdeen, received our assignments, and entered upon the year's work. Now we are almost at the close. The protracted-meeting season is nearly over, District Conferences have all been held, the last round of quarterly meetings is being made, and soon the aggregate results of the year's work will go to record. What shall that record be? Will it show improvement or non-improvement on the past? The answer depends largely upon the zeal and diligence of pastors and presiding elders during the short time that remains. It is to be hoped that every statistical column this year will show "increase" instead of only one-third of them, as last year. To this end let us all work and pray.

G. W. BACHMAN.

Winona, Miss., Sept. 9, 1899.

NOTICE.

To Preachers and Members of Durant District, North Mississippi Conference

Report of special committee for reorganization of "Ministerial Aid Fund Society," unanimously adopted by District Conference at Enpora, Miss., July 9, 1898:

We, your committee, would report as follows: That the 'Ministerial Relief Loan Fund Association' be composed of presiding elder, ex-officio chairman, with the following Board of Directors: J G. Hamilton, J. F. Wilburn, A H. Thomas, W. J Newsom, T. J Harris, M. T. Boswell, and R E Wilburn.

We further recommend the district raise $75 per annum (provided that the Board may change this amount), to be in hand of Board by Sept. 1, and that the amount be apportioned to the charges on the basis of the presiding elder's assessment, which will assess each charge as follows: Durant, $5; Kosciusko, $6 50; Sallis, $5.25; Ackerman, $5; Ethel, $4.50; Bellona, $4.50; Lexington and Tchula, $5.50; Pickens, $6.50; Ebenezer, $5.75; Louisville, $5; Eupora and Mabin, $6; Walthall, $2 50; Poplar Creek, $4.50; Chester, $5; Rural Hill, $3.50; Salem, $2 50; Tomnolen, $2 50 These amounts to be raised by the pastors by voluntary collections.

We further recommend that this only be used as a "Loan Fund," and that the borrower execute a note bearing 4 per cent. interest from date of issue.

(Signed) J C. PARK,
A. H. THOMAS,
G. W. BACHMAN.

Dear brethren, take due notice of above, and govern yourselves accordingly. Some young preachers are in need of help, and calling on us for help. Separate cards have been sent to all the pastors by me in the absence of action by a higher authority. Send in these amounts to me, and I will report the whole amount to a called meeting of the Board of Directors. The date is past.

Yours for education,

W. L ANDERSON,
Dist. Conf. Secretary.

Chester, Miss., Sept. 8, 1899.

MILLSAPS COLLEGE OPENING.

On the twenty-seventh of September the eighth session of Millsaps College will begin. It is a source of gratification to every Mississippian that this college has, in the few years of its history, attained so high a place in the educational world. The peer of any institution in the State, the excellence of the work done in Millsaps College is recognized throughout the South.

During the Summer the president and the professors have been into every section of the State, and they report the prospects for a large attendance this Fall are exceedingly bright. A large number of new students have already engaged board, and many of the former students have signified their intention of returning. It is not surprising that an institution so well equipped and so ably manned should have gotten firm hold on the confidence of the people.

President Murrah informs the Clarion-Ledger that the ceremonies incident to the opening of the eighth annual session will be of the most interesting character, and all students who contemplate coming next session are urged to be present on the first day.—Daily Clarion-Ledger.

FROM MANSFIELD, LA.

MR. EDITOR: I have just visited Bro. J. L. P. Sheppard, and found him at the bedside of his daughter, Mrs. Woodard, who is very dangerously sick, with but little prospect of recovery, requiring, as she has for several weeks past, constant and very exacting nursing from none but her father and mother. Bro. Sheppard himself is very feeble, having been prostrated by serious illness, and is just able to be about the house. He and his wife in constant watchfulness over their daughter, night and day, have little or no opportunity of sleeping, and the strain upon them both is very severe. In his great anxiety and distress he and his family need and desire the prayers of the brethren, that the Lord may sustain him and his family in this serious affliction. His people here sympathize greatly with their pastor and his family in their trying circumstances.

Bro. C D Atkinson is here, filling the pulpit for Bro. Sheppard and attending to pastoral duties.

Mansfield College commenced its new session this week with as fine an opening as it has had for years in its back history. President Sligh and his wife are greatly encouraged, and expect to fill every vacancy during this Fall session. A. D. McVOY.

Mansfield, La., Sept. 7, 1899.

"A KILKENNY CAT FIGHT."

Everyone has heard of the "Kilkenny cat fight," in which two cats, with real Irish pertinacity, fought until all that was left of the two combatants was the two tails still fighting at each other. Such seems to be the attitude of our colleges for girls towards each other. A battle is raging which is, to say the least of it, unseemly. College presidents no longer scruple to invade each other's territory. Pupils from the vicinage of one college are being lured away to a distant one by most methods. The following is an exact copy of a letter written by one college president to a pupil of another, with names of persons and places suppressed. The original is at hand.

——, ——, Sept. 22, 1898.

Miss ——, ——, ——:

DEAR FRIEND: I hear that you intended to go to —— College, but was prevented from going there on account of their not allowing you to change cars at ——. I write to tell you that we shall be very glad indeed to have you here at ——. You can come straight through without changing cars, and will have no trouble at all if you get a health certificate. Miss ——, of ——, came in last night, and is going to make a good student for us. We have many advantages that —— College has not. I am spending much more money in employing fine trained expert talent, and I am sure I am correct when I tell you this. We have pupils who were at —— a year before, and they tell us they get much better advantages here.

I enclose you circular letters and testimonials, also send you catalogue and college paper under separate cover, which will give you much information. Please return the catalogue when you have finished with it, as we are short of them, and have to use each one more than once. Please be kind enough to return the catalogue, whether you come or not. You will see that our rates are higher than those of ——, but they are cheaper in the end, because we give you more for the money than they do. My teachers are more expensive.

Since you have been cut off from going there, I will make you exactly the same rates as were made you at ——, whatever they should be; so please come on without delay, and bring this letter, which will show my promise to you. You, doubtless, will not be permitted to go to —— before frost, and that last year was some time in November; and since I make the rates exactly the same, I am sure it will be to your interest to come on at once. Bring any other pupils with you that you can. We still have room in the college, though the rooms are being filled up rapidly. You can readily see the excellent advantages we have if you will read carefully the literature I send you. I hope you will come on without delay.

Your friend, —. —. ——.

I have other cases at hand showing similar methods. Is this the sort of competition that ought to exist between Methodist schools? Will anyone undertake to defend such methods on principles of Christian morality? For nearly two years, at various times, and almost constantly for four months past, I have urged this plea for a more righteous and sensible policy for our girls' colleges. Very many have been brought to think about it earnestly, and have accepted my plea. From many of these I get words of encouragement. But there are others who are not willing to accept the logic of these pleadings. Their murmurings against my policy come to me in the form of personalities, which have nothing to do with the question and impugnings of motives as illogical as they are unchristian. But it is a fact that not one single denial of my statements has appeared, and no one has made even the slightest attempt to refute my arguments. Does anyone suppose that my statements would go unchallenged if they were untrue?—or that my arguments would remain unanswered if they could be answered? Then, why not accept them? If any valid argument can be offered in favor of the "Kilkenny-cat-fight" method of warfare between our colleges, I would be glad to hear it. H. WALTER FEATHERSTUN.

EPWORTH LEAGUE DEPARTMENT.

"ALL FOR CHRIST."

REV. THOMAS B. CLIFFORD, Jackson La., EDITOR.

MISSISSIPPI.

REV. HENRY G. HAWKINS, Madison Miss., ASSOCIATE EDITOR.

An Epworth League was recently organized on the Vaughan's circuit, Rev. J. J. Golden, pastor. There are three preaching-places in the charge, all near one another. The League is at New Hope (Deasonville P. O.), the central church of the three. Miss Minnie Ewing is president, and there is a following of thirty-eight bright young people. They can do well for themselves and the church.

All League officers should be supplied with the Epworth League Handbook. It is a pamphlet of some forty or fifty pages, giving helpful instruction concerning all the workings of an Epworth League. It is for free distribution to all League officers. Write to "Barbee & Smith, Nashville, Tenn," asking for a half dozen.

There are now forty-two Epworth Eras coming to the young people of the Madison charge, Mississippi Conference.

The Pocahontas Leaguers, organized the past Spring, are learning how to be independent. They can hold meetings, transacting business without expecting the pastor to be present every time. Among other works, they have been preparing some nice articles of furnishing for the Orphans' Home at Water Valley. Mr. David Coughlin is president, Miss Jeannie Dewees is secretary, and among the other workers taking active interest are Misses Kate and Willie Lane.

Unless the other pastors and League workers make use of this column by sending to the associate editor items of news, he will fill it up with items concerning the work upon his own charge. The Madison circuit has some industrious Leaguers. The success of a League depends upon the industry devoted to the cause.

"THAT PARSONAGE"—SOME SILHOUETTES.

E. G. WILLIAMS.

Just two weeks after Conference, and the first week in Jannary, 189-, the new preacher and his wife arrived in the village to take charge of "That Parsonage." They were both young, full of enthusiasm, and heartily in accord with Methodism and her institutions. They were accnstomed to the very best that this world can give in the way of home comforts, good dressing, and a well-snpplied table. It was quite a transition for them from a great city to the quiet life of a small town; yet they were pleased with the appointment, as the community had a name for refinement, culture, public spirit, and was the county seat of one of the richest counties in the State. Besides this, the church had been served by some of the most cultured and spiritual men in the Conference, paid liberally towards all church enterprises, and paid the preacher and presiding elder liberal salaries.

The day of their arrival was clear and cold, and everything seemed to conspire to make them happy, and to inspire their already optimistic natures with new hopes of a successful year.

Bro. Sheckles was to have met them at the depot, and to have taken them to his home for dinner; but "trade was brisk, and he could not leave the store;" so the preacher and his wife hunted up the parsonage as best they could.

When the cab stopped at the parsonage gate, and they were sure no mistake had been made, their hearts grew faint. The first impulse was to go to the hotel. Then came the fear of the effect upon the poorer part of the congregation; so, after much debating, they opened the gate and decided to see what lay beyond. They first discovered a half acre of weeds and rank grass, through which wound a foot-path leading to the parsonage. There were some broken-down crape-myrtle trees and rose bushes, and a few canna and Spanish daggers that had grown in spite of neglect. Years ago—"befo' de war"—this was a beautiful place, but since its purchase by the church it has been poorly kept (?). When the house was reached the young man mounted the soap-box (steps) and then the gallery, and, with hand extended and a soft "Come, Sweetsy," lifted his wife to a place at his side. In the door stood 200 pounds of African anatomy, with arms akimbo and smiling a welcome, saying: "Good mornin', Elder. Glad you's come. Ole missus" (Mrs. Millions, who lives in a palace on an adjoining block) "tole me to come and open de house, and make a fire in de front room; but I ain't foun' no wood, so I did'n make de fire."

As they entered it was only to leave a scene of neglect and abuse outside for one of chaos inside. In the hall stood several old boxes, a few chairs, bed springs, a discarded trunk, and some old sacks. The matting, from years of use, was worn threadbare; the glass of the front door broken, and the curtains gone. From this they sought the comforts of the family-room, and in front of the door they found a worn-out excelsior mattress, and beyond, where they dared not go, they saw a four-post bedstead, a worn-out bureau, a shelf with calico curtains and nails below to use instead of a wardrobe, some chairs, and then a washstand on which stood a tin pan and small tin pitcher. This last was an ingenious contrivance that was made from four pieces of scantling about thirty-two inches long, on which was nailed a painted box, on which could be read the legend, "Alligator Matches." Around the lower part of this box was tacked some green calico, and behind this was an array of old mouldy shoes of all shapes and sizes.

The parlor was next sought in hope, and surely it was not so bad; they could get inside. They found an old sofa and three chairs, that in their day would have marked their owner as an aristocrat, but now worn out. The floor had lately been covered with a carpet, but now only a small remnant was left in a corner, with many tacks and a wonderful amount of dirt to be cleaned up by the new preacher. Then there were the curtains of regniation-colored dark calico, water-stained and sun faded. A pair of broken dog-irons, two chairs of another kind, and a nice new table, finished the furnishing of this room.

It is not necessary to speak of cob-webs, and dirt-daubers and wasp nests, and the marks of flies, mice and rats in soiled walls, windows, and the like; or of broken plaster and broken windows, (forty-four in number), torn paper, and door and window-facings and walls defaced in all kinds of ways, but especially from the extravagant use of nails; or of the woeful lack of pictures for the walls, with their refining influence.

The remainder of the house was about like the rooms described, except the kitchen, where the floors were so dirty that they had to be cleaned with a hoe before being scoured. The cypress shelving was so dirty that it must needs be taken to pieces, redressed, and made over in another shape, and the stove replaced with a new one. The walls held the accumulated filth of a decade, from greasy and sooty pots, skillets, and the like, and where the shelving was removed were evidences of overturned grease and victuals, and roaches galore.

On the back gallery there was an array of all kinds of unsightly things—discarded clothes for both genders, boxes, barrels, broken crockery, an old hoop skirt, etc., but, above all, there was an old hogshead filled with straw, old papers, broken glass, old hats, and such things, of which it might have been said,

"Preachers may come and preachers may go,
But I stay here for'ever."

It is needless to say that this parsonage was soon transformed into a place of cleanliness and refinement; but it took plenty of water, soap, muscle, paint, lumber, glass and money to accomplish the metamorphose.

This picture is a true one of many a parsonage that I have moved into in the last thirty-two years, and as I have viewed their squalor, I have asked, "Who is to blame for such filth and furnishing?"

In the first place, the preachers are to blame for living in such filth, and then having so little self respect that they are willing to leave such an index of their true characters behind them. They are also responsible for their wanton destruction or defacement of parsonage property, and it is high time that some law was made that would hold them responsible. They are also responsible in at least one-half of the cases, because they have failed to use the machinery the church has provided in the Woman's Home Mission Society.

My wife says that she thinks "the people are to blame for so building furnishing and keeping up parsonages that the independence and self-respect of preachers is sapped to almost nothingness. That year after year they exert themselves trying to beautify and embellish a tumble-down house and rickety furniture until patience is gone, and they settle down into a state of slothfulness. That, if we would have our preachers interested in the care of parsonage property, we should give them something worth caring for."

It seems to me that if we would have the best class of preachers, they should have the best class of homes—not mansions, but neat, clean and well-kept houses, inside and outside.

I ask you, friend, if this parsonage is yours. "Who is to blame?" Have you done your duty?

LITTLE THINGS.

The little things of life—the small attentions, favors or duties which are so important—are the most often neglected, often overlooked in the quest for something greater to do; something that will attract attention and win applause. Many show great vanity in this, having a fondness, a desire to have their works known and praised, and thus it is only too often true that rather than do little deeds to help a fellow-man or worthy cause, they do nothing at all. They can not bring themselves to do less than their vanity and ambition suggests as worthy of them. How much we need to feel that with God nothing is little! However small the gift or deed, it is great if done in his name, because of the love in our hearts for him who despised not the humblest object nor smallest duty. So few can do great things, and little things are all that is required of them, and have in them the power of making many happy. He who ignores the little things of life will scarcely be capable of doing great deeds, since, by the constant, faithful performance of each little duty and kindness day by day, we develop the power and capacity of doing good. We grow, as it were, into a greater sense or conception of life's mission and duties, and attain unto a greater degree of usefulness. How often a simple word of sympathy, a smile, a kind letter to one whom we can not otherwise reach, has wonderful power for good, lifting the cloud of sorrow from some sad life; and if only one hour is made glad or bright for them, it is more than worth the little effort put forth. These are such little things so easily done when the heart is stirred with feeling and kindly concern for the welfare of others; yet how great when measured by their power for good! How we need more of simple kindness, more capacity to see, more willingness to perform the little every-day kindnesses which so often we neglect! How much we need to realize that it is not within the power and means of all to do wonderful things, to be seen and known of men, to render grand service; give gold, food and raiment to hundreds of the world's needy ones; yet still within our power to make many happier, to speak words that will gladden some aching heart, to bestow small gifts and attentions, to be mindful that no chance be lost to practice loving-kindness everywhere and every day.

"Yo who have no goods nor money
To give to those who mourn and weep,
Kind words are sweeter far than honey,
And twice ten thousand times as cheap."

Peter did not pass by and neglect the lame man who begged alms by the Gate Beautiful, because he had not alms to bestow. He kindly said, "Silver and gold have I none, but such as I have give I thee," and with his right hand lifted him up, bidding him, in the name of Jesus, to arise and walk. Being destitute of gold did not deter Peter from a desire to help, did not excuse him, nor render him incapable of helping the crippled beggar, who only cried for alms. He gave such as he had, and, behold the result—the lame man walked. We who have no gold can give our best as well, and often 'twill be better far for the recipient than alms, even as the gift of healing was more precious and enduring to the helpless man by the gate. We have not the power of Peter to bestow healing, not the power of many we know and admire; yet each can in some way render sweet service to God and to our fellow-creatures, doing only little things. Some may think if they had riches, they would do a great deal of good; but if the means were given, often the desire to help would flee away. It is a blessing to be able to help another. There is so much one can do where "silver and gold" play no part; and how glad we should be to know we need not be rich to be helpful! There is such great need of little deeds that even the poor and humble can do, while others do greater works of mercy. Where there is one great place to fill, one grand deed to do, there are so many little works to occupy, so many little things to do to make this sad world brighter and better for many. There is work for all; there is something each can do; a mission for each in life; each have a work that no other can do.

"May we do it so bravely, so kindly, so well,
That angels will hasten the story to tell."

Perhaps some one reading these words may be led to think of help they can give in some way. It may be there is near them a sick or needy one whom they are neglecting, thinking another can better assist and attend them. How much good a visit even will do such ones; and who would not be glad to do this? Often a smiling face, a kind word, a simple little attention, or a flower, will work wonders in the home of the poor or sick. How many there are who lack even these, who are denied the simplest pleasure that would cost others so little and do so much good!

There may be near you, kind reader, some sick mother who would be made glad and grateful for just one little kind deed, one little attention given the dear child who so sadly misses that mother's care, now that she is unable to longer fill a mother's place. How great the need of tender-hearted women! There so many homes saddened by sickness, and too often poverty is added to make the burden greater; and in such homes how like an angel of mercy does a kind-hearted, practical neighbor or friend prove if only they will lend heart and hand to help! How the sick, shut-in ones of our land need the little attentions which are denied by those who are so well able to bestow them. Even in homes of plenty too often it is true money can not buy the needed attentions, and amid all seeming comfort there is great need of little kindnesses and help.

We who have experienced sickness and need can readily feel and realize the need of others, and how kindly we should endeavor to "pass on" whatever of good we have received in days of sorrow, thus forming a golden chain of love and kindness reaching far down the future years, carrying gladness, comfort and help; breathing incense of charity all the way.

"Hand in hand with angels,
Blessed so to be!
Helped are all the helpless,
Giving light they see.
He who helps another,
Strengthens more than one;
Sinking earth he grapples
To the great white throne."

HISTORY OF MELANCTHON.

Melancthon was the fellow-laborer with Martin Luther in the great Reformation. He was born on Thursday, Feb. 16, 1497, in the city of Briten. Philip Melancthon was bereft of his father in his eleventh year. His mother sent him away for a few days, that he might not witness the death of his father; but Philip never forgot the dying counsel of his father, "Fear God and do right." His intellectual and religious training was now left to his grandfather, who was a very intelligent man, and who had already determined that he should be kept at school and taught something useful.

While he was quite young his grandfather died, leaving him in care of his uncle Reuchlin, who saw that the twelve-year-old boy possessed such existent talents, and was so industrious in study, that he called him his son. Later on in life his uncle declared that so learned a young man as Philip should not bear the homely name of Shwartzard, meaning "black earth," but should be called by its Greek equivalent, Melanothon; so, in after years, he was known as Philip Melanothon.

In the thirteenth year of his age, on the fourteenth day of October, 1509, he was matriculated under the philosophical faculty in the University of Heidleberg. He did not devote his entire time to literature, philosophy and science, but he found much comfort and support in a book of sermons presented to him by his uncle, Reuchlin. The impressions made on the young student's mind by the reading of these sermons was never effaced.

On the eleventh day of June, 1511, he was made bachelor of the liberal arts. At the end of the same year he made application for the degree of master of arts, but was denied because of his youth and boyish appearance. Following the advice of his uncle, he leaves the University of Heidleberg, and went to Tubingen, where he was matriculated on the seventeenth day of September, 1512. Here he heard lectures on philosophy, jurisprudence, logic, mathematics, etc. He also heard lectures on medicine. He studied Greek privately. To all this he added the study of theology.

Philip Melancthon sought to know everything, and to be a master in every science. He remained in the University of Tubingen until 1518. It is said that in his twenty-second year he was the best humanistic scholar in all Germany. He did not propose to remain longer in a school where it was a capital offense to study polite literature. Greater and better things were in reserve for him elsewhere.

On the twenty-fourth of July he received a call to Wittenberg, being urged by the elector, who was at that time attending an imperial diet at Augsburg, to come to him at once with his books, which, twelve years later, was the science of his greatest achievement—the composition of the first and most widely-endorsed confession of Protestant Christendom. Melancthon's fame preceded him to Wittenberg, but his appearance disappointed expectation. He was young, below middle size, of frail body, and carried one shoulder higher than the other.

On the twenty-sixth day of August, 1518, he was installed as professor of Greek in the new University of Wittenberg. He came as a pronounced humanist, but a humanist of a loftier purpose, who is to use his learning in the interest of religion. Luther tore down the idols of the Roman Catholic Church. Melancthon laid the foundation of Protestant theology, and wrote the first confession of the Protestant Church. The combined labors of Luther and Philip Melancthon brought into existence the Evangelical Lutheran Church. Luther loved Melancthon, and honored him for his very work's sake, and often sat at his feet as a pupil, and preferred the opinions of Melancthon to that of his own. Melancthon learned his theology and apprehension of divine truth from Luther. Melancthon was very much devoted to the University of Wittenberg, with the purpose of bringing honor to the university and of disseminating knowledge. He declared that he would not be wanting in faithfulness, study, zeal, nor in labor, to increase the splendor of this university and to meet the expectation of the elector. Thus, with his hands full of work, and his reputation as a scholar and teacher fully established, he closes the year 1518.

PERSONAGES—NO. 2.

The first time that I ever saw Rev. Augustus R. Winfield, D. D., alias "Gus Winfield," alias the "Arkansas Traveler," was at DeVall's Bluff, Ark., August, 1874. The Doctor was presiding elder at that time of the Little Rock district, and was at DeVall's Bluff, holding a quarterly meeting. When I walked into the church on Saturday the Doctor was up, and had just begun to preach. For a few minutes I indulged in a silent soliloquy, viz.: "Is that the great Dr. Winfield of such extensive pulpit fame? He looks like a genuine 'Paddy.' Heavy set, red complexion, thin light hair, pale blue eyes, big nose, clean shaved, and a close-fitting mouth." My soliloquy soon ended, for the old Doctor was warming up. The thunder was beginning to roar, the lightning to flash, and the hail and rain to pour. The sermon that day was nothing to compare with what I heard from him afterwards; yet, at the close, one brother lost his dignity and shouted aloud.

Dr. Winfield was a great temperance lecturer, and, as a rule, wherever he lectured somebody laughed, and somebody cried, and somebody was made glad, and somebody made mad.

During the session of the Little Rock Conference at Prescott, in November, 1880, one night Dr. Chas. F. Evans was appointed to preach at the Methodist Church, and Drs. H. R. Withers and A. R. Winfield to speak on temperance at the Cumberland Presbyterian Church at the same hour. Preaching over, I hastened across the street to hear what I could at the temperance meeting. As I reached the vestibule I found it crowded, and inside there seemed to be a pandemonium. Withers had finished, and Winfield was in a good way. Some were clapping their hands, some laughing, and others cheering and pounding the floor. Out came a man, pushing his way through the vestibule, swearing and saying naughty words. "Oh," said he, "that is all bosh. That is just for an effect," when some replied, "And it seems to have effect on you, at least."

A few years before Dr. Winfield's death he visited one of the Texas Conferences while in session, and he and two other preachers were appointed to speak on a certain subject. They got Winfield to speak first, and while he was speaking one of the speakers slipped out of the house, and when Winfield sat down in a storm the other speaker "begged to be excused, as he was not feeling well." Why, these men said "they would speak in turn with any ordinary man; but this man from Arkansas had a mouth like a cat-fish, and his face was on the top of his head, and he was a talking machine."

Dr. Winfield had faults, like all of us mortals, and he had enemies, and was persecuted, but no truer heart to God and man ever beat in human breast. I was intimate with him for thirteen years. His name is assigned to my license, and he was to myself, and many others young in the ministry, as a father indeed. In 1882 I lost my library by fire, and with it a quantity of his books that I was selling for him. He said the "loss of his was his loss," and he gave me a copy of Watson's Bible Dictionary as a start on a new library.

Dr. Winfield has been dead nearly twelve years. Preachers die. In last month I visited the Camden (Ark.) District Conference, and only met three preachers that I ever knew before—almost a new set since 1887. The longer I live the more attractive is the city above. I believe I know more over there than here. Glory!

HOUSTON ARMSTRONG.

CHILDREN'S DAY FUND.

I have been in splendid position for twelve years to see the fine results of that fund. I have been used almost every year for the past twelve to organize one, or more, new churches, and sometimes a whole circuit, and I find in so doing, oftentimes, that it is almost impossible to get the people interested for good, unless I can give them something to do by which they can come together once a week; then I propose a Sunday-school, and sometimes they object to that, saying we are not able to pay for literature; then I propose to furnish it for three or six months. I then apply to Bro. G. W. Bachman, and he is always ready to assist, and after they have used the first order, they are willing to order and pay for their own literature; then I go to work and hold them a protracted meeting and organize a church. With the Sunday-school in advance, I have never failed to organize; and without the Sunday-school, I have never succeeded.

This is the second year of the history of New Salem circuit, and I have one new ground appointment this year. The writer is the first man to preach in that neighborhood, except that one blind man, passing through, did preach for them a few times last year. We organized a school at that place last Spring with sixty students enrolled, and about forty-five attended regularly. We closed our meeting there a few days ago with ten members, and several more to come. Then, after getting the help from the Sunday-school Board, we observed Children's Day all round the circuit, and sent back to the Board about eight dollars—a little more than we had cost them.

Bro. Bachman is the right man and in the proper place. The fund is a providence to our church, and should never be neglected by any of our pastors. The Lord is blessing us this year as usual. L. A. MCKEOWN.

OUR ORPHANAGE.

I do not believe it possible to give to a more worthy institution than to our Orphans' Home at Water Valley, and it does me good to read in the ADVOCATE how willingly the good people are donating to those little helpless children. As the people learn more of the Home and its competent manager, Rev. M. L. Burton, and the principle upon which the work is done, they will have an increased willingness to give of their means to support it. The Orphans' Home is a home for orphan children, whether of the Methodist Church or any other denomination, and, upon investigation, it will generally be found that most of the children have been taken from the world, and not from any denomination. Moreover, we do not have to gather up these orphans in order to make Methodists of them.

Bro. Burton ought to have a standing invitation from every pastor and presiding elder in the State to enter their respective fields of labor at his pleasure.

In my own charge I promise that I will do everything in my power to assist him.

Come over, Bro. Burton, to Webb and Cherry Hill, and present your good cause in your own wise way, and that my people will appreciate it.

I am endeavoring to secure a contribution for the little orphans from every member of my church. So I expect to have a nice little donation made up by Conference.

J. H. BASS.

Webb, Miss.

Be patient with everyone, but, above all, with yourself. I mean, do not be disturbed because of your imperfections, and always rise up bravely from a fall. There are no better means of progress in the spiritual life than to be continually beginning afresh, and never to think that we have done enough.—Francis de Sales.

CRYSTAL SPRINGS CAMP MEETING.

The twenty-eighth Crystal Springs Camp Meeting closed on Wednesday night after a sermon preached by Bro. Carpenter, of Miss Point, Miss. There was quite a contrast between this and last year's meeting. Last year, when the farewell song was sung, between eighty and one hundred reported to be converted. The preaching was good; only too long for a camp meeting. Four sermons a day left but little space for altar work, or testimony meeting, or children's services, which was of great interest last year. No accession to the church. One young man was converted—a stranger to the preachers and people. Many of the tents were not occupied; some on account of sickness. Other causes kept others from tenting. The congregations were not as large as usual. The meeting was not advertised as extensively as it was last year.

The camp meeting association held two meetings, and manifested great interest in the future of the camp meeting. It is not dead or dying. We have a host of camp meeting folks, and they are strong. I believe camp meetings are ordained of God. I know it is often said the day for camp meetings is past. We have established churches in these places, but my opinion is that they will never close. They meet a felt want.

A very ordinary preachor can put up a tent right under the shadow of his church, with his instruments of music, and get hundreds of people gathered to his tent, many of whom never go to church. And in many cases they listen to the preaching with greater interest than they do in the church. They go off with purposes to live better lives.

REV. W. C. BLACK.

E. J. GUICE.

The subject of this sketch, Mr. E. J. Guice, was born in Franklin county, June 30, 1825, and spent the greater part of his youth and early manhood in the neighborhood of his nativity. He was twice married—first to a Mrs. Cameron (nee Miss Lucilla Coleman), a native of Madison county, Miss. Removing from Franklin county, where he had enjoyed a successful and happy farm life, to Natchez, Miss., they resided there for a number of years, and it was in that beautiful city of our dear Southland that he laid his beloved to rest. On account of failing health he no longer made Natchez his home, preferring the quietude and pure air of country life, spending the greater part of his time at the home of his niece, Mrs. Shaefer, of Claiborne county. It was while under this hospitable roof that he was married again, to Mrs. Currie (nee Miss Lou Guice), a cousin and life-time friend. Removing to his wife's rural home, he at once set about making necessary improvements, "building up the waste places," and conducting, with her able help and counsel, the farm which she already had under cultivation. Only five years of connubial happiness were allotted him here, ere the death angel called, and one beautiful, quiet Sabbath day, when all nature seemed whispering "Rest!" to his tired, suffering body, the message came.

"He started up to hear;
A mortal arrow pierced his frame;
He fell, but felt no fear."

It has been truly said that a good man never dies. The voice may be hushed, the lips give forth no sound, the heart may forever cease its pulsations, and beneath the "daisy-covered sod" our loved one may be hidden from view, but, impressed upon the tablet of memory, a good man continues to live—a blessing and benefit to others who are passing the milestones of life; some with careless tread, some with earnestness of purpose, and all with the certainty of one day reaching that "bourne from which no traveler ever returns."

All who knew him can truly say that E. J. Guice was one of "God's noblemen," and it is indeed a melancholy pleasure to the writer, who has known him from childhood, to linger in the halls of memory and pen a retrospective sketch of a life which, in its beauty and worth, constitutes a priceless legacy to those of his loved ones who still tread the shores of time.

Being a self-made man, he had a clear business head, with shrewd powers of discernment and discrimination, combined, however, with a wonderful love of humanity and a thoroughly unselfish nature; a nature characterized by a truly Christ-like spirit—never resenting an injury, returning good for evil, and endeavoring at all times to "serve the Lord in the beauty of holiness."

Sitting here, beneath his portrait, with his gentle eyes looking down into mine, I am carried back to the years of my childhood, when his arms and heart opened to receive the little orphan who, in God's providence, had fallen to his care. Never was that sacred trust betrayed; never in all the long years that I knew and loved him as a father, do I remember a single act of harshness or indifference. Indeed, if one virtue more than another was prominent in his nature, it was his quiet thoughtfulness of others, particularly of the widow and the orphan. He never turned a deaf ear to their cry—was never appealed to in vain in their behalf. With an abundance of this world's goods, he quietly, and in the spirit of his Lord, dispersed charities to the needy, helped the fallen, cheered the faint, and bound up many a bleeding heart. Another prominent characteristic of his nature was his extreme humility. Far from "thinking of self more highly than he ought to think"—to the contrary, he often underrated his own merits.

Being summoned to his bedside in haste, it was my inestimable privilege to linger by him while life ebbed low, and to listen to his dying testimony as he gave it so fully and freely. All doubts departed as he neared the end of his journey, and the love of his Savior illumined his pathway to the grave and filled his expanding soul with rapture. Truly indeed in this instance did Jesus make "a dying bed soft as downy pillows are," and, though the body was racked with pain, his spirit soared triumphant. Many times his lips gave expression to the perfect peace that satisfied his longings. Even when weakness was supreme and conversation well-nigh impossible, he awoke from a nap and, with face aglow and the exuberance of joy beaming from a soul that saw heaven just in sight, he sang with supernatural strength: "It won't be long, it won't be long," "Glory, Hallelujah."

"It won't be long till Jesus comes,
And bears my spirit home."

And thus the end drew near, evincing, day by day, his readiness, his willingness, his complete preparation for that great change from things terrestrial to things celestial—from mortal life to life eternal. Calmly and peacefully he approached the chilly waters, and even when nearing Jordan's banks he was "tranquil amid alarms," a soldier of the cross, a veteran resting on his arms.

Go, spirit of the sainted dead,
Go to thy longed-for, happy home;
The tears of man are o'er thee shed,
The voice of angels bids thee come.
If life be not in length of days,
In silvered locks and furrowed brow,
But living to the Savior's praise,
How few have lived as long as thou."

FROM THE WORK.

R. C. Grace, Piaquemine Brulee charge, Aug. 30, 1899: "We have just closed a glorious meeting at Rayne, assisted by Bro. E. E. Riggs, of West Lake charge. Congregation from the very beginning largo. The meeting continued to grow in interest from start to finish. Bro. Riggs is a fire-baptized pastor, carrying with him the presence and power of the Holy Ghost, which enabled him to denounce in unmeasured terms popular vices, and in unmistakable language modern hypocrisy, and with commendable boldness to declare the whole truth as it is in Jesus. If all we pastors would tarry in the upper chamber until endued with power from on high, the problem of reaching the masses would receive a satisfactory solution. Results of the meeting: About thirty conversions, and some of this number claimed the blessing of sanctification; seventeen accessions to the church, and the membership edified and spiritually improved. The people of this community, and members of the Rayne Church, will always be ready to welcome Bro. Riggs to their homes, and have him share their Christian hospitality."

Rev. R. M. Blocker, Lake Arthur, La., Aug. 30, 1899: "Since the last of April we have held successful revival meetings at Shell Beach, Mermentau, Welsh, and Lacacine, and a camp meeting at Lake Arthur. The Lake Arthur Camp Meeting is an institution of a Holiness Association, and was led this year by Rev. J. L. Morrill, of Georgia. At these meetings there were not less than three hundred souls converted and sanctified, including reclamations. We have a great wave of revival fire sweeping over this country. A good missionary work, in that every place in the bounds of this work is missionary ground, except Lake Arthur and Lacasine, and our workers have been mostly of our own charge. We have a good band of missionary workers, who go with the pastor and help him in every way possible. One of them a local preacher, two exhorters; others gifted in song and prayer, with good experiences of full salvation. Beside these meetings (of this circuit) we have assisted Bros. Riggs and Luster at Vinton, Bro. Porter at Long Point, and Bro. Sanders at New Hope. Last Saturday and Sunday our noble presiding elder, Dr. C. W. Carter, was with us, preaching acceptably to the edification of believers. We are protracting the meeting each night this week. Rev. A. J. Notestine, of Ruston, is down on a recruiting trip, and will do some of the preaching."

DURANT MEETING.

We have just closed a fine meeting at Durant. The meeting was held in a large tent, and the crowds were immense both day and night. The stores closed in the day for us. Many were reclaimed and many converted, and the whole church greatly blessed. All the churches united in the work. Bro. Augustus received twenty, or more, into the church last Sunday, and there are more to follow. The pastor also organized a good League and a Woman's Missionary Society. Bro. Augustus has taken over seventy into the church during his three years' pastorate there. He may not be a very big revivalist, but he is a good hand to prepare the way for another. Then, too, he don't get in your way like some preachers I have read about.

Bro. Oakley says Bro. Augustus will make at Conference the "best all-round report" of any in his district. The presiding elder helped us with his prayers and presence all he could. It made us feel sad to see one that was so anxious to join in the fight and yet hardly dared do so. We were very glad to see him so happy and bright in spite of his affliction. We could but pray that God would restore him to health.

We expect to open college in about two weeks. The prospects for a full school are flattering. We call upon the brethren of the Conference to help. We stand ready to help every brother pastor to educate his daughter at bare cost, and some time less than cost. Pray for us brethren. W. M. McINTOSH.

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 14, 1899.

A TONIC FOR DOUBT.

There are few persons who do not have seasons of doubt as regards the certainty of spiritual things; whose faith in the reality of the teachings of our holy religion does not suffer a temporary eclipse. Some, however, like Thomas of old, seem to be doubters by nature, while others apparently experience little difficulty in accepting fully the fundamentals of Christian belief. But since man is a rational creature, it is natural that questionings should now and then arise as to the verity of the gospel, and that there should be a desire to examine into the evidences of its divine origin and authority. However conclusive the proof may be to reason, the demonstration is not complete or satisfactory until the soul, in its search for God, has found him in the forgiveness of sin and in renewing grace. Not until there is a personal realization of acceptance with God, and of a new life through faith, can there be full assurance that religion is not a vain thing. We must know for ourselves that Jesus is a present and gracious Savior, and that, "whereas we were blind, now we see."

While the proofs of the truths of Christianity are so numerous and of so convincing a nature as to be well-nigh overwhelming, comparatively few have the time or the opportunity to weigh and study them; but the crowning proof, after all, of its supernatural origin and power is to be found in the change it produces in the heart and life of the man who, laying aside his doubts and objections, resolves to accept the Christ and follow him. When General O. O. Howard was converted forty-one years ago at old Fort Brooke, Tampa, Fla., he told a brother officer that he had become a Christian. The reply of his friend was: "I can show you a hundred inconsistencies in the Bible." "But you can not show me," answered Howard, "that Jesus Christ is not my Savior from sin." The man whose soul has been transformed by the Spirit of God, who experiences in his own heart the love of God, has an evidence of the truth of the Bible and the existence of God far clearer and more satisfying than any that reason or nature can furnish.

Most Christians are not troubled with doubt so long as the skies are clear and prosperity attends them. But when tempests of sorrow and misfortune begin to sweep down upon them, when the light turns to darkness and the path is strewn with thorns, then it is that questionings and distrust arise in the soul, and sometimes assume such sway as almost to dispel faith in the overruling providence of God.

As one of the hymn writers truthfully sings:

"O, it is hard to work for God,
To rise and take his part
Upon the battle-field of earth,
And not sometimes lose heart!

"He hides himself so wondrously,
As though there were no God;
He is least seen when all the powers
Of ill are most abroad."

Thus, though in seasons of distress doubts will come and the soul may be in great perplexity, yet, if we but press on in the path of duty, doing the will of God as we know it, and praying to him for light and strength, our difficulties will vanish, and we shall come to know of a truth that God manifests himself sensibly to those who trust and obey him. The soul that, in the midst of trial and darkness, leans hard upon Jesus will soon find that doubt and fear have given place to a strange, but abiding peace; that heaviness of spirit has been supplanted by joy in the Lord. If, when we are in tribulation and perplexity, we will but put God to the test by continuing to love and serve him, we shall find the path grow from under our feet, and learn for ourselves that not one good thing fails of all that he has promised.

A home missionary relates that one day he entered the home of a poor old laborer seventy-four years of age, who was barely able to read the Bible. Though bound fast with rheumatism, the old man had the old family Bible before him, and was tracing out, one by one, the words of the Sacred Volume. Looking over his shoulder, the missionary noticed that the old man had written the word "proved" here and there on the margin. This is what it meant: "God is our refuge and strength, a very present help in trouble"—"Proved." "Come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest"—"Proved." "Trust in the Lord and do good, and verily thou shalt be fed"—"Proved;" and so on. Thus this saintly man had written out his experience on the margin of the Bible.

The unconverted man also, who honestly wishes to know whether the religion of Christ is true and whether Jesus is the one mediator between God and man, may have his doubts removed and his questionings speedily answered if he will only yield obedience to God. It is a fundamental law of the spiritual kingdom that experimental knowledge of the power and presence of God is conditioned upon our willingness to love and serve him. Jesus gives every honest inquirer a challenge when he says, "If any will do (or wills to do) his will, he shall know of the doctrine." A man may have many doubts, yet, if he but commit his life to the Christ whom he sees not and understands not, he is as certain to find light and peace as that the sun shines.

It is related that when Lady Henry Somerset was just entering womanhood, she came into great doubt and perplexity as regards the verities of the Christian religion, and for a time was a skeptic. One day, however, while walking about in the garden near her home, meditating seriously upon the claims of religion, she seemed to hear a voice saying, "Act as if I were, and you shall know what I am." She knew she was entirely alone, and yet the words were as clear to her mind as if they had been spoken aloud. The more she thought about this strange impression, the more she concluded that it was God himself who had spoken to her by his Spirit. She resolved to act upon the suggestion thus received, and in a little while her spiritual horizon became clear, her doubts vanished, and she came to know the living God. Thus it comes to pass that "light is sown for the righteous and gladness for the upright in heart." It is vain to expect the mists to clear away, and to look for God to manifest himself graciously to us, unless we seek to serve him with the whole heart. Earnest Christian workers are seldom troubled with skeptical tendencies; but the disciple who follows Christ afar off is almost certain to be thus tempted.

A RICH PREACHER.

The following telegram, which appeared in the Nashville American, of the thirty-first ultimo, indicated that our enterprising and popular pastor at Oxford, Miss., has struck a bonanza. We have known him as a genial brother and useful preacher, but had not heard that he had become "a Mississippi capitalist."

"Chattanooga, Tenn., Aug. 30.—Mrs. H. L. Whiteside and associates, of this city, and R. K. Carter, of New York City, to-day closed a deal selling 150 000 acres of mineral land in Cumberland, Rhea and Bledsoe counties to R. M. Standefer, a Mississippi capitalist, who bought it, it is stated, for a big St. Louis syndicate, who are building the Tennessee Central railroad. The price to be paid is $200 000, one-quarter of which was paid in cash, and the remainder is to be paid in fifteen days."

Dr. Hunnicutt writes in hearty commendation of our editorial on "Disregard for Law."

LITERARY NOTES.

BY W. F. B.

The subject of a very interesting article in the September number of The American Illustrated Methodist Magazine is "General Robert Edward Lee," by J. William Jones, D. D. "Shakespeare's Religious Knowledge," by G. McKenzie Cobban, cites the numerous references in Shakespeare's plays to scriptural scenes and characters. The writer argues that Shakespeare could have gained so intimate a knowledge of the Old and New Testaments only by diligent study of the Bible. An illustrated biographical sketch of Silas K. Hocking, who is called by many the most popular of living English story writers, is an interesting article.

McClure's Magazine, for September, has a character sketch of Admiral Sampson, by Ray Stannard Baker, giving many interesting incidents and anecdotes of the Admiral's life as a boy and young man in his home-town of Palmyra, N. Y. Miss Tarbell concludes, in this number, her series of papers on the later life of Lincoln, with an account of Lincoln's funeral.

One of the features of the September Pall Mall Magazine is an instructive article by Mr. William Archer on his recent tour of this country, and the cordiality of feeling for England generally expressed in his reception. Other features of the number are as follows: An important article by Prof. Arminius Vambery discussing the effects which will be felt by Russia and the other Powers upon the completion of the Siberian Railway; another installment of Mr. Higgin bottom's interesting sketches, "Silhouettes in Parliament;" Shakespeare's influence in France is most ably discussed by W. E. Henley.

In The Forum, for September, Mr. William T. Stead, editor Review of Reviews, gives his views of "The Conference at The Hague;" President Robert E. Jones, of Hobart College, discusses "Washington's Farewell Address and Its Applications;" Mr. Ramon Reyes Lala, a native Filipino, writes entertainingly of "The People of the Philippines;" Prof. Rudolf Eucken, of Jena, tells of the "Progress of Philosophy in the Nineteenth Century;" Charles Denby, Jr., contributes an article on "Cotton-Spinning at Shanghai;" Sir William H. Rattigan, an eminent jurist of India, portrays "Indian Famines."

In Ainslee's, for September, "The Alaskan Boundary Dispute," by Arthur I. Street, contains the whole story of the trouble. "The Business of the Express Companies," "The Mayor of San Francisco," and "The Practical Side of Trade Expansion," by Charles H. Cramp, are other notable features in Ainslee's, for September.

In Appletons' Popular Science Monthly, for September, "Tuskegee Institute and Its President" is the title of an interesting article by M. B. Thrasher. The origin of this unique school, its steady growth, and the good work which it is at present doing for the Southern negroes, and through them for the whites, are all pointed out. A number of illustrations add very much to the interest of the article. An instructive account of the poisonous fishes which abound in West Indian waters is from the pen of James Macdonald Rogers, a staff surgeon in the English navy.

The leading article in the September Open Court is, "A Basis for Reform," by the Hon. C. C. Bonney, the ex-president of the World's Fair Auxiliary Congresses. Dr. Moncure D. Conway writes on "The Christ of St. Paul," and Prof. W. H. Carruth contributes a translation of Martin Luther's homiletic tract, "Can Soldiers be Christians?"

The September Century is a Salt Water Number. The special feature of the magazine is the first of a series of four papers in which Captain Joshua Slocum narrates, in a humorous and individual style, the story of his successful circumnavigation of the globe, alone, in a forty-foot sloop, the "Spray," constructed by himself. In "The Way of a Ship"—a phrase borrowed from Solomon—Frank T. Bullen, author of "The Cruise of the Cachalot," tells of the peculiarities, good or bad, of certain ships on which he has gone down to the sea. "Where a Day is Lost or Gained," is the paradoxical title of an article by Benjamin E. Smith on the international date-line in the Pacific.

SOME CRITICISMS.

It is a fearful mistake, a criminal blunder, to allow our children to go to Sunday-school and not attend public worship. If they can only go to one, let it be the public worship by all means. Better abolish Sunday-schools than have them ruin public worship.

It is a mistake for our young people to feel that their first place is in the Epworth League. These young people are abandoning public worship. Better do away with all the Leagues than to place the public worship in a secondary place. The public worship is the one all-important and vital thing in church life. When it degenerates, everything degenerates, and when it is magnified, all the work of the church prospers.

There is a tendency in the church to classify as follows: Children for the Sunday-school, young people for the League, and old people for the public worship; whereas, if any classifying is made, it ought to be that the children and young people should hear the pastor and attend public worship. If the pastor is what he ought to be, he is the best equipped and safest teacher in the church. By all means, insist upon the children and young people hearing him if they neglect every other service.

The most imposing spectacle and example in any community is the regular attendance of the entire church upon public worship. This one act as witness and teacher can not be over-estimated. It is a growing weakness in Protestantism that the people have neglected, and are neglecting, this matter. The increasing indifference prophesies a sad future in the church for properly-conducted services. Our prayers and sympathies are for them all.—Western Christian Advocate.

EPIDEMIC DELUSIONS.

In Southern Russia a rumor that the end of the world is near is causing a panic among the workingmen. Large numbers of the men are leaving the town of Kharkoff to pass the few days they expect to live with their families in their native villages. The factory owners have applied to the police to stop the exodus.

Rumors of the end of the world have been common from the beginning of the historic period. In 1843, under the preaching of William Miller, thousands gave up their business and allowed their property to be sold for a song, and hundreds of ministers, some in all denominations, were led into the belief that the end of the world would occur in that year. Again, in a later period much excitement was produced, and we have had the personal acquaintance of men who gave away their property. Anything which powerfully affects the imagination, and is asserted by persons in whom the hearers have confidence, can develop an epidemic; and while it is reasonably supposed that the wholly uneducated will be most easily excited, the half-educated, consisting of those who are knowing, but not wise, if not excited to such frenzy as consumes the ignorant and untutored, are far more persistent in their delusions, being supported by the pride of supposed knowledge and social standing.

The epidemic of Spiritualism in this country for several years was upon the same grade, precisely as the wild excitements of the negroes, and the difference between the epidemic of Christian Science, now existing, and the wave that swept over the country between 1845 and 1865, and at intervals since, of rapping and tipping and trance-talking Spiritualism, is like the difference between more or less incoherent and obstinate mental delusions.—New York Advocate.

INDIANAPOLIS CONVENTION.

As Dr. Berry had already announced in the Epworth Herald, there was no "color-line," and the colored brother and sister were very largely in evidence. Several negroes were on the programme, and a number of the Northern Methodist speakers took occasion to refer to them, and to the obliteration of all racial distinctions. Some negroes were entertained at the principal hotels, and sat at tables with Northern white guests. It is putting it very mildly to say that all this was extremely obnoxious to the Southern visitors, and it is no wonder that those who were there were unanimous in their call for an Epworth League Convention of Southern Methodists only.—Dr. M. B. Chapman, in Nashville Advocate.

FROM THE MISSISSIPPI BOARD OF HEALTH.

The Mississippi Board of Health has made the following announcement:

"The towns of this State where there is fever should minimize the danger of their sister towns by isolation of cases and the practice of scientific sanitation, and when this is done the other towns should accept the situation and decline to quarantine—a practice so troublesome and so destructive to the best interests of the State. Two years of quarantine have demonstrated that this method does not afford absolute protection. The time has, therefore, come when the sanitarians of this country must start out on other lines. With the fever as mild as it has been for the past few years, and the practice of isolation and sanitation of cases as suggested above, there can be but little risk or danger to the people of the State. With our increased exposure to the island of Cuba we will probably have fever in the South every year, so the ruinous policy of meaningless quarantines must cease, or the country is irretrievably ruined. We appeal to the towns of this State to withhold their quarantines, unless justified by a rapid spread of the disease."

LEAGUE CONFERENCES.

It is not at all improbable that before long the Epworth Leaguers will take into consideration a different plan for constituting and holding the larger League Conferences. It is hardly questionable that better results could be had for the participants if each division of Methodism had its own biennial Conference, devoted exclusively to its own work, but properly related to all other branches. Out of this would easily grow a federation of the various Methodist League forces into an International League Conference, meeting once in four or five years, and being a duly delegated and strictly representative body. These general assemblies of the League have subserved a good purpose, but it seems to us that the time has come for a more perfect organization, and more thorough and more practical work. —Sunday-School Magazine.

A DESIDERATUM.

The Southern Methodist Church needs to take a forward movement in the matter of training Sunday-school teachers for more effective work. A large percentage of so-called Sunday-school teaching is little better than a farce. Many teachers seem desirous of doing something to instruct our young people, but they simply do not know how to impart knowledge. Our Methodist schools and colleges would do well to require every pupil to make thorough preparation for this work. A Sunday-school normal course of instruction in these colleges would be of inestimable value in its effects on the church in the years to come. It is true our Methodist colleges teach the Bible, but is it with a view to the future usefulness of the pupil in the matter of teaching that Bible to our young people?—Southern Advocate.

Transplanting a Northfield Conference.

The latest enterprise of Mr. D. L. Moody is the proposed reproduction of the largest Northfield Conference in Chicago next month.

The August Bible Conference at Northfield this year, as conceded by all who attended, was the best ever held there. It had the greatest attendance and the most deep and scriptural teaching; especially is it said that the number of ministers present exceeded that of any previous season.

Mr. Moody's plan is now, as far as possible, to hold a similar Convention in Chicago during the first part of October, beginning with the first Sunday in the month.

Full particulars of which can be ascertained by addressing the Bible Institute, 80 Institute Place, Chicago.

NOTICE.

To the Pastors and Official Members in the Arcadia District, Louisiana Conference—

DEAR BRETHREN: At the Educational Rally, conducted by Bishop Galloway, in Shreveport, Aug. 30 and 31, a resolution was adopted fixing the third Sunday in October to be observed as a day of special consecration and service in the interest of our Twentieth Century Educational Thank-offering. I trust that each pastor in the district will make special preparation for a sermon on the progress of Methodism since her birth in the University of Oxford, and the need of our church schools, to enable them to offer Christian education to the children of our church as cheap, or cheaper, than the State can offer.

I have ordered a lot of thank-offering pledge-cards, to be sent to each pastor in the district. Amounts pledged can be paid any time up to December, 1900.

It is the desire and earnest prayer of the leaders of our Methodism that we be ready to lay upon the altar of the Lord a million and a half of dollars on the first morning of the twentieth century.

Let all of our people be thankful, and have their names, with such sums as they may feel able to offer, recorded upon the honor roll in the books sent out by Dr Hammond to the pastors, in order that the names of all contributors may be kept in the archives of our church.

Let each pastor or solicitor, when he receives the pledge, record the name of the giver upon the honor roll in his book. B. T. CREWS.

SPECIAL OFFER ON COMBINATION BIBLES.

From now until the fifteenth of October we will sell our Combination Bible to any subscriber who will pay his subscription one full year in advance, viz, to September, 1900, at the very low price of $1.65. NOTICE.

MR. EDITOR: Owing to circumstances over which I have no control, I am compelled to give up all hope of accomplishing anything more as financial agent for our colleges, and I hereby give notice that I can no longer discharge the duties or meet the responsibilities of such a trust. I will turn over the amount I have collected, less my actual traveling expenses, to Dr. W. H. LaPrade, and I hope all subscriptions left in the hands of pastors will be speedily collected and forwarded to him, and that pastors will speedily collect enough to meet outstanding obligations for repairs now going forward on our colleges.

Respectfully,

J. L. P. SHEPPARD.

SANITARIUM NEEDED.

The city of Meridian, Miss., in fact the State, needs a sanitarium. I have a large college plant located on a beautiful, healthy ten-acre site, amid the pine forest, with purest of water. I wish a capable physician to join me in using this plant as a sanitarium. The buildings are large and well constructed for the purpose. Hundreds of patients in this State need convenient accommodations for special treatment.

Then, I have discovered a remedy, by accident from a human standpoint, that will cure any drug disease in 3 days without suffering or craving for the drug. It is marvelous. No harm in it all.

The best accommodations and comfort will be furnished all patients who desire medical attention from any of our city physicians. Being retired, quiet, elevated, with the purest of water, cool breezes, invalids, persons overworked, or any other class needing rest and recuperation, may do as well here as any where else in the States.

Drug habitues will be treated privately and cured in three or four days without pain, suffering for want of the drug, or in any other way. The remedy is absolutely harmless, causing no ill effects whatever, and producing a thorough cure, which is guaranteed. Apply for particulars at once. SANITARIUM,

OUR EXCELSIOR ART BIBLE.

In accordance with our motto, "Better and Better," we have gotten out a Bible which is superior to any hitherto offered. Besides the Holman self-pronouncing feature and all the Oxford Helps, it has the Combination feature, i. e., the revised version in foot notes, and also contains a number of magnificent illustrations, sixty-four, New and Beautiful Full-page Phototype Engravings.

These Magnificent Illustrations represent the most important Scenes and Events in the Sacred Scriptures, and are the work of eminent artists.

No subjects are so well adapted for Illustration by Superb Works of Art as the Grand Scenes and Events described in the Holy Bible. And no other subjects have so occupied the Thought and Genius of the World's Greatest Artists.

The reader has all the most Important Scenes and Events of the Sacred Scriptures placed before him, and is delighted with the Artistic Beauty of these Unrivalled Engravings.

In mechanical workmanship, printing and binding, these Bibles are superb, while at the same time our prices are very low.

THE PRICE.

This magnificent Bible is catalogued by large Northern publishers at $6. We sell it to our subscribers for $3 on condition that they pay up all arrearages and pay their subscription a full year in advance.

LIFE SAVED BY SWAMP-ROOT,

The Wonderful New Discovery in Medical Science.

SAMPLE BOTTLE SENT FREE BY MAIL.

Swamp-Root, discovered by the eminent kidney and bladder specialist, is wonderfully successful in promptly curing kidney, bladder and uric acid troubles.

Some of the early symptoms of weak kidneys are pain or dull ache in the back, rheumatism, dizziness, headache, nervousness, catarrh of the bladder, gravel or calculi, bloating, sallow complexion, puffy or dark circles under the eyes, suppression of urine or compelled to pass water often day and night.

The mild and extraordinary effect of the famous new discovery, Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, is soon realized. It stands the highest for its wonderful cures of the most distressing cases. If you need a medicine you should have the best.

Sold by druggists in fifty-cent and one dollar sizes. You may have a sample bottle of Dr. Kilmer's Swamp Root and a pamphlet that tells all about it including many of the thousands of letters received from sufferers cured, both sent free by mail. Write Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., and please mention that you read this generous offer in the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

SPANISH-AMERICAN WAR PANORAMA

is one of the war books which is likely to be in continuous demand. It is a panoramic record of the triumph of Yankee Doodle. The eagle flaps his wings on every page, and "Old Glory" waves around and above every scene. Prominent officers connected with the war are here portrayed, as well as many of the "men behind the guns." Military life is pictured to the eye, from recruiting to guard mount and skirmish line. Nor is the ludicrous omitted. The company cook receives the attention due to his importance; the mess is shown; cavalry scenes are given; the hospital arrangements are depicted; the heroines of the Red Cross service are displayed; street scenes in Havana, Santiago and elsewhere are unrolled, the new citizens or subjects (which are they?) of Uncle Sam appear and disappear as the leaves are turned.

In a word, the gazer visits the new localities and sees the tumultuous new life, without the risk or expense of a sea voyage.

The Album is 5½x8 inches, weighs 12 ounces, printed on finest coated paper.

Sent FREE to any address in the United States, Canada, or Mexico, for 12 cents in stamps or coin, to cover postage and packing. Copy may be seen at any ticket office of the Big Four Route.

Home Circle

GONE BEFORE.

BY B. F. TAYLOR.

There is a beautiful face in the silent air,
Which follows me ever and near,
With smiling eyes and amber hair,
With voiceless lips, yet with breath of prayer
That I feel but can not hear.

The dimpled hand and ringlet of gold
Lie low in a marble sleep:
I stretch my hand for a clasp of old,
But the empty air is strangely cold,
And my vigil alone I keep.

There's a sinless brow with a radiant crown,
And a cross laid down in the dust,
There's a smile where never a shade comes now,
And tears no more from these dear eyes flow,
So sweet in their innocent trust.

Ah, well! And summer is come again,
Singing her same old song
But oh, it sounds like a sob of pain,
As it floats in the sunshine and the rain
O'er the hearts of the world's great throng.

There's a beautiful region above the skies,
And I long to reach its shore,
For I know I shall find my treasure there,
The laughing eyes and amber hair
Of the loved ones gone before.

THE GREAT MENTAL DRIVING WHEEL.

The will is the king of the mind, and is superior even to brain power. It is the great driving wheel of the mental engine.

How many strong, even mighty, intellects suffer the humiliation of seeing one talented men, but with great power of decision, forging ahead in the race of life, while they, with ponderous intellects and colossal abilities, flounder about, creating great expectations, only to disappoint, simply because they lack the power of resolving vigorously. Thousands of men sleep in obscure graves because they lacked this power. It has been well said: "It will not do to be perpetually calculating and adjusting nice chances; it was all very well before the flood, when a man could consult his friends upon an intended publication for one hundred and fifty years, and then live to see it a success for six or seven centuries; but at present a man doubts and hesitates and consults his brother and his uncle and his first cousin and his friends, until one day he finds he is sixty-five years of age, and has lost so much time consulting his friends that he has no time left to follow their advice."

We all know people who are forever asking the advice of everybody they meet and getting the opinion of others upon every step they take in life, thinking that "in the multitude of counselors there is safety." These people are like dissolving views thrown upon canvas. For the time being the opinion of the one they are consulting is their opinion; they feel firm in it, and think they will adopt it; it seems to be painted indelibly upon the canvas screen. But, alas! when they meet another person, the picture which stood out so plainly upon the canvas grows dimmer and dimmer, dissolves, and is replaced by the next one, and so on through life.

Undecided, vacillating men are, as a rule, overhopeful men. They hesitate to-day, believing that to-morrow will surely bring some new motive that will help them to decide, without a doubt, and will, perhaps, bring the object even nearer to them. But, alas! to-morrow, the chance which was golden to-day will be within the realm of the impossible. It is astonishing how much faith undecided men put in "to-morrow." To-morrow is the talisman, the lucky star which is to bring the object nearer, make decision easier and success more possible. How many men have been cajoled and led on to ruin by that fascinating word, "To-morrow"! But to-morrow-men never do anything. It is the to-day-men, the now-men, who accomplish the great things in this world. The men who chase that will-o'-the-wisp, that phantom deceiver, "to-morrow," never arrive anywhere, never come to anything but failure.

There is nothing else which will fix a floating life, and prevent it from being tossed hither and thither, like forming a habit of prompt decision, and thus putting oneself forever beyond the temptation of vacillation from the influence of others. The will being the king of the intellectual kingdom, when the leader is demoralized, anarchy must reign. Every youth should early learn that, both in business and morals, "He who hesitates is lost."—Success.

A GREAT MAN'S HUMILITY.

I believe that the first test of a truly great man is humility. I do not mean by humility doubt of his own power or hesitation of speaking his opinions, but a right understanding of the relation between what he can do and say and the rest of the world's sayings and doings. All great men not only know their business, but usually know that they know it; they are not only right in their main opinions, but they usually know that they are right in them; only they do not think much of themselves on that account. Amalfi knows he can build a good dome at Florence; Albert Durer writes calmly to one who has found fault with his work, "It can not be better done;" Sir Isaac Newton knows that he has worked out a problem or two that would have puzzled anybody else; only they do not expect their fellowmen, therefore, to fall down and worship them. They have a curious under-sense of powerlessness, feeling that the greatness is not in them, but through them—that they could not do or be anything else than God made them; and they see something Divine and God-made in every man they meet, and are endlessly, foolishly, incredibly merciful.—Ruskin.

FAMOUS FARMER BOYS.

There are some people foolish enough to laugh at the homely virtues of a farm life. They are fortunately few, and they are fortunately growing fewer; but it is well sometimes to look at the list of great men who came up from the farm—not all of them, for that would fill a thousand volumes, but some of the most notable ones that flash into mind in a moment.

Nearly three-fourths of the men who have been chosen by the people for the great offices of the nation are men who were early familiar with wooded hills and cultivated fields. For example, Washington, Lincoln, Grant, Garfield, Hamlin, Greeley, Tilden, Hayes, Blaine, Harrison, and many others almost equally conspicuous in current events of living memory. Among journalists, Henry Watterson spent his early life in rural Kentucky, and Murat Halstead was born and lived on a farm in Ohio; W. H. Vanderbilt was born in a small New Jersey town, and early engaged in the business of ship chandlery; Russell Sage was born in a New York village; Jay Gould spent his early years on his father's farm in New York State; Whittier and Howells spent their youth in villages, the former dividing his time between farm employment and his studies. Follow the list out yourself, and see how long it will become.—Kansas City Times.

THE DIVINE REVEALED THROUGH THE HUMAN.

Hume once said that when he thought of his mother he believed in immortality. There are many to whom God seems afar off; they do not doubt him, but they can not lay hold of him as a companion in the hour of need. To such natures it is a blessed providence when some human soul becomes a translator and revealer of that divine Helper who has not yet become a divine Father in the thought and feeling of a weak and sinning child. Human love becomes in this way the prelude to the divine love, for we hold fast to the mother or wife whom we love; we long to gain and hold her confidence; we do the things that please her, and we leave undone the things that distress her. We square our life by her life, out of pure love for her. A beautiful human soul always suggests God, as the shining in the still waters at night makes us instantly aware that a star is above us. We do not need to look at it; we know that it is there. Whoever in this confused world has the supreme blessedness of living close to a beautiful human soul, can not look into the pure depths of that soul, day after day, without a constant vision of God.—Outlook.

MAN-MAKING

What is all the world doing at once? My answer is, building. I admit that a large part of them, probably the great majority, do not know it and have never thought of it. Yet building they are, and have ever been and ever will be. Aye! and not only are they builders, but they are builders of that which they love the best and in which they have the nearest interest; they are builders of themselves. In this great and universal trade there are no trades unions and no strikes. There is no distinction of employer and laborer. Bankruptcies and failures, I fear, there are many. Be that as it may, let every man—high and low, rich or poor, young or old, the loftiest genius and the veriest dunce, the most careful husbandman of the gifts which God has entrusted to him and the most profligate and abandoned gambler—let them all know that at all times and in all conditions and circumstances they are builders, and are builders of themselves.

As trees make their largest growths in periods, not, perhaps, of their infancy, but of their early Spring, so mental and moral actions, over and above what they are in the very process of thought and deed, leave behind them as portions of the actual character of the agent, the largest actual results. Everyone, at the end of the action, is in himself different from what he was at the beginning; and if the act be done in youth, the difference in him between what he was and what he is, is then the wildest. Do not tell me in reply that the difference is small and imperceptible; for thus it is from moment to moment, in being well or ill, in its being light or dark, in all the processes which in the mass make up the experience of life, with the fruits of that experience.—Gladstone.

FRANKLIN'S FAMOUS TOAST.

Franklin was dining with a small party of distinguished gentlemen, when one of them said: "Here are three nationalities represented; I am French, and my friend here is English, and Mr. Franklin is an American. Let each one propose a toast." It was agreed to, and the Englishman's turn came first. He arose and in the tone of a Briton bold, said: "Here's to Great Britain, the sun that gives light to all nations of the earth." The Frenchman was rather taken back at this, but he proposed: "Here's to France, the moon whose magic rays move the tides of the world." Franklin then arose, with an air of quaint modesty, and said: "Here's to George Washington, the Joshua of America, who commanded the sun and moon to stand still—and they stood still."—Our Youth's Friend.

The want which we vainly proposed to relieve soon looks up at us with reproachful face from the still graves. The tears we failed to wipe away dry upon the cheek, and leave us in the presence of the averted features of distrust, instead of the eye of sweet reliance. The just expectation which we have disappointed can not be recovered; there must be a long undoing before you can weave again, in even lines and pattern fair, the tangled web of life.—James Martineau.

A sad mistake in life is to become sour as age advances. It is beautiful to see a sweet old age mellow, tender, gentle, fresh in spirit, cheerful in hope and always young in heart. And Christianity provides for immortal youth by the love of Christ within and the hope of heaven, giving a sweet experience. What spring and buoyancy and vigor there is in feeling God's presence every moment!—Florida Christian Advocate.

VENTILATING THE HOUSE.

"Admit sunlight at least a part of the day in as many of the rooms as is possible, especially in the sitting room, dining-room and kitchen," says the writer of "Five Minute Talks on Good Health," in the July Ladies' Home Journal. "Every room should be aired daily and given the benefit of the sunlight, if not of the sunshine directly. Should you close the house or a part of it during the day, do not do it so completely as to shut out the moving air, but invite it in through the open windows at the bottom, and after its mission of purification is accomplished give it free egress through the windows opened at the top. The dust may find its way in also, but better some dust and some air than no dust and no air. Bear in mind that a cool room in Summer is not desirable nor healthful if the coolness has been purchased at the expense of fresh air and sunshine. Do not fail to have every window of every living-room lowered from the top if only a few inches."—Exchange.

OUR $1 OFFER.

Much has been said about reducing the subscription price of the ADVOCATE. The only way in which a reduction can be brought about is by an increase in the number of subscribers. In order to facilitate this result, we make the following offer: Until further notice we will take new subscriptions at the rate of $1 for eight months. When seven thousand five hundred new names have been sent in at this rate with the cash, we will extend the time four months longer, thus reducing the price to $1 per annum. When the extension is made, old subscribers will get the benefit as well as new ones, provided they first pay up all arrearages. Of course, no commissions can be given under this offer. Address

LIKE A THIEF IN THE NIGHT,

Malaria creeps into the system and leaves a poison which saps its vitality until the well-known symptoms of CHILLS AND FEVER, INTERMITTENT FEVER, CONGESTION, BLOODY URINE, etc., will show their snake-like heads. Fortunately there is an antidote in DICKS' CHILLIFUGE, which absolutely exterminates Malaria in a few hours; so pleasant to the taste that children love to take it. It banishes fevers like mist before the morning sun; brings as a gift rose cheeks, health, happiness, and makes life worth the living

OBITUARIES.

Obituaries of 200 words published free. For all words in excess of that number send one cent per word.

KEMP—JOHN PHIPPS KEMP departed this life Feb. 14, 1897, near Ethel, East Feliciana parish, La., in the triumphs of a living faith, after an illness lasting through several years, in the eighty-fourth year of his age, being born in Jefferson county, Miss., Aug. 4, 1813.

Bro. Kemp's father's name was Thomas, and he had a brother, Rev. Hezekiah Kemp, a presiding elder before our late war between the States.

In the year 1873 Bro. Kemp moved to this parish, together with his wife and five children—two girls and three boys. His beloved wife preceded him to the glory world in the year of 1884, whose loss he never ceased to mourn.

Bro. Kemp was brought under conviction by the words, "God bless you!" spoken to him by that zealous Christian Sunday-school worker, Miss Laura Reames, which finally resulted in his conversion, and he joined the M. E. Church, South, at Olive Branch, La., then under the ministry of the beloved Rev. Ira B. Robertson. Bro. Kemp was ever after a faithful member, rejoicing "evermore," and living a life of prayer and devotion to God. He was passionately fond of "the songs of Zion," loved all of God's children, and was always (when able) found at the "house of God," sitting at the Master's feet, ever drinking in the "story of the cross," rejoicing in God, his Savior. One of his favorite sayings was, "I have tried to do my duty." He expressed the wish that his friends would sing at his burial those grand old hymns, "Oh, think of the home over there," and, "I will sing you a song of that beautiful land." When the hour of death came he called his son, James Kemp, and his wife, and told them he was dying; said, "I am ready; I have no fear; I am going home." Only three or four minutes before death he said, "Good-bye." "Let me die the death of the righteous, and let my last end be like his." Amen!

This scribe, who loved and honored the subject of this sketch for his faith in and fidelity to God, was requested by himself to write his obituary. This is a sad, pleasant duty, and I pray God that his dear children, together with this scribe, may meet him "around the great white throne" "in the sweet bye-and-bye."

KING—In memory of Mrs. J. R. D. KING, who died Aug. 18, 1899, after a few weeks' illness.

There is a desire in the human heart to lay a tribute of our own on the graves of those we love and honor, even though the graves may be strewn thick with flowers already.

It would be a difficult matter to praise our departed teacher for her gentle and inoffensive disposition during her short sojourn among her many friends and pupils of her Sunday-school class. She won so many ardent admirers that all would consider it a fruitless endeavor to eulogize a character too noble to be praised. Snatched away in the prime of womanhood, but she has left lasting impressions upon the hearts of relatives and associates, which will long live in their memories. The shadow that fell upon that parsonage home when her life went out tells of a grief too deep, too sacred for words.

She was a consistent member of the Methodist Church. No one ever brought to her altar a more reverent heart. Our Sunday-school and church owes her a debt of gratitude and love for the just, wise and magnanimous discharge of every official and private duty.

Our beloved teacher has finished her work here below and gone to her reward, but her noble spirit will live among us as long as human gratitude treasures the memory of noble deeds and faithful friends.

Class: Raymond Farr, Asa Tucker, Miles Branum, Ernest Farr, Milton Johnson.

Committee: H. C. Cary, Miss Ila Hardy, Annis Ringgold.

Courtland, Miss.

HUDSON—ANN JOSEPHINE BURTON was born at Abbeville C. H., S. C., Feb. 17, 1833. Her family moved to Jefferson, Marengo county, Ala., when she was ten years of age. She was married to Dr. Joseph Moore in May, 1851. Dr. Moore died in 1860. Two daughters, children of this marriage, survive: Mrs. Leta Howard and Mrs. Annie Hundelstein, of Durant. In October, 1876, she was married to Mr. Chas. E. Hudson, of Alabama. He died in May, 1893. After several years' illness she died at Durant, Miss., Aug. 1, 1899, and on Aug. 3 was buried at Macon City. She was a member of the M. E. Church, South, nearly all of her life, and for many years a subscriber to the NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE. She was a zealous church member. Loving her church and its ministry, her home was open for their entertainment. She was "given to hospitality." She was a loyal, faithful, devoted mother, and in return received the loving and faithful ministrations of her daughters. She was kind of heart, gentle in speech, charitable in her judgment of others. Full of faith and good works, she died in peace, and so entered into rest. In selecting readings when the writer prayed at her bedside, her own marked Bible was the guide to what her heart loved best of the Word of God.

May her bereaved children find comfort in her virtues, and an unfailing incentive to righteousness in her pure life and noble character!

N. G. AUGUSTUS.

KELLEY—On the sixteenth of August the home of Mr. and Mrs. James Kelley was saddened by the death of their daughter, RUTH, aged eighteen years three months and twenty-seven days.

Only a few days before she was mingling with schoolmates and friends, no one realizing that the parting would be so soon. Though her illness was short, her suffering was intense. A short time before her death she grew calm, and a loving, anxious mother, bending over her, caught the words, "Upon this rock I build my church, and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it." From this expression we feel that the Holy Spirit was leading and comforting her, and that she was given victory over death.

Ruth was a sweet, cheerful girl; a member of the M. E. Church, and her bright face will be missed at church, at school, in the social circle, and, most of all, in the family, where she was the light of home. To her fond father, mother and sisters this is a severe trial, and dark indeed would be the lonely way were it not for hope of a future and trust in our heavenly Father. May he give them strength to bear this trial in submission to his will, and lead them to that home where they will meet with the loved one gone before!

COUSIN H.

STONE—Mrs. MINNIE STONE was born in Chatham county, N. C., on the fifteenth day of May, 1849, and died in Choctaw City, Oklahoma, on the twenty-eighth of July, 1899.

When she was about thirteen years old she professed religion and joined the Methodist Church, South, in which she continued up to her death—a bright and a shining ornament.

On the fifteenth day of October, 1868, she was married to Mr. M. J. Stone. Afterwards her husband moved to Mississippi, thence to Choctaw City, Oklahoma, where she died.

Mrs. Stone was a good neighbor—in truth, one of the very best that ever lived; one to be loved as yourself. In her grew and expanded those noble virtues and sweet graces that so adorn exalted womanhood. She was the soul of hospitality and liberality; was a good mother, and made her home beautiful by her own sweet life; trained her children in the school of Christ, and was ready to endure hardness as a good "soldier of the cross." She bore her sufferings for two years with heroic fortitude, and passed away like Bunyan's pilgrim—calm in the great victory. She leaves a devoted husband, a son and two daughters to mourn her loss.

JOBE HARRAL.

Eulore, Miss.

GRANTHAM—FLORANCE CRENSHAW was born in Garner Station, Yalobusha county, Miss., April 5 1870; joined the M. E. Church, South, in July, 1886; married to S. P. Grantham, Oct. 5 1887; died July 5, 1899, leaving a husband and two children, a blind sister and other relatives to mourn her loss. She was a kind, loving and devoted wife; an affectionate mother, a true and faithful Christian. She was a great sufferer for months before she died, and she bore her sufferings with patience and Christian fortitude. She was cheerful and happy most of the time during her sickness. She often expressed herself as being perfectly willing to die. The day before she died she called her children to her bed and told them to be good children and meet her in heaven. She said she was going to heaven to live always. Her pastor, H. P. LEWIS.

CALLIHAN—Died July 30, 1899, Mr. LITTLETON CALLIHAN, aged seventy-three years.

Truly a good man has gone from us. We have known Bro. Callihan over thirty years as a faithful member of the M. E. Church and a pillar of the church to which he then belonged. A Christian devoid of envy and without a fashion has gone to enjoy the rest of the righteous. May the Comforter fill the void in the heart of his truly good, lonely and sorrowing wife, and all of his beloved children! While we sorrow for the loss of so good a friend and brother in Christ, we extend to his bereaved family our sincerest sympathy.

Deafness Can Not Be Cured

by local applications, as they can not reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness; and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result; and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever. Nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that can not be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars; free.

The chief difference between Numbers 3, 4, and 5 is in the furniture, i. e., in the number of drawers. If you do not want to pay for the extra drawers, you need not do so. We sell these machines under a ten years' guarantee, by which we mean that if any part gives out by reason of any defect therein, the manufacturer will replace the same free of charge. Moreover, we allow the purchaser to test the machine ten days. If at the end of ten days you are not satisfied, you have only to drop us a postal card, and your money will be refunded.

OUR OFFER.

We will send any one of the above-described machines at the prices named, and also send the ADVOCATE free for six months. The only condition attached to this offer is that subscribers who are in arrears must first pay up all arrearages to date. It would be well to avail yourself of this offer at once, as we can not promise that it will last very long. Notice that you take no risk whatever. We do all the risking. Address

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

Paris received the verdict in the Dreyfus case gleefully.

Representatives of the various labor organizations of this city have met and formed a Trades' Council.

Hon. James B. Eustis, ex-ambassador to France, died on Sept. 9 at his Summer home at Newport, R. I.

John D. Rockefeller has contributed $250,000 to the $2,000,000 endowment fund now being raised at Brown University.

The Arctic exploring steamer "Windward" has arrived at Brigns, with all well on board. Lieut. Peary has lost several toes from frost bite.

The English, German and Russian press are very bitter at the conviction of Dreyfus, and many of them talk of boycotting the Exposition.

The feeling against the United States in South America is growing, influential newspapers asserting that it is the intention of this country to seize the whole continent.

At the closing session of the Trades Union Congress, which has been in convention in Plymouth, England, a resolution was passed urging the government to use every possible effort to peacefully settle the Transvaal diffionity.

Marconi's experiments have proved so satisfactory to the British admiralty that a complete set of the apparatus for wireless telegraphy has been supplied to the "Defiance," the torpedo schoolship at Devenport, for further experiments by naval officers.

Capt. Dreyfus believes he will be released about Oct. 15, his past imprisonment being counted in his favor. But the clerk of the court and Col. Jouaust says he has ten years yet to serve, though he will not go through the ordeal of degradation again.

The Tagal Treasury has issued $3,000,000 in paper money and made its acceptance obligatory. Aguinaldo calls on property holders to supply his army with wagon trains without pay. The consent of the governed is of no consequence to the insurgents.

The Cuban National League and the Cuban National party have offered to Gaulberto Gomez and Gen. Maximo Gomez the joint presidency. The offer has been declined by Gaulberto Gomez, who says he wishes to keep his independence and will not join any party at present.

Six great universities have offered to confer their highest degree upon Herbert Spencer, and several governments have tendered him decorations, but he has consistently declined all such honors. He is 79 years old, and his fame is worldwide, but he is plain Herbert Spencer.

The Association of Spanish War Veterans, as the newly-organized body of soldiers who fought in the war of 1898 will be officially known in the future, adjourned in Washington, D. C., on Sept. 9, after having satisfactorily arranged for the completion of a permanent form of organization.

General Otis has been instructed, in framing his plan of campaign for the dry season, to allow for the fullest participation of the naval forces now in the Philippines, and as soon as he has been heard from the necessary orders will go forward to the naval commanders to co-operate with the army to an extent not before contemplated.

The Spanish Republics are disturbed over a report of acquisitions in Bolivia, which, it is alleged, have been made by Uncle Sam. They fear the "Colossus of the North" is moving southward and will annex the whole of South America. European Governments have helped to create distrust when possible.

An order for the organization of two colored regiments was issued from the War Department on Sept. 9. All of the field officers of these two regiments are white men now in the regular army. All of the company officers are colored men who served in the war with Spain in either the regulars or volunteers.

The actual status of the Transvaal crisis appears to be unchanged. In spite of all the clamor and excitement raised by the rumors preceding the Cabinet council, Great Britain's ministers apparently have done nothing more than strengthen the hands of Joseph Chamberlain, the Secretary of State for the Colonies.

With the exception of the Jesuit organs in Rome and the anti-Semite papers, the press of the whole world is ringing with execration. Even the Russian press joins in the chorus, although, perhaps, the Jews are nowhere more hated than in Russia. The judges are everywhere described as criminals and gloomy speculations are indulged as to what further is in store for France.

On Saturday the end of the trial of Captain Dreyfus, of the French army, accused of treason, was reached. For more than a month the court at Rennes has heard evidence, and the pleadings of counsel occupied the best part of two days. The deliberation over the verdict lasted barely an hour. The court, by a majority of five to two, found Dreyfus guilty as charged. It was found that there were extenuating circumstances; hence the prisoner was condemned to ten years' detention.

A Prominent Minister Writes.

After ten years of great suffering from indigestion, with great nervous prostration, biliousness, disordered kidneys and constipation, I have been cured by Dr. Mozley's Lemon Elixir, and am now a well man. REV. C. C. DAVIS,
M. E. Church, South,
No. 29 Talnall St., Atlanta, Ga.

A Prominent Memphian Writes.

DR. H. MOZLEY, Atlanta:—Having been a great sufferer for three years from indigestion, and been treated by many physicians, who failed to give me any relief. Continuing to grow worse my brother advised to try Dr. Mozley's Lemon Elixir, which remedy he had used for several years. I commenced its use, and must say that your Lemon Elixir is the greatest medicine on earth. I have never suffered a day since I commenced using Lemon Elixir.
R. L. ROCCO,
206 Hernando St., Memphis, Tenn.

A Card.

This is to certify that I used Dr. Mozley's Lemon Elixir for neuralgia of the head and eyes with the most marked benefit to my general health. I would gladly have paid $500 for the relief it has given me at a cost of two or three dollars. H. A. BEALL,
Clerk Superior Court Randolph Co., Ga.

REV. W. C. BLACK,
512 Camp St., New Orleans, La.

I, the undersigned, take pleasure in making known my thanks to Messrs. Finlay, Dicks & Co., Ltd., manufacturers of Chillifuge, for having completely cured my daughter, with one bottle, of malarial fever of long standing. The pleasant taste made it most acceptable to the patient. Believing that I do a favor to suffering humanity, I give this for publication.
CARLOS G. PORTOCARRERO.
Cano, Cuba, Aug. 10, 1899.

As the world grows older it grows wiser and more practical. The days of eloquence and flowery speech have been displaced by sound reasoning, and robust, if homely, argument. We, as advertisers, appreciate this, and, therefore, present the merits of Dicks' Chillifuge, briefly and forcibly:

It Will Cure Chills.
It Is Pleasant to Take.
It Makes Rich Blood.
It Makes Life Worth Living.

EXTRA GOOD ORGANS

Epworth organs cost more to make than the common kind. But our direct-from-factory selling saves that heavy middle expense. By saving in the selling, we put more in the making.
The more people know how good the Epworth is—and how we deal—the more our business grows. Write for catalogue today.

This Fall the Bay View Reading Circle enters upon its seventh year, winning and holding friends wherever it appears. Thousands do not know of the splendid Bay View courses of study for private use and present or planned clubs, for the management has made no effort to court publicity, but trust all their energies to do the best work. As a result, they can make the unparalleled statement that their membership gain is at the rate of 2,000 a year, while their losses are under five per cent. Their next course on Russia and Holland is going to be a winner. Anyone wanting particulars can always procure the circular and a copy of the beautiful Bay View Magazine by addressing J. M. PAINT TALKS, XX.

PAINT AS A SIGN OF PROSPERITY.

There are certain sections of this country where a well-painted building is as rare as "white blackbirds." In some places this is because the inhabitants have not learned the value of painting, in others it is because they do not know how to select a good paint. But it is worth noting that in those sections where thrift and industry are the most prominent traits of the people unpainted structures are rare; while in those districts where improvidence and poverty go hand in hand painted buildings are hard to find.

The fact of the matter is that a building that is worth erecting is worth protecting. Every property owner insures against fire, which is not likely to happen and which insurance can not prevent; but too many neglect the really efficacious insurance against decay, which is nothing less than insurance against decay. But it is more than this—it is an announcement to all the world that the property owner is intelligent, thrifty and provident. The sum saved by neglecting to paint is paid for at usurious rates in the deterioration of the property.

Nothing in the world presents a more slipshod, down-at-the-heels appearance than a building suffering for the want of paint, and nothing more surely advertises the owner's lack of ordinary prudence—it is on a par, in its significance, with a valuable piece of agricultural machinery left to rust under the open sky.

The man who in these days suffers from the second cause I have mentioned—poor paint—must be either very careless or very confiding. But so long as people continue to allow advertisers to persuade them that pure white lead makes a satisfactory paint, or so long as other people continue to buy paint with an eye only to first cost per gallon or pound, so long will buildings be made shabby by poor paint.

The durable paints ought to be familiar enough to everybody—for dark shades any of the mineral colors—the so-called metallic browns, the umbers, ochres, siennas, iron oxides, lamp blacks, graphites, etc.; and for lighter tints, zinc white—with or without white lead—in combination with these. For white or very light tints, nothing excels one of the zinc white combinations, in which the zinc is ground either with white lead or with one of the "inert" pigments—barytes, sulphate of lime, silica, etc.—or with a proportion of both.

The real value of white lead—and it has valuable qualities—is in its opacity, its softness, and its ease of working. For these qualities it is useful as a component of house paints, but to advocate its use to the exclusion of the more durable pigments, like zinc white, is to insist that a part of anything can be as great as the whole. The "Combination" Bible.

A SUPERB EDITION

of the Holy Scriptures, showing at a glance at the foot of the pages all changes made by the revisers.
New Type. All Proper Names. Self-Pronouncing. The Most Valuable Collateral Matter.

There is a steady and increasing demand for first-class Bibles. Everybody is anxious to obtain a copy of the best edition of the Holy Scriptures. Old editions are constantly being replaced by Bibles that are in every way more attractive, and there is practically no limit to the demand.

OUR "COMBINATION" FEATURE.

Hitherto the King James and Revised Versions have been printed in parallel columns, but this makes comparisons of texts tedious and unsatisfactory, and makes the book very unwieldy. We have overcome this difficulty by "combining" the two Versions on the same page, showing at a glance in foot-notes all the Changes, Additions and Omissions made by the Revisers.

THE OLD VERSION PRINTED IN FULL.

The King James Version is the basis, and this Version is read straight along from the text, while the Revised Version is read from the text in combination with the foot-notes. Our "Combination" Feature has met with universal approval and is strongly endorsed by all leading Divines and Biblical Scholars.

It is only by a comparison of the two Versions that the greatest benefit can be obtained from reading the Holy Scriptures, and this comparison every reader can easily make by our simple arrangement for showing the changes made by the revisers. This is the greatest triumph of Bible Publishing the World has ever known.

OUR OFFER.

To those unprogressive people who do not read and pay for the NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE we sell this Bible at the publisher's retail price—$4.25. To our subscribers we sell it at the very low rate of $2. The only condition attached to this offer is that the subscriber must pay his subscription one full year in advance, viz.: to September, 1900. We will send it postpaid to any person who will send us three new cash subscribers at the regular rate. For six new cash subscribers at the regular rate we will send two "Combination" Bibles, postpaid.

For fifty cents additional we will send a Bible with index.

For twenty-five cents additional we will have your name engraved in gilt letters on the outside.

Send for circular. Address REV. W. C. BLACK.

P. S.—We can give no commission on renewals in connection with the above offer.

ON OUTBOUND SHIPS.

BY WILL T. HALE.

How dearer seem those on the outbound ships
Than those who tarry with us on the shore;
And holier seems the kiss of absent lips
Than that of lips we do not yet deplore.

The one too busy for a tender word
To those who cling in childhood 'round the knee,
Will yearn at last some day—by memory stirred—
For childish forms that he no more may see

God help us prize the little ones we have,
And realize in time our blessing's worth—
For every passing moment is a wave
That bears them farther from our arms and hearth.

Exchange.

PROGRESS!

A traveling salesman—an Israelite—representing a New Orleans house, walked into my office one day this week, and, referring to Bishop Galloway's interview, inquired if I were the party to whom reference was made therein. On being answered in the affirmative, he expressed his approval of our Twentieth Century Movement in earnest words, and emphasized it with a liberal contribution. He stipulated that his name should be withheld from publication. Surely every Methodist will cheerfully lay a thank-offering on the altar. Will all the preachers see to it that every Methodist has the opportunity?

Many encouraging letters have recently come to hand. Rev. J. W. Dorman is pushing the work in the Greenville district, and assures me that none of his preachers will neglect it. Many letters from the district confirm this view. They are a noble band—and "there are others."

Dr. T. C. Wier has preached on this subject in every pastoral charge in the Sardis district, and is still talking and exhorting, and will continue to do so at least till 1901. He also keeps in touch by correspondence with every pastor in the district. Such work is bound to tell.

Rev. T. Y. Ramsey is giving faithful attention to it in the Corinth district.

Rev. W. S. Shipman is giving much thought to it, and is planning wisely for success in the Winona district. Dr. Murrah will fill several appointments in this district advocating this thank-offering.

Letters from Revs. G. H. Jacobs, J. E. Cunningham, J. J. Brooks, W. T. Griffin, W. E. M. Brogan, R. M. Davis, M. L. White, Jno. T. Lewis, J. C. Mimms, M. D. Fly, J. D. Newsom, Thos. Cameron, Jas. Porter, H. S. Spraggins, W. M. Young, L. A. McKeown, J. W. Campbell, W. L. Blackwell, J. T. Murrah, H. Mellard, J. H. Foreman, J. P. Drake (his third report), J. W. Treadwell, bring assurances of deep interest in and faithful work for the fund. Some of these have raised money, but will report amounts later. Nearly all the letters breathe a spirit of hopefulness that is inspiring.

Rev. T. W. Lewis has issued an appeal to every member of the church in Corinth, and is making preparation to observe Twentieth Century Education Day the fourth Sunday in September. A first-class report is expected from Corinth.

Rev. Eugene Johnson reports thirty-five dollars from Columbus circuit, and "more to follow."

Rev. J. J. Golden reports thirty-six and 25-100 dollars from Vaughans, and will "appoint committees and push the work from now on."

Rev. J. H. Smith (his second report) is confident of securing at least one hundred dollars from Wall Hill circuit. I'm sure he will, as he already has more than half the amount.

Rev. J. A. Bowen has kept the matter constantly before the people of Columbus, using the League, the prayer meeting, and preaching services; and he is meeting with most gratifying success. The people are interested and give cheerfully. To date those giving have averaged more than seven dollars each. The work will be pressed vigorously.

One of the very best reports yet received is from Rev. J. W. Crisler, Woodville. He has secured one hundred and ninety-four dollars, and "will add to it from time to time."

Rev. H. C. Brown, Fannin, sends a most excellent account of his Education Rally Day. "I had the Quarterly Conference to elect a committee, composed of two from each church, to arrange for an Education Rally for the circuit. This committee selected a central point and a date for the rally. Notwithstanding sickness and an unfavorable day, the meeting was a success. It will result in great good to this country. It will not only stimulate the Twentieth Century Thank-offering, but will help the cause of education in many respects. I have no doubt I will receive the entire amount expected of this charge before the Annual Conference. I would recommend every preacher to try the Rally Day plan, for I believe it will help every charge." I concur in that recommendation, and share in that belief.

Some presiding elders write me that many of their preachers have observed the day, and raised money, who have not reported. I sincerely hope so. All we need to insure gratifying success is, that all from whom I have not heard do as well as those who have reported. Many will devote October to work for this fund. We are expecting large things from October. The preacher, if any, who neglects this work is going to be mighty lonesome. Fall in, brother, and keep step! What is done in the next thirty days will largely determine the measure of our success, and will materially aid in the achievement thereof. What is left undone will presage failure, and will make that much more to be overcome by others. Let there be no laggards now.

In addition to what is being done by the pastors and people, every Sunday-school in Mississippi must make a special thank-offering. I have just mailed a letter to every superintendent in the State—more than eight hundred—urging this duty and privilege. Will the preachers in charge encourage them to secure a thank-offering from their schools? I hope so.

Presiding elders can help by mentioning it approvingly in the Quarterly Conferences.

Yours for complete success,

J. R. BINGHAM.

Carrollton, Miss., Sept. 15, 1899.

LETTER FROM "GILDEROY."

I have had occasion this year to reatndy more closely than ever before the pastoral relation. It is one of great delicacy and of great responsibility. A pastor needs to be as "wise as a serpent and as harmless as a dove;" as brave as a lion and as tender as a woman, or as tender as our Lord. I am more than ever convinced that a pastor ought to forbear threatening. This is a poor way to secure subjection to lawful authority. A threat excites what remains of the old Adam in most men and women. Most of us have enough left after grace has done its best work in us. It is a standing tenet of all our Methodist teachers that grace never entirely destroys our connection with the race of Adam.

The threatening pastor soon loses his grip on the people. It looks like a government of force, and not of moral suasion; a rule of fear, and not of love. Some few pastors seem to think a threat is a manifestation of courage and of fidelity to discipline. The people, as a rule, regard it as "our-rage," and nothing more. A threat indicates the bluster of a bully. Grown men and women can not be governed in this way. If a pastor gains the love of his people, he can do almost anything he pleases with them. "It is better far to rule by love than by fear." The pastor who threatens people is not an amiable and lovable man.

As I grow older I grow more and more afraid of men and women, especially of pastors, who are on too intimate terms with God; those who consult God about all matters, great and small, and who have, or claim to have, the direction of the Spirit in all they propose to do or to say. I seriously doubt whether the Holy Ghost gives such minute and specific directions in regard to all the affairs of this life. It seems to me some things have been left to the common sense, to the better judgments of men. I am pretty certain the Holy Spirit would not suggest an unwise and foolish course to any man or woman. Those who claim to have the mind of the Spirit in all matters, great or small, are, generally, wise above what is written, and they do and say many foolish things in the name of the Lord. Grace never acts contrary to gumption. Sound common sense is about all the guide most of us need in the ordinary affairs of life. Those who claim to be inspired and divinely directed in all their words and ways are, often, stubborn and contrary to the last degree. They are the "unreasonable men" from whom the great apostle prayed to be delivered. They plant themselves square across the track, and forbid the gospel to run and to be glorified, unless it runs according to their notions. They hinder more than they help the cause of God. Laymen and laywomen who live on such intimate terms with God, generally, assume pastoral functions and authority, and expect everything and everybody to yield to the dictates of their imperious wills. They are "Tony at the wheel," and God and the rest of the church work on the "off side."

As between an infallible Pope in the Vatican at Rome and an infallible ministry and membership scattered over the church at home, I would take the Pope every time. He is remote, and they are nearby.

In some sections it is fast coming to be the fad to claim inspiration and divine direction for every whim and caprice that may come into the human mind. Some few pastors claim to rule the church by divine authority, and to administer discipline under the immediate inspiration and direction of the Holy Ghost. To oppose them is to oppose God, and to pander to worldliness in the church, and to hinder the only right administration of discipline. Where this obtains, the policy is to rule or to ruin—ruin generally results.

In some things Paul had the mind of the Spirit, in some he was in doubt, and in some he spoke only as a man. Some clever people have gotten away beyond Paul in all this. They have the mind of the Spirit in everything. They do nothing and say nothing only as they are divinely directed. Pauline modesty is at a discount among a growing class these latter days. God tells them exactly what to do in the purchase of calico and in planning a campaign against sin. They are exempt from mistakes.

This form of sin and selfishness—for sin and selfishness it is—leads to a degree of familiarity in prayer that borders on contempt, and is of close kin to profanity. God is addressed as if he were a school-fellow and a playmate. Pet names and endearing terms are applied to God and Christ as if he were a baby and a plaything in the nursery. God is not a boy, nor a baby, nor the pet and plaything of any being—angels or men. This whole thing is undevout, irreverent, and highly sinful. It is sentimental, sensual, and devilish. It tends to destroy reverence for God, awe of him, and all respect for his being, and for his high and holy character. It is a familiarity that breeds contempt, and nothing else. This form of religious sentimentalism runs into excess that amounts to lust, that saps the foundation of the spiritual nature until spiritual feeling and worship are an impossibility. The well of spiritual feeling in the human soul is pumped dry in order to keep up a show of spiritual fervor. The highest and noblest faculty in man is perverted, and prostituted to the sentimental shibboleths of a party and a clan. This matter ought to be pondered deep and long in our hearts and in the fear of God. Not long ago I heard something called prayer that made me shudder in every fiber of my being. It was so irreverent.

GILDEROY.

WORK FOR THE LEGISLATURE.

One of the saddest cases of youthful crime that I have heard of lately has been unearthed at Shreveport, La. The participants are all boys from the best families in that city; and when I say best, I mean it in its fullest sense, if means, refinement, business position, church and social relations, count for anything.

The crime of which they are confessedly guilty is burglary, and the penalty is confinement in the penitentiary. Investigation shows that most of the boys, five in number, were under the control, through fear, of two boys, the leader being only twenty years of age.

I have rarely seen so much interest taken in the mitigation of a sentence, or sympathy expressed for self-confessed criminals, as was shown by the citizens of Shreveport on the unearthing of the facts in the above case. I was present at the court-house with about fifty of Shreveport's best citizens, as they waited upon Judge Land to ask him to "deal gently with the young men." He assured them of his interest in the case, and of his sympathy for the young men, but told them that he could not see how he could save them from the penitentiary if the grand jury brought in a true bill for burglary. He spoke of the need of an institution under State control for the care of just such youthful criminals as these and others that had been before him. In his charge to the grand jury he laid before them the same matter, and in their report they make the following recommendation: "We recommend that a bill be presented by our representatives to the next Legislature, making provision for a house of reformation for juvenile offenders."

It is high time that the State take just such action as is here suggested. The effect of confining the comparatively young with those who have grown old in crime is too well known to those who have looked, even casually, into these matters. Many of the States have such institutions, and they have been "Doors of Hope" indeed to many who have been placed in them.

C. P. Huntington, of New York, has recently bought 1,350 acres of land in Virginia, on which, at his own expense, will be built a well-equipped modern reformatory for juvenile offenders of the negro race, of which there are now about 3,000 in prisons of that State.

The Literary Digest, of Sept. 9, gives a synopsis of an article that has lately appeared in "The Star of Hope," published in Sing Sing prison, New York. The writer, Convict No. 315, says: "It is our opinion that the crimes of society against the individual (while he is not yet a criminal), continued with unrelenting ferocity when he has become one, are the causes of 50 per cent. of the crimes committed." He divides criminals into three classes: "the accidental or unintentional, the criminal of circumstance or environment, and the criminal by election or preferment." He thinks little can be done for the last of these classes, that the second class come largely from the slums of our great cities, and only the improvement of those parts of the municipalities will change things for the better.

"The prison," according to No. 315, "turns the 'accidental' criminal into a permanent one, who repays society for its crime against him. The slum boy, too, finds Sing Sing ill calculated to turn him to a better life."

By all means let us have this institution, where, by kind treatment, lessons in thrift, religious influence, good books, and such other means as are best, we can save this unfortunate class.

MISSIONS IN OUR SUNDAY-SCHOOLS.

To the Pastors and Sunday-school Superintendents of the Louisiana Conference—

DEAR BRETHREN: Drs. Lambuth and Pritchett, our Missionary Secretaries, write thus: "The Board of Missions and the Sunday-school Board, by their action last year, set aside the third Sunday in October as a Rally Day for foreign missions in the Sunday-schools. We do not feel it necessary to urge upon you the great need of educating the young people of our church in this great cause, but we ask you to kindly bring this matter to the attention of your Sunday-school superintendents, and urge upon them the very great importance of this movement. A sixteen-page programme, consisting of recitations, responsive readings, facts on missions, and appropriate songs with notes, has been prepared, and will be sent to any address at the following rates: 75 cents per hundred, 10 cents per dozen by mail, postage paid, or 50 cents per hundred by express, the buyer to pay the charges. On application they will be sent free to any school not able to purchase them. All orders should be sent to Rev. W. R Lambuth, Nashville, Tenn."

Our Conference Minutes show that $810.68 was the total collection for missions in our Sunday-schools last year. We number in officers, teachers and scholars, 15,440. They, therefore, paid about 5¼ cents apiece—a sum that would be greatly increased if ¶ 246 of the Discipline were carried out and Rally Day observed by every school. Only 48 of our 295 Sunday-schools are reported as having given anything for missions. The secretaries have so fixed it that no school need do without a rally this year. ¶ 246 reads thus: "Let every Sunday-school be organized into a missionary society auxiliary to the Board of Missions." Were all our schools organized into missionary societies, raising missionary money throughout the year, and in October holding a special and glorious rally for this cause, the hundreds now raised could easily be changed into thousands. Our children would grow up practical missionary Christians, and the church of the future would quadruple and more whatever the church of to-day is doing for the saving of our unsaved brothers of all lands. The indications are that there will be a gratifying increase in the amounts raised by the churches this year all over our Conference, and "the love of Christ constraineth us" to call upon our pastors and superintendents to rally their schools, that the children of the church may also give a greatly increased sum. Think of it—20 cents apiece would yield $3,088! Verily, our youth and children should go far beyond the 5¼ cents apiece of last year. Give them a chance, and they will do it.

MANSFIELD FEMALE COLLEGE OPENING.

The forty-fifth session of this college opened on Wednesday, the sixth instant, with religious exercises conducted by President T. S. Sligh. Rev. C. D. Atkinson, President and Mrs. T. S Sligh made appropriate addresses to the students. The venerable Dr. A. D. McVoy, former president of the college, also made a practical talk to the girls, referring to incidences during his administration, which was both interesting and instructive. This veteran soldier of the cross loves Mansfield Female College, and has an abiding interest in her future welfare. He congratulated Bro. and Sister Sligh on their marked success, etc.

The enrollment of students on the first day was flattering indeed, and the number of boarding students larger than at any opening since our connection (of sixteen years) with the college. President T. S. Sligh claims an increase of about twenty per cent. of boarding students over last year's opening.

President and Mrs. Sligh stand high in the estimation of our best people as educators of modern type, and under their wise and skillful management, aided by an enlarged and experienced faculty of reputed efficiency and eminent fitness for their respective departments, we bespeak for them great achievements in Christian education. They are fully alive to the imperative requirements of this wonderfully progressive educational age, and are intelligently anticipating and meeting the high demands made upon them by an exacting public.

The standard of scholarship is high, and when a diploma is awarded, it will be a passport of merit and efficiency, and worthy of recognition by the most cultured and refined.

President and Mrs. Sligh during the past two and one-half months canvassed nearly every section of the State, and the daily arrival of girls are in evidence of the fact that they have been in close touch with our Louisiana Methodists, and that they (Louisiana Methodists) have been quickened and energized to a full sense of their Christian duties, and that the lethargy which characterized them in former years is rapidly being converted into a regretful reminiscence.

It is indeed gratifying to report for the benefit of solicitons parents and all who may be interested in our college, that during this Summer additional improvements have been made in the college building. A system of waterworks, with all needed facilities, and with an ample supply of pure water to furnish the girls with baths and other requirements conducive to health, is a part of this Summer's improvement. The rooms also have been calcimined, rendering them more attractive and comfortable. Other improvements are under advisement, and shall receive our careful attention in due time.

For the benefit of those who are not acquainted with Mansfield Female College and its surroundings, we will state that it is located in the pine hills of North Louisiana, and on the highest point between Shreveport and Alexandria. This fact is sustained by an accurate survey officially rendered during the construction of the T. and P. R. R. We are on the dividing ridge between Red and Sabine rivers, about twenty miles distant from each. Mansfield has a population of about two thousand people, composed of intelligent and law-abiding citizens. Society is excellent. We have two railroads, which makes Mansfield accessible from nearly all parts of the State. We have four churches, viz: M. E. Church, South; Baptist, Presbyterian and Episcopalian. Students are permitted, accompanied by one of the faculty, to attend the church of their choice.

The very best religious influences prevail at the college. Parents who desire their daughters to enter an ideal college home, where both the mind and heart is cultivated, and the highest type of Christian womanhood developed, we would cheerfully and unhesitatingly recommend to them Mansfield Female College as that home.

NO PARTING.

BY HORATIUS BONAR.

No seas again shall sever,
No desert intervene,
No deep, sad flowing river
Shall roll its tide between.
Love and unsevered union
Of soul with those we love
Nearness and glad communion
Shall be our joy above.

No dread of wasting sickness,
No thought of ache or pain;
No weary hours of weakness,
Shall mar our peace again
No death, our homes o'ershading
Shall sever our harps unstring,
For all is life unfading
In presence of our King.

HISTORY OF MELANCTHON.

(Concluded.)

In the years 1519 and 1520 Melanothon was very active with his pen. At the beginning of the year 1520 he published a book on the doctrine of Paul; he wrote a commentary on Matthew; he published especially for the benefit of his students the Greek text of Paul's Epistle to the Romans, and a new addition of his grammar, besides other books. He was a very industrious man. We are told that he began work at two o'clock in the morning, and continued till evening

On the fifteenth day of August, 1520, he announces that he is going to get married to Miss Katharine Krapp, the daughter of the mayor of Wittenberg, on the twenty fifth of November, 1520. He posted the following verse on the bulletin board:

"Rest from your studies.
Philip says you may.
He'll read no lecture on St. Paul to day."

This happy pair lived together thirty-seven years, and became the parents of four children—two sons and two daughters. The house in which Melanothon lived was beautiful in design, and for many years was preserved in its original beauty. A board high up on the front bears the following inscription, 'Here lived, taught and died Melancthon." The front room on the second floor was his study, and finally the place of his death, which occurred April 19, 1560.

In 1521 Philip Melancthon published the first great work on dogmatic theology. It passed through more than forty editions during his life.

In 1522 Melancthon thought seriously of abandoning theology, and of devoting his entire time to giving instruction in language and literature, thinking he could best serve the cause of the Reformation by preparing young men for the study of theology.

In 1530 Melancthon made a most important contribution to the cause of Protestantism in the Augsburg Confession. At Coberg, or on the way thither, Melancthon was commissioned to write a defensive statement, which at first was called an apology, and after passing through many changes finally became the Augsburg Confession. As to how much was written on the way to Augsburg, or what was its first form, is not now known. No doubt it was afterward written in a more condensed form, when it was found that the Emperor would require brevity. It was yet very far from what it finally became. It did not contain Article XX, of faith and good works; nor Article XXVII., of vows; nor Article XXVIII., of ecclesiastical power. It is very probable the latter had not been written. "Our condition," said Melancthon, "is not long and ill-advised, as has been reported to the Emperor. The difference consists in the following Articles: The sacrament under both forms, the marriage of priests and monks, and the mass." The Lutherans do not regard private masses as right. He thought that if an understanding could be reached on these Articles, there would be but little difficulty in regard to other matters. The mental agony which Melancthon experienced in the composition of the Augsburg Confession is best learned in a letter written to his brother. In this communication we find the following expression: "O God, in whom I trust, help thou me. Thou judgest us as we purpose in heart. Dear brother, I dare not drop this matter so long as I live."

On the fourth he returns to Wittenberg, and, in addition to his other labors he prepared the first edition of the Augsburg Confession. The Emperor had forbidden its publication without his consent; but very soon no less than seven unauthorized editions appeared—six in German and one in Latin.

During the year 1534 Melancthon was invited to France, where the Lutheran heresy had begun to take root. Being inspired with the hope of establishing the evangelical faith in France, he expressed a willingness to go, but thought it best to leave the decision of the matter to his elector. The elector did not find it to his own interest to spare so distinguished a teacher as Philip Melancthon; so he declined the call, and did not go.

In 1535 he wrote a book, in which are found some important changes in theological views. Melancthon was the first among the reformers to depart from the Augustine particularity, and to bring out the doctrine of the universality of the offer of salvation, and to direct the attention of men to the redemption that is through Christ, and not to the secret decree of God. He says mercy is the cause of election. Again: the good works that are required are spiritual affection, the fear of God, trust, worship, love, and the like. These are acceptable to God, not because they satisfy the law, but because already the persons are acceptable. On no other subject did Melancthon bestow so much thought and investigation as on the Lord's Supper. In 1537 he wrote: "For ten years," says he, "neither day nor night has passed in which I have not reflected on this subject. Not without greatest struggles," says Melancthon, 'have I reached the conclusion that Christ is truly present in the sacrament of the Lord's Supper." He says, "I had rather die than to affirm, with the Zwinglians, that the body of Christ can be in only one place."

It is said that Melancthon persisted to the end, as in 1527: "The bread which we break is a communication of the body of Christ; that Christ is truly present through the ministry, giving his body and blood to him that eats." His Article on the Lord's Supper is followed by an Article on infant baptism. In the forty-second year of his life we find his health greatly declined. He says he is worn out with labors, sorrows, and insomnia. Believing that death was near, he made his last will.

At Wiemar he fell seriously ill, so that his life was despaired of, when Luther visited him, and most earnestly prayed for his recovery. From this time on he gained strength by degrees, until he was fully restored to health again. After this he was very active with his pen.

We are told in history that in 1550 his letters covered nearly two hundred pages in the Corpus Reformation. They were addressed to kings, princes, town councils, and personal friends. These show to us the intense interest Melancthon had in church affairs. He was ready to spend and to be spent in the cause of his Master.

He now came to the last hours of his life. He became weary of life, and still more weary of the quarrels and disputes among the theologians. As his weakness increased, and the end drew nigh, his physician asked him if he wished anything else. His answer was, "Nothing else but heaven," requesting him at the same time not to ask him more. The pastor then prayed, all falling on their knees. In the evening the pastor pronounced the blessing on him. Then was read from the Psalmist: "Into thy hands I commend my spirit. Thou hast redeemed me, thou faithful and true God." His lips moved as if in prayer.

At a quarter before 7 o'clock the evening of April 14, 1560, Philip Melancthon fell on sleep, aged sixty-three years two months and three days. The body was placed in a tin coffin, and this in a wooden one, with an inscription in Latin which recounts the chief events in his life. He served the University of Wittenburg forty-two years; was a faithful assistant of Luther in the Reformation; was the author of the Augsburg Confession. At 5 o'clock P. M., April 21, his body was consigned to its mother earth by the side of his friend and brother, Martin Luther, in the cemetery at Wittenburg, Germany, to await the second coming of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ.

TO THE YOUNG MAN WHO DODGES ADVICE.

The following quotation from a letter recently received from a young man shows, I suppose, the general estimate of that greatly-misunderstood and, therefore, much-undervalued commodity called good advice: "Your advice is good, and every word of it true. Now, advice is cheap, and anybody can give it, but how many people have you ever known to take it and act on it?"

Herein are involved several serious mistakes which it would be well if young minds and many older ones, too, could be rid of.

First, our good advice is ever cheap to him who gives or to him who heeds it. The Bible is, in a practical view, only a book of good advice, and it cost God his incarnation in the Son, and all his work on earth, ending in his death upon the cross. Good advice consists of wise rules of conduct founded on the truth as to the being and relations of things. Such advice is never cheap to the originator, the real giver of it; nor could it be regarded as cheap by him who acts upon it, and finds it more profitable than thousands of gold and silver.

The next fallacy arising out of this is that, being cheap, good advice is comparatively worthless; whereas it is of the utmost importance to every man that he should both receive and act upon good advice. What would each man be if compelled to act only upon his own judgment and experience? In such case history need not be written, and reading would be profitable only as a pastime.

The young especially, who seem often to have a horror of "grandfather's good advice," are evidently ignorant of the fact that while they are dodging old folks' advice as interfering with their liberty, they are really acting under the advice of that herd who perpetually flood and afflict the world with the disastrous consequences of their presumptuous incapacity.

It is not a question of acting under advice, or not, but the question is, Whose advice will you take? Perhaps nine-tenths of all our actions are determined by the advice of others. A man may choose his advisers, but to pretend to act without advice would be to proclaim himself a fool. The conclusion, then, is, that if there is any difference between wisdom and folly, only those who have the discretion to take or find (for it ought to be sought) good advice, and act upon it, accomplish any wise or good purposes in life, while all others blunder on to be pitied or blamed as failures or fools to the end of time.

"How many people have you ever known to take it and act upon it?" asks my young friend.

I answer: All of my acquaintances who ever did anything worth doing in life.

Again: Young man, let me insist that you bear in mind that no matter what or how you are doing, you are acting under somebody's advice; but whose? Your welfare for two worlds depends upon your answer to this question. As I can not believe that you have the conceit to think that you can make a world of your own, I shall hope that you will choose wisely from among the multitude of advisers that necessarily abound in a world where every man must depend upon his neighbors' eyes to do the greater part of his seeing.

If all persons, old as well as young, would habitually seek advice from judicious friends on all important matters, the world would be greatly the gainer, since it would then be governed by the wisdom of the wise.

THE BETHEL CAMP MEETING.

This meeting began Thursday night, Aug. 17, and closed Sunday night, the twenty-eighth, following. For the first three or four days of the meeting continued rain kept the attendance small, there being few to attend, except the tenters. After the weather cleared up congregations grew daily, until the climax was reached Sunday in an overflow of visitors. There were five services per day, including the 6:30 morning prayer meeting, which was always conducted by a layman. Some ten, or a dozen, persons joined the church, and a large number professed conversion. Indeed, we have no means of knowing the exact number converted and reclaimed, but can safely place the unmber high. Certain it is that the entire community felt the effects of the meeting. The work done was deep and thorough. Members of several other denominations, even Catholics, claimed to have been benefited, and were delighted with the meeting and its results. Old sinners were torn up and made anew, and the young people brought to the front. Four prayer meetings were held daily at 5:15 o'clock P. M. The older men and older women, the young men and young women, all at different places. It is declared by the old tenters and citizens that the meeting was the best that has been held at Bethel since the rebuilding of the camp grounds.

The following named brethren did the preaching: Revs. T. W. Brown, R. W. Tucker, presiding elder of the Baton Rouge district, Louisiana Conference; C. C. Miller, of Wilson, La., and John E Green, of Honston, Texas. The latter preached from two to three times per day. The preaching of all the brethren was exceptionally fine and deeply spiritual. In addition to the above, Dr. W. L. C. Hunnicutt, the beloved presiding elder of this district, conducted one service. The Doctor was with us only a few hours. Rev. M. H. Moore, the pastor, and the writer held a few of the 9 o'clock morning services. Bros. Tucker and Miller were with us only a day or two each. With the exception of Bro. Green, Bethel might be called the home of all the preachers present.

Mrs. R. M. McCraine, assisted by Mrs. Geo Argue, presided at the organ. They are both fine in that department, and did their work faithfully. No finer Christian women can be found anywhere.

All the old tents, but one, were occupied; besides, several new ones had been erected. Several other persons have signified their intention of building and tenting another season. Bethel Camp Ground is growing in popular favor, and bids fair to be a mighty factor for good to this section. To God we give the praise.

FROM LIVE OAK.

Our camp meeting at Denham Springs, which has just closed, was in every way a decided success. Good order prevailed, and the interest manifested in the gospel was intense. The Word was preached with the "old-time power," which was blessed of God to the conversion of many souls. Truly this was a great revival. We had crowded altars from beginning to the close. The attendance was above one thousand. The ministers who served during the meeting were: Revs. S S. Bogan, F. N. Parker, M. M Johnson, J. A. B. Jones, N. E Alford, J. L. McManus, H. N Brown, J. T. Upton, and this scribe. Bro. Hamil, of Port Vincent, and his son, Coke, who is also a local preacher, and Bro. Wanche, of Baton Rouge, were present. It was my pleasure to receive fourteen members in the church as the result of the meeting. This makes in all fifty-seven added to the church this year, and we are just half through with our protracted meeting. I was assisted at Live Oak by Bros. A. W. Turner and F. N. Sweeney, who did excellent work. Bro. Sweeney was with me at our Bethel meeting, which was said to be the best there in many years.

We held our Beach Grove meeting all alone, but the Lord gave us a gracious revival, and added eleven to our Zion.

We held a ten days' meeting this week at Palmetto, assisted by my father, Rev. N. E. Alford, of Magnolia, Miss., which was fruitful of much good.

This year two new churches have been organized, and one will have a house of worship by Conference.

The Ecumenical Conference on Foreign Missions, representing the Protestant Missionary Societies and missions of the world, will be held in New York City, April 21 to May 1, 1900. The workers of many lands will come together to compare notes. There will be free interchange of ideas, and much information of great value will be put at the service of all. The results expected are: A clearer apprehension of the principles and methods of mission work drawn from a century of experience; a vindication of Christian missions by an array of testimony as to their influence and results that will convince all thoughtful men of their utility and power; a great practical advance towards unity.

How shall we prepare for this Ecumenical Conference so as to reap the largest results; so that we may meet "in the fullness of the blessing of Christ?" The Conference does not begin April 21, 1900 That is simply bringing to a head of the Conference which has already begun. The preparation should not be confined to what is done by committees and writers of papers and the delegates; it should be a threefold preparation by the whole church—by prayer, by study, by contribution. A concert of prayer is recommended each month for the blessing of the gospel of Christ, repeated in church service and family worship, that the church may receive a mighty impulse through this Conference. A new and intelligent study of the great problems relating to the extension of Christ's kingdom throughout the world. The relation of the different forms of work to the central purpose of preaching the gospel. The unity, harmony, and co-operation of the different organizations working in the same fields. The developments of self-support and self activity on the part of the native church. These three principles must be applied intelligently in order to a comprehension of the ways and means of missionary economics.

As every evangelical denomination is invited to be represented at the Conference, every congregation will have the privilege of contributing something toward it.

The Woman's Board will be represented by the officers and some of the corresponding secretaries of Conferences.

Mrs. H. W. Featherston reports two new organizations on the Brookhaven district.

Mrs. Ira Phillips reports two new organizations and one society reorganized on the Meridian district.

I am glad to say that our Miss Hughes is much improved in health, and reports that the Woman's Chinese Missionary Societies are doing fine work

In a letter from Mrs. Trueheart, just received, she says: "It is with a sad heart I write to tell you of the sad death of our beloved missionary, Mary Richardson, who went to China one year ago, when her sister, Helen, returned from her home-rest. Miss Mary was at the Board meeting at Birmingham, where she was accepted and appointed for work in China. She was with us also in Greensboro at the Board meeting. Now she is not, for God took her Aug. 9, 1899. Every heart in our China Mission is filled with sorrow over this bereavement, and we at home are sadly stricken. No more lovely, promising character has ever been sent to the foreign field, and yet God's goodness in taking her from us can not be questioned. He doeth all things well. Pray that God's sustaining grace may come richly into the heart of our beloved Helen, the sister, and the dear old father through this sore bereavement. God calls us to more faithful service. Who will take Mary's place? China must be redeemed, and we must do our part.

I would like to keep your Conference pledge and Twentieth Century Fund before the societies of the Mississippi Conference. Let the president of each society see to it that these collections are raised in their societies.

The Christian Life.

One of the characteristics of a well balanced mind is the trained ability to wait for the subsidence of rash emotions. The impetuosity of overflowing waters is not more certainly destructive than is the wild rage of an uncontrolled passion in the soul. Happy is that man who has effectually learned the art of repressing ungenerous and hasty impulses.

We sometimes maintain that as essential to religion which really is not, and when others fail to meet our standard, we either unconsciously depreciate them, or show a hostility of feeling, as though God had committed to us the government and correction of souls. We have known many non-professors of religion who, in respect to charitable judgments, seemed to surpass some who claimed to be Christ's own. A great work remains to be wrought in all such. It is not well to be self-deceived. Unless charity be truly our possession, we surely are not in harmony with heaven, where love rules all. The uncharitable critic is the enemy of no one so much as himself. Laogoor will steal upon him in his work, spiritual dearth will surely come upon his soul, and a distrust of his motives will take possession of his friends. No real fellowship can coexist with such a spirit. When our fellowship is with the Father and with his Son, Jesus Christ, and when the fellowship that we have with one another is maintained by walking in the light as he is in the light, then is fulfilled the prayer of our Lord, "That they all may be one; that the world may believe that thou hast sent me."—New York Advocate.

DISAPPOINTMENT.

Our yet unfinished story is tending all to this: to God the greatest glory, to us the greatest bliss. If all things work together for ends so grand and blessed, what need to wonder whether each in itself is blest? If some things were omitted, or altered as we would, the whole might be unfitted to work for perfect good. Our plans may be disjointed, but we may calmly rest; what God has once appointed is better than our best. We can not see before us, but our all-seeing Friend is always watching o'er us, and knows the very end. What though we seem to stumble? He will not let us fall; and learning to be humble is not lost time at all. What though we fondly reckoned a smoother way to go than where his hand has beckoned? It will be better so.

From broken alabaster was deathless fragrance shed; the spikenard flowed the faster upon the Savior's head. No shattered box of ointment we ever need regret, for out of disappointment flow sweetest odors yet. The discord that involveth some startling change of key, the Master's hand resolveth in richest harmony. We hush our children's laughter, when sunset hues grow pale; then, in the silence after, they hear the nightingale. Then tremble not, and shrink not, when disappointment nears; be trustful still, and think not to realize all fears.—Frances Ridley Havergal.

ALONE WITH GOD.

No great purpose has ever been achieved by any individual until his spirit has first gone out into some wilderness solitude and there discovered its native strength, its absolute invincibility when it relies upon no help but that of God. This is the experience of all the greatest among men. They go apart from their fellows for awhile, like Moses into the land of Midian, or like our Lord himself into the wilderness, or like St. Paul into the Arabian desert, and there, in solitary communion with God, they come to themselves. From that communion with God, from that highest of all companionships, they drink in strength to fit them for the work of their lives. Alone with God they see visions which fill their souls—visions which never fade afterward, even in the light of common day, but which serve as beacon lights to guide them, through storm and darkness, till the purpose of their lives is fulfilled.—Edwin H. Eland.

THE BOOK WILL TELL.

A real Christian will be a true lover of the Bible. There is scarcely a better test. If the novel or the newspaper takes the place of the Bible on his table or in his mind, then it is clear that the world has taken the place of God in his heart. If a man's Bible be clean and bright and unsullied by use, undefiled by contact with daily life, his soul is not. There is no better spiritual barometer to test the true condition of the soul's atmosphere. He to whom the Bible seems wearisome, monotonous, uninteresting, has good cause for alarm. The neglect of it springs from coldness of affection toward its author, and dislike of his rebukes. Whoever wants to grow in grace simply must study the Bible. It is the way to gain stability of doctrine, so as not to be carried about with every wind of opinion.—Christian Standard.

FROM THE WORK.

Rev. Sam Q Bass, Corinth, Miss: "I am just home from the Tecopola charge, where I assisted Rev. D. M. Geddie, the pastor, in a great meeting. I found Bro. Geddie to be a faithful pastor, a fine worker in the altar, and his people at Salem, where the meeting was held, are among the best that I have ever worked with. The meeting lasted only one week. A great revival in the church and a goodly number added to the church. If the meeting could have gone on for another week, we would have reaped greater results still. I have secured the services of Mr. G. W. Bashy and his noble wife to lead the singing and to assist in the altar services. They are both fine workers, and his wife a splendid organist—both Methodist. My time for the Fall is not all taken up. If any pastor needs my help, let me know, and I will gladly come and do what I can for him."

Rev. R. T Nolen, P. C., Cumberland, Miss., Sept. 9, 1899: "I closed out last night my last protracted meeting, with good results. Four in number. Bro D. M Miller, L. E., assisted me in two of my meetings, and did as good preaching as I ever heard. Bro. Miller is a strong gospel preacher, and did fine work. Bro. Martin, a local preacher, preached two good sermons for us at one of my meetings, and Bro. Rapor, preacher in charge of Montpelier circuit, assisted me from Tuesday night to Friday A. M., and did us all good. Bro. Rapor is one of our best men and a safe gospel preacher We have received in all up to date 31 members. To God be all the glory. We have not get our church quite finished here in Cumberland. Our people say they want a parsonage here. As I am now through with my meetings, I am going to look after the Conference collections and our obligations to the ceotury offering. Pray for us."

Rev. L. D. Worsham, Eureka Springs, Miss., Sept. 13, 1899: "I have closed my round of protracted meetings. 'The Lord hath done great things for us, whereof we are glad.' At Mt. Olivet we had a very good meeting. Several reclamations and one addition. Was assisted in this meeting by Bro. C. H. Moore, of Tyro, as fine a worker in a meeting as I ever saw. At Eureka we had the best revival that has been here in years. Twenty-two additions to the church. Raised at the close of the meeting $111.25 on collections. Was assisted by Bros. Moore and C. N. Terry, of Nesbit. Bro. Terry is a good gospel preacher and a fine revivalist. Bro. Terry also assisted me at Pisgah, where we had fifteen conversions and seven additions. At Terza I was assisted by Dr H T Gaines, of Senatobia. Bro. Gaines did good preaching and excellent work. Had at this meeting about thirty conversions, and twenty-one joined our church. I believe all my collections will be in full."

Rev. W. M. Williams, P. C.: "Our meeting was held at Bethesda the fourth Sunday in August. Bro. J. M. Morse, of Wesson, came to our assistance Monday. He did us acceptable and efficient work. Our people had been working and praying in the church and in their homes for a month and more for the success of this meeting. God always meets with his people when they come together with one heart and one mind. So God was with us from first to finish. We had eleven accessions and the church revived. Our meeting began at Mt. Pleasant the first Sunday in September. Bro. C. A. Powell preached two applicable and strong sermons Monday. Bro. H. A. Gatlin preached Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday, and Bro. Powell Friday. Every sermon seemed to be sent by God himself, as each fit in so nicely and met the needs of my people so well. They will never forget those two brethren. I think every Christian that attended got up on a higher plane. We all were made better. There were many conversions. There were 14 accessions by faith, one by certificate and one transfer, making 16 in all. There was good, solid and, we think, abiding work done. We have had 30 accessions from the three meetings held. We begin our meeting here to-morrow. We have many as good, true yoke-fellows on the Gallman circuit as you will find anywhere. We thank God for all his blessings, and press forward with more faith and greater earnestness and zeal in our Master's work."

Rev. W. A. Wood, Blue Springs, Miss., Sept. 7, 1899: "I began my first meeting the third Sunday in July. On Tuesday I was joined by Bro. Williams, of the Marietta circuit, who preached six good sermons; but our congregations were small on account of politics being very high. I had only one addition. I then went to Liberty, and began on the fourth Sunday, at 11 o'clock, and for a few days I had a hard fight, doing all the preaching myself; but the strongholds finally gave way, and the Holy Ghost came down in great power. We closed out on Saturday night with 42 conversions and 22 additions. This was one of the best revivals we have ever attended. I then went to Bethel on the fifth Sunday morning, and began my meeting at 11 o'clock A. M., and for three days it seemed as though we could do nothing; but, after having preached for three days and nights, the opposition gave way, and I closed out there on Saturday night before the first Sunday in August with 22 conversions. On the first Sunday in August I went to Leighton, a small town on the K. C., M. and B. R. R., and began my meeting at 11 o'clock A. M. Having left my little girl sick, I was compelled to return home that evening, leaving the meeting that night with Bro. Moreland. I returned Monday morning, and for four days I had the hardest fight of my life; but on the second Sunday, at 11 o'clock, I closed out with 10 conversions and 7 additions. Thus closed the best meeting that has ever been held in the town. After closing out at Leighton, I had three more meetings to hold, all of which were good meetings. I have closed my revival meeting with 86, or more, conversions, and about 40 additions. The Lord has blessed my work very greatly this year. I will help some of the brethren now. I will go to the Ripley circuit to assist Rev. H. C. Parrott in a meeting the second week in October. The Lord bless the editor and all the readers."

Rev. J. H. Smith, Wall Hill, Miss., Sept. 11, 1899: "We have just completed a splendid new church where the old Grub Hill log meeting-house stood for fifty years. It is an ornament to the community, and, when painted, will be the neatest house of worship anywhere near here. Our protracted meetings are over, and genuine revivals they were. Some conversions and accessions to the church. Nearly everybody in this section belongs to some church. There is material, however, for more conversions than we have. There are some who persistently resist the influences of grace. Bro. W. J. Burt, of the Tyro charge, was with us two days at Chulahema, and did some good preaching. Bro. Burt is a strong preacher. Our 'beloved,' Dr. Wier, was with us two days at the Quarterly Conference, which was the beginning of our meeting at Bethel, and we were all sorry when he left. This is Dr. Wier's fourth year on the Sardis district, and he has endeared himself to the people as few men do. May time deal lightly with him, and the lines fall to him in pleasant places! Happy the people who are fortunate enough to get his services! Bro. McIntosh, the president of our Grenada Female College, was with us a few days at Wall Hill. He was the first evangelist to come to Wall Hill, and he was a show to our people for a while, but he won all hearts, did us great good, and left with the best wishes and prayers of the whole church. This was indeed a great meeting, and one long to be remembered. This people have Bro. McIntosh and our college at Grenada much in appreciation. We have just finished our round of services for the Twentieth Century Educational Movement with good success—not all we would like, but good. These services were conducted by our Epworth League, and our League is the best in the Conference (so far as I know). We have a noble band of young people, spiritual, and gladly do any work the church suggests. My precious mother died about a month ago, and wife is in a low state of health. Pray for her and for me."

Rev. J. J. Golden, P. C., Vaughans, Miss., Sept. 8, 1899: "We have had three successful revival meetings this Summer, one at each church on the charge. The first was held at Union, beginning July 30, in which we were assisted by Rev. Ira F. Hawkins, of the North Alabama Conference, who preached to the delight of all our people. His noble character is a forcible sermon within itself. During this meeting we had five accessions to the church, and organized a wide-awake prayer meeting; also, there were erected five family altars, and the church greatly revived. Our second meeting was held at New Hope. We think this meeting was, indeed, a very profitable one. It was our pleasure to have with us Rev. T. B. Holleman, our beloved presiding elder, whose preaching was thorough, strong, and convincing. We had two accessions to the church on profession of faith, and four infants were baptized; also the church was inspired to do greater things for the Master. In the midst of this revival came our third Quarterly Conference, and these good people whom we serve deserve commendation for the 'good' report they helped us to make. In the meeting at Vaughans we had the efficent services of Rev. Geo. H Thompsen. His preaching was edifying, and accompanied by the Holy Spirit. We have evidence to believe that much and lasting good was done, although the visible results were not what we desired. On Sept. 6 we had a mass meeting of the circuit, and an educational rally. Rev. H. G. Hawkins was the speaker of the day. In the morning, at 11 o'clock, the educational rally was conducted, at the close of which we secured $36 25 in money and subscription for the Twentieth Century Fund. In the afternoon we had a very instructive and enjoyable affair, an illustrated lecture on Japan, and before dismissing the congregation we took a collection for the Conference collections with good results. The ladies realized a nice little sum on the parsonage fund by selling refreshments during the day. In this connection we will say: Let the good work go on, increase the parsonage fund and build your paster a home. We have in operation two Sunday schools, both of which observed Children's Day; also one Epworth League doing good work. The good women on this charge are very thoughtful of the comfort of their pastor and his wife. They send to us many nice things. We realize that the Lord is blessing our efforts to do his will."

WHITTINGTON CIRCUIT, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

We have just closed another glorious meeting on this circuit at Coalville Church. We began on fourth Sunday in August, and continued until first Sunday night in September. Bros. Mike Cox, A. Scarborough, Louis Jordan, J. H. Holland and Dr. W. L. Hightower, of Moss Point, did the preaching, and it was well done and was accompanied by the power of the Holy Ghost. We wish to mention specially the work Dr. Hightower rendered in this meeting. He is a brave and true soldier and an efficient worker. He preached his first sermon last year at Big Point, a church on the Escatawpa circuit, of which I was then preacher in charge at the time. His first sermon was enjoyed by myself and everyone present. He had been preaching only a little more than a year, and a more able preacher would be hard to find. One night during the meeting at Coalville the Doctor walked out of the church with two young men who had brought a jug of whisky to church, and got them to break the jug on a buggy wheel. Everybody in the church heard the boys pounding away with that old brown jug, and finally "she" went to pieces, and my, my, the scent of corn juice filled the air. I believe those young men were saved; both of them are members of our church now.

So awful were the presence and power of the Holy Ghost that sinners of every kind had to yield to God. Christians prayed and sung and wept over lost souls until 30 were happily converted. Many were reclaimed and many Christians moved to a higher life. Fifty-eight joined the church, and most of them were converted. Many hearts and homes have been made happy and brighter on account of God's presence to save and comfort our people. We have received 130 members and have had 80 conversions during the year. May God bless all of our friends who took part in this great battle against sin! Miss Quilla Walker rendered very excellent service in the meeting. Miss Quilla is a fine organist, and a better worker at the altar and in the congregation I have never seen. She is simply invincible. May God bless Edmo and Lonie Fayard and Bro Jas. Smith for the good work they did in the meeting.

Wool Market, Miss., Sept. 9, 1899.

The pursuit of pleasure is often as dangerous to life as the pursuit of "the bubble reputation even at the cannon's mouth." Late hours, the breathing of a vitiated atmosphere, rich foods, and irregular rest, must result in a depleted vitality. There is a feeling of languor, the appetite fails, sleep does not refresh, life loses its interest, and nervousness or hysteria may make life miserable!

The preservation of the healthful tone of the body depends chiefly on keeping the blood pure, and the stomach and other organs of digestion and nutrition in a condition of health. When any of the above mentioned symptoms appear the timely use of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery will restore the body to a healthy equipoise. It purifies the blood, nourishes the nerves, and restores the deranged stomach and its allied organs to a condition of sound health.

There is no alcohol, whisky or other stimulant contained in "Golden Medical Discovery."

"I was troubled with very frequent headaches often accompanied by severe vomiting," writes Miss Mary Bell Summerton, of San Diego, Duval Co., Texas. "Bowels were irregular and my stomach and liver seemed continually out of order. Often I could eat almost nothing for twenty-four hours at a time. I was entirely unfit for work, and my whole system run down. I was advised to try Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery and did so with such satisfactory results that before finishing the third bottle I felt perfectly able to undertake the duties attending public school life. I most heartily advise those suffering with indigestion, and its attendant evils, to give this great medicine a fair trial."

Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets cleanse and regulate the stomach, liver and bowels. They produce permanent benefit and do not re-act on the system. One is a gentle laxative.

OPIUM and Liquor Habit cured in 10 to 20 days. No pay till cured. Write DR. J. L. STEPHENS CO., Dept. R2 Lebanon, Ohio.

THE FOLLY OF PESSIMISM.

Pessimists, croakers and fault-finders have always abounded, and we suppose will be in evidence until the end of time. No age has been free from them. No matter how prosperous the times, or how wonderful the movements of Christian civilization, still the cry is heard from some quarters that the world is going backward in morals and manners, and that, so far as material prosperity is concerned, "the former times were better than these." Those who thus loudly proclaim that "we have fallen on evil times" usually overlook the good that is in the present on account of their tendency to glorify the past. Who has ever seen the day when men ceased to complain of "hard times"? Even in the flushest days of our history the same dolorous wail has been heard. Who has ever lived in a time when some in the church did not suppose that "Ichabod" was written upon her banners?

Some periods in history, it is true, have undoubtedly been more corrupt and distressful than others, but the point we make is that, even in the brightest days and in the face of the most marvelous material, intellectual and spiritual progress, there have been those who seemed to see only evil and impending disaster. If no ominous cloud could be seen, they still believed one to be just beneath the horizon. The pessimist is even now among us, pointing out evils in Church and State, and seeking to make it appear that we are fast hastening toward wreck and ruin.

It is not the part of wisdom to shut one's eyes to impending danger, or to postpone preparation for an emergency until it is at hand; but evils are not always as bad as they at first seem, and nothing is gained by unduly alarming our fellow-men. On the contrary, when we over-magnify an evil, we discourage attempts to remedy it. Pessimism never discovered a continent, never stormed a fort, or led an army to victory; never climbed an Alpine summit or headed the march of progress. Indulgence therein means stagnation, decay and death. The pessimist looks to the future with dread and fancies that what has been is infinitely better than what shall be. In fact, he not infrequently loses his temper when omens of good are pointed out to him. The man who is out of sorts is apt to conclude that everything around him is in the same state. So it is in large measure with the pessimist. The seeming chaos is more often in his own brain than in his surroundings.

Bishop McCabe, of the Northern Methodist Church, in a recent appeal to the great denomination that he represents, used these significant words, which are equally applicable to us of the M. E. Church, South, ours being a similar undertaking, though on a smaller scale:

"Did anyone ever hear of a great general, from David to Leonidas, and from Leonidas to U. S. Grant, who would ride up and down the lines just before a great battle, reminding the soldiers of some defeat they may have had at some time in their history? Such a course would be stupendous folly. No great leader would be guilty of it.

"What would be unwise for an army on the eve of battle is unwise for a church on the eve of a great struggle like the one that is before the Methodist Episcopal Church today.

"We have announced to the world that we are going to try to win two million souls to Christ, and to raise twenty millions of dollars for the advancement of his kingdom in the world.

"At the very outset we are met with a perfect fusillade of criticism upon the church itself. Speakers and writers have leagued together to remind us of our 'shortcomings' and 'defects' and 'want of success' until the wonder is we have any heart left in us at all for the gigantic task before us. Such a misleading phrase as 'the decline of Methodism' has been frequent in our own papers of late, and it has been eagerly taken up by papers of other denominations and by the secular press, until some of our own people seem to think there may be something in it.

"Methodism has a peculiar way of 'declining.' John Wesley heard that remark a great many times in his long ministry; so did Asbury and all the fathers from that day to this. Fifty years ago I heard a man say, 'The Methodists will soon run out.'"

Yet no other denomination has had so phenomenal a growth, and no other gives to-day stronger evidence of spiritual life and power. Methodism has not outgrown her mission to the world, and is still marching on to conquest.

When some one, over 150 years ago, was talking pessimistically to John Wesley, and predicting that his earnest efforts to evangelize the masses in England, and to bring about a reformation in morals, would ultimately result in failure, he calmly replied: "He who governed the world before I was born will take care of it likewise when I am dead. My part is to improve the present moment." At this time, when so many discordant, despondent notes are heard, it would be well for us to ponder and profit by these wise words of the great founder of Methodism.

Earnest workers need to be on their guard against the temptation to set too much store by their own efforts. How easy it is for us to imagine ourselves more necessary than we are, and so take upon ourselves burdens of care and responsibility that belong only to God. Not infrequently, when reform and evangelistic movements are attended with but little visible success, the workers concerned therein unwisely look upon the case as hopeless, and indulge the notion that there has been a waste of effort. During times of discouragement and seasons when the forces of evil seem irresistible, Christians seem to lose sight of the fact that God is over all, and that he will carry on his work, though multitudes may prove untrue to his cause.

Some, like Hamlet in the play, when they find themselves face to face with great evils and difficulties, dejectedly exclaim:

> "The time is out of joint;
> O cursed spite
> That ever I was born to > Set it right."

When danger is to be met, iniquity is to be opposed, and difficult tasks are to be performed, like the Apostle Paul, we should say, "I can do all things through Christ who strengtheneth me." It is said that while certain iniquitous political proceedings in England were being winked at by the leaders in Church and State, Mr. Spurgeon, after listening to a gloomy statement of the situation, coolly said, "Well, the Lord will confound them all." Strangely enough, it was not long until his words were literally fulfilled. Having done our best in the service of God, we should rest content, knowing that he who guides the stars in their courses is able to take care of his cause, and bring to naught every evil work.

"KNIGHTS OF THE ROYAL ARCH."

This is the chivalrous and classic name of an organization in the interest of the liquor traffic. It publishes a paper in Hot Springs, Ark., edited by a Mr. S. R. V. Young. The Arkansas Methodist quotes liberally from the columns of that saloon organ, and gives the Church and State patriotic warning against a subtle and aggressive foe. If there are innocent temperance people among us who imagine that the liquor power does not contemplate the complete domination of our politics and the control of our legislation, they have only to read what is quoted below. And what is attempted in Arkansas will be repeated in Mississippi and Louisiana. Here the bold declaration is made that candidates for the Legislature must be bound by a specific contract before they can secure the support of the liquor men. Caucuses, conventions, party platforms and party loyalty are nothing to them, unless assured of friendliness to the liquor power. Attempts are to be made in Mississippi to get candidates for the Legislature committed to the emasculating of our present liquor laws. Already here and there in the State expressions are finding their way into the newspapers, declaring that the best people are tired of prohibition—convinced of its failure, and disgusted with its mere pretense. Friends of morality need not be deceived by these deliverances. They emanate from saloon strikers and habitues of the blind tiger. While, of couse, we must lament the lax administration of law—and no law executes itself—every calm student of social and moral conditions must admit that prohibition has contributed to moral upbuilding of communities.

This is written as a warning to the friends of reform. Our enemies may not be so bold as the organ of the "Knights of the Royal Arch," but they are animated by the same spirit, and are working with the same malicious energy. If they thought it possible, by any desperate movement, to control the next Legislature of Mississippi, they would have no respect for party primaries, and would subordinate every other public interest to the triumph of the saloon. The little stage-play of some years ago, when a Democratic convention was in session in Jackson, is yet too fresh in memory for the "Knights of the Royal Arch" to assume the dictation of Mississippi politics.

Read the following from that whisky organ:

"It now remains for those engaged in the liquor trade to assume command, and place themselves in such a position that they can protect themselves by ridding the public of such fanatics in office, and place men in power at the head of our government, as well as in local offices, who they know will deal out justice and protect our business. We must avert this great calamity, and by our united efforts, and with our influence and ballots, demand that our interests must and will be protected. Now, it is a duty we owe to ourselves and our families to protect our business, and not listen to the platitudes and promises of the wily politician while he is running for office, but have him bound in such contracts before he receives our votes that he will positively stand by us for our just rights, for if we were to consider for a moment the money we pay out in fines and the detriment it is to our business to be legislated against in the manner we are, one-third of that amount of money, properly used, would be a powerful factor in placing in office honorable and sensible men that would do all in their power for the protection of our trade. It has come to this that we must absolutely wake up and not lay dormant any longer, but be the strongest and most powerful factor, politically, in the country. Ignoring the fact whether a man is a Democrat, Republican, Silverite or Populist, as those silly hobbies that politicians simply have to gain force do not figure in the least one iota in the matter concerning our business, as we want candidates from our own ranks, and of our own kind of people, to serve us as public law-makers."

Let every friend of civic righteousness read and take earnest heed.

OUT OF THE USUAL ORDER.

Summers, a convict who escaped from the Mississippi Penitentiary several years since, returned last week and took his place within the walls, having previously notified Gov. McLaurin of his intention to do so. His crime was robbery of an express company. Before coming to Jackson to surrender he had paid to the express company the full amount of his stealage, and also the amount expended in his prosecution. He has also reimbursed the State of Mississippi for all its outlay in prosecution and in its efforts to recapture. He avers that this was his first and only crime, that the temptation came to him with the opportunity, and that he yielded, but is now thoroughly penitent, and desires to take a new start, and henceforth to lead an upright life. It is said that those who know him believe his statements implicitly. Previous to this act of crime there was no stain upon his escutcheon.

LITERARY NOTES.

BY W. F. B.

In Frank Leslie's Popular Monthly, for September, Rear-Admiral Winfield Scott Schley, "A Naval Hero of To-day," figures at the front in a capitally illustrated biographical sketch. F. Hopkinson Smith, the popular artist and writer, tells of "The Building of the Race Rock Lighthouse," and illustrates the vivid narrative with his own drawings. "Women as Army Nurses," by Anna Northend Benjamin, is a very interesting contribution to the "American Woman in Action" series.

In the Woman's Home Companion, for September, under the title, "An American Palace in Paris," Edward Page Gaston tells of the handsome residence, reproducing the famous Grand Trianon just completed by that part of the Gould millions that were the share of the Countess de Castellane. Julia Magruder continues her romance of the newer generation in the Old South, entitled, "A Sunny Southerner." Other stories are from Mrs. Burton Harrison, Josiah Allen's Wife, and the gifted young Japanese writer, Onoto Watanna.

PRAISEWORTHY.

We invite special attention to the following appeal from Bro. Blocker, and heartily commend the movement:

MR. EDITOR: We are building a home for our dear Bro. M. C. Manly, of the Louisiana Conference, in Rayne, La. Sister Cunningham, of Rayne, has donated the land. As the most of the readers of the ADVOCATE know Bro. Manly, they will remember that he has been blind for many years, and is now aged and a superannuate.

Let every reader of the ADVOCATE send us a donation to either the writer or to Miss Amelia Bradford of Rayne, La., and the same will be acknowledged through the ADVOCATE. Yours in Christ,

R. M. BLOCKER.

MILLSAPS COLLEGE.

The eighth session of Millsaps College will begin Wednesday, Sept. 27. It is important that all students should be on hand the opening day. New students should be here by Tuesday, the twenty-sixth.

There is now no occasion for apprehension on account of yellow-fever reports. The indications encourage us to look for a large attendance. W. B. MURRAH,
President.

CHRISTIAN SCHOOLS IN JAPAN.

A Tokio, Japan, dispatch says that new educational regulations have been put in force which prohibit private schools from receiving pupils of school-going age. The effect of this will be to close the Christian kindergartens and primary schools and to affect higher institutions seriously. When foreign nations agreed to abandon the special privileges enjoyed by their subjects in Japan an assurance was given them that those subjects should receive fair, unprejudiced treatment at the hands of Japanese officials, and that they should not be molested on account of race or religion. It was stipulated that all religions should be tolerated. The action just taken by the Japanese department of education is a blow at the Christian schools. It seems to be the intention to suppress them because the Christian religion is taught in them. That is a short-sighted, bigoted policy. The Japanese are not so completely civilized and so thoroughly educated that they can afford to close one good school, to say nothing of many. They should ask for more Christian schools instead of suppressing those they have. Furthermore, if a spirit of religious intolerance begins to manifest itself in Japan, foreign nations will begin to doubt whether they acted wisely in making to Japan the concessions they have made. They will fear that foreigners will not have fair treatment when tried in Japanese courts.—Chicago Tribune.

GET THE BEST.

In one of the current magazines a writer who has made a study of recent legislation in regard to liquor selling makes the proposition that an experiment might be made to decrease drunkenness by insuring the sale and use of pure liquors only. It is amusing that an avowed expert should make such a proposition, when he must know that it is the alcohol, and not the adulteration in the whisky, that does the harm. Do not men kill themselves with first-class liquors? Are not the ravages of the drink habit evident among those who indulge in pure and high price whiskies and brandies? We might parallel the proposition by suggesting that it might also be provided that murders shall not be committed with bludgeons, but only with the better and more expensive sort of weapons—made of the best-tempered steel!—Central Advocate.

A BONFIRE.

One day last week a notable burning took place in front of a church in Toledo, O. Mr. Marshall O. Waggoner, of that city, on that day made a bonfire of the infidel books that he had been accumulating for years. The burning of them was a forcible form of expression of renunciation of the infidelity which had characterized his past life. He has been converted, and now believes in the Savior whom he so long rejected and opposed. During these years he has been determined, bitter and vindictive in his opposition to religion, and has written, spoken and worked against the gospel. He is spoken of as a man of large ability, with a fine library, and a wide influence. Among his books were nearly two hundred volumes dealing destructively with Christian faith, and these he determined to destroy. Having turned away from his unbelief to God, he had no more use for these volumes. He would not give them away or sell them to any one, although he was offered a high price for them as a collection of large market value. He did not want them to remain in existence any longer, doing their work of evil suggestion and falsehood, and so he took this effective way of putting them out of the way of doing further harm.—Herald and Presbyter.

ACTION OF NORTHWEST INDIANA CONFERENCE IN THE CASE OF DR. SCHELL.

The Northwest Indiana Conference, of which Dr. E. A. Schell, general secretary of the Epworth League, is a member, at the request of Dr. Schell, appointed a committee to investigate the charges against him. The report of the committee was adopted by unanimous vote of the Conference, as follows:

"The committee in the case of Dr. Edwin A. Schell respectfully reports that, having had an extended statement by Dr. H. C. Jennings, of the Western Methodist Book Concern, and having carefully examined numerous documents bearing on the subject; having also heard a full statement by Dr. Schell and others, we, without approving his method of procedure as a wise one, fail to find any substantial grounds for the accusation widely published against Dr. Schell, of official misconduct or moral wrong-doing on his part in relation to the publication of 'Songs for Young People.'"

The report was signed by R. D. Utter, D. M. Wood, J. A. Clearwater, J. W. Walker and H. L. Kindig.

The Conference also adopted the following unanimously:

"Resolved, That inasmuch as the facts in the matter of the conduct of Dr. Schell have been thoroughly canvassed by the Board of Control of the Epworth League, and as they have declared that no further action by them is required, we deplore and condemn the attitude of the editor of Zion's Herald in further agitating the question, thus not only pressing prosecution to the point of persecution, but also seriously reflecting on the action of the Board of Control; and we further emphatically disapprove of the method of influencing sentiment by sending this paper to the seat of this Conference.

"Resolved, That we urge the Wesleyan Association of Boston immediately to review the editorial management of its paper."—Northwestern Advocate.

NOTICE.

To Preachers in Charge and Superintendents of Sunday schools in the Forest District, Mississippi Conference, M. E. Church, South—

DEAR BRETHREN: While you are devoting the month of October to the great Twentieth Century Educational Movement and Fund, do not forget that our Sunday-school Rally Day must not be abandoned, but only deferred till November. Give the children a chance. Programs can be had for 10 cents a dozen, or 75 cents per hundred, postage prepaid, by ordering them of Rev. W. R. Lambuth, D. D., Nashville, Tenn. Any Sunday-school unable to pay for the programs can get them free by writing to the same address and stating facts. Get the programs at once, and follow them.

Yours faithfully,

AN IMPORTANT FOOD LAW.

HEAVY PENALTIES FOR SELLING ARTICLES OF FOOD CONTAINING UNHEALTHY INGREDIENTS.

The following law was passed at the last session of the Missouri Legislature, taking effect August 20, 1899:

SECTION 1. That it shall be unlawful for any person or corporation doing business in this State to manufacture, sell or offer to sell any article, compound or preparation for the purpose being used or which is intended to be used in the preparation of food, in which article, compound or preparation there is any arsenic, calomel, bismuth, ammonia or alum.

SEC. 2. Any person or corporation violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and shall, upon conviction, be fined not less than one hundred dollars, which shall be paid into and become a part of the road fund of the county in which such fine is collected.

The operation of this law will be mainly against alum baking powders. But the manufacture or sale of any article of food or article intended to be used in food which contains any of the substances classed by the law as unhealthful—from Arsenic to Alum—is absolutely prohibited.

EPWORTH LEAGUE DEPARTMENT.

"ALL FOR CHRIST."

REV. THOMAS B. CLIFFORD, Jackson, La., EDITOR.

At the recent session of the Missouri Conference, Rev. W. F. McMurry, presiding elder of the St Joseph district, reported all collections in his district full and overflowing.

Bro. McMurry is a young man, and an earnest Epworth Leaguer. Two years ago he was State president of the Missouri Epworth Leagues.

The meeting of the City Union at Burgundy Street Church, Tuesday night, Sept. 12, proved to be an enjoyable and profitable occasion. We doubt if the Leaguers have been more royally received and elegantly entertained by any church in New Orleans.

The large and spacious auditorium had been tastefully decorated by the deft fingers of fair hands, and the musical programme and refreshments furnished at the close in the Sunday-school room materially added to the pleasure of the evening.

It was our privilege, a few nights ago, to look in upon the Algiers Epworth Leaguers. The meeting was conducted by Bro. A. Sid. Daniels, who knows how to lead the young folks in real Methodist style.

From the Shreveport Progress we learn that the Epworth League of the Texas Avenue Church recently presented a very interesting programme before a large and appreciative audience.

The young folks acquitted themselves in a manner worthy of the highest commendation, and discussed the subjects assigned with the ease and elegance of those of maturer years. Our friend, Hicks, of the Progress, says "the papers were couched in language bold, rippling, and poetic—melodious as the notes of the mocking bird."

NOTICE.

The Epworth Leagues of the Shreveport district, according to the decision of the council at a recent meeting, will hold their first Annual Conference at Grand Cane, Thursday and Friday, Oct. 12 and 13. Let the Leagues bestir themselves, and work for a successful meeting. Send the names of two from your League to some member of the council who will take part on the program. Let pastors see that delegates are sent from all their churches, as far as is possible, and correspond with Rev. J. M. Brown about their entertainment.

P. O. LOWREY.

MISSISSIPPI.

REV. HENRY G. HAWKINS, Madison, Miss., ASSOCIATE EDITOR.

The writer's first attempt to organize an Epworth League was at Binnsville, in the northeast corner of the Mississippi Conference. One young lady is specially remembered as having been ready to encourage and help as she had opportunity. Four years of usefulness pass "like swift ships," and there came these lines: "It seemed to hurt her so much to leave her mama and the rest of us. She would say, 'I hate to leave you all, and, mama, what will you do without me?' Would beg her brothers to be good boys and help mama. At first she did not talk like she was prepared to go, but afterwards she said it was all right. Then she had no more fears. Oh, the sweet prayers she prayed while so sick! I never saw anything like it." And she is gone to join a great host of the young and lovely in that other realm.

Rev. G. W. Bachman, Winona, Miss, Book Agent for the North Mississippi Conference, will supply the 1899-1900 League Course, postpaid, for $2.50. Leaguers ought to get and study these four books.

We wonder if the Minutes of the State League Conference have yet been published. The associate editor would like to give to the readers of this column some items that he has been hoping to get from those Minutes.

"Nov. 6, 1897. Received from Bro. Hawkins, October subscriptions Daily News, 25 cents. News Pub. Co., Bennie A. McMahon." Bennie is an Epworth Leaguer. His father was president of the South Side, Meridian, League for one term, but he died this year. Bennie and his mother are left alone. Almost before in his teens he began to carry and collect for the Meridian News. His easy, unassumed use of the word "R/O" in the packet of old receipts thrown yesterday into the waste-basket shows his religion.

SANITARIUM NEEDED.

The city of Meridian, Miss., in fact the State, needs a sanitarium. I have a large college plant located on a beautiful, healthy ten-acre site, amid the pine forest, with purest of water. I wish a capable physician to join me in using this plant as a sanitarium. The buildings are large and well constructed for the purpose. Hundreds of patients in this State need convenient accommodations for special treatment.

Then, I have discovered a remedy, by accident from a human standpoint, that will cure any drug disease in 3 days without suffering or craving for the drug. It is marvelous. No harm in it all.

The best accommodations and comfort will be furnished all patients who desire medical attention from any of our city physicians. Being retired, quiet, elevated, with the purest of water, cool breezes, invalids, persons overworked, or any other class needing rest and recuperation, may do as well here as any where else in the States.

Drug habitues will be treated privately and cured in three or four days without pain, suffering for want of the drug, or in any other way. The remedy is absolutely harmless, causing no ill effects whatever, and producing a thorough cure, which is guaranteed. Apply for particulars at once.

PIANOS
AND
BY MAIL.

The immense advantage in purchasing from us by the mail system is the guaranteed selection on the part of the oldest and largest music house South.

Selling over one thousand pianos and organs each year, and buying goods in enormous quantities, enables us to give those dealing direct the benefit of the closest possible prices on high-grade pianos and organs.

Dealing direct with the customer by mail enables us to eliminate all such items as agents' commission, hotel bills, etc., and to give our customers prices that many factories do not equal to their wholesale trade. Each piano or organ selected by us goes from our warerooms with a guarantee that if it is not as recommended, it can be returned at our expense. Any customer in the South can obtain our lowest net price by mail, and in case of purchase, the selection and instrument will be absolutely guaranteed, and from five to seven years' trial allowed to test same.

Easy payments will be accepted, and old pianos or organs will be received as part payments.

Having been in business in New Orleans half a century buying and selling all grades of pianos, we are in a position to judge of the merits and demerits of the different makes, and to know their adaptability to our trying climate. We give our customers the advantage of that experience.

SPANISH-AMERICAN WAR PANORAMA

is one of the war books which is likely to be in continuous demand. It is a panoramic record of the triumph of Yankee Doodle. The eagle flaps his wings on every page, and "Old Glory" waves around and above every scene. Prominent officers connected with the war are here portrayed, as well as many of the "men behind the guns." Military life is pictured to the eye, from recruiting to guard mount and skirmish line. Nor is the Indicrous omitted. The company cook receives the attention due to his importance; the mess is shown; cavalry scenes are given; the hospital arrangements are depicted; the heroines of the Red Cross service are displayed; street scenes in Havana, Santiago and elsewhere are unrolled, the new citizens, or subjects (which are they?) of Uncle Sam appear and disappear as the leaves are turned.

In a word, the gazer visits the new localities and sees the tumultuous new life, without the risk or expense of a sea voyage.

A NEW LEAF.

He came to my desk with a quivering lip—
The lesson was done.
"Dear teacher, I want a new leaf," he said;
"I have spoiled this one."
In place of the leaf so stained and blotted,
I gave him a new one, all unspotted—
And into his sad eyes smiled—
"Do better now, my child."

I went to the Throne with a quivering soul—
The old year was done—
"Dear Father, hast Thou a new leaf for me?
I have spoiled this one."
He took the old leaf, stained and blotted,
And gave me a new one, all unspotted,
And into my sad heart smiled—
"Do better now, my child."

A REFUSAL, AND WHAT CAME OF IT.

Two commercial travelers, one from Chicago, the other from Toledo, left the train at a small town in Indiana, on the morning of a warm day in the Summer of 18—. The work that called them there having been disposed of in the forenoon hours, they found themselves at noon-day apparently the only out-of-town visitors at the hotel awaiting dinner. Very naturally, therefore, they fell into conversation, which went on with much pleasure till the bell rang out the call to dinner. At once the younger of the two—the Toledo man—cordially invited the other to go out with him for a glass of beer.

Now, the Chicago man was a Christian, and while he did not take the position that the drinking a glass of beer must always and everywhere necessarily be "a sin in itself," he assumed then, as he does now, that his own use of it might most likely become an occasion of stumbling to another, and therefore he had adopted the rule that he would not indulge in the drinking of even lager beer on the road. And yet somehow the invitation given him that day cost him a severe struggle for the moment. The season, the section of the country, certain disagreeable surroundings of the hotel, and, above all perhaps, the abounding hospitality thrown upon the solicitation, conspired to excuse the departure for this once from the previous resolution, but in this conflict between duty and inclination strength was given from above to kindly decline the well-meant hospitality.

The younger man showed quickly that he was greatly annoyed by the refusal, and replied that as for himself he had no scruples about drinking a glass of beer, and he was going out to get it, while his fellow-salesman took himself to the dining-room, deeply regretting the wound he had evidently inflicted on the feelings of his would-be host.

In due time the Toledo man returned and took his place at the table, but the delightful sociability that had prevailed before dinner had received a blow that stunned it largely. Meantime he who had dealt the blow was considering how he might make the several hours of the afternoon, during which they must wait for an outgoing train, as pleasant as possible for his companion.

After dinner a walk was resolved upon, and together the two went out. They had not gone far before the Toledo man reverted to the beer matter, and of his own accord confessed that, owing to a great disappointment, he had of late been drinking a great deal. The kindly spirit shown in his talk opened just the door that his new friend wanted, and a long conversation followed, in which the latter took occasion to give a good deal of friendly and, we may hope, Christian advice. About four o'clock in the afternoon they parted, with the kindliest of feeling for each other, not knowing that they might ever meet again in this life.

Two months, or more, slipped rapidly by, when, one Monday morning, the Chicago drummer entered the office of a hotel in one of the larger cities of Indiana. The first and only person to recognize him was the Toledo runner, who quickly followed him to the back part of the office, where he was to register and leave his "gripsack." After these preliminaries the Toledo man asked: "Do you remember our meeting, up in H——, some months ago? Well, sir, I haven't touched a drop of drink since, and I've swept the board of tobacco, too! And you don't know how much more of a man I feel!" Later on in the year the two men met in their commercial travels again, and the Toledo man declared he was still an abstainer from drink and tobacco!

Can anyone wonder if the other salesman sometimes asks himself, "What might have been the result if I had said 'yes,' instead of 'no,' on that Summer day?"—Gainsboro, in The Morning Star.

LITTLE FOES TO SUCCESS.

LACK OF CONFIDENCE.

Perhaps more people fail to attain success in life from a want of self-confidence than from any other cause. Men and women who have succeeded in accomplishing great things have believed in themselves. They have had confidence in their ability to do the thing they set out to do.

Every great inventor, every leader of men, has always had a strong belief in himself, and has finally succeeded in communicating his confidence, his enthusiasm to others. Nearly every man who has accomplished anything out of the common has been laughed at for his apparent folly, and in many cases has been considered a crank.

When Professor Bell was struggling along in poverty, experimenting upon the telephone, people laughed at him for throwing his time away, and told him that the telephone would never be anything but a toy, and that it could not possibly be put to practical use; but he believed in himself and succeeded.

When Fulton was building the "Clermont," he was looked upon as a natural curiosity, and "Fulton's Folly" was a subject of general ridicule. The great crowd that gathered at the Ferry in New York, at the time advertised for the first trip of the "Clermont" to Albany, was drawn there by curiosity to see what they thought would be an ignominious failure; but, when the vessel steamed off at the rate of sixteen miles an hour, they began to think that Fulton's great confidence in himself had some foundation.

Very few had any faith in Captain Eads when he claimed that he could span the Mississippi river at St. Louis with a bridge, but he was as firmly convinced that the bridge would be successful, before it was built, as afterwards.

Elias Howe was ridiculed for neglecting his family and work, and living in poverty and wretchedness while experimenting on the sewing machine; but he had the utmost confidence in its final triumph, and, as a result, lived to give the world one of the most useful implements of labor. The list of those who have, amid unbelief, fears, discouragements, banked, so to speak, solely upon their belief in themselves when no one else would give them credit, is long. It includes Samuel F. B. Morse, and Cyrus W. Field, and runs back to Columbus and beyond him to many an ancient name.—Success.

The following advertisement once appeared in a newspaper in America, and it is still appropriate: "Wanted—in one hundred households in America, a willing, sunshiny daughter, who will not fret when asked to wipe the dishes, or sigh when requested to take care of the baby; a daughter whose chief delight is to smooth away her mother's wrinkles, and who is quite as willing to lighten her father's cares as his pocket; a girl who thinks her own brother quite as fine a fellow as some other girl's brother. Constant love, high esteem and a more honored place in the home guaranteed. Employment assured to all qualified applicants.—Address Mother, Home Office."

INITIATIVE.

If one carefully observes any company of boys in school or out, he will discover that certain ones are natural leaders. They do not wait to be told what to do, but they suggest work or mischief. They have what we may call initiative. They suggest the games; they direct the expeditions; they are the inventive, active, forth-putting ones, the natural leaders—in fact, others may follow, not they.

The same quality shows in their school work, and becomes more evident the further advanced the student is. They are not satisfied to commit the lessons required with a beautifully obedient spirit, but they are alert in the lines that suggest themselves apart from the regular studies. Sometimes they neglect the prescribed lessons, but do not neglect their own assumed work; sometimes they carry on their studies far beyond these prescribed limits. The man who now stands perhaps at the head of American philology read in college the whole of Demosthenes and Æschylus while the class was going over a single oration and play. It is sometimes said that our great men were not great scholars in college; but they were workers in their own line of study.

The valedictorians that make no mark in the world are those that have great acquisitiveness and small initiative. The ability to acquire is a magnificent gift, and it will insure moderate success; but it will not insure great success unless there is added to it the power of leadership. This leadership requires the gift of initiative, which is another name for originality.

Teachers value highly, and ought to value highly, the quality of what they call good scholarship, the power to acquire readily and exactly. But they should give their special labor to those scholars—wayward, mischievous, perhaps—that work out their own plans, and are not satisfied to accept them without a reason why. Join the two gifts, the talent for acquisition with the genius of originality, and we have the combination possessed by all great leaders. Your beautiful reciter may amount to very little; let him add that merit to the other one, which thinks for itself, which gives you trouble, which challenges your reasons and your authority, and you have found the boy whose youth you will love to recall when he has made his mark in after life.—Independent.

THE VALUE OF COMPLIMENTS.

There are times when a deserved and well-turned compliment has a value far beyond any other ordinary form of expression. There are people, too, who have the gift of saying the right thing at the right time. Others, with the best of intentions, never seem able to do so. They blunder into awkward speeches, and give offense where they mean to give pleasure. Those who know them best understand and gratefully accept their intention; but people less acquainted draw off in annoyance. A very choice instinct is needed in dealing with complimentary speeches. The true compliment is born, not made. It perfectly fits the person to whom it is addressed. We all know people who make us feel in a good humor with ourselves. How they do it we can not quite tell, but they charm us out of gloom and despondency, without saying that we can specially lay hold of or remember. At certain times such company is most useful to us. We fly to it for cheering and comfort; it soothes and solaces us, pouring oil and balm into our wounds. But some soothing is more due to personal charm than to anything complimentary that may be addressed to us.—Christian Herald.

OUR $1 OFFER.

Much has been said about reducing the subscription price of the ADVOCATE. The only way in which a reduction can be brought about is by an increase in the number of subscribers. In order to facilitate this result, we make the following offer: Until further notice we will take new subscriptions at the rate of $1 for eight months. When seven thousand five hundred new names have been sent in at this rate with the cash, we will extend the time four months longer, thus reducing the price to $1 per annum. When the extension is made, old subscribers will get the benefit as well as new ones, provided they first pay up all arrearages. Of course, no commissions can be given under this offer. Address

Yes, earth grows the poorer, heaven seems more desirable, when our loved ones have gone before into the shadowy land. Shadowy, did I say? Nay! here is the shadowy, there the light that blots out the radiance of the sun. Dark with excess of brightness that higher world is, because our eyes are so weak, our faith so dim. In this ever-changing world of phenomena we seem shadows pursuing shadows, like the rest. When we reach that shore, we shall know that truth, which is God's thought and love, which is his life, were the only real things we had ever found. Will you not live more for these—less for things that perish in the using?—Henry Woods Perris.

Children are remarkably susceptible. They are constantly ready to receive impressions. Marks made in childhood may prove ineffaceable. Our speech and conduct should be carefully guarded. An idle word may mar a young life. One false move may blast a character in its incipiency. Beware how the die touches the tablet.—Texas Advocate.

In all my travels I have never seen a man succeed in life who treated his parents with contempt. I don't know of any evil to-day which this country is more guilty of than the way sons and daughters are treating their parents. If we are untrue to God, we shall find that our children will be untrue to us.—Moody.

I, the undersigned, take pleasure in making known my thanks to Messrs. Finlay, Dicks & Co., Ltd., manufacturers of Chill-fuge, for having completely cured my daughter, with one bottle, of malarial fever of long standing. The pleasant taste made it most acceptable to the patient. Believing that I do a favor to suffering humanity, I give this for publication.

HOLMES—We are sad to chronicle the death of Sister ISABELLA HOLMES. She departed this life Aug 24 1899.

Sister Holmes (nee Liddell) was born in Anderson county, S. C., in the year of our Lord 1834. She came to Mississippi when quite a child, and in young womanhood was married to Mr. Jesse Holmes She reared two children—Jasper and Janie.

Sister Holmes was a consistent member of the M. E. Church, South, for more than sixty years. During her last illness she proclaimed blessed hope in the fullness of the Christian religion. When near the end of her earthly pilgrimage she, arousing from a stupor, told her son-in-law, Rev. H. Lipscomb, family and friends, that she was ready to go, and would soon be with her darling boy, Jasper, who fell, mortally wounded, out of the Fifth Mississippi Regiment on the historic field of Missionary Ridge. Thanks be to God for the possibility of family reunions on the other side of the cold river of death.

In her death earth loses a bright jewel; her relatives, with scores of friends, feel the heavy loss. But why lament we longer? She is carried to far more pleasant climes, and we know where to find her; neither are we ignorant of the way. If we will but choose this way, what blessed peace and pleasant associations are ours as we journey!

May God bless and strengthen us, that we may wash our robes and make them white in the blood of the Lamb! Then, when we are called up higher, we shall be ready to clasp her hand on the golden streets of the New Jerusalem.

God bless and save all the bereaved ones in the city not made with hands, eternal in the skies

FRANKLIN—Sister MARTHA A. FRANKLIN died in Vernon parish, La., Aug. 3, 1899. She was born April 26 1834 She was sick only a few days. Her maiden name was Davis. She was married to Thomas Franklin, Dec. 15 1853, with whom she lived happily for many years. The union was blest with twelve children, nine of whom are living. She joined the M. E. Church, South, shortly after marriage, and lived a consistent member until death. Her husband, Rev. Thomas Franklin, was a local deacon for many years, and their house was a home for the weary itinerant. Her husband preceded her to the good world some years ago, but now they have met to part no more. She is not dead, but sleepeth. Shall I say, Weep not? No. How can we refrain when the best friend we had on earth is gone? How we will miss her! But we sorrow not as those who have no hope. The writer was her pastor, and regarded her as one faithful and true. As a church member, she was steadfast; as a neighbor, she was kind, as a mother, she was dutiful and loving. Dear children, she has left you a legacy that is worth more than silver or gold. She lived right and died right. She leaves nine children and a host of friends to mourn her loss, but our loss is her eternal gain. May the Lord help the children to rejoice at the thought that they can meet her in the kingdom above!

S. S. HOLLADAY.

CARRUTH—Mrs. EMMA CARRUTH was born March 18, 1876, and died July 23, 1899. She was the daughter of Mr. C. W. Beam, who has been for many years a useful member of the Methodist Church in the Adams circuit. She was baptized in infancy by her grandfather, Dr. John Sample. She joined the Methodist Church at Ebenezer when she was twelve years old, and was converted when she was fifteen. Her subsequent life was worthy of imitation. I have heard her offer some very touching prayers and give some beautiful testimonies. She loved the church, and was always ready to do anything she could to promote its prosperity. She was also a student, and was a dear lover of good literature.

On Sept. 1, 1898, she was married to Mr. J. A. Carruth, and there was given to them twin boys that were only two or three weeks old at her death. She leaves a husband to mourn his loss, a kind father, two brothers, five sisters, and a host of friends. I was her pastor during the years '96 and '97. I feel that I have one less to pray for me (I have lost a true friend). Just before her death she said to her father that she was ready to go, and asked that her children be raised for the Lord. We invoke the blessings of Heaven upon those that she left behind.

B. H. RAWLS.

Tylertown, Miss.

HARPER—Mrs. NANNIE HARPER (nee Miss Baker), of Jackson, Miss., after a short and painful illness, died on the morning of Aug. 6. Here she labored continuously to make her home one of the brightest and happiest spots on earth. At the age of sixteen she joined the Methodist Church at Mount Pleasant, in Madison county, Miss.; was about forty-eight years old at the time of her death. She was a consistent member of one of the Methodist Churches in Jackson, Miss. Her pleasant manners, godly conversations, and Christian deportment and charities, made all who came within the circle of her acquaintance to love her as one whose daily walk was close with God. We know and feel that our loss has been her eternal gain, but that does not satisfy the heart-longings after our absent loved friend basking in the sunlight of God's countenance, reconciled. Often we wonder if it will be our blessed privilege to see her standing on the other shore, with her hands stretched out in welcome, glad to clasp our own once more. Hers was a life rich with love and jeweled with joy for many years.

Oh, that we may meet again our much-loved and missed friend in the sweet by-and-by, where all is love, peace, joy, and parting is no more! May He who has taken our friend away give comfort and happiness to her sorrowing and grief-stricken relatives!

VIDETTE.

HURLONG—HENRY, infant son of H. L. Hurlong, aged fourteen months and eleven days, died June 20.

Forth from those lovely blue eyes there spake a wishful tenderness which innocence alone may wear. But, alas! with ruthless haste death bound the silken fringes of those curtaining lids forever. The little darling, weary of earth, with all its dull joys and pleasures, has only taken his flight to be with mama in heaven.

Ah, I know too well it is like tearing our very heart-strings to put our little treasures away, but we should find comfort in the thought that our Lord hath need of these tender little flowers. Dear tokens of earth are they, where he was once a child. Methinks the angel surely gazed at this sweet flower with tearful eyes. He kissed its drooping leaves, and whispered, 'Tis for the Lord of paradise; he bound it in his sheaves.

But it shall bloom again in fields of light,
Transplanted by his care,
And saints upon their garments white
This sacred blossom wear.

EMMA R. WITT.

CLARKE—Mrs. LISCAMB CLARKE (nee Chapman) was born Aug. 21 1853 and departed this life at her home near Cato, Miss., July 14 1899. She was married to J. T. Clarke, May 13, 1869, with whom she lived happily until the day of her death. He, together with two adopted children whom she raised from childhood, are left to mourn her death.

Sister Clarke professed religion and united with the M. E. Church, South, in early life, and lived a true Christian until the end came. She loved her Savior, and always trusted his promises, and was never ashamed to confess him before men. She was devoted to the church of her choice, and her pastor always found a hearty welcome to her home and hospitality She was a great sufferer for many months before she died, but she bore it all with Christian fortitude and patience.

A good woman is gone. Our church at John's has lost a good member. May we meet her again where parting never comes!

P. D. HARDIN, Pastor.

VEST—Whereas, in the wisdom of God our Father, Sister R. J. Vest has been called from her labors to her reward; therefore, be it

Resolved, That while we can not fathom the depths of this mysterious providence, and while we mourn her departure, we bow submissively to the will of God, believing he doeth all things well. Although he has laid the hand of affliction heavily upon us, he has only taken his own.

Resolved, That we tender our condolence and heartfelt sympathy to the bereaved husband and children, praying that our pitying Savior may encompass them in his arms of love, and give them grace to say, "Thy will be done."

Resolved, That although our band of workers is weakened by the death of one of our best and most zealous workers, that we unite our efforts in carrying on the Sunday-school and mission work, and that special prayer be made that our work may not be hindered.

Deafness Can Not Be Cured

by local applications, as they can not reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result; and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever. Nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by Catarrh) that can not be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars; free.

The "Combination" Bible.

A SUPERB EDITION

of the Holy Scriptures, showing at a glance at the foot of the pages all changes made by the revisers.

New Type. All Proper Names. Self-Pronouncing. The Most Valuable Collateral Matter.

There is a steady and increasing demand for first-class Bibles. Everybody is anxious to obtain a copy of the best edition of the Holy Scriptures. Old editions are constantly being replaced by Bibles that are in every way more attractive, and there is practically no limit to the demand.

OUR "COMBINATION" FEATURE.

Hitherto the King James and Revised Versions have been printed in parallel columns, but this makes comparisons of texts tedious and unsatisfactory, and makes the book very unwieldy. We have overcome this difficulty by "combining" the two Versions on the same page, showing at a glance in foot-notes all the Changes Additions and Omissions made by the Revisers.

THE OLD VERSION PRINTED IN FULL.

The King James Version is the basis, and this Version is read straight along from the text, while the Revised Version is read from the text in combination with the foot-notes. Our "Combination" Feature has met with universal approval and is strongly endorsed by all leading Divines and Biblical Scholars.

It is only by a comparison of the two Versions that the greatest benefit can be obtained from reading the Holy Scriptures, and this comparison every reader can easily make by our simple arrangement for showing the changes made by the revisers. This is the greatest triumph of Bible Publishing the World has ever known.

OUR OFFER.

To those unprogressive people who do not read and pay for the NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE we sell this Bible at the publisher's retail price—$4.25. To our subscribers we sell it at the very low rate of $2. The only condition attached to this offer is that the subscriber must pay his subscription one full year in advance, viz.: to September, 1900. We will send it postpaid to any person who will send us three new cash subscribers at the regular rate. For six new cash subscribers at the regular rate we will send two "Combination" Bibles, postpaid.

For fifty cents additional we will send a Bible with index.

For twenty-five cents additional we will have your name engraved in gilt letters on the outside.

Send for circular. Address REV. W. C. BLACK.

P. S.—We can give no commission on renewals in connection with the above offer.

Furnished Free with every machine are the following named accessories: One Foot Hammer, One Screw Driver, One Wrench, One Oil Can and Oil, One Gauge Screw, One Extra Check Spring, One Package of Needles, Five Bobbins and One Instruction Book.

No. 4 Columbian

EXCELLENCE OF THE COLUMBIAN.—All wearing parts are of case-hardened steel possessing great durability, and by the turning of a screw all lost motion caused by wear can be taken up. All parts are fitted so accurately that the machines are absolutely noiseless, and as easy running as fine adjustment and best mechanical skill is possible to produce. No expense or time is spared to make them perfect in every respect, as every machine passes a rigid inspection by competent men before leaving the factory.

NICKEL PLATED.—The balance wheel and many of the fine parts are nickel plated, with other parts finely enameled and ornamented, giving it a rich appearance.

A Self Setting Needle and Self-Threading Cylinder Shuttle are used in the Columbian High-Arm Sewing Machine. They are so simple that any one can easily operate them in a few minutes' time, as our Instruction Book is fully illustrated, showing how to do all kinds of fancy work with attachments.

Extra Attachments, in velvet-lined case, sent free with each machine: 1 Tucker, 1 Ruffler with chirring plate, 1 Hemmer set (4 widths) and Binder, 1 Braider (Foot and Slide), 1 Thread Cutter.

ADDITIONAL ACCESSORIES.—Each machine is supplied with the following outfit: 1 Hemmer and Feller (one piece), 10 Needles, 6 Bobbins, 1 Wrench, 1 Screw Driver, Oil Can with Oil, Cloth Gauge and Thumb Screw, and a Book of Instructions. The Book of Instructions is profusely illustrated, and answers the purpose of a competent teacher.

No. 3—Drop leaf, Bent cover, case of two drawers at one end and center drawer. Dealer's price, $29. Our price, $17.

No. 4—Drop leaf table, Bent cover, case of two drawers at each end and center drawer. Dealer's price, $31. Our price, $17.75.

No. 5—Drop leaf table, Bent cover, case of three drawers at each end and center drawer, making a seven-drawer machine. Dealer's price, $33. Our price, $18.50.

The chief difference between Numbers 3, 4, and 5 is in the furniture, i. e., in the number of drawers. If you do not want to pay for the extra drawers, you need not do so. We sell these machines under a ten years' guarantee, by which we mean that if any part gives out by reason of any defect therein, the manufacturer will replace the same free of charge. Moreover, we allow the purchaser to test the machine ten days. If at the end of ten days you are not satisfied, you have only to drop us a postal card, and your money will be refunded.

OUR OFFER.

We will send any one of the above-described machines at the prices named, and also send the ADVOCATE free for six months. The only condition attached to this offer is that subscribers who are in arrears must first pay up all arrearages to date. It would be well to avail yourself of this offer at once, as we can not promise that it will last very long. Notice that you take no risk whatever. We do all the risking. Address

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

A lockout begun on Sept. 17 at fifty Dundee (Scotland) mills, throwing 35,000 men ont of employment.

Mr. Jolins Weiss, a prominent citizen of New Orleans, has donated the handsome snm of $25,000 for additions to the accommodations of the Touro Infirmary.

The Glasgow town council has awarded a contract for two electric traction engines to an American company solely on the ground of an earlier delivery than could be promised in Great Britain.

A riot occurred in Carterville, Ill., on Sept. 17, in which seven negroes were killed. The trouble grew ont of the conflict which has existed all Summer between the white miners and negro non-union miners.

The Bricklayers' and Stone Masons Union of Chicago has voted to issue a card of honorary membership to William McKinley, President of the United States, so that when he handles a trowel in laying the corner-stone of the new government building, Oct 9, he may not be branded as a "scab."

The French Freemasons composing the assembly of 1899 adopted a resolution in the name of the Order of the Grand Oriental, declaring the anti-Semite movement criminal and odious, and pleading with the French government for support against "Clerical, militarism, imperial and monarchist conspiracies."

The long, expected papal encyclical addressed to France, which has just issued from the Vatican, ignores the Dreyfus case. It is merely an elaborate theological lecture, urging upon the bishops that their zeal should be accompanied by discretion, rectitude and purity, and forbidding priests to read pamphlets and papers emanating from "over zealous, surpliced politicians."

Ninety-five per cent. of the native population of Ponce, Puerto Rico, has been seriously affected by the recent storm. This class, the peons, have nearly always been in a state bordering on absolute poverty. The planters are unable to furnish work, and the fruit upon which they had so much depended for food is destroyed. Relief supplies are at best only temporary, and difficulties of transportation have prevented the distribution of relief except at the most central points.

The reply of the Government of the South African Republic to the last British note has been made public in London, and the cable dispatches give its general purport, with copious extracts. The communication is temperately and courteously worded, but it is a rejection of Mr. Chamberlain's proposals, and announces that the only proposition that could be accepted is a seven-years' franchise law, other differences to be submitted to arbitration. The Transvaal's note practically repudiates British suzerainty, and intimates that it would be useless to make further proposals at variance with a seven-years' franchise proposition. Although temperately worded, the communication is a defiance of Great Britain, and it shows very clearly that the Boers expect war, and do not shrink from it.

Cuba is in a pitiful state. Instead of a rainy season, Cuba has had a drouth. Not since 1811 has there been such long-continued dry weather during the Summer. The result has been disastrous. The United States weather bureau reports that all small crops have been ruined. Sugar cane has been so damaged that the crop next year will be less than the crop grown this year. The most distressing feature of the drouth is the destruction of the corn crop.

According to advices from Washington, the officials of the Department of State and the Navy Department are beginning to feel some concern at the many evidences of ill-will and distrust towards this country reported from South and Central America. It was reported, some time ago, that a coalition of the countries of South America, ostensibly for business reasons, but really as a protection against the grasping policy of the United States, had been formed.

On Saturday, in the National Conference on Trusts, in Chicago, Colonel W. J. Bryan made an interesting address against these powerful aggregations of capital, and his views were all the more interesting because they were free from anything smacking of socialism. Mr. Bryan held that not only is it contrary to the best interests that any public service should be conducted by and for private monopolies, but that no necessary of life or other article of daily consumption by the people should be controlled by any such monopoly.

The decoration and illumination of the national capital for the welcome which is to be given to Admiral Dewey upon his arrival there Oct. 2, will be carried forward on lines which will prove to be both unique and magnificent. Never before in the history of Washington has an illumination of the city been planned on such a scale. According to the present plans, Admiral Dewey will reach there just about dark Monday night, and will find the city ablaze with light, with a procession already formed, consisting of displays and transparencies as varied as they will be beautiful. Admiral Dewey will be escorted to the reviewing stand at the treasury department, whence he will witness the parade and the illumination of the city.

A Prominent Minister Writes.

After ten years of great suffering from indigestion, with great nervous prostration, biliousness, disordered kidneys and constipation, I have been cured by Dr. Mozley's Lemon Elixir, and am now a well man. REV. C. C. DAVIS,
Eld. M. E. Church, South,
No. 28 Tatnall St., Atlanta, Ga.

A Prominent Memphian Writes.

DR. H. MOZLEY, Atlanta:—Having been a great sufferer for three years from indigestion, and been treated by many physicians, who failed to give me any relief. Continuing to grow worse my brother advised to try Dr. Mozley's Lemon Elixir, which remedy he had used for several years. I commenced its use, and must say that your Lemon Elixir is the greatest medicine on earth. I have never suffered a day since I commenced using Lemon Elixir.
R. L. ROCCO,
206 Hernando St., Memphis, Tenn.

A Card.

This is to certify that I used Dr. Mozley's Lemon Elixir for neuralgia of the head and eyes with the most marked benefit to my general health. I would gladly have paid $500 for the relief it has given me at a cost of two or three dollars. H. A. BEALL,
Clerk Superior Court Randolph Co., Ga.

Two Verdicts.

"After a fair and impartial trial you are judged guilty by this court, and you are sentenced to be hung by the neck until you are dead." The solemn tones of the judge, the despairing face of the prisoner, and the painful stillness of the court-room, makes it a scene of awful impress. Now turn to a brighter scene at the home circle. A mother radiant with joy over the recovery of a child snatched from the clutches of Malaria, An entire family rejoicing, and praising the merits of Dicks' Chillifuge, and giving their verdict that Chillifuge is without an equal for swiftness to cure.

The celebrated Mr. Weller tells of an amiable acquaintance who "borrows eighteen pence on Monday, and comes on Tuesday for a shilling to make it up half a crown; calls again on Tuesday for another half crown to make it five shillings, and goes on doubling it till he gets it up to a five-pound note in no time, like them sums in the 'rithmeetic book 'bout the nails in the horse's shoes."

Your old acquaintance, Malaria, is a good accountant also. Day by day he abstracts a little vitality, a little color, a little appetite; you get the headache, you are irritable, and you wind up in bed with malarial fever—that is, if you are unacquainted with Chillifuge, the greatest malaria killer on record.

THE WORKING-MEN.

The noblest men that live on earth
Are men whose hands are brown with toil;
Who, backed by no ancestral birth,
Hew down the woods and till the soil;
And win thereby a prouder fame
Than follows kings' or warriors' name.

God bless the noble working-men
Who rear the cities of the plain,
Who dig the mines and build the ships,
And drive the commerce of the main;
God bless them, for their swarthy hands
Have wrought the glory of all lands.

Correspondence.

ECHOES FROM ALABAMA.

After a pleasant and most agreeable two hours of conversation and fellowship with J. A. Bowen, the venerable, princely and warm-hearted pastor of our church in Columbus, Miss., I found a comfortable seat in one of the company's finest cars from St Louis, and sped, like a bird of light, over the red hills and through the green valleys till, in two and a half hours, we pulled into Tuscaloosa, Ala. Beautiful Tuscaloosa! The name has a classic ring. It is a city of colleges and education, refinement and culture, noble-spread ing oaks and broad-shaded streets. One's mind naturally turns, in the midst of such scenes, to the great names of other days whose spirit and life touched and mellowed all you see. Everything seems to invite you to linger and study and breathe the inspiration of the place I would here gladly pause in my flight and rest amid the enchanting bowers of the classic "City of Oaks," but stern circumstances whispered, "Onward." In obedience to these, I boarded the first passing train and soon alighted in the lovely, the beautiful, the historic, the classic Greensboro. The very name exerts a charm, and soothes the tired, restless spirit of all the old college boys. Not having seen the town or the old university for a half-dozen years, great and pleasing surprises greeted me on every hand. Many and great have been the changes of these brief years. New, finer, larger and more imposing residences are filling up vacant lots, and adding beauty to the whole scene by the continuity of their artistic fronts. The banks, opera house, hotel and red brick stores are imposing buildings The stocks of goods are larger, and the clerks are busier, and the drays are faster, and the air of all is that of good health, business and optimism. But the changes and progressive spirit of these years are not more manifest anywhere than in the improvements of the Southern University building. Marvelous indeed are the changes and beauties of this grand and massive structure. A boy never forgets his college days. He may forget ten thousand things, but his eye kindles with fire, and his heart swells with emotion, and memory yields up all her stored wealth, as across the wild desert wastes of life his thoughts turn to the spires and minarets of the temple of knowledge where, in the halcyon days of long ago, he sat at the feet of some Plato, or Socrates, or Gamaliel. With all these feelings we entered the old building again. With the kind offices of Prof. Brown we went through the college and noted the changes. To say that they are wonderful does not express it. Indeed, no description of tongue or pen can give one an adequate conception of the extreme loveliness and exquisite beauty and artistic perfection of the work done. Like "fair Melrose," it must be seen to be appreciated. The whole interior of the great building has been renovated and beautified. The overhead ceiling and wainscoting in all the rooms, halls and corridors are of the latest designs and most perfect artistic finish. The diversity of shapes and sections, and the blending of colors, make the prettiest plotnre ever beheld by this scribe. And the chapel—what shall we say about that? To attempt a description would almost amount to a desecration. Drs. Tigert and Tillett pronounced it the prettiest in all the South. It is a "thing of beauty and a joy forever." It is an inspiration to behold it. Its beauties fill us and thrill us with elevated emotions like the thunderous Niagara would fill us with awe. This stupendous work was the last task of the now sainted and immortal John O. Keener, who, as president and agent for four years, piloted her through a stormy sea, and broke down every wind of opposition, and steered her heroically into an era of unprecedented prosperity. He came to the helm in a crisal hour. Perhaps no other man could have taken it at the time he did and succeeded. He took it and built his monument thereby. But the saddest thing of it all is that, though he worked so hard and accomplished such results, he never saw this beautiful work of his hands. He died without the sight, but others see it, and in it see him. He lives and speaks in the chapel, and walks up and down these halls, but no one hears his foot-fall on the stair-way. That which is seen speaks with the voice of that which is not seen. "He touched, point by point, the eternal beams and rafters on which the whole structure of nature and society is laid." In this tossing sea of delusion he felt with his feet the adamant; in this dominion of chance he found a principle of permanence.

Dr Keener was massive in character and masterful in intellect. Like the great man Emerson describes as the superior type of all, "He saw through all masks to the eternal scale of truth." We entered the "Belles Letters" hall, and there, above the speaker's stand, hung a life-size picture of the late president. I uncovered my head and stood and looked into that face with the feelings I used to have when I looked upon the flesh. There was the broad forehead, the transparent face, the intellectual eye, the firmly-set lips, the luminous and beaming expression like the shining of the sun. I said, "He looks like he ought to speak," and Prof Brown remarked, "He does speak." He teaches now the same great lessons he taught when he sat in the chair, and the class was before him

My mind turned upon that other great and princely man of brain and character, Dr Allen S Andrews, than whom there was no greater. He was one of those rare spirits of whom the whole creation might stand up and say, "This was a man." He was broad and profound, philosophical and astute, witty, humorous, and optimistic. I shall always put him down as one of the greatest men I ever knew. It is hard to improve on such men. After coming down from his pulpit, where he had preached a great sermon, he quietly fell on sleep, full of years and full of noble labor. He sleeps in the cemetery at Union Springs, Ala., but ought to be here at Greensboro with Drs. Smith, Wordsworth and Keener, his associates in toil.

The old university is growing and prospering, despite the hard times and adverse currents of air. She has vindicated her right to live, and incarnated herself in the affections and generosity of the noble people of Alabama. They will stand by her and maintain her good name and prosperity.

Dr. Hosmer's election to the presidency of this institution seems to have been a wise and happy choice. The people are becoming more and more of the opinion that it was the best and most fitting thing that could have been done. Dr. Hosmer is in high and increasing favor, and the college has a flattering prospect for the opening on the twentieth of September. They have a full and an efficient faculty. The university building is lighted up with electricity. Great arc lights of a thousand candle power swing in the chapel, and then smaller foot-lights glisten around the edge of the rostrum. When lighted up it is as beautiful as the world-renowned "star chamber." They have the X-ray apparatus in the university. Prof. Brown kindly appointed an hour, and gave us, with five or six others, some of the subtle and wonderful exhibitions and revelations of that marvelous electric light. We saw the bones of the hand and wrist and arm as plainly as if all the flesh had been torn away. We saw the ribs and backbone of a child five or six years old through the clothing and all. You could count a fellow's money inside of his pocket-book—that is, if there was any in it. It revealed a key through a solid block of wood six inches thick.

Some one said to Daniel Webster with a sneer, looking over the rocky hills and barren mountain wastes of Massachusetts, "What do you raise here?" "Men," was his instant reply. As long as a country raises men, she is prosperous and safe. The Lord increase the output!

Greensboro is immortal for two things—seat of Southern University, and the home of Hobson. Southern University has sent out some noted and gifted men, such as the sainted ex-Gov. Thos. Seay, of Alabama. His name is a synonym for purity, honesty, and nobility. Then there is Dr. J. O. Keener, and our own distinguished W. B. Murrah, at the head of Millsaps College. The immortal Hobson is an alumnus of the institution. To show how Greensboro appreciates him, you have but to enter the town. You are met with his picture everywhere—sitting on the counters and displayed from show windows. In the opera house, on the stage, they have a rudely constructed imitation of the "Merrimac," with Hobson on board.

In the pulpit of the Methodist Church is the gifted, brilliant and versatile Claude L. Chilton, of whom many people say, "There is no such preacher of his age in Southern Methodism." You might leave age out, and be very near the truth. Everything moves before him, and the kingdom of God is built up and strengthened under his ministry.

GRENADA COLLEGE OPENING.

Grenada College opened on Tuesday, the twelfth instant, with an enthusiastic crowd of bright girls and teachers, and an appreciative audience of the best culture of Grenada citizenship.

President McIntosh is to be congratulated on the auspicious opening, and but for the scare of yellow-fever reports from Jackson, the college would have almost been crowded. The friends of the North Mississippi Conference school—the Grenada College—feel that this is but the beginning of a bright future for this institution. The college building has been painted outside and inside; new beds, new matting on the floors, new steps and galleries, make it quite a fine place to live in, while the large campus, with some fine old trees, make it a delightful wandering and lounging-place for the girls in the interim of study hours. The faculty is up to the ideal of intelligent enthusiasm in the science and art of teaching.

The friends of the college will be glad to know that Mrs. M. I. Hoskins, one of the most accomplished women in all the land, and Miss Mollie Duval, the teacher of teachers, author of a fine history of Mississippi, and one of the few women who can frame a syllogism after the dictum of Aristotle, are to be associated with the school this year. Some of the former teachers are still in the college. Miss Coney, the teacher of music for years, and the accomplished and—I will say it in this place—the most punctual organist this pastor has ever known, will preside over the music department. Mrs. Payne, the nonesuch teacher of the little folks, will continue in this department, the same consecrated, intelligent Christian teacher that she has been from the time of the opening of this North Mississippi Conference school.

President McIntosh and his consecrated wife will, with such a faculty, make this an ideal school for our girls. The younger members of the faculty are specialists in their line of school work, and will be heard from—mark that. Anglo Saxon, Latin composition and scanning, type-writing and book-keeping, and many other things not taught before, will be in the course of school work this year.

Grenada is proud of the college, and her people say that they will help President McIntosh make Grenada College one of the very best in all the land. Now, then, with the North Mississippi Conference preachers and laymen united in this school work, and the "Twentieth Century Fund" to help the work on, why should not Grenada College be at the front?

There will be more girls than can be accommodated, if all come who have made application. Drs. Carothers, Morehead, O'Briant, ex-Mayor Adams and this scribe made addresses, or took part in the opening exercises, with President McIntosh to lead and Mrs. Hoskine to out-speak them all.

THE WOMAN'S COLLEGE OF OXFORD.

The Woman's College opened its doors for the reception of pupils on the twelfth instant, as per announcement. The attendance on opening day was larger than we have ever had hitherto, about sixty boarding pupils being present, and others have since arrived, swelling the number of boarders to seventy-four at this time, while we confidently expect a number of others to come within the ensuing week or two. Our local patronage is also very fine, there being over thirty-five enrolled in the collegiate department from the town of Oxford. We have a very superior class of girls, a majority of whom are, as a matter of course, from North Mississippi, but we have young ladies from Texas, Arkansas, Georgia and Kentucky also. The members of our faculty are all at their posts, the school is well organized, and the regular work of college life is now in progress.

At our formal opening we had present Chancellor Fulton, Dr Jones, and Gov. Shands, of the State University, as well as Bro. Standefer, pastor of our church here—all of whom spoke in a very encouraging manner of the bright outlook for the college. I feel very much gratified that this Methodist college for girls has begun its career under such favorable circumstances, and I pray God that it may prove in the future to be a power for the promotion of the Christian education of our girls.

The alarming reports as to the prevalence of yellow fever at Jackson, Miss., just at the time of starting for Oxford, delayed many, and I have reason to believe that but for this alarm we would have matriculated almost, if not the full number of one hundred boarding pupils. As the matter stands, however, we feel grateful to God for our successful inauguration of this great educational enterprise. The brethren and friends are cordially invited to visit the school at any time.

OPENING OF THE EAST MISSISSIPPI FEMALE COLLEGE.

This excellent institution opened this, the fourth session under President Beeson's administration, with the finest opening it has had in the history of the college. There are more boarders than the institution ever opened with before, and also more town students. This large opening was all the more wonderful in the face of the yellow-fever scare and quarantine, which prevented a large number from being here at the first. Every room in the building has been filled but three. When these are filled he will have to begin on the annex which the president has secured just adjoining the college building. This building has been thoroughly repaired, renovated, rooms papered and nicely painted. New furniture out and out has been added, and everything is in fine condition.

He has the best faculty he has ever had, and undoubtedly has the finest student body that he has ever had. More students are entering the higher classes than ever before. They are coming better prepared for college work, which shows that the institution is gaining ground among the other colleges in the South. More pupils are entering in music, stenography, typewriting, and the like, than ever before. Almost every train brings more pupils, and the large number which have not yet entered are coming in every day.

President Beeson is continually raising the course of study, and making improvements in every way, until it is no wonder he has such a large increase. Another interesting feature is that, while the equipments of the faculty and the advantages are continually improving, there is no increase in the price.

Meridian is very fortunate to have such an institution in its midst. Our people may well be proud of it, and are, and ought to give their support and encouragement to it. The college is a great help to Meridian from a business standpoint as well as from an educational standpoint.

Thousands of dollars are brought into the town every year, and thousands more are kept in the town by the pupils having the advantages brought to them here.

Students have come this year from every direction, and from many of the Southern States. Many of them come many hundred miles. When all arrive who have engaged to come, the annex will be well filled as well as the main building.

We are proud of this institution in our midst.—Meridian Daily Herald.

THE TWENTIETH CENTURY MOVEMENT

IN MISSISSIPPI IS MAKING STEADY

PROGRESS.

Rev. W. L. Graves, Tunica, has the names of the members of the church copied into the Roll Book, and will observe Education Day the first Sunday in October. He says, "I will do my best to succeed."

Rev. Thos. H Dorsey will do the same at Cleveland, and report results.

Rev. W. H. Sanders has issued a personal appeal to every member of, and to the friends of, the church at Indianola for a contribution. He has planned wisely for large success.

Rev. R. A. Meek, Starkville, reported more than one hundred dollars some months ago, and has now made a personal appeal to every member of the church, and will add a good amount to that already secured.

One of the best and most encouraging letters I have had is from Rev. J. M Bradley, Booneville. He will devote the first Sunday in October to this interest, and I confidently look for a splendid report. I am sure the people will follow the enthusiastic, liberal leadership of their pastor.

Rev. J. W. McGee reports forty-six and 75 100 dollars from Lebrton circuit, and "more to follow."

Rev. R. H. B Gladney reports from Eupora and Waithall fifty dollars, and says, "This is a good beginning, and we will continue till we reach all the people."

Rev. W. L. C. Hurnientt writes, "I am preaching all around my district on education, and rallying the brethren who will not forget or neglect the Twentieth Century Movement."

Rev. J. W. Dorman writes: "I am just in from a trip on the district, and want to tell you of what I saw in the interest of the Twentieth Century Movement. Rosedale contributed thirty-five dollars; Ruleville, eighteen dollars; Quiver, twenty-one dollars. Deeson raised about five dollars per member. I have heard from Tunica, Austin, Lula, Friar's Point, Hillhouse, Bolivar, Boyle, Cleveland, Shelby and Duncan, and Clarksdale. They are all at work, and I think you will get good reports from them. We are doing all we can to bring this district up to the standard."

In addition to this continued and continuing progress, the work has now entered upon the policy of EXPANSION.

The first response to my letters to the Sunday-school superintendents is from Mrs. H F. Hale, who promises that the school at Shaw will aid in the work.

Bro. J. E. McRae has sent Bro. Park four and 10-100 dollars from the Sunday-school at Acona.

I hope every Sunday-school in the State will make a thank-offering for the benefit of this important interest. From the number of promises to devote October to this work, I am sure the results will show that has come to stay, and henceforth there will be added force to Mr. Wesley's words, "The world is my parish." J. R. BINGHAM.

Carrollton, Miss., Sept. 25, 1899.

P. S.—Every Mississippian should make a special thank-offering of two dollars: one that we escaped the scourge of yellow fever, and one that we escaped the rigors of a quarantine

NO EFFECTIVE SUBSTITUTES.

Governor Roosevelt, of New York, sums up the case as between the politicians and the people when he says: "Men in public life are what the men in private life make them. In no way can you bring about decency in your government so quickly as by backing up the men who represent your interests, rewarding those who are faithful and punishing those who fail in their duty. If you let the professional politicians do all the work, they will take all the reward—and they ought to. You can't govern yourselves by sitting in your studies and thinking how good you are." That is a presentment of the case both brief and comprehensive. The individual who is in politics for "what there is in it" can afford to laugh at the critics who fight with complaints instead of with votes, and who take the position of handing their advice down to voters, instead of getting down among them as workers and as possible leaders. Of this class of citizens Governor Roosevelt appropriately says: "Sometimes one of these people who feel that they should do something to raise the country's political standard goes to a primary, and finds a raft of men who have been to many primaries. He discovers that he counts for nothing. Then, if he is of the type of men unfit for self-government, he says politics is low, and goes home. If he is worth his salt, he goes again, loses, goes again, maybe wins, and finally finds that he counts, and that he is doing his plain duty as an American citizen." The whole problem boils down to one of individual interest and individual exercise of the privileges and duties of American citizenship. For these there can be no effective substitutes.—Pittsburg Commercial Gazette.

REAWAKENING.

I will not faint but trust in God,
Who this my lot hath given:
He leads me by the thorny road
Which is the road to heaven.
Though sad and dry that lasts so long,
At evening I shall have a song:
Though dim my eyes all the night,
At evening time there shall be light.

My life is but a working day
While it is bright and night
Awhile to work, awhile to pray,
And then a quiet night
And hear, please God, a quiet night
When angels walk in white;
One dreamless night on which we know no sorrow,
But reawakening on the morrow.

COLORS DE FRIED! SABBATH, OR NO SABBATH?

BY REV. J. A. PARKER, D D.

Rev R M Boone owns and operates two papers in Alexandria, La. The Baptist Chronicle, organ of the Baptist Church in Louisiana, of which paper he is editor. The Daily Times—Alexandria Times—is also owned by him, and edited by an employee of his, who is employed and paid by him just as other hands about the office are

Some weeks ago the "Rapides Fair Association" announced the opening and closing of the Fair on days including a Sabbath Soon as this fact was known to it, "The Ministerial Association" was reorganized, and forwarded a courteous 'protest' to the Fair Association, urging that the Fair would be closed on the Sabbath.

Rev Mr. Boone knew of the meeting of ministers for the purpose of this protest, but although he was at the time in less than 200 feet of the place of the meeting he, for reasons known to himself, absented himself from the meeting In the Chronicle, of which he is editor, he has never, to my knowledge, opened his mouth against Sunday fairs, while, at first, his other paper (the Times) for a few issues vigorously opposed Sunday opening. Later—still keeping silent in the Chronicle—the Times came out in full support of the Fair and its desecration of the Sabbath.

Of this change of base The Daily Democrat has this to say:

"If Bro. Boone can explain his sudden and unaccountable flop' on the Sunday question, we know that his many friends will be glad to hear it and give him credit for sincerity, if his explanation carries conviction with it. His sudden conversion, however, to the Sunday Fair has set the people 'a-thinking,' and they 'are wondering' how it happened."—Democrat, Sept 9

To such strictures as the above Mr. Boone replied, in substance, that while he owned the Daily Times, he was not responsible for its editorial utterances. This very poor defense brought out the Democrat again, and in its issue of the twelfth instant it says:

'FOLKS ARE WONDERING"

"Why it is that a man who admits that he is connected with the ownership of a newspaper, and can not be disconnected therefrom, can't control the editorial utterances of said paper.

'Why it is that 'a Christian minister' doesn't feel it to be his duty to 'antagonize an honest and honorable body of gentlemen,' when he publicly acknowledges that they are violating one of the Ten Commandments, which the Christian religion requires him to uphold and defend at all hazards."

Further, the Democrat, of Sept 9, has this to say touching the attitude of Mr. Boone and his papers:

"We had supposed that the newspapers of Alexandria had all aligned themselves in opposition to the holding of the Fair on Sunday It seems, however, that we were egregiously mistaken, and 'reckoned without our host.' We have reference only to the Alexandria Daily Times. When the question was first agitated, that journal, in several able editorials, vehemently opposed the Sunday Fair, as was to have been expected from a paper issued from the same building, and under the benign, refining and exalted influences of a minister of the gospel.

"But mark the sudden change. Of course, the transition was so swift as to be unaccountable to those who had read its former utterances, and who supposed that it would abide by them. But several weeks makes a great difference in a newspaper apparently solicitous of sounding and catering to public sentiment. At least the inconsistent and diametrically opposite positions assumed by the Morning Daily demonstrates this proposition.

"The Times is issued, as we have already asserted, from the office of the Baptist Chronicle, a religious newspaper. The Rev. R M. Boone is the editor and proprietor of the office, although a third party may be nominally interposed. Until we have positive and irrefragible evidence to the contrary, we shall assume and act upon that assumption that the Rev R M Boone owns and controls both the Baptist Chronicle and the Alexandria Daily Times, and the people are not sufficiently credulous to be hoodwinked or deceived by simply placing the name of some other individual at the mast-head as editor or business manager."

Now, as to certain facts to which I want to call the attention of the public.

Here is a minister of the gospel owning two newspapers. For the support of one of them he must look to the Baptist Church, for it is run on strictly Baptist ideas, and according to Baptist land-marks. In this paper the editor has not so far—Sept. 14, 1899—expressed an opinion for nor against a Sunday fair. He dare not advocate such. The good people who are behind him would drop him as they would a viper. This he knows, and, no doubt, his other paper—The Times—of Sept. 13, fully expresses the owner's views He says, "Bi sidess is the doctrine of our day.' This he says of Sunday fairs.

Mr. Boone's other paper—The Times—is directed on a different range from The Chronicle. The former is "business' for the secular readers' dollar, while the latter is business for the dollars of 'the brethren." While in the pulpit and in his religious paper, he lectures the elect about Sinai and Calvary; in his secular paper he encourages the violation of a Sinaitic precept, and the overthrow of the great purpose radiant on Calvary.

Mr. Boone's claim that his hired man is using his property against his wish, and making it contradict his personal and journalistic ministry, and he can not help it, is somewhat like his editor's figure drawn from "'Elisha's ravens.'"

Speaking of fairs—and no exception is taken to Sunday fairs—The Times has this sublime figure (Sept. 13), "It builds churches, and hires preachers, and gives Elisha's ravens' an opportunity to find worms for their young." This he says of the business side of the "Fair," and further on adds: "Business is the doctrine of our day. An enemy to business is an enemy to God, and an enemy to man."

If, in the light of this controversy, this means anything, it means this: A Sunday fair is business, and whoever opposes a Sunday fair 'is an enemy to God and an enemy to man." But the proprietor of the Times has not opposed Sunday fairs, and is not included with the other ministers of the city. This one minister among eight or ten others forms an exception to the rule. The eight or ten others are "enemies to God and enemies to man," but this one "minister of the gospel" is 'clean, every whit."

How does this read in a paper owned by a minister who did not join his brother ministers in their "opposition" to a Sunday fair (Times, Sept. 12)?

"Regardless of opposition to the contrary, we make bold to say that we are for the success of these men in their big enterprise, 'teeth and toe-nail.'

"Let the watchword of every well-wishing citizen be, Success to the big fair.'"

I give another extract from the Times, of Sept. 14 prefacing the extract with the remark that the question of religious liberty has never been discussed, nor even mentioned by those who are unyielding in their opposition to Sunday fairs. From this extract it seems that, instead of coming out boldly and defending his colors, he has sought to hide behind a question which has never been raised. The sanctity of the Sabbath is a fundamental part of every Christian creed, and if Mr. Boone accords the right to violate one precept of the Decalogue on the score of religious liberty, he must, to be consistent, concede such right as to any other part of that sacred code. The bigamists have as much claim to recognition under the Decalogue as the anti-Sabbatarians. Here is how "A Stockholder" in the Fair Association thanks Mr. Boone for his "Christian-like" stand of silence on this great question in his largely-circulated church organ, the Baptist Chronicle:

FROM A STOCKHOLDER.

Editor Alexandria Times:

I, one of the stockholders composing the Rapides Fair and Racing Association, do hereby heartily commend Rev. R M Boone, editor of the Baptist Chronicle, for his position in regard to the Fair to take place here next month. His actions all through have been gentlemanly, manly and Christian-like, in my judgment.

His card in Alexandria Times, of the twelfth instant, was self-explanatory, and shows his willingness to accord every citizen the right and privilege to accept religion as he chooses. Mr. Boone is opposed to the Sunday fair, but he recognizes the fact that he is but one man differing in opinion from many. From my standpoint of view, his actions have pleased me and every other member of our association.

A STOCKHOLDER.

Alexandria Times, Sept. 14.

If the gentleman is opposed to Sunday fairs, why does he lend his paper—The Times—to the advocacy of such fairs?

SOUL-CULTURE.

In this brilliant period, when books and schools are so generously supplied, and knowledge is disseminated throughout the civilized world; when the wondrous truths discovered by the midnight toil of many an aged student are made clear as noon, to what may the human Intellect not attain?

By the systematic training of modern methods the bright, ambitious brain of sixteen years is often a compact mass of knowledge. Language, mathematics, the causes of all things, a comprehension of the whole universe, are crammed into one youthful mind, and what is the consequence? is he a great bump o' deformity, or is he a well-rounded, symmetrical being, a joy to himself and a blessing to the immortal race?

The human mind is generally considered in three divisions: First, the intellect—reasoning, selecting, and storing up knowledge; next, the will, urging onward the intellect, and by its own work being constantly developed and strengthened. Between the intellect and the will lies the true "power behind the throne." The feelings—or, as they are often called, the sensibilities—compose that part of our natures which responds to every touch, either external or internal They were anciently supposed to exist in the heart; hence we speak of a good heart or "a kind heart."

Hope and despair, joy and grief, love and hate, with thousands of other feelings, are the movers of the will, which is so wonderful to do and dare. Where, then, is the care needed? Shall the vehicle receive its precious cargo while the wild steeds are harnessed to it, untrained and unbridled? Whither will it be carried? Surely over the precipice of ruin.

Who does not know that the feelings are in two distinct classes: the noble and the ignoble, the mean and the generous. Designate them as you please, one class is good, the other evil. They sit apart; they can not mingle agreeably. If one kind predominates, the other is in proportionate subjection, and can accomplish very little. Bunyan's Holy War is a brilliant portrayal of the strife of these armies in "Mansoul."

With most writers the term "sensibilities" refers only to the good and noble feelings, and when these are undeveloped, we imagine that monstrosity of education, the intellect, on one side, and the will on the other developed out of all proportion, while the sensibilities are crushed into nothingness, or dwarfed into sickly sentiments dying with each added year.

There is no doubt that training, begun early, is most successful, either for good or for evil. If ambition is excited, and zealous work secured by emulation and the love of praise, the result must be conceit, tyranny of opinion, greed of power, envy and hatred of all apparent superiority in others. Culture in taste and the laws of politeness may cover these faults from the passing eye, but, like the worm in the fruit, they are destroying the sweetness of life. Education in so gross a nature is "as a jewel in a swine's snout."

To the young, to the parent, and the teacher, let me say: Cultivate the finer sensibilities—the heart, the soul, the moral nature; call it what you will Let honor and generosity be the gentle guides of your will. Respect the ability and the rights of others Reverence all good things and good people Beware that you make not a cloak resembling these things, for too many already are parading in such untrue colors Be sure that you feel them in your heart, or the very consciousness of your own falseness will manifest itself to the world. Be what you wish to seem, not in your own strength, but by the help of God. Imitate all that is noble and true, whether from written books or human lives. Study the life of Christ, the perfect model, and imitate him.

How I pity the children who are not taught to love each other, and to recognize the good qualities of sister, brother, and friend, who are trained to virtues only by being shown the exaggerated faults of others. The greatest blessing to the child is his guileless admiration for the virtues recognized in his companion.

The profane hand of some modern educators would not only set aside sacred teachings, but would even sweep away the virtues of modern heroes. Remove from the child his noble ideals, his faith in the good, the beautiful, the true and what is left to him? With all his education, he grows up an empty cynic. With faith in no one, can he feel noble impulses or motives? Can cold morality save him from vice?

Then cultivate the soul, even though it be tried in the fires of disappointment, or drenched in the billows of grief The gay song will wreathe the face with smiles, but the sorrowful music penetrates the soul. The poet's heart-broken prayer will lift your being into a purer atmosphere

One has said, "He lives twice who lives the first life well." This is true even of his earthly life. He has an outward existence that is peaceful and useful as the silent river. Deep down is the inward life of changeful scenes, that few but he and God can see, while another life awaits him, an eternity in bliss.

Specially dedicated to my pupils.

"REACHING THE MASSES."

MR. EDITOR: In the ADVOCATE of the twenty-fourth ultimo, I find an article by "Clericus," which has some gaps down, and, with your permission, I will put up one or two. "Clericus" seems to have a spite at evangelists; yet, no doubt, if he were closely questioned, he would acknowledge that all evangelists are not like those described in his article; yet he ignores all except the bad. There is a large brown bird, indigenous to this country, that will fly over herds of fat cattle, hogs, sheep, etc, and ignore them all, but at the first sight of a putrid, malodorous carcass, it will pounce down and gorge itself. See?

I am free to admit that some so-called evangelists are actuated by sinister motives. They are mercenary, they are sensational, they use slang, and they are a disgrace to the ministry. Is this conclusive evidence that there are no true evangelists who are called of God, and who are making full proof of their ministry? If so, I can prove by the same logic that there are no worthy pastors. I have known pastors who did not pay their debts, and who preached as though they were about half in earnest; and I have heard others acknowledge, when questioned on the Conference floor, that not a soul was led to Christ by them in a year. Pastors deserving the name are soul-winners, and some evangelists, no doubt, lead more souls to Christ in a year than "Clericus" ever did in all his life. "Clericus" makes light of the claim that God calls a man to the ministry, and afterwards to the evangelistic work. Will he deny that men are called to the ministry, and afterwards to the foreign missionary work? I have always thought that a pastor free from prejudice would try to get the best possible help, whether in the pastorate or the evangelistic field. I prefer a pastor, but there are pastors and evangelists, not a few, whom I would not invite to help me in a meeting.

One would infer from "Clericus" that all pastors are good help, and all evangelists unfit for help. One would infer from "Clericus" that all men whom God calls to the ministry have the baptism of power A Hard shell would claim as much. The power is acquired conditionally. The price must be paid. It follows deep humiliation, fasting, and earnest prayer to God. Waiving scriptural proof, which is superabundant I give two personal incidents: Bishop Geo. F Pierce said in a talk to a class for ordination, long years ago, that he was pastor in a certain town for three years, with no visible results. His congregations were large and attentive, yet there were no broken hearts; none were crying to God. He was lacking in power. He was returned the fourth year, and the thought of serving the same people another year with no apparent success was more than he could bear. He shut himself up with God, and in deep agony prayed the Lord to "give him power, and to give him souls, or let him die." The power was forthcoming, and a great revival followed.

I find, in substance, the following in "Remarkable Answers to Prayer:" Stone Ridge, N Y., was regarded as a difficult field, a hard place; no revival there for years. Mrs. Van Cott went there in February, 1868, and predicted glorious results; two hundred souls. The people were shocked at the prediction. She labored about a week with no results. Her strength was failing. One morning she said to the lady with whom she was staying: 'I am going into the parlor to settle this matter with the dear Master. Do not allow anyone to come near me. Do not call me to dinner. I shall, in the name of God, this day, have victory or death." The weather was cold. She wrapped a shawl around her and bowed before God She prayed and cried to God, 'O God, if thou answer me not, then on this spot I die" Assurance came, and two hundred and thirty-five souls were saved.

SHINING.

How many followers of Christ start out in the Christian warfare with a heart full of love and zeal for him to whom they have given their lives; become discouraged because their lot has been cast in an obscure part of our Lord's vineyard. Jesus has bidden them keep their armor bright and shining by an unwavering faithfulness to their trust. Is the violet wasting its sweetness because it blooms in some lonely vale? A weary traveler may pass that way and be cheered by its fragrance and beauty. Then call it not wasted; it is filling the place assigned it. Some of us may learn a lesson from the violet in being willing to shine wherever we are placed, though it may be in the most humble sphere of life.

"Jesus bids us shine,
You in your little corner,
I in mine."

No spot on this earth can be entirely a desert where shines the light of God's love. Let this thought go with us through our daily round of duties, and when life seems dark, and the clouds are heavy and lowering overhead, we should remember that the light that shines brightest at home shines farthest away. So may we go on our way shining brightly for God, not for this world; then our life's work will not be wasted If we faithfully perform the part assigned us, our lives, though they may seem useless to us, will shine brighter in that day when all deeds are brought to the light.

Missionary workers are not exempt from a feeling of preference for letters to themselves over a general letter or circular intended for any who may chance to read it. Hence, dear sisters of Winona district, the tidings of your own Bible woman, Dolores Rios, in the letter to you through your district secretary, will be pleasant reading.

Miss Holding's serious and protracted illness, added to the epidemic of small-pox, might prove obstacles to deter hearts less brave. Still, with devotion and courage born of consecration to her Lord, your Bible woman has worked, going tirelessly to teach to others the way of life. Sisters, keep in touch with your Bible woman, and ever, by your prayers, your sympathy and care for her temporal wants, assure her that you appreciate the work she is doing among those darkened souls for you.

Mrs. Pineheart's letter to our Conference secretary brings to each one a message, encouraging notes of our ongoing missionaries (specific mention of each impossible for lack of space just now); all with joyful hearts entering service in foreign fields.

Of Miss Carson she says: 'She is a wonderfully brave woman, and has done a good work in Santiago.

"News from Korea favorable, and all our work among the Indians satisfactory."

One point urged, which I should would stress: 'The Twentieth Century Fund should have our earnest best work, that when all the organizations of our church are pushing forward this movement with great zeal, we can not afford to be less zealous. It is true our appropriations of nearly one hundred thousand dollars to sustain the work we have projected demand our most prayerful effort, yet the $75 000 for our educational advancement also demand our best efforts. These schools in Brazil, Mexico and China are in urgent need, and, when built, will increase our influence in those fields many-fold. The gold and silver are the Lord's, and the command to use it in his name has been ringing in our ears for many years, and the delay has already cost the souls of many in heathen lands and jeopardized our own. Let not the opening of any find any of us hesitating as to how much we shall do to discipline the nations"

When all the Christian world is buoyant with the hope of greeting the twentieth century with a thankoffering to our Lord, let not a laggard be found in our midst, but let the offerings of our W F M Society be worthy of the cause to which they are dedicated.

A letter from our own Miss Blackburn comes to us from Mexico. This letter sets me thinking along the line that my mind has so often pursued. Do we, as Christians, appreciate the fact that we are permitted to do our missionary work by proxy? In other words, Are we really grateful that God accepts our substitutes others who are willing to "go teach all nations," leaving us to our homes and families? But the command to all is "go," so that this substitution is ours only upon the condition that we "send."

Sisters, this is a momentous thought. May God help us, in the intensity of our gratitude, to lay at his feet the silver and the gold needed in gaining the world for Christ!

Now, can you not see the place face of Miss Blackburn as she begins and then, in her earnest voice and manner, do you not realize, as she proceeds, how her very soul is in this matter? 'Will not some one (or some auxiliary) give a scholarship to a Mexican girl wishing to fit herself to teach in some of the mission schools? I have a girl in my school who is anxious to do so. She has been converted since she has been in my school. I think she is in every way a worthy girl, and one whom we can expect to help us in the work. She has taken music for years, but I wish her to take a special course in methods of teaching which can not be furnished here. I am anxious to send her to Miss Roberts, at Salillo, who has a Normal Department in her school; but we have not the means. A scholarship, you know, costs $60"

Who will accept this dear girl as a substitute? She is ready, willing; a child of God, made such by believing in Christ. Entering this open door may mean the beginning of a long list of souls rescued from sin and the delusions of Romanism.

MRS J. F. E,

The Christian Life.

Admiration can never serve in the place of love. To offer God our regard, when he asks our love, is like giving a stone to him who asks bread. One who does not want our love may yet accept our admiration with thanks, but a father's heart can not be gratified by admiration when it is satisfied by love. It is little to the point that we admire Christ more since we began to study his life; do we love him more?—Sunday Times.

From the Work.

Rev. W. M. Williams, P. C.: "We closed our meeting here (Gallman) Friday night. God blessed the efforts of his people, and made us rejoice. Bro. T. A. Powell, of Crystal Springs, did most of the preaching. Everyone that heard him was more than pleased. My people have been greatly edified by his preaching. I think God that Bro. Powell has been with us, and that the Lord has blessed his ministry in the dedication of my people and the salvation of so many sinners. Bro. J. W. Chambers and Bro. R. Selby preached two sermons each, to the delight of all. The preaching was all good. God blessed every service. We had a gracious revival, with twenty-two accessions on profession of faith, with more to join. This closes our round of protracted meetings on this charge. We have had four meetings, which resulted in fifty-four accessions, two of which were by certificate. The church greatly revived, and many sinners converted to God. We praise God for what he has done for us, and take courage to do more in his name."

Rev. J. W. Campbell, Americus, Miss., Sept. 14, 1899: "We have just closed a series of meetings within the bounds of the Americus charge. The Holy Spirit was with us in convicting and converting power, and, praise the Lord! a goodly harvest was the result of our labors. Rev. L. R. Roberts and Rev. M. J. Marble assisted in the meetings. We certainly enjoyed the great revival the Lord gave us. Old time religion took possession of the church, conviction rested on the sinner, strong men wept like children, and with the sweet songs of Zion there was mingled shouts of victory and hallelujahs to the glory of God. Quite a number were reclaimed, goodly number gloriously saved, and twenty added to the church. Praise God for such a victory for Christ. We begin another meeting in a few days, and then our annual camp meeting at Salem begins Oct. 4. Pray for us, brother, that God may bless our labors yet more abundantly, and that many sinners may be made to rejoice in the love of a new life in Christ."

Rev. C. C. Griffin, P. C., Hiram, Miss., Sept. 17, 1899: "We are moving along nicely with our work on the Wilkinson circuit. We commenced our meeting at St. Carmel, Aug. 27, and continued for five days. We had just ceiled the church anew, and made some other improvements which were greatly needed. The people honored the Lord with their substance, and then the Lord honored them with his Holy Spirit's power. Rev. T. H. Rawls, of the Tyro town circuit, did the preaching, which was done to the edifying and uplifting of all that heard him. Bro. Rawls is good help in a revival. He has a way to get at everyone. He is a good preacher. We had Miss Rosa Longoire, of Gloster, with us, who did the playing and led the choir. She is good help in a revival, as all know that have been to the Sam Jones' Camp Meeting. Results: nine accessions, and quite a number of reclamations and consecrations. Organized an Epworth League with twenty-six members. Bro. Rawls takes great interest in Epworth League work. September 1 we went to Macedonia and held a two days' meeting, which we think did a great deal of good. The people were anxious for the meeting to continue, but a Texas boat to go home; so we closed Sunday evening. We have received thirty members on the Wilkinson circuit this year.

Rev. T. S. Randle, Monroe, La., Sept. 6, 1899: "I went to Bro. W. R. Harrell, Bonita charge, on the twenty-sixth of August, and commenced a protracted meeting at Johnson's School-house, on the 27th inst. We continued five days' and a good meeting. The church was greatly revived. There were about ten conversions and eight accessions to the church. From here we went to what is called Bonita Church, and commenced on Saturday night, protracting until the second Sunday at 11 o'clock, when we closed with a fine service. This meeting was one of the best it has ever been my privilege to attend. The good work began with the first, and increased in interest at every service until it reached high-tide. I never witnessed more pungent convictions, and, of course, the conversions were bright and satisfactory. They gave a good testimony. The church was gloriously revived. I don't think there was a member that was not blessed. There were forty conversions and thirty-three accessions to the church, with more to follow. There were thirty persons baptized. Bro. Harvell is in great favor with his people, and is doing a fine work. Will the greater things another year if the Bishop sends him back; the people want him. I have been preaching in revival meetings for nearly a month; most of the time twice a day. This is quite an improvement for me. I hope to take work next year."

NOTES FROM PLEASANT GROVE CIRCUIT.

We have just closed our last protracted meeting on this work. Have had good meetings. The attendance and interest at each meeting increased from beginning to close. While there were conversions and additions, the greater work has been done in advancing practical godliness, purity of life, and home religion. The holy incense of prayer will now rise to God from altars newly erected and altars long neglected in the homes of our people. Owing to unavoidable circumstances, the ministerial help engaged for my meetings could not reach me, save in two instances. At McGee's Chapel we had the able services of Rev. W. W. Adams, of Mississippi Avenue M. E. Church, South, Memphis, Tenn., who won all hearts and accomplished great good among us. At Pleasant Grove, Rev. W. W. McIntosh, president of Grenada College, was with us two days, and made impressions with gospel truth that will live long and tell greatly in the formation of character. We want him more. Bro. A. G. Coleman, L. P., from Arkadelphia circuit was with us at Shiloh, preaching an earnest gospel. Bro. W. H. Eckles, our own local preacher, worked faithfully in prayer, exhortation, and the ministry of the Word. Now we go in for the Twentieth Century Fund, Conference collections, NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE, etc.

HILLSBORO, MISS.

We have buried four infants and one adult this year. We have had twenty-six accessions to the church, and several very bright conversions. We have baptized seven adults and one infant.

We began our "protracted meetings" with New Providence Church the third Sunday in July. (Bros. H. J. Moore and I. J. Jones assisted us.) From there we went to Cantrell. Bro. D. Scarborough assisted us there. Then to the District Conference. A three days' rest, and we began our meeting at Hillsboro. The "beloved" was to assist us, but sickness prevented. However, he sent a substitute in the person of Bro. J. G. Galloway. Bro. W. L. Lilliard also came to our assistance. We continued the meeting eight days, and it was indeed a "revival meeting." From there we went to Bro. H. J. Moore's assistance at Liberty Church, and, oh! the work we found to be at that place. Its meeting over, we came home to rest only one day, then to Good Hope. No one to assist us there but the Lord; but, thank God! he was there in great power. Not only hearts, but pocket-books were converted at that place.

Then to the Lake Camp Meeting. Oh, what a spiritual feast! We would have been very glad to have stayed all the week; but duty before pleasure, so we had to leave Tuesday P. M. to go to Oak Grove and begin a meeting Wednesday. We were assisted there by Bros. I. J. Jones and T. J. Miller. We closed there Sunday night, and over to Walnut Grove we went to assist Bro. Jones. We found Bro. M. L. White was a ready there, and with his gospel sledge hammer was knocking people right and left. There was a mighty shaking of the "dry bones" in that place. We visited the pastor and his family in the "big parsonage." Oh, my! "I and my little family" would be lost in it. Friday P. M. we took our leave of those good people to come back to our own field of labor, reaching the parsonage Sunday P. M.

EDWARDS, MISS.

Our handsome new church was formally opened for the first time to the public on the first Sunday in September. The congregations of the Baptist and Presbyterian Churches worshiped with us, and the audience was a large one.

A very interesting paper was read by Capt. Robert H. Smith, the oldest living member of this church, who enjoys the unique experience of having been for fifty-three years a Sunday-school superintendent. He said that in 1830 the town of Hamburg was laid out on the banks of Big Black, four miles west of this place, but a few years later was moved two miles east to Amsterdam. In 1832 about two-thirds of the population died of cholera. In 1834 he attended a protracted meeting there, conducted by Rev. C. K. Marshall, then a rising young preacher. The first church-building was a log-house named Liberty Church, built on the present site of the cemetery, one mile east of Edwards. In 1848 Capt. Smith organized a Sunday-school in this church, and has continued to be its superintendent to the present time. Besides himself, Mr. W. D. Smith and Mrs. M. T. Osborn and Mrs. M. E. Cuyus are the only surviving members of the old church.

At the close of the war between the States the church was moved to its present site in the town of Edwards.

Among the pastors that have served this church are Revs. Redwine, Hassel, Bailey, Strickland, Wiley, Lambert, Young, Ellis, Godfrey, Nash, Wiggins, Dorn, John Lusk, R. B. Dowcer, C. G. Andrews, W. M. Williams, W. B. Hinds, J. B. Ballard, R. D. Norsworthy, W. C. Black, I. W. Cooper, J. M. Weems, E. H. Montague, J. T. Nicholson, I. L. Peebles, J. P. Drake, J. G. Galloway, and the present incumbent.

In 1898 Rev. J. G. Galloway inaugurated a movement towards building a new church. Mrs. James White and Miss Ella Chichester (now Mrs. Withers, of Pensacola, Fla.) were mainly instrumental in securing the necessary subscriptions. The construction of the building is due to the untiring energy and self-sacrificing zeal of Misses Wilson Price and W. T. Ratliff, Sr., of the Building Committee. Mr. James White raised the funds to purchase the large bell, which the factory claims can be heard within a radius of ten miles.

This handsome, modern church-building, which would be a credit to any place, is completed with the exception of the seating and partition between the auditorium and Sunday-school room, which will be supplied in the near future. Meanwhile the pews of the old church, supplemented by chairs, answer present purposes. In due time the edifice will be dedicated in proper form.

Meanwhile the pastor felt that in no better way could we express our gratitude to the great Head of the church than by having a revival. Accordingly we have just closed a protracted meeting that has lasted ten days, and which, at the earnest desire of the people, would have lasted longer but for the fact that our Baptist brethren had previously announced their protracted meeting to begin on the 3d Sunday.

Both Baptist and Presbyterian congregations united with us in this meeting, and converts were invited to join any church of their choice. The utmost harmony prevailed, Christians have been revived, and many sinners converted. There were several accessions. With the exception of two sermons by the Presbyterian pastor, all the preaching was done by the writer. The popular expression of the good people of Edwards to him has taken shape in the gift of a very handsome gold watch, for which evidence of brotherly affection he will ever be deeply grateful. It is especially gratifying to know that the day has not passed, as some seem to think, when pastors can have revivals in their own churches without having to invoke outside aid, particularly from that class of modern specialists known as evangelists.

Last night, at the Baptist prayer meeting, the attendance was larger than has been for years. A meeting at that church is in progress.

Edwards, Miss., Sept. 19, 1899.

Mother's advice is worth more than the advice of any other woman to the daughter who is perplexed by the problems of physical health and comfort. There's no need therefore to "write to a woman," who is a stranger.

There may, however, be need for a physician's advice to supplement the advice of the mother. In such a case the offer of free consultation by letter, made by Dr. Pierce, opens the way to health, and at the same time avoids the unpleasant questionings, the repulsive examinations and offensive local treatments which less experienced physicians often insist on.

Any sick or ailing woman is invited to write to Dr. Pierce, Buffalo, in the strictest privacy. Each letter is held as a sacred confidence and its answer is sent in a plain envelope, bearing no printing upon it.

Do not be misled by advertisements offering "medical advice," which are published by those who not being physicians are not qualified to give such advice. Any physician or doctor who has a legal and professional right to the title will publicly claim that title. Those who offer "medical advice" and invite you to "write to a woman" do not claim that the woman is a doctor. The "medical advice" of an unprofessional woman is just as dangerous as the "medical advice" of an unprofessional man. In more than thirty years Dr. Pierce and his staff of nearly a score of medical specialists, have successfully treated over half a million women. You can write without fear as without fee to Dr. R. V. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y.

CHILDREN AND THE CHURCH.

While most parents nowadays are interested in the education of their offspring, it is sad to note how few display any great concern for their spiritual training and moral well being. The indifference which exists almost everywhere among professing Christians as regards the duty and importance of bringing up the young "in the nurture and admonition of the Lord," is astounding in the extreme. While the boys and girls are encouraged, and in numerous instances are compelled to attend day-school, regardless of their wishes, no such policy, except in rare instances, seems to be pursued in regard to attendance upon church and Sunday-school.

The average parent, even though a church member, apparently deems it a matter of small moment whether his children remain to preaching after Sunday-school is over; and if the juveniles plead some slight excuse, even though it be one which would not pass muster on week-day, they are allowed to remain away from church. In well-nigh every city and village of our land, shortly before the hour for service arrives on Sunday morning, troops of children of all ages may be seen hurrying home from Sunday-school, or promenading the streets, bent on fun, and sometimes mischief. Thousands of children out of supposedly Christian homes rarely hear a sermon, and never hear the Bible read save by their Sunday-school teachers, or by the pastor in his rounds. That lax and pernicious notion that in religion the young ought to be left free to choose their own course—that in the moral training of youth no sort of compulsion ought to be used—is alarmingly prevalent, even among those who ought to know better, and is causing the ruin of thousands of bright boys and girls who, because of inexperience and ignorance, are incapable of knowing what is best for them.

One of the most astonishing features of the case is that parents allow their children no such liberty in matters of far less importance. Children are not usually asked what special articles of food they shall have, or what kind and cut of cloth ing they desire, but are given what is deemed best for them. So it is in the matter of studies and schooling. But when it comes to church attendance and religious instruction, which are matters of the most transcendent importance in the building up of character and in fixing one's eternal destiny, men prate about the danger and cruelty of coercing the young in the direction of righteousness. How indescribably silly!

Ian Maclaren draws a true, but sad, picture of a present condition when he says: "Once all the children were expected to be in their pews with their parents every Sunday. Nowadays even a ten-year-old child is allowed to have its likes and dislikes about the preacher, and express his opinion as to whether he will, or will not, attend church." Such a tendency, if allowed to go unchecked, is sure to result disastrously, both to the church and to society. The young are far more likely to form a distaste for religion, and become alienated from the church by being permitted to do as they please, than by being required to attend church and Sabbath-school, and keep the Sabbath day holy. Coercion in the endeavor to look after the spiritual welfare of the young need not, and should not, assume the form of harshness. By all means, however, there ought to be firmness and unwavering fidelity in requiring what is believed to be for the good of the child. Parental indulgence not seldom means parental folly.

To state the case plainly, it is downright indifference to the claims and benefits of religion, rather than the fear of prejudicing the young against it, that causes so many parents to be lax with their children in regard to their religious training. While some of the old-time fathers and mothers, perhaps, erred in being too strict with their offspring, the danger now is from the lack of restraint and discipline rather than from too much of it.

The Word of God gives no uncertain teaching anent this vital question, and leaves parents no alternative as regards the duty of guiding the young in right paths. "Train up the child in the way he should go," declares the writer of Proverbs, "and when he is old he will not depart from it" The children of Israel were commanded to teach the words of the Lord diligently unto their children, the injunction being, "And thou shalt talk of them when thou sittest in thine house, and when thou walkest by the way, and when thou liest down, and when thou riseth up." The New Testament injunction upon this point is too familiar to need repeating.

There still lingers among us not a little skepticism regarding the adaptability of the gospel to children, and this accounts, in some measure, for the neglect, occasionably noticeable, of efforts to bring them to Christ. Some have the idea that a child is not capable of understanding what it means to believe on Christ and serve him. They fancy that conversion, church membership and the service of God are only for men and women, and the older boys and girls. Consequently, the young, no matter how deeply impressed, are sometimes told that they must wait till they reach a certain age before they can be converted and taken into the church. Yet, of all persons in the world, Jesus declares the children to be the fittest for the kingdom of heaven.

There is the most convincing evidence that those who are converted early in life, as a rule, make true and faithful Christians. Adam Clarke, the famous scholar and commentator, was converted when only four years of age; Jonathan Edwards experienced a change of heart at seven; Isaac Watts, the great hymn writer, was converted at the age of nine. Scores of like instances might be given, but these will suffice. Sometimes it is said in a disparaging way of a protracted meeting, that it resulted in the conversion of only a few children, and yet one such child convert may, after a while, become more eminent and useful in God's kingdom than scores of adults who were swept into the church during some loudly-heralded revival. The church that best takes care of the children is the one that is destined to live and flourish.

There is nothing the matter with our Methodist creed regarding the religious training of the young, but in practice we are woefully deficient. How can parents expect their children to grow up in the love of God and in devotion to the church when they themselves are seldom seen in the house of God, when the voice of prayer is not heard in the home, when the Bible is left unopened and unread? How can any professedly Christian father or mother have a clear conscience if, on Sunday morning, while he or she is in the house of God, the children are either roaming the streets or idling at home? We can not conceive of a place on earth where there are more hallowed influences, or where both young and old can receive more gracious benefits, than the house of God affords during the hour of worship.

On the tenth Bishop Candler preached at Mulberry Street Church, Macon, Ga., and took a collection for the Twentieth Century Education Fund. Something over $5,000 was raised, $1 000 being contributed by one person. On the seventeenth Rev. Walker Lewis, pastor of First Church, Atlanta, took a collection in his church for this cause, and raised $5 000 and it is said that there is a good deal more to follow. So says the Wesleyan Advocate.

LITERARY NOTES.

BY W F B.

With the Fall Fiction Number of The Saturday Evening Post, of Philadelphia, that journal will be enlarged from a sixteen to a twenty-four page weekly magazine, with a double number every fourth week. In the Fall Fiction Number begins Cyrus Townsend Brady's strong serial, 'For the Freedom of the Sea," nearly one-third of the story being told in the first installment. The new form of the Post will give space, each week, for a greater number of short stories, for a page of humor and a department of amateur sport.

In the Woman's Home Companion, for October, two contributions that should attract the attention of mothers particularly are "The Boarding-school Girl" and Charlotte W. Eastman's tender tribute to the name "Mamma." Other helpful articles are: "Common Sense in Home-Furnishings," "Cooking for Invalids," "The Woman of Thirty," "Familiar Talks With Women."

CHURCH DEDICATION.

Sunday, Sept. 3, was a red-letter day for the Glen Martin Church. It was the day set apart to dedicate the church, which was done, after a very able sermon by Rev. J. T. Sawyer, D D, presiding elder of the Shreveport district, M. E Church, South. At the close of the sermon a collection amounting to $103 was raised to pay off all indebtedness, after which the church was set apart to the service of God.

The congregation then repaired to the beautiful lawn of Bro. W. B. Clark, where a royal feast had been prepared under an arbor built for the occasion The dinner was all that could be asked for, as could be attested to by all who had the pleasure of participating in the same. The gathering was pleasant, social, and to many it was a religious treat. The church has been built through the earnest endeavors of a few who desired to have a place of worship on that side of the river.

CENTENARY COLLEGE.

The third week of this most excellent institution is drawing to a close. We have had a chance to get an insight into its condition, and glad to note its marked advancement and flattering prospects. Indeed, Centenary has entered upon a new era of prosperity, and we hope and believe it is but the beginning of the best period in her long and noteworthy career. Already, in spite of the yellow-fever scare, we have enrolled about 120 scholars, and each day brings its increase. We soon expect to reach the 200-mark, and should go much beyond. Why not make this the best institution of the kind in the State? It certainly deserves the heartiest support of Church and State, and surely no Methodist can do better. Our curriculum is as high as any school of like grade. The work done is as complete and thorough. The opportunities for true education is as good. One in position to know—a graduate of Emory College (Oxford, Ga.)] and post graduate of Cornell University—told me that Centenary afforded as good advantages as the renowned college of Georgia Methodism—Emory. A teacher from Vanderbilt stated that Centenary's students stood second to none in Vanderbilt University. The moral and religious influence thrown about a boy here can not be surpassed. Every teacher in the college is a converted man and an enthusiastic Christian worker. The Young Men's Christian Association, holding its semi-weekly prayer and praise services; the regular Sabbath services, the Sunday-schools, Epworth League and prayer meetings afford every opportunity for religious development. The people here are refined, hospitable Christians. The place is as healthy as the State affords. The cheapness and excellency of the mess-hall department is a marvel to all. Then why send to any other than our own? How a Methodist, with the consciousness of salvation in his soul and a realization of his church vows upon him, can patronize any other institution afford ing no better opportunities (and too frequently, worse than none), is beyond our conception.

Centenary was never on a better footing. Her prospects were never brighter; yet, if the Methodist ministry and the Methodist people should abate in their interest, it would prove fatal; and if each pastor would press the matter, and send at least one boy to Centenary, and if the people would bestir themselves in her behalf, there is no reason why we should not soon reach three hundred, and upwards. Rally to Centenary, and she will prove herself worthy every effort put forth.

I wish every parent could have heard the president's opening address. It was characteristic of the man and the institution he has charge of, and as long as he and the faculty he has with him remain in charge, the noblest and best in a boy will be brought out and developed.

Send your boys to Centenary, and all will be done that is possible to return him to you an educated, cultured Christian boy, fitted for the highest callings of life.

ROBT. W. VAUGHAN.

IN MEMORY OF REV. J. W. LAMBUTH, D. D.

At the suggestion of Rev. T. B. Holloman, presiding elder of Jackson district, a move "is on foot" for erecting at the Pearl River Church, five miles east of Madison Station, a monument to the memory of Rev. J. W. Lambuth, whose body lies buried not far from the sea at Kobe, Japan. He was raised in that Pearl River community; and Mrs. J. W. Lambuth, now teaching at Kobe during the days of her widowhood, was once a forceful teacher in this same Pearl River neighborhood. The erection of the shaft would be a lesson to the youth. A committee appointed by the Quarterly Conference of Madison circuit is proceeding this work, viz: Ed Melton, Fletcher Ray, Mrs. J. D. Dickinson, Mrs. G. W. Galloway, H. C. Montgomery, and Mrs. J. W. Britton.

Anyone desiring to contribute may address the undersigned, or any member of the committee, or "Mrs. J. F. Norman, Madison, Miss." Mrs. Norman, who is the sister of J. W. Lambuth, has been chosen as treasurer for the committee.

H G. HAWKINS,
P. C. Madison Circuit.

CENTENARY COLLEGE.

We have registered to date nearly as many students as we had the last ten months. Ten have registered this week, and we expect 30 or 40 more in the next ten days.

The town and parish are healthy. Each member of the faculty is at his post of duty. The improvements made during the Summer are a delight and a surprise to Centenary's friends. I. W. COOPER.

Jackson, La., Sept. 23, 1899.

SOMETHING NEW.

Here is a telegram to the daily press from Kansas City, Mo.: "J. L. Wood Merrill, a prominent business man of this city, has bought a church and parsonage, and will engage a minister and run the house of worship on a new plan. He said to-day: 'I am going to have the brightest preacher I can find, and have him preach broad-minded religion. I want a church where everybody can come and hear good modern, common-sense religion preached without fear of being offended. There will be no collections, as I will pay all expenses.'" Well, if that don't bring a crowd, what will? No collections; a gospel free as the air they breathe. Surely that is a new departure—one man supporting a church instead of all the membership sharing in the duty and privilege. Wonder what next.—Central Methodist.

RESOLUTIONS ON POLYGAMY.

At the recent session of the Western Virginia Conference the following resolutions were adopted by a unanimous vote:

"Whereas, The State of Utah was admitted into the union of States upon the express pledge and constitutional provision that polygamy should be at once and forever abandoned in its territory; And, whereas, At the late election for Congress in that State an avowed polygamist was elected to a seat in that body; therefore, be it

"Resolved, By the Western Virginia Conference, M. E. Church, South, in Conference assembled, that we regard the election of a polygamist to Congress by the State of Utah as an indignity offered to every American citizen, and an insult to the sanctity and purity of the Christian home. We protest against the election of Mr. Roberts to the House of Representatives, and demand that one whose life is so repugnant to Christian principles shall be expelled from that great law-making body.

"Resolved, That a certified copy of this paper be sent to each member of the United States Congress who represents territory within the bounds of this Conference."—Exchange.

MORMONISM.

We are apt to give too little attention to the Utah problems, because we are largely inclined to consider it as a purely political affair. In fact, it is a most serious question that confronts us as a nation. We can not throw the burden on Utah or endeavor to escape any responsibility; this blot on our Christianity must be wiped out. From the Lakes to the Gulf, from the Rocky Mountains to the Sierra Nevadas, are found over a quarter of a million Mormons. In addition to this vast number, over one thousand "elders" are actively proselyting in other parts of the Union, many of their converts being secretly made, consequently the exact number of "believers" is unknown. Some of the doctrines taught by these men are vile beyond words; the practices resulting from such doctrines are disgusting in the extreme. The morality is low; nothing else could be expected. Their system is entirely foreign to Americanism, as well as against all the laws of God.—Presbyterian.

A MARKED CONTRAST.

There is a marked contrast between the Protestant and Roman Catholic missions in India and China. The Protestants have been on the ground for one hundred years with 9,000 missionaries, yet claim 4,000,000 converts, while the Romanists have been at work in these countries for three hundred years, with 70,000 missionaries, yet claim only 3 500,000 converts. The purer form of Christianity is what the heathen world most needs, and it can best conquer the human heart and reform the human life.—Presbyterian.

The Library Journal, for August, points out that, "since Jan. 1 Mr. Andrew Carnegie has given the sum of $2 450 000 for the establishment or development of American libraries" in all parts of the country, leaving out of the reckoning all sums below $50 000.—Selected.

A STRINGENT FOOD LAW.

PROHIBITS THE USE OF ARSENIC OR ALUM IN ALL ARTICLES OF DIET.

The law enacted by the Missouri Legislature, a copy of which was recently published in our columns, and which prohibits the manufacture or sale of any article intended for food or to be used in the preparation of food, which contains alum, arsenic, ammonia, etc., places that State in the lead in the matter of sanitary legislation.

Laws restricting the use of alum in bread have been in force in England, Germany and France for many years. In this country, in Minnesota, Wisconsin, Michigan, Ohio, Kentucky and several other States, direct legislation in reference to the sale of alum baking powders has also been effected. In several of these States their sale is prohibited unless they are branded to show that they contain alum, and in the District of Columbia, under the laws of Congress, the sale of bread containing alum has been made illegal.

Following are the names of some of the brands of baking powder sold in this vicinity which are shown by recent analysis to contain alum. Housekeepers and grocers should cut the list out and keep it for reference:

BAKING POWDERS CONTAINING ALUM:

GOOD LUCK.....Contains Alum
Manf. by Southern Mfg. Co., Richmond.
BON BON } MOTEL. } .....Contains Alum
Manf. by Grant Chemical Co., Chicago.
BON TON.....Contains Alum
Manf. by Gulf Mfg. Co., New Orleans.
BON TON .....Contains Alum
Manf. by J. C. Grant Mfg. Co., St. Louis.
.....Contains Alum
Manf. by Morehouse Mfg. Co., Savannah.
EGG .....Contains Alum
Manf by Egg Baking Powder Co., New York.

In addition to these, many grocers sell what they call their own private or special brands. These powders are put up for the grocer, and his name put upon the labels by manufacturers of alum powders. The manufacturers, it is said, find their efforts to market their goods in this way greatly aided by the ambition of the grocer to sell a powder with his own name upon the label, especially as he can make an abnormal profit upon it. Many grocers, doubtless, do not know that the powders they are thus pushing are alum powders, the sale of which would be a misdemeanor under the law referred to.

It is quite impossible to give the names of all the alum baking powders. They are constantly appearing in all sorts of disguises, under different names and at all kinds of prices, even as low as five and ten cents a pound. They can be avoided, however, by the housekeeper who will bear in mind that all baking powders sold at twenty-five cents or less per pound are liable to contain alum, as pure cream of tartar powders can not be produced at anything like this price.

Sunday-School Year-Book of the Mississippi Conference.

The second Sunday-school Year Book of the Mississippi Conference was recently published. Over fourteen hundred copies of the book were printed, and one has been mailed to every presiding elder, pastor and Sunday-school superintendent in the Conference whose name and address could be secured. If anyone has failed to get the copy sent him, another will be furnished on notification to that effect. The Sunday-school Board still has a good number of the books on hand, and will send a copy to every Sunday-school teacher in the Conference who will send us his name and address, inclosing a two cent stamp. Pastors and superintendents might forward lists of their teachers, with the necessary postage.

The "Second Year-Book" of the Mississippi Conference Sunday-school Board has been from the press some weeks. It is a neat pamphlet of seventy-six pages, edited by Rev. D. Scarborough, one of the younger members of the Mississippi Conference. It contains useful information as to Sunday-school work in general, and especially as to the work in the Mississippi Conference. It can be secured for teachers by sending stamps to pay for postage—two cents per copy. Address "Rev. D Scarborough, Forest, Miss."

In the Year-Book report upon Children's Day collection the Hattiesburg school leads with $25.25, Oak Ridge's $20 57 being second

The Mississippi Conference Sunday-school Board has this year been doing a good work in assisting schools to obtain libraries and Sunday-school Magazines by paying half where the school would raise the other half. But Rev. W. T. Griffin, chairman of the Board, writes, "We will be compelled to close our proposition until the Board receives more of the Children's Day money." Pastors and school officers have no right to hold this fund until the Annual Conference, but should forward it at once, and let it do the work for which, in the hands of the Sunday-school Board, it is intended. The children made this money, and the Discipline directs that it be forwarded, and not kept in any man's pocket or safe.

The Madisonville Leaguers have paid the amount that was asked from them for the Jackson district parsonage.

Among the workers of Mississippi is Miss Mabel Coker, of Mannsdale. She is secretary of the Madison County Sunday-school Convention, and chief among the young spirits of the old Livingston Church, which is now a part of the Flora charge. Miss Coker's home is near Annandale, or the Helen Johnson Mansion, which, in ante-bellum days, was probably the finest country residence in the State—the scene of some tragic incidents that have been made the subject of romance.

For the next two months this column will be devoted more especially to the literary department. Let workers write to the associate editor at Madison what is going on among them in this branch of the League.

We have received an invitation to a "Measuring Party," given under the auspices of the Epworth League and Home Mission Society of Canton. The associate editor for Mississippi will appreciate it if all the Leagues of Mississippi will send to him occasionally, at Madison, copies of programs, notices of special services, or anything of the kind. It helps him to understand what is going on, giving information that the editor of such a column as this should have.

SANITARIUM NEEDED.

The city of Meridian, Miss., in fact the State, needs a sanitarium. I have a large college plant located on a beautiful, healthy ten-acre site, amid the pine forest, with purest of water. I wish a capable physician to join me in using this plant as a sanitarium. The buildings are large and well constructed for the purpose. Hundreds of patients in this State need convenient accommodations for special treatment.

Then, I have discovered a remedy, by accident from a human standpoint, that will cure any drug disease in 3 days without suffering or craving for the drug. It is marvelous. No harm in it all.

The best accommodations and comfort will be furnished all patients who desire medical attention from any of our city physicians. Being retired, quiet, elevated, with the purest of water, cool breezes, invalids, persons overworked, or any other class needing rest and recuperation, may do as well here as any where else in the States.

Drug habitues will be treated privately and cured in three or four days without pain, suffering for want of the drug, or in any other way. The remedy is absolutely harmless, causing no ill effects whatever, and producing a thorough cure, which is guaranteed. Apply for particulars at once.

The Mutual Life Insurance Com'y
OF NEW YORK.
RICHARD A. McCURDY, PRESIDENT.

Is the oldest active Life Insurance Company in the United States, and the largest and strongest Company in the world. It is purely mutual—belonging exclusively to its policy holders, for whom it has accomplished results in excess of those of any similar institution.

SINCE ITS ORGANIZATION IN 1843

It has paid to living members..... $383,157,627 64
To beneficiaries of deceased members..... 201,591,282 42
Total paid to members, both living and dead..... $584,748,910 06
And now holds for the security of its present members..... 277,517,325 36
Paid to and invested for its members..... $862,266,235 42

THE POLICIES OF THIS COMPANY

Are remarkable for their liberality, large guaranteed values and entire absence of all technical terms or phrases. Being practically incontestable, they provide a legacy and not a lawsuit.

Persons desiring policies in this Company can secure the same from the Company's nearest agent, or if no agent is convenient, by writing to the General Agent, giving date of birth and stating what amount of insurance is desired.

PIANOS AND ORGANS BY MAIL.

The immense advantage in purchasing from us by the mail system is the guaranteed selection on the part of the oldest and largest music house South.

Selling over one thousand pianos and organs each year, and buying goods in enormous quantities, enables us to give those dealing direct the benefit of the closest possible prices on high-grade pianos and organs.

Dealing direct with the customer by mail enables us to eliminate all such items as agents' commission, hotel bills, etc., and to give our customers prices that many factories do not equal to their wholesale trade. Each piano or organ selected by us goes from our warerooms with a guarantee that if it is not as recommended, it can be returned at our expense. Any customer in the South can obtain our lowest net price by mail, and in case of purchase, the selection and instrument will be absolutely guaranteed, and from five to seven years' trial allowed to test same.

Easy payments will be accepted, and old pianos or organs will be received as part payments.

Having been in business in New Orleans half a century buying and selling all grades of pianos we are in a position to judge of the merits and demerits of the different makes, and to know their adaptability to our trying climate. We give our customers the advantage of that experience.

SPECIAL OFFER ON COMBINATION BIBLES.

From now until the fifteenth of October we will sell our Combination Bible to any subscriber who will pay his subscription one full year in advance, viz, to September, 1900, at the very low price of $1.65. To those who will pay their subscription two full years in advance, viz, to September, 1901, we will sell it for $1 20. Read description and testimonials in this issue. After Oct. 15 the prices given in our regular offer will prevail.

N. B.—No commissions can be given under this offer.

Oliver Wendell Holmes once said, during the mighty struggle between the States, that the constant cry of the masses was for bread and newspapers. Now, since more than a third of a century has changed the political and financial issues, the great cry in the Southern States is for a pleasant and reliable Chill Tonic. Dicks' Chillifuge complies with this demand. It is as pleasant as orange syrup, and as prompt to cure malaria as the bitter Sulphate of Quinine. If you have a case of Chills or Fever which you can not break, try Chillifuge, and enjoy life once more.

Read What Is Said of the "Combination" Bible

"I give your 'Combination' Bible my commendation and endorsement without one qualifying word."—Bishop Scarborough, Trenton, N. J.

"It should be in the hands of every clergyman."—Bishop Leonard, Cleveland, O.

"One of the most valuable forms in which the Holy Bible has been presented to the public."—Bishop Clark, Providence, R. I.

"Unique in plan, extraordinary in scope and exceptional in value. The arrangement of the two editions is most helpful."—Bishop Huntington, Syracuse, New York.

"I consider it as a great gift to every Bible student, and I hope that it will find a place in the hands of every Sunday-school teacher in our country."—Bishop Dudley, Louisville, Ky.

"It is a most valuable contribution to biblical typography and literature, a mine of information."—Bishop Atwill, Kansas City, Mo.

"I have carefully examined it from end to end and find it complete in all things. I give it my unqualified and emphatic endorsement."—Bishop Maillalieu, Buffalo, N. Y.

"There are great advantages in it for students, and especially for teachers. I give the plan of combining the two versions my most cordial approval."—Bishop Merrill, Chicago, Ill.

"The Combination and self-pronouncing features make it the most practically useful Bible that has ever been published."—Bishop Spalding, Denver, Colo.

"The handsomest and most serviceable edition of the Holy Scriptures that has come under my notice. The Bible Helps contain all that is essential."—Bishop Ninde, Detroit, Mich.

"The best, for use of teachers and students, ever published."—Bishop Wilson, Baltimore, Md.

"It deserves a place in every home."—Bishop Vincent, Topeka, Kan.

"It is one of the most perfect editions of the Bible I have ever seen."—Bishop Whipple, Faribault, Minn.

DR. KILMER'S SWAMP-ROOT

Is the Great Remedy for Kidney, Liver and Bladder Troubles.

But if You Have Kidney or Bladder Trouble, It Will Be Found Just the Remedy You Need.

Kidney trouble preys upon the mind, discourages and lessens ambition; beauty, vigor and cheerfulness soon disappear when the kidneys are out of order or diseased.

Kidney trouble has become so prevalent that it is not uncommon for a child to be born afflicted with weak kidneys. If the child urinates too often, if the urine scalds the flesh, or if, when the child reaches an age when it should be able to control the passage, and it is yet afflicted with bed-wetting, depend upon it, the cause of the difficulty is kidney trouble, and the first step should be towards the treatment of these important organs. This unpleasant trouble is due to a diseased condition of the kidneys and bladder and not to a habit as most people suppose.

So we find that women as well as men are made miserable with kidney and bladder trouble and both need the same remedy. The mild and the immediate effect of Swamp-Root is soon realized. It is sold by druggists, in fifty-cent and one dollar sizes. You may have a sample bottle by mail free, also pamphlet telling all about it, including many of the thousands of testimonial letters received from sufferers cured. In writing Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., mention NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

SPECIAL OFFER ON THE TEN BOOKS.

From now until the fifteenth of October we will sell "The Ten Books" to those who will pay their subscription a full year in advance, viz, to September, 1900 at the low price of $1.75. Read description in another column.

SPANISH-AMERICAN WAR PANORAMA

is one of the war books which is likely to be in continuous demand. It is a panoramic record of the triumph of Yankee Doodle. The eagle flaps his wings on every page, and "Old Glory" waves around and above every scene. Prominent officers connected with the war are here portrayed, as well as many of the "men behind the guns." Military life is pictured to the eye, from recruiting to guard mount and skirmish line. Nor is the ludicrous omitted. The company cook receives the attention due to his importance; the mess is shown; cavalry scenes are given; the hospital arrangements are depicted; the heroines of the Red Cross service are displayed; street scenes in Havana, Santiago and elsewhere are unrolled, the new citizens or subjects (which are they?) of Uncle Sam appear and disappear as the leaves are turned.

In a word, the gazer visits the new localities and sees the tumultuous new life, without the risk or expense of a sea voyage.

The Album is 5½x8 inches, weighs 12 ounces, printed on finest coated paper.

Sent FREE to any address in the United States, Canada, or Mexico, for 12 cents in stamps or coin, to cover postage and packing. Copy may be seen at any ticket office of the Big Four Route.

Order at once, as the edition is limited.

Address WARREN J. LYNCH, General Passenger and Ticket Agent "Big Four Route," Cincinnati, Ohio.

Mark envelope "War Album."

NO PLACE FOR BOYS.

What can he do and where can he play,
In this world of ours to be glad and gay?
Do you tell me he must not stand there;
The crossing-sweeper that cozy chair
Were not left at leisure to be given and adopted?
A boy has no business to ever be tired
The beautiful grass and flowers that bloom
On the floor of the dainty bed and delicate room
Are not made to walk on—at least, not by boys.
The door is no place, anyway, for their noise.
Yet boys must walk somewhere, and what if their feet,
Sent out of our houses, sent into the street,
Should step round the corner and pause at the door
Where other boys' feet have paused often before;
Should pass through the gateway of glittering light,
Where jokes that are merry and songs that are bright
Ring out a warm welcome with flattering voice,
And tempting say: "Here's a place for the boys!"
Ah, what if they should! What if your boy or mine
Should cross o'er the threshold which marks out the line
'Twixt virtue and vice, 'twixt pureness and sin,
And leave all his innocent boyhood within!
Oh, what if they were! Just as you and I,
While the days, and the months, and the years hurry by,
Are too busy with cares and with life's fleeting joys
To make room out in the home a place for the boys!
To make room out in the home a place for the boys!
There's a place for the boys. They will find it somewhere.
And home's own homes are too daintily fair
For the touch of dear fingers, the treat of their feet.
They'll find it, and find it, alas! in the street,
In the glimpses of sin and the glitter of vice;
And with heartaches and longings we pay a dear price.
For the getting of gain that our life-time employs,
If we fail to provide a place for the boys.

COMMON SENSE.

The Chinese have had a manufactory of glass for two thousand years; they have made paper from the bamboo from time immemorial, and they invented printing in the time of Julius Cæsar. The use of gun-powder they possessed beyond all memory, but they employed it only in ornamental fireworks. They have been great observers of the heavens, and proficients in astronomy from time immemorial. They were acquainted with the compass, but only as a matter of curiosity, never applying it to navigation.

A practical man not only sees, but seizes the opportunity. There is a certain getting-on quality difficult to describe, but which is the great winner of the prizes of life. Napoleon could do anything in the art of war with his own hands, even to the making of gunpowder. Paul was all things to all men, that he might save some. The palm is among the hardest and least yielding of all woods; yet, rather than be deprived of the rays of the life-giving sun in the dense forests of South America, it is said to turn into a creeper, and climb the nearest trunk to the light.

A good many people overlay their common-sense ideas with so many words that they never come to the light.

"If I send a man to examine a horse for me, I expect him to give me his points, and how many hairs he has in his tail," said Lincoln, when a pile of papers was handed him containing the report of a congressional committee appointed to examine a new gun, "I should want a new lease of life," said he, "to read all this."

"Science," says Holmes, "is a first-rate piece of furniture for a man's upper chamber, if he has common sense on the ground floor. But if a man hasn't got plenty of good, common sense, the more science he has the worse for his patient," and another author assures us that "a handful of common sense is worth a bushel of mere learning."—Success.

THE SIN OF WORRYING.

This is one of the commonest of sins. It also is one of the most reprehensible. Many to whom gross temptations present no attractions yield to this one almost without a struggle. It is wholly unreasonable and, when allowed to become a habit, it is full of torment. It spoils one's own peace and renders one a source of continual annoyance to others.

Worrying is fretting because matters have gone wrong or are supposed to be destined to go wrong. If the former be true, worrying does no good, even when we are conscious of having been in fault. Go to work bravely and remedy what is amiss, so far as possible, and what can not be remedied bear with Christian patience and courage. If the latter be true, do not assume that the threatening evil must befall, but do your best to prevent or lessen it, and remember that God allows evil as well as good to happen, that seeming evil often results in blessing, and that, should the worst come, probably in time you will find reason to thank God for it.—Congregationalist.

WISE WORDS.

Among the wisest words ever spoken by Mr. Moody were those spoken at his mother's funeral, when he told how this good Christian woman made her boys go to church regularly.

"And it did not turn us against going to church," said Mr. Moody. "It seldom does, any more than sending boys and girls to school turns them against education, or requiring them to practice on the piano turns them against music."

There is a good deal of foolish sentiment on this subject of "turning children against church-going." About the surest way to do that is to turn them over to their own devices on Sunday until they are past the age when habits are easily formed. They will be turned against church-going pretty effectually by that time.

"Train up a child in the way that he should go," is old-fashioned advice; but somehow the moderns have conspicuously failed in their efforts to improve upon it.—Exchange.

THE "SMALL GRACES" OF LIFE.

Young men should not get the idea that to know the "small graces of life" is useless or frivolous. What we call the "social graces" are very valuable to a young man. That is the great trouble with young fellows who are earnest: they are too earnest, and upon all occasions. They can have a high aim in life, a lofty purpose, and yet not close themselves up to all social pleasures or amenities. Girls feel uncomfortable, and pardonably so, when they go to a concert or any other form of entertainment with a young man who constantly makes mistakes in little things. The small rules and laws which must be observed on all social occasions are not to be frowned down; they are important, and a young fellow makes a great mistake when he considers them beneath him or unworthy of his attention.—Ladies' Home Journal.

DO NOT REFUSE THE OFFER

Never should the mother, through that foolish desire to keep her child as long as possible dependent upon her, or that worse pride which would show itself to be self-sufficient, refuse the proffered help of her child. If she is doing something in which, from the nature of things, he can not share, let her be careful to substitute some other loving service while declining the one proffered, remembering that love, turned away, nourishes selfishness, and proffered help refused begets illness. She may have to say, "No, dear, you can not help to dress the baby," but she can add, "You may hand mamma the clothes."—Elizabeth Harrison.

POOR GIRLS.

The poorest girls in the world are those not taught to work. There are thousands of them. Rich parents have petted them, and they have been taught to despise labor and to depend upon others for a living, and are perfectly helpless. The most forlorn women belong to this class. Every daughter should learn to earn her own living, the rich as well as the poor. The wheel of fortune rolls swiftly around; the rich are likely to become poor, and the poor rich. Skill added to labor is no disadvantage to the rich, and is indispensable to the poor. Well-to-do girls should learn to work. No reform is more imperative than this.—London Gentlewomen.

REAL HEROISM.

It is nobler far to do the most commonplace duty in the house, field, or behind the counter, with a single eye to duty—simply because it must be done—nobler far, I say, than to go out of your way to attempt a brilliant deed with a double mind, and saying to yourself not only, "This will be a brilliant deed," but also, "and it will pay me, or raise me, or set me off, into the bargain." Heroism knows no "into the bargain."—Charles Kingsley.

Everyone can do something to add to the social life at the table. If one can not talk, he can listen or ask questions, and draw out others who can talk. Good listeners are as necessary as good talkers. Never argue at the table, but tell pleasant stories, relate or read anecdotes, and look out for the good of all. Sometimes a single anecdote from a paper starts a conversation that lasts during the entire meal time. A family table ought to be bright and cheerful; a sort of domestic altar, before which everyone casts down his or her offering, great or small, of pleasantness and peace; where, for at least a brief space in the day, all annoyances are laid aside, all stormy tempers hushed, all brief disputes healed; everyone being glad and content to sit down at the same board and eat the same bread and salt, making it, whether it were a rich repast or a dinner of herbs, equally a joyful meal. It is unpardonable for anyone to sit glum and silent at the table, taking no part in the conversation, showing no interest in the good cheer, even casting a shadow on the gladness.—Forward.

Keep your sorrows to yourself. They are too sacred to be put on exhibition. The world is very busy with its own affairs, and, instead of sympathizing with you, will simply laugh at you for being weak enough to indulge in moans and outcries. There is dignity in reticence. If you must talk, let it be only to the chosen ones of your heart. Some things ought never to be mentioned to a human soul. Over all family differences and misunderstandings a veil of absolute secrecy should be thrown. The man who opens his lips to speak a word about his wife's shortcomings deserves contempt; and the wife who is so thoughtless as to subtract by her careless speech from her husband's reputation is not to be praised.—Nashville Advocate.

Hygiene.

HOW MUCH TO SLEEP.

Some one says of sleep: "Six hours for a man, seven for a woman and eight for a fool," but there never was a more misleading statement. The amount of sleep one needs depends on the amount of mental work he does while awake. Men whose brains are never busy can get along with five or six hours' sleep a day, even though their hands are employed during the waking hours; but the mental worker must have more, or go crazy. To attempt to imitate Napoleon, who, it is said, could get along with four or five hours' sleep, will drive an ordinary man into an insane asylum before the end of a year. At any rate, those who quote Napoleon so glibly fail to inform us that he died when a little past fifty. A prominent nerve specialist of Philadelphia said, recently: "It is not over-work that kills, but under-sleep."

As soon as the writer says that night is the time which nature utilizes for the growth of plants and animals; children grow more rapidly during the night. In the day time the system is kept busy disposing of the wastes consequent upon activity, but while asleep the system is free to extend its operations beyond the mere replacing of worn-out particles; hence the rapid growth.—Exchange.

CONDUCIVE TO LONGEVITY.

George Humphrey examined nearly 1,000 persons as to the history of their lives, circumstances, habits, environment, etc. Of those persons seventy-four were centenarians. His conclusions in regard to longevity were: "1. That the primary factor in a long life consists in an inherited durability; the vital machinery is wound up to go for a given period, and but for accidents or in spite of them, it will go till the time appointed. 2. That an important part of the primary inheritance is good digestive and nutritive power. 3. That temperance is necessary in use of the nutritive functions both in eating and drinking, and in regard to all kinds of food and drink. 4. That an energetic temperament and active habits conduce to longevity."—New York Advocate.

A mother should not live for her children, but with them. She should keep abreast of the times in reading, and enter into the better brain life of her little ones, leading them up step by step, instead of lagging behind them and considered by them to be more of a servant than companion. Most men who have achieved greatness in the eyes of the world give to their mothers the credit for their start and stimulus.—Selected.

OUR $1 OFFER.

Much has been said about reducing the subscription price of the ADVOCATE. The only way in which a reduction can be brought about is by an increase in the number of subscribers. In order to facilitate this result, we make the following offer: Until further notice we will take new subscriptions at the rate of $1 for eight months. When seven thousand five hundred new names have been sent in at this rate with the cash, we will extend the time four months longer, thus reducing the price to $1 per annum. When the extension is made, old subscribers will get the benefit as well as new ones, provided they first pay up all arrearages. Of course, no commissions can be given under this offer. Address

BARTON—In the death of Mrs. MARY B. BARTON, Wilkinson county has lost one of its oldest citizens, and the Methodist Church one of its most honored members. She was born in Holmes county, Miss., on the first day of March, 1817, and died in Woodville, Miss., July 20, 1899. She lived to see her children's grandchildren. Her father, George Neem, settled in Wilkinson county in 1818.

For two months she was very sick at the residence of her son-in-law, D. L. W. Magruder. Here she was tenderly nursed by her two daughters, Mrs. Mary Walker Magruder and Mrs. Phebe Barton Simrall, while all that medical skill could suggest was done to relieve her suffering.

She was twice married—first at the age of sixteen to Judge Walker, a man honored for his ability and his saintly life. About the year 1836 he died, leaving four sons and a daughter. One of her sons, Judge Douglas Walker, was a young man of unusual intellectual attainments, and was cut off in the midst of a brilliant legal career. In 1849 my aunt was married to Mr. Barton, a gentleman from New York, who lived only about a year afterwards.

In her plantation home, "Bonnaswood," I spent some of the happiest days of childhood and young womanhood in the sweet companionship of my own in dear comrade, Phebe Barton. In this typical Southern mansion the elegancies and refinements of the ante-bellum home were gathered the "county and country" of a county which has always been noted for its culture and refinement. A most cordial and gracious hostess was she, Mary B. Barton. She was a woman of great energy, forcing well to the ways of her household. She was a kind and generous mistress. Her heart was quick to feel the weaker ones of neighbor and friend. She was constantly practicing for the comfort and welfare of those about her. Never was there a mother more entirely devoted to the happiness of her children. Even in these last weary days of suffering her thoughts and plans were all for others. She had to the last the Christian's spirit which loves rather to minister than be ministered unto. Her mind was bright and active, even in dying. She did not lose interest in the life of the world, but kept "in touch" with "the times." Her religious life was beautiful, and her faith was strong to sustain her through the sad similitude of a long life. She born with resignation the loss of property, and passed through the purifying test of many a dry trials, and in the deep waters of affliction was upborne by God's grace. Now son has gone to where "beyond these voices there is rest."

CLARA M. DRAKE.

SMITH—Mrs. N. A. B. SMITH (nee Coy) was born in Union district (county), S. C., May 18, 1833; married to R. B. Smith, Nov. 20, 1855, and moved at once to Marshall county, Miss., where they lived about three years, and then moved to Lafayette county, and settled in the neighborhood of Liberty Church, where they lived continuously more than forty years. She was the mother of six children, two of whom preceded her to the other shore. Of the four who survive her, one is our brother, Rev. J. H. Smith, of the North Mississippi Conference.

Sister Smith joined the Protestant Methodist Church at Liberty with her husband in 1853; then came to the M. E. Church, South, when the union of the two churches took place in Mississippi about 1858, and died Aug. 5 1899. Thus developed and thus ended a beautiful and useful Christian life.

Sister Smith was a woman of more than average intelligence and cultivation. Part of her early married life was spent teaching in the community where she lived so long. Some of her neighbors at the time of her death, who were her pupils, speak of her good influence in the school-room, where she labored faithfully to elevate all who were committed to her care. As a mother, she was devoted and untiring in her efforts to raise her children in the ways of usefulness. When her preacher-boy was about to leave the parental home to become an itinerant preacher, with a Christian mother's love she said: "My son, you may be sure that on each Sabbath day, at the usual hours for preaching, I shall bow at the throne of grace praying for your success." Via telegram during her last illness, she told him that she had faithfully observed the promise, as the weeks had come and gone, through the eighteen years of his itinerating from place to place. She loved the church, and nothing but disability or affection kept her away from public worship. It was one of those tests that her pastor always yielded with profit to himself. Her consecration was an encouragement in the Christian life to all who were about her. With strong faith she was ever ready to quote some passage from the Bible for the comfort of those who were sad or disheartened. Her last illness was long and severe, prostrating once all the vital forces, but during the whole of the time she was patient and resigned. Her last words were, "Jesus is precious to me." Thus she fell asleep in Jesus.

A. W. LANGLEY

PARKER—KIRKLAND, daughter of J. W. and Mary Gill Parker, of Carson, Miss., was born March 24, 1895, and died Sept. 9, 1899, aged four years, five months, and four days.

The impression she left behind was, for the most part, one of sunshine. Even when she was ill, her appointed station. All hearts were drawn to her by an irresistible and mysterious attraction. The seat of immortality is not for the aged alone, and our hearts told us that, ere long, the gentle shepherd would fold her in his loving arms; yet how the fond parents would get or fresh hope when in the first pangs of separation, even in weakness, would fill the house with sweetest music all day long. Months beyond her years, however, there was something which told us she was just lingering on life's borderland, that she was not over too frail for earth's wintry blasts, and that God would gather it while its fragrance was sweetest, and so, when the young life was gone and the snowy hands were folded over the quiet breast, the watchers say, through billowing tears a heavenly smile came to that sweet face, and they knew an balmy-mouthed angels sunbright time. We thank God for lending her to us. May he comfort the stricken parents, and may all of us who loved her so follow on to meet her beyond!

"Borrowing time now,"

MRS. REV. J. H. PARKER.

Greenville, Miss.

CAUSEY—Mrs. [illegible] Causey, daughter of Rev. [illegible] Sherrill, K. County, was born in Petersburg, Pa., on July 31st, 1874, and died in Exeter, Wis., Aug. 27 1899. She was happily married in 8 months, [illegible] to Mr. J. D. Causey, a prominent merchant of Exeter, who, for one short year she was permitted to gladden with the endearments of her presence. But, oh! just when especially she was most needed, God took her to himself.

When about seven years of age Sister Causey was very ill, and joined the Methodist Church at Pine Grove Camp Meeting, her membership being held at Forestown until her removal to Exeter. Modest and retiring in disposition, gentle, unselfish and generous-hearted, she was intellectual and lovable character, and will be greatly missed by all who knew her. Consistent in life and faithful in duty, she has left behind a most beautiful example. Her aged parents, two sisters, five brothers and her husband remain to mourn her loss, their grief being shared by a large number of sympathizing friends.

Sister Causey left a little babe about two weeks old and also four devoted step-children. Believing that her dear sister is "asleep in Jesus," our grief is not hopeless.

M. M. BLACK.

MCCLAIN—MARTHA L. MCCLAIN, wife of Mr. David L. McClain, who lives north of Carrollton, in Carroll county, died Aug. 31, 1899, after a very painful sickness. She was fifty-eight years eleven months and twenty-six days old. She leaves a husband and five children to mourn their loss. One child has preceded her by several years to the spirit world.

Sister McClain has been a Methodist and a Christian for years. She was a member of my own charge at Bethel. But few mothers ever had a stronger hold on the affections of her family. The devotion of her children to their mother is perfectly beautiful. She held a very sacred and tender place in the hearts of all who knew her. She leaves an influence for good in her community. She died in the faith. May our Father in heaven reunite all the family by his grace, and lead them to the haven of rest to meet the dear mother in the end of their pilgrimage!

W. M. YOUNG, Pastor.

CHRISTMAS—NORMA MARIE, infant daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Christmas, of Natchez, Miss., was born March 1, 1893, and died Aug. 12, 1899. Though little Norma lived but a few short months, yet so sweet and attractive was she in her little unselfishness that her father and mother could hardly have loved her more tenderly and she been spared to us many years. "Safely the arms of Jesus fold her in resting, until one sweet day of waking when eyes shall behold her risen glory. May God graciously comfort the sorrowing parents, and help them so live as to meet their precious babe in the home beyond the skies!

M. M. BLACK.

Deafness Can Not Be Cured

by local applications, as they can not reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, deafness is the result; and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever. Nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that can not be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

CLIMAX SEWING MACHINE,

With Six Side Drawers and Full Set of Attachments.

The Climax is manufactured by the New Home Sewing Machine Company, whose reputation for reliability is second to none in the

The "Climax" Sewing Machine is constructed on the most approved mechanical principles, under the immediate supervision of the best inventive talent obtainable. Has large space under the arm. Each machine is furnished with casters. Loose balance wheel, whereby bobbin can be wound without removing the work. New automatic bobbin winder, enabling operator to automatically wind the bobbin without guiding the thread. The stitch can be regulated while the machine is in motion. Old ideas have been discarded in its manufacture, and in accordance with the progressive spirit of the age new combinations and devices have been used to obtain desired results.

It uses a straight, self-setting needle, which can not be set wrong, and makes the double-thread "lock-stitch." Has all the improvements known to the sewing machine art, including the equalized tensions, open-end cylinder shuttle, oscillating shuttle carrier, and double direct acting feed.

It is guaranteed to give satisfaction. If you want one of these machines at rock-bottom price, write at once to

Rev. W. C. BLACK, 512 Camp St., New Orleans.

P. S.—The machine will be shipped direct from the factory in the North.

The "Combination" Bible.

A SUPERB EDITION

of the Holy Scriptures, showing at a glance at the foot of the pages all changes made by the revisers.

New Type. All Proper Names. Self-Pronouncing. The Most Valuable Collateral Matter.

There is a steady and increasing demand for first-class Bibles. Everybody is anxious to obtain a copy of the best edition of the Holy Scriptures. Old editions are constantly being replaced by Bibles that are in every way more attractive, and there is practically no limit to the demand.

OUR "COMBINATION" FEATURE.

Hitherto the King James and Revised Versions have been printed in parallel columns, but this makes comparisons of texts tedious and unsatisfactory, and makes the book very unwieldy. We have overcome this difficulty by "combining" the two Versions on the same page, showing at a glance in foot-notes all the Changes Additions and Omissions made by the Revisers.

THE OLD VERSION PRINTED IN FULL.

The King James Version is the basis, and this Version is read straight along from the text, while the Revised Version is read from the text in combination with the foot-notes. Our "Combination" Feature has met with universal approval and is strongly endorsed by all leading Divines and Biblical Scholars.

It is only by a comparison of the two Versions that the greatest benefit can be obtained from reading the Holy Scriptures, and this comparison every reader can easily make by our simple arrangement for showing the changes made by the revisers. This is the greatest triumph of Bible Publishing the World has ever known.

OUR OFFER.

To those unprogressive people who do not read and pay for the NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE we sell this Bible at the publisher's retail price—$4.25. To our subscribers we sell it at the very low rate of $2. The only condition attached to this offer is that the subscriber must pay his subscription one full year in advance, viz.: to October, 1900. We will send it postpaid to any person who will send us three new cash subscribers at the regular rate. For six new cash subscribers at the regular rate we will send two "Combination" Bibles, postpaid.

For fifty cents additional we will send a Bible with index.

For twenty-five cents additional we will have your name engraved in gilt letters on the outside.

Send for circular. Address REV. W. C. BLACK.

P. S.—We can give no commission on renewals in connection with the above offer.

New Machine Offer.

By Far the Best We Have Ever Made.

Always on the watch for something good for our subscribers, we have succeeded in making arrangements whereby we can make a sewing machine offer which we think far better than any we have been able hitherto to make. Read the following description and then read our offer:

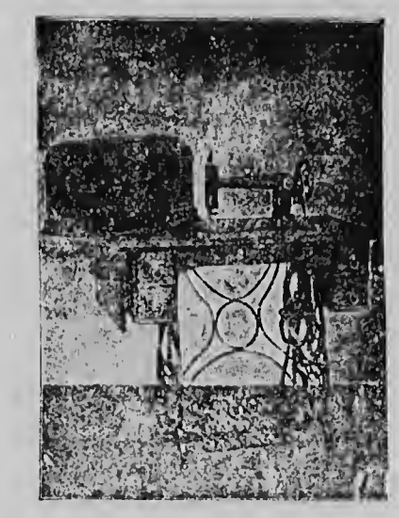
Our price, $15.50.

No. 5 Machine, drop leaf table, gothic cover, case of three drawers at each end, making seven drawers in all. Dealer's price, $26.
Our price, $16.25.

Furnished Free with every machine are the following named accessories: One Foot, (famous) One Screw Driver, One Wrench, One Oil Can and Oil, One Large Screw, One Extra Check Spring, One Package of Needles, Five Bobbins and One Instruction Book.

No. 4 Columbian



EXCELLENCE OF THE COLUMBIAN.—All wearing parts are of case-hardened steel possessing great durability, and the wearing of a screw in motion caused by wear can be taken up. All parts are fitted so correctly that the machine runs steadily, quiet, easy and runs as near perfection and is as simple as it is possible to produce. No expense or time is spared to make them perfect in every respect, as every machine passes a rigid inspection by competent men before leaving the factory.

NICKEL PLATED. The balance wheel and many of the fine parts are nickel plated, with other parts finished in oil and ornamented, giving it a rich appearance.

A Self-Setting Needle and Self-Threading Shuttle are used in the Columbian High-Arm Sewing Machine. They are so simple that any one can easily operate them in a few minutes' time, as our Instruction Book is fully illustrated, showing how to do all kinds of fancy work with attachments.

Extra Attachments, in velvet lined case sent free with each machine. 1 Tucker, 1 Ruffler with shirring plate, 1 Hemmer set, 4 widths and Binder, 1 Hemmer Foot and Slide, 1 Thread Cutter.

ADDITIONAL ACCESSORIES. Each machine is supplied with the following outfit: 1 Hemmer and Feller (one piece), 10 Needles, 6 Bobbins, 1 Wrench, 1 Screw Driver, 1 Oil Can with Oil, Cloth Gage and Thumb Screw and 1 Book of Instructions. The Book of Instructions is profusely illustrated, and answers the purpose of a competent teacher.

No. 3—Drop leaf, Bent cover, case of two drawers at one end and center drawer. Dealer's price, $29. Our price, $17.
No. 4—Drop leaf table, Bent cover, case of two drawers at each end and center drawer. Dealer's price, $31. Our price, $17.75.
No. 5—Drop leaf table, Bent cover, case of three drawers at each end and center drawer, making a seven-drawer machine. Dealer's price, $33. Our price, $18.50.

The chief difference between Numbers 3, 4, and 5 is in the furniture, i.e., in the number of drawers. If you do not want to pay for the extra drawers, you need not do so. We sell these machines under a ten years' guarantee, by which we mean that if any part gives out by reason of any defect therein, the manufacturer will replace the same free of charge. Moreover, we allow the purchaser to test the machine ten days. If at the end of ten days you are not satisfied, you have only to drop us a postal card, and your money will be refunded.

OUR OFFER.

We will send any one of the above-described machines at the prices named, and also send the ADVOCATE free for six months. The only condition attached to this offer is that subscribers who are in arrears must first pay up all arrearages to date. It would be well to avail yourself of this offer at once, as we can not promise that it will last very long. Notice that you take no risk whatever. We do all the risking. Address

REV. W. C. BLACK,

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

A murderer confined in the Kansas penitentiary has asked the governor to order his execution, preferring death to life imprisonment.

The commission for the execution of the Gladstone statue to be erected in Glasgow has been given to William Hamo Thornycroft, R. A. The statue is to cost $17,500.

The workmen of Havana have held a mass meeting, at which about 5000 were present. Inflammatory speeches were made in favor of a general strike to secure an eight-hour day.

Owing to the famine in Russia horses are selling for 60 cents. The destitute peasants have sold many thousands of good and sound horses and excellent milch cows at an average price of $2 50 each.

Brigadier-General Ludlow, military governor of Havana, has submitted a report to the War Department covering the work of the past year, with recommendations for some changes in the present system.

Patrick Smith was a laborer in Paterson, N. J., until two years ago, when he inherited a fortune of $45,000 Day before yesterday he paid out the last dollar of this as a fine for being drunk and disorderly.

The Navy Department has finally determined to adopt the army rifle, known as the Krag-Jorgensen, as a substitute for the Lee-Medford straight-pull gun of 6 milimeters caliber, which has been the small arm in use for some years past.

Out of 2,186,800,000 letters which passed through the British postoffice last year, 8,500,000 were so illegibly addressed that they could not be delivered. When opened at the dead letter office property of various kinds (including money) to the value of $3,600,000 was found in them.

Spain has announced that she will no longer pay the interest on the Cuban debt. That announcement means that the Spanish Government has repudiated the debt. This repudiation would be of small interest, except to the unfortunate bondholders, had it not been coupled with the statement by Spain that the bondholders should now look to the possessors of Cuba for their money.

It is reported that the insurgents have captured the United States gunboat "Urdaneta" in the Orani river, on the northwest side of Manila Bay, where she was patrolling. One officer and nine of her crew are missing. The United States gunboat "Petrel," sent to investigate the matter, has returned, and reports the "Urdaneta" beached opposite the town of Orani on the Orani. She was riddled with bullets and burned.

Congressman R. B. Hawley, representing American capitalists, has purchased the Tinguaro sugar estate, one of the largest in Cuba, in the province of Matanzas. The estate includes 20,000 acres, which, with other large properties along the south coast that Mr. Hawley is arranging for, will, it is expected, produce 100,000,000 pounds of sugar A large part of the land purchased is virgin soil, upon which $1 500,000 will be expended, including the cost of the improvements.

The British Cabinet met on last Friday, and is understood to have considered President Kruger's reply to the note drafted by the previous Cabinet meeting. It has not yet transpired what actually resulted from the meeting, and there is no indication that any further communication was sent to the Transvaal Government. The general belief is that nothing was done in the way of drafting new proposals, and, publicly, nothing is to be done to precipitate a war, but, secretly, every preparation is to be hurried to inaugurate a vigorous campaign later on.

Never at any stage of the Transvaal crisis have peace or war rested so entirely within the hands of President Kruger. The longer he delays precipitating a definite issue the better are the chances for peace He now knows to what extent he can rely on sections of South Africa to uphold him. He realizes that the British will, if possible, avoid a conflict until the last transport lands her men, and he is too wily a leader not to know the military advantage that comes to the aggressor. His appeals to the foreign powers to intervene have apparently been hopeless, but his efforts to drag in the Orange Free State have been successful, and if he honestly intends to defy Great Britain, he will never have a better opportunity.

Admiral Dewey is expected to arrive on the afternoon of Thursday, Sept. 28, in New York City. On that date Admiral Sampson, who is officially the hero of the Santiago victory, will turn over to him the command of the North Atlantic squadron. On Friday, Sept. 29, will occur the great naval parade, in which hundreds of vessels, including warships, torpedo boats, excursion steamers and steam yachts, will take part. On Saturday, the thirtieth instant, there will be the great land parade, which is to be the crowning glory of the demonstration. In that parade the crew of the "Olympia" will march at the head of the column, and the sailors and marines of the North Atlantic squadron will follow. The regular army, the New York National Guard and the State troops of a number of States will also participate in the parade.

A Prominent Memphian Writes.

DR. H. MOZLEY, Atlanta:—Having been a great sufferer for three years from indigestion, and been treated by many physicians, who failed to give me any relief. Continuing to grow worse my brother advised to try Dr. Mozley's Lemon Elixir, which remedy he had used for several years. I commenced its use, and must say that your Lemon Elixir is the greatest medicine on earth. I have never suffered a day since I commenced using Lemon Elixir.
R. L. ROCCO,
206 Hernando St., Memphis, Tenn.

A Card.

This is to certify that I used Dr. Mozley's Lemon Elixir for neuralgia of the head and eyes with the most marked benefit to my general health. I would gladly have paid $500 for the relief it has given me at a cost of two or three dollars. H. A. BEALL,
Clerk Superior Court Randolph Co., Ga.

Two Verdicts.

"After a fair and impartial trial you are judged guilty by this court, and you are sentenced to be hung by the neck until you are dead." The solemn tones of the judge, the despairing face of the prisoner, and the painful stillness of the court room, makes it a scene of awful impress. Now turn to a brighter scene at the home circle. A mother radiant with joy over the recovery of a child snatched from the clutches of Malaria. An entire family rejoicing, and praising the merits of Dicks' Chillifuge, and giving their verdict that Chillifuge is without an equal for swiftness to cure.

The celebrated Mr. Weller tells of an amiable acquaintance who "borrows eighteen pence on Monday, and comes on Tuesday for a shilling to make it up half a crown; calls again on Thursday for another half crown to make it five shillings, and goes on doubling it till he gets it up to a five-pound note in no time, like them sums in the 'rithmetic book 'bout the nails in the horse's shoes."

Your old acquaintance, Malaria, is a good accountant also. Day by day he abstracts a little vitality, a little color, a little appetite; you get the headache, you are irritable, and you wind up in bed with malarial fever—that is, if you are unacquainted with Chillifuge, the greatest malaria-killer on record.

NOT FOR ME.

BY MARIANNE FARNINGHAM.

Blessings I can not count—a host—
About my path I see
Yet some things that I wish for most
Are not for me.

Shall I, then, sigh away my days
In fretful discontent?
Nay, but resigned, in happy praise
Shall they be spent.

Youth's vivid hopes and thrilling dreams,
Its springtide and its glee,
Its merry mounts and rushing streams,
Are not for me.

But I will love the quiet vales
And slopes of sunny lands,
And to the duty that prevails
Will put my hands.

Wealth brings no treasures to my feet
For me to use and give;
But air and light and flowers are sweet
To those who live.

And fame and influence and power,
High service, noble deeds,
Are not for me; yet I each hour
Can sow good seeds.

And while strong faith and love are mine,
To God I leave the rest;
He chooses where his light shall shine,
And he knows best.

LETTER FROM "GILDEROY."

The soil of our North Mississippi ritory seems to be losing its tility, so far as the production of eachers is concerned. The time when we grew enough preachers upply our own needs and some uable men for the far West. This not true of this territory now. are short of men for our own rk, and the prospect is that we l be shorter of preachers next than we are this year. We have twenty-three charges sup- d by local preachers. It is cur- ly reported that one or two of preachers will ask for a location Fall, and one or two will trans- and one or two have died—say in all. There may be some who have to ask for one or the other tions of rest known to our econ- y. From the best information at hand we will not have as y men coming in as will go out. is is a serious matter. It ought be pondered seriously. Is the rch losing its preacher-producing er, or has God ceased to call men e ministry from this territory? This matter has been talked over ome of our "kitchen cabinets," the present state of affairs has n accounted for in various ways. e say that our North Mississippi thodists in some sections are so and backward in the matter of port that young men are discour- d from entering the ministry. e who enter soon transfer to r Conferences where the support tter. This should be carefully sidered.

here say the farms have been ded up, and the method of inten- farming adopted until we have ed out a good large class of uable farmers. They say the is too poor in some sections to d a living from a few acres. is matter for reflection in this of the case. What the soil s in fertility will have to be e up in breadth of acreage. It evident that we ought to have e farmers, or fewer farms.

till others say the door of our ference is being too closely ded; that we are turning away, iscouraging, a fine class of young who would be useful in the istry. The standard of require- t is too high and the examina- too rigid. The standard pted by the church is higher than ed to be, and the law is rigid, but e think the administration ought flexible. It is urged that we fine young men out of the Con nce, and then use them to supply ges that we are not able to fill regular itinerants. We reject , or hold up their applications dmission on trial, and then turn d and use them for itinerant

Some say well-educated young men will not go nor stay in some sections of our Conference, and if they were to go and stay, they would not be largely useful. The margin between them and their people would be too great for the pleasant and profitable communion of saints. This trouble, it is readily admitted, would be greater on the part of the people than on the part of the preachers. It is urged that the preacher must be one of the people, and also one with the people he serves. There is sense and weight in this opinion. There are some who firmly believe that, for some years to come, we will need a good, large class of common men to serve the large number of common people we have. For this reason they believe we are turning away many preachers who would be wonderfully useful to the church. This view is supported by the fact that some of our most acceptable and useful pastors are local preachers who failed to pass the examination before the Committee for Admission on Trial. They were not admitted on trial, but they have made full proof of their ministry, all the same. They have shown themselves to be workmen of whom the church need not be ashamed.

In all this talk no one has uttered a word against a better-educated and more highly cultivated ministry. The only thought has been that the too rigid administration of a good law has tended to cut off too fast a much-needed supply of preachers.

These are some of the ways in which the present state of affairs is accounted for by good and true men, both lay and clerical, in our bounds.

Correspondence.

ALEXANDRIA DISTRICT.

Only one charge remains to be visited to complete the third "round"—Natchitoches. To report all the charges in detail would spin out this yarn to too great a length; hence a general summary will be given at present.

First, the bad side of affairs; the better last. There is not a "Woman's Foreign Missionary Society" reported in the district. There is but one "Woman's Home Mission Society" reported in a membership of more than 3,000. These facts are greatly to be deplored, especially the last. The absence of these societies are, I think, largely tributary to the poorly-kept and poorly-supplied condition of our parsonages. To lay blame anywhere without a full investigation would be hyper-critical, if not unjust; but there are two well-known facts in this connection, viz: (1) Many of our pastors lay no stress on the importance of these organizations. (2) Many communities of our women fail to keep such societies running after they are organized.

The doctrine of parsonages among our people seems to be about this: Have a shelter for the preacher, and supply it so as to keep the family from suffering. If it becomes old and "rickety," and the furniture be broken and unsightly, remember that age is venerable. If things get any worse, then blame the pastor and his wife and children for the condition of things. They've lived in and used it; let them care for it. This, in part, is the church's creed. The ministerial creed runs somewhat after this sort: Make out with it till Conference. If the gate hinges break, if the blinds fall off, if another light is broken, if the garden pickets fall off, if the cow eats the shrubbery or destroys the fruit trees, if the bugs infest the premises, if the floors get greasy and the stove rusts, why, it will be in keeping with everything else, and makes no difference.

These two creeds should be revited and consolidated. The people should see to it that the parsonage be a home, and that it furnishes the means of home comforts. Then the occupants of it should see that there be no abuse of that home, and little contributions to its facilities for comfort from time to time. An ornamental shrub, a cutting from a fancy fig tree, a young peach, pear or plum scion planted now and then, cost no money and very little labor. The results are immense both in appearance and comfort.

It must not be supposed that all the parsonages in the district are neglected. Boyce, Lecompte, Bunkie and Melville have all made great improvements during the year, Melville having built a new and very pretty parsonage this year.

If we just had a live "Woman's Home Mission Society" located around each of these parsonages—and all others—there might be equality. It is true that there exists in most places a "Ladies' Aid Society," but it is equally true that this useful organization has no recognition in our economy, but has taken the place of the W. H. M. Society without doing all its work.

Another bad side of our affairs is found in the fact that there is not an Epworth League in the district. This, however, is not so much to be deplored, unless the thing can be better managed here than in some other places. The tendency seems to be to substitute the League services for the church services, and if this is to follow, better far have no Leagues. This is not a necessity of the League. There are great possibilities for regular church work in a well-organized League; many ways by which to co-operate with and greatly assist a pastor. Every pastor has not tact to do this, but everyone should try it. A failure may be honorable and divinely acceptable. "She hath done what she could." "It is required of a man according to that which he hath, and not according to that he hath not."

There are some better things than these vacancies. If the preachers push their collections till Conference as vigorously as most of them have been doing, we will more than double our collections this year, as compared with last year. The statistical reports so far are most encouraging. Revivals have been enjoyed in many places, and in some instances they have been of unusual power. One thing is noticeable in all the meetings attended by the presiding elder (and since May 1 he has preached 108 times). There has been less excitement—more calm religious deliberation—than ever before noticed in revival meetings. Men seem to renounce their sins—"cease to do evil, learn to do well; seek peace, and pursue it"—and trust in the Lord Jesus for salvation. None of the rantings in the trial at Carmel have been witnessed anywhere, and but little of shouting heard as on the entry into Jerusalem; still the work seems to abide, and the converts are helpful.

I desire to say right here that, without an exception known to myself (and I think I am informed fully), the pastors who have helped one another have been far more successful in winning souls than evangelists have been as helpers.

Pineville and Montgomery and Colfax still lead in paying the "beloved" "in full to date."

J. A. PARKER.

NATCHEZ DISTRICT.

The third round is closed, and the fourth begins next Saturday. Filling the presiding elder's office, with all its labors and cares, would be more agreeable to me if all stewards would be as faithful as a few are. But for that faithful few the wheels of our itinerancy would be looked.

Inadequately paid ministers can scarcely do their best work. Too much serving of tables is not favorable to that study of the Word and prayer which are necessary to a successful ministry.

Our finances this year are, however, not behind our average heretofore. Hard times affect church finances less than one would expect, which shows the genuineness and constancy of the Christianity of a goodly number of our members. They support the church when money is scarce.

Pastors have been diligent in their regular work, and have held revival services in their several charges. Almost every one reports gratifying results. Of two good camp meetings and a delightful District Conference mention has already been made in this ADVOCATE.

Some of our ministers have suffered severe affliction during the year. Bro. Witt and wife have buried a dear little child, and Bro. and Sister Hull lament the death of their oldest son, a bright boy of nine years. Bro. Sibley, at Meadville, with his wife, nursed a perishing infant for three long months, only to see it die at last, and then, in a short time, the wife and mother herself, after a week's illness, followed her infant to the grave. The three motherless children have been taken to their maternal grandparents, leaving Bro. Sibley to preach to his people, we hope, with that strong power which God gives only to those who suffer. Others of us have suffered lighter afflictions, which, we trust, will work for our good.

I have missed but one quarterly meeting, and that was on account of the illness of my wife. In my preaching I have endeavored to emphasize duly (a most difficult undertaking) the more important themes and duties of our religion. Of course, the claims of the Twentieth Century Educational collection, and of missions, and of the Conference claimants, and the rest, have not been overlooked. I have exhorted all my preachers to be diligent in bringing up all the assessments on their charges. (No charge in the district, so far as I know, has done enough for any of these causes to deserve special mention in the public prints; hence I have reported nothing for publication.)

I have insisted that men are saved only by a working faith, obedience to God's commandments, repudiating the doctrine of the insusceptibility of grace (once in grace, always in grace); that men are so safe in Christ that, do what they may or will, they will be saved in spite of all if they once believe in Christ. This dangerous heresy I have denounced as utterly unscriptural. I find skepticism and error fostered by some who ought to be teachers of truth. The heathen of old, finding it inconvenient to serve the true God, invented gods who should serve them; so modern infidels, desiring a god after their own heart, have mutilated the God of the Bible, amputating his attributes to make a god to suit themselves; but their inventions will not stand. In spite of all their theories, "God is angry with the wicked every day," and "hates all workers of iniquity," and will punish here and hereafter all who knowingly disobey his will. Yellow fever and all other calamities come upon us because of our flagrant Sabbath-breaking and our multitudinous other sins. I must continue to proclaim the "vengeance of our God" till the people hear, heed, repent and obey that Savior who said, "If ye love me, keep my commandments."

For two succeeding years I have been arrested in my work on the district about the close of the third round, and now, for the third time, the alarming reports of yellow fever and of quarantines threaten to prevent my further visitations on the district. Let us call upon the Lord. He only can stay the plague and avert calamity from our guilty land.

W. L. C. HUNNICUTT.

AN AUDITING BOARD FOR CONFERENCE.

During the attendance of the last session of the Louisiana Conference I could not help but note the confusion existing from the preachers trying to find the various committees for the reception of funds. I thought of the Auditing Board used in the Texas Conferences, and I suggest that we have the same here. A Board of three is appointed to receive all moneys, check up each preacher, hand the reports to the statistical secretaries, and let every report be in by the second day. The advantages are as follows: All reports and moneys correspond; every report is verified; a great deal of confusion is averted; a considerable time is saved in announcing the meeting-places of various Boards.

H. W. BOWMAN.

RUSTON, LA.

MR. EDITOR: A sojourn at the delightful home-town of Ruston has been very enjoyable to the writer. On the route from Pearl river, via Meridian, I found many things to interest and give food for thoughts which I fully intended to jot down for the dear old ADVOCATE and its thousands of readers; but time has run on, and now the leaves are falling, and yet I linger, loth to leave the loved ones here and this pretty place. Visiting the Chautauqua, meeting old and new friends, going to church, and visiting, has occupied the time and made it seem short.

At the Chautauqua I met Rev. W. F. Henderson, of Homer, La., and Bro. W. A. Clarke, his brother-in-law. Had seen Bro. Clarke before, and having him and Bro. Henderson to dine with us at my son-in-law's, Mr. J. C. H. McKinney, was a great pleasure, but they, being in haste to catch the train, hurried away. Here at Ruston dear old Bros. Wright and White are still like their blessed Master—"going about doing good." Though laid on the shelf, as it were, they do not sit on it and repine, but find many niches to fill in the grand temple service, and some chance to give the enemy of souls, whom they have fought so long, an effective blow. Since Aug. 1 they, with Prof. C. Carson, have preached for Bro. Notestine, who had to take a rest. A letter from him, in the local paper, states that his health is much improved, and he is looking towards "that parsonage;" and his work, having enjoyed his rest, though now, as he says, "sighing for the flesh-pots of Ruston."

This place, with its fine graded public school and Industrial College, besides other schools, offers many inducements to parents who wish to educate their children at home. There are but few houses to rent, but many vacant lots stare at strangers, and make them wonder why they are not built up or sold to new-comers. There are no saloons, and it seems to be almost an ideal place for quiet, sweet homes. The farming lands in the vicinity seem to be all that a farmer calls for. The drouth has affected them unfavorably this year. There are three churches—the Methodist, Presbyterian, and Baptist. The last two are at present without pastors. The W. C. T. U. have a branch society, and held a public meeting at the Methodist Church last Sunday night. Dr. Amanda Taylor, the president, read a very interesting and exhaustive speech on the use of "Alcohol in Medicine." She proved, by many citations of facts and figures, that it was entirely unnecessary, and that it did more harm than good, and made drunkards of men and women that never would have used it in any other way. Mrs. H. Pitts read a paper explanatory of the general work of the W. C. T. U., emphasizing all the particular phases of each division. Prof. Carson followed by a very edifying talk on the wider influences of the temperance cause by the individual efforts of those who lived up to the point of being temperate in all things. Music and songs interspersed between these talks and papers made the meeting quite enjoyable. There is a W. F. M. S. also, who are doing what they can to help on this good cause. I am sorry to say the Sunday-school of the Methodist Church did not impress one as being up to the full measure of its ability. There were scholars that had no teacher, and teachers that had no scholars. The literature came from different points, and the songs from the wrong point. Zeal in Sunday-school work is the pulse of the church. When I was young the Sunday-school marched in a body from the basement to the auditorium to hear the sermon. Now they march for the door in double-quick time the moment the bell is tapped, and away they go, who knows where?

The new railroad which is being built from Arkansas will open up new avenues of industry and bring new-comers, and great things will be looked for in this little city that sits on more hills than Rome ever heard of.

MRS. L. CRARY SADLER.

Ruston, La.

To the Pastors of the Jackson District, Mississippi Conference.

Our presiding elder, Rev. T. B. Holleman, is ready to devote much of his attention upon the last round to the cause of education. The Discipline places the presiding elder in charge of the services at a Quarterly Conference, but the pastor's co-operation and counsel are generally sought. You are earnestly urged to make the way clear for Bro. Holloman to present this cause. Please see to it that the names of members are enrolled in the "Twentieth Century Educational Fund" book sent you for that purpose last Spring, and after Bro. Holloman's sermon and appeal, have this roll called and receive responses, "One dollar," "Two dollars," "Ten dollars," etc., not neglecting to give non-members also an opportunity to subscribe. Brother pastor, you will be inclined, on account of the press of other matters, to postpone this, but you are entreated not to say "To-morrow." Get the subscriptions now, even if the collection of them wait. This is important.

MILLSAPS COLLEGE OPENED,

WITH ONE HUNDRED YOUNG MEN IN ATTENDANCE.

The eighth annual session of Millsaps College began this morning with one hundred pupils in attendance. The opening was a success in every particular, and much enthusiasm was evinced by the young students. Addresses appropriate to the occasion were delivered by President Murrah, Justice A. H. Whitfield, of the Supreme Court; Rev. R. W. Bailey, pastor of the First Methodist Church, and Bishop Charles B. Galloway.

All of the young men are comfortably settled in their quarters, and the work will now go forward with vim and energy. President Murrah announces that he will establish a quarantine around the college premises, and it will not be necessary at any time for the young men to expose themselves to the risk of infection.

The Board of Trustees and members of the faculty are highly pleased with the start that has been made, and they express the hope that the fever will disappear in a few days, and permit the other pupils to enter who have not yet reached the city.—Clarion-Ledger.

"What shall I do for Christ?" asked a young disciple of Bishop Selwyn. "Go where he is not, and take him with you," was the venerable Bishop's reply.—Exchange.

SOME SUGGESTIONS.

BY A PARSONAGE SUPPORTER.

In the ADVOCATE, of July 20, we have read "An Autobiography," purporting to have been written by "A Parsonage." It ought to stir emotions of pity in the heart of anyone to listen to such a tale of woe. Listen! Antiquated, dilapidated, neglected, with a long "existence" that has been "a disgrace to civilization and enlightened Christianity;" "uninhabitable to those of pride and respectability;" a constant disappointment to friends who have been few, etc. These are some of the self-acknowledged characteristics of this parsonage. I wonder that this existence has been allowed to continue so long, thus disgracing "civilization and enlightened Christianity," when it would be so easy to go out of existence and stop this disgrace.

But, since "Parsonage" seems to desire this existence prolonged, I hope to be pardoned, in the name of enlightened Christianity, for offering a few suggestions:

1 I think it would have been better to have placed your complaint in the hands of your present occupant, and have had him to prepare a full and free statement of your awful condition. Let such a statement reach the ears of those whose duty it is to see that you have (if any) a better existence, and if they find your complaint based on facts, and not on fancy or imagination, I believe they will help you out of your trouble.

2. Those knives bought at fifty cents per dozen in the long, long ago, were certainly very cheap. I doubt if they can be duplicated at that price now. I thought they used to be more costly than at the present time. Those must surely be the first you ever had, and the reason of their lasting so long must lie in the fact that some, at least, of your former occupants did not use them, having better ones of their own.

Not having heard complaint from you before concerning these things, it may be that many of those who should care for you now are in entire ignorance of your present difficulty. A little information at this point, judiciously circulated, and in the right spirit, among the membership of the charge where you are situated, would, in my opinion, bring much more and speedier relief to you than this burdening the columns of our dear old ADVOCATE with your long, sad complaint.

3 It seems to me that you are sadly in need of a Home Mission Society. This would, doubtless, make your necessities known. Suppose you remind your present occupant that our church recognizes and fosters such societies, and ask him to stir up the pure minds of the noble women around you in this direction. I believe we ought to have such a society at every place where we have a parsonage.

I would by no means excuse the neglect of which you complain; but if lack of information be the cause, let us be careful not to impute to anyone more blame than he deserves.

THE IMPORTANCE OF CHURCH EXTENSION.

In many ways the church is striving to establish the kingdom of Christ in all the earth. She is sending out her missionaries and building churches everywhere. Millions are being spent annually for the salvation of men and for the redemption of the world from sin.

The church, for the accomplishment of her mission to the world, has many departments of church work, each of which has its relative importance. If any one department of church work be more important than another, that one should be most emphasized, and that emphasis should be expressed by the amount of money and men necessary to run it. If that be true, the assessments made upon any pastoral charge ought to express the importance of any department of church work for which the charge is assessed. The assessments for foreign missions and church extension show that the assessment for church extension is less than half the amount assessed for foreign missions. These assessments are made according to their relative importance, or, at least, should be. But the amount assessed for church extension is as important for that as the assessment for foreign missions is for that department; so that it is as necessary for each pastor to strive to bring up his assessments for church extension as for any other. Furthermore, no pastor has the right to "omnibus" his collections, and then disparage any one collection in favor of some other, though apparently to him more important.

While the importance of church extension is being more fully recognized, still its imperative necessity and absolute value to the permanent evangelization of the world is not sufficiently felt by even all our preachers. We have lost our hold in many localities for the lack of a suitable house of worship, or for lack of any at all. The only economical and sensible way to establish the church in any place, whether at home or abroad, is to send a preacher, and at the same time build him a house in which to preach. The house of worship is almost as important as the messenger. It would be well nigh impossible to hold our place in any community without a church building, and a much greater impossibility to establish ourselves in a new field without it. But once get a building erected there, we are almost sure to get a foothold, even in the most unpromising territory.

For years the Baptists of Yazoo City seemed to be in a dying condition. They owned a little brick building, which they held on to through thick and thin. This little church was their rallying-point, but for which they would have passed out of existence as a church. But having that as a permanent witness to their faith, they have taken on new life, and are now planning for an $8 000 church.

If we understood the value of church extension, and how closely it is allied to the very life of the church, I am sure we would be as zealous for that as we are for foreign missions; yes, almost as much as for the conversion of souls. For what if we have conversions, and build them no church-home? There can be but one result: the denomination that offers them a church-home would get them.

As expressed by the assessment made for church extension, we do not, as a church, attach importance enough to this department of church work. And when we see how little is collected of the small assessment made on each charge, we are doubly sure that our people do not understand, and, therefore, do not appreciate the necessity of meeting this assessment.

If every preacher would preach a well-prepared sermon on this subject, no doubt many would contribute to this fund who never give anything to it, and those who have would give much more. Even if the preaching of the sermon did not bear immediate fruit in money, the people would be better informed on the subject, and would be brought under stronger obligations to pay this assessment. Trusting that no preacher will fail to give due emphasis to this collection, and that every dollar of our church extension fund will be paid, I am,

Yours fraternally,

L. S. JONES

THE MYSTERY SOLVED.

Some of us have been wondering all these years what became of the two famous "Kilkenny cat-tails," and are, therefore, glad to see that one has been swallowed by the other, and unless a new tail can be found to help keep up the "wiggle," it must soon cease, as "it takes two to make a quarrel." "Behold, how good and how pleasant it is for brethren" (and sisters) "to dwell together in unity;" and, again, behold how few of us enjoy this pleasure. We talk about "division in the church," but do not stop to consider whether we are in the divisor or the dividend.

I am often reminded of this circumstance of late. A preacher once decided that there was no chance for a revival in his church unless he could get two of its prominent members, who had been at outs for quite awhile, reconciled; so he talked with each of them, and advised them to pray earnestly over the matter before preaching-time next day, which they agreed to do. When they met next day Bro. A. said to Bro. B., "I have prayed earnestly over the matter, and have decided that you'll have to give in, for I can't." How many of us are manifesting this spirit? Alas! alas! If we happen to entertain some views that are not exactly in harmony with the views of some poor, unfortunate, erring brother, we are ready to dip our poisoned porcupine "quill" into the ink bottle, if the offender is not at hand, and blacken him with that.

May God, in his mercy, give us more of "the Spirit of Christ," which, unless we have, we "are none of his."

ALICE CARY.

PERSONAGES—NO. 3.

Dr. A. R. Winfield was so unique in character and abundant in labors that to sketch him exhaustively would be a great task. He was preacher in charge, presiding elder, college agent, editor, and city missionary. In 1881 he attended the Ecumenical Conference in London, and made a tour of the Holy Land ere he returned. In his absence he wrote some very interesting and readable letters descriptive of his travels, and after his return he was in demand as a lecturer. About the first call to lecture came from Northwest Arkansas. He sent a long list of appointments thither, and straightway set out to fill them, when, lo! no one knew anything about them. Cards and letters were received by the preachers to whom they were addressed, but they were unable to read them. Some of the preachers tried to tease the Doctor about his bad chirography, but he defended himself, and replied "that it was his place to write, and theirs to read what he had written, and that any man who could not read his writing was not fit to preach."

Dr. Winfield was particularly a friend to young preachers. He was the book man of his Conference, and furnished all of the indigent undergraduates their books in the course of study on twelve months' credit.

At the session of the Little Rock Conference, December, 1881, Bishop McTyeire presiding, there was a promising young preacher expelled from the ministry and the church, and when the adverse report of the committee was brought in the Bishop had the accused to stand up, and, after reviewing the case and summing up the evidence, like a civil judge, pronounced the sentence. There was a thrill of emotion through the audience, and Dr. Winfield burst into tears, hid his face, and sobbed like a child.

When the Doctor was editor and missionary in the city of Little Rock, his first missionary sermon was in a room over a saloon, and it was said by those who heard him that he never surpassed that effort before nor afterwards. There was so much said about it that the editors of the Gazette and Democrat called for a report of it. There was a reporter present, but he said that it "would have been as easy to report a cyclone as that sermon."

Twenty years ago this Fall the Little Rock Conference met in Camden, with Bishop Pierce presiding. It was clear, frosty weather, and one of the most pleasant, harmonious and spiritual sessions that this writer ever attended. The preaching was pathetic and unctuous. Robert Atchley, C. O. Steele and Alonzo Monk preached early in the session. On Friday night the "Arkansas traveler" arose. He had been pastor there. Oh, how he prayed! He was wonderfully gifted in prayer. His text was, "The last enemy that shall be destroyed is death." He preached one hour, and there was not a superfluous word in it, and the words came like a hail-storm. The house was packed, and the aisles and chancel were full. He was in his glory. His thoughts breathed and his words burned. The audience was spellbound. The tension became greater and greater. Just as he began the peroration a lady about the middle of the house shouted, "Ha! ha! ha!" and in a minute the hallelujas! and ha! ha's! spread over the entire audience. The Doctor had to close. One could not have heard it thunder. He descended and shook hands with all he could reach, and went back in the pulpit, and fell over flat on his back on the sofa, which was used as a seat, and clapped his hands, and screamed as loud as he could. Dr. Winfield is not ready for the judgment yet. "Though being dead, he yet speaketh."

COMPLIMENTS SOMETIMES QUESTIONABLE.

Once on the church-yard, after preaching, a brother addressed me thus, "That was the best sermon I ever heard in that house." The church was an old building, and I knew many good preachers had preached there, and that many excellent sermons had been delivered in it, and this brother had heard as many of them, perhaps, as any one man. I questioned the statement in my own mind, and was not sure the brother himself believed it, but, as he had heard many more sermons there than I ever had, I left him alone to settle the matter without further controversy; my own mind a little abused with the reflection that he had laid the flattery on too thick to stick well.

On one occasion, after preaching, riding away from the church, I was joined by a brother, who said to me, "That was the best sermon I ever heard you preach." I could dispose of that very well, and replied, "You can say that to me without saying much"—that is, I did not think I was doing much to beat myself. I thought the man looked as if he wished he had said his say to some one else.

I have had it said to me, "That was a good talk you gave us to-day." It was a talk. Where the strength and force of the sermon lay in the compliment, I did not exactly see. I have heard texts announced, followed by discourses without any direct connection with the doctrine of the text, yet they were good talks. What I had taken so much pains to arrange and illustrate by associate and parallel passages of Scripture only ranked in the mind of the hearer as a good talk.

Again the compliment (?) has come thus, "That was a good text you had to-day." For long years I have taken pains to select good texts, such as contained good doctrine and included passage enough to express the doctrine, exercising some caution against merely suggestive clauses. I have thought sometimes I could have given better preachers than myself a better text for their discourse. "You had a good text to-day." Well, the text was there without my creation. The text was complimented; perhaps I could claim some commendation for selecting a good one. I certainly would have been glad to have made the sermon as good as the text.

Once I preached at a camp meeting. As I came down from the pulpit a brother whose good opinion I esteemed met me, and said, 'I would like to hear any of them'—meaning preachers—"beat that." I felt a little puffed, and in an instant wished he had not said it. This was immediately followed by two sisters, who said, "We did enjoy your sermon so much." That was to my heart's comfort, and did my soul good. In one instance I had beaten other preachers; in the other I had done two hungry souls good, which was the aim of a gospel message. The hearty shake of the hand was an emphasis to the comfort of a true gospel's message.

Correspondence.

EDWARDS, MISS.

We have just closed a most delightful series of meetings in our midst. The services began in the Presbyterian Church, of which the writer is pastor. Rev. W. D. Morton, D. D., the evangelist for the Synod of Mississippi, did the preaching, and it was well done. The Holy Spirit manifested his presence in the conversion of precious souls and in arousing God's people to greater activity in church work. Everyone expressed great regret when at the expiration of a week Dr. Morton had to leave for another engagement. But the meeting did not close. Bro. Emery transferred it to his church, and did the preaching himself with great acceptance to all. The Spirit continued his presence and help. More souls were converted and God's people more deeply aroused. The meeting continued in Methodist quarters for ten days, but did not close. Bro. Low, of the Baptist Church, transferred it to his church and invited "all hands" to help him: The Spirit did not desert us. Bro. Low preached for a week, and still more souls were saved and God's people wrought upon. It has been a most delightful experience to us, and much more good was accomplished than we can estimate now.

I believe that it is right and well that in these protracted meetings all denominational lines should disappear and all unite in one grand attack upon the stronghold of the enemy. He can't stand the pressure and has to fall back and flee before the marching hosts of God's people.

It is a little out of the order of things for a Presbyterian minister to be writing for a Methodist paper; but if there is any blame to be attached, you may lay it at Bro. Emery's door. He told me to write. My association with the Methodist brethren has been most delightful. Since my coming to Edwards there have been six different pastors in charge of the church. When I first landed on the field, a little over ten years ago, I found the amiable Cooper; then came the invincible Nicholson; next the saintly Peebles; next the courageous Drake; next the congenial Galloway, and last, but not least, the whole-soul, sweet-spirited Emery. All of these brethren occupy a warm place in my heart, and I delight to call them brethren.

With best wishes and fraternal regards, I am,

Faithfully yours,

C. P. COLMERY.

INDIAN MISSION.

Once more—and for the last time before the Annual Conference—I appeal to the friends of the Indian Mission in Mississippi for help. We need $50 or $60 very much. Our Choctaw preacher, Bro. Jim Johnston, has been preaching at two or three places during the year, and we promised to pay him up to date. We have paid him very little. He has had to go in debt, and, like all honest men, wants to pay his debts; so he writes me, as agent, to please send him some money, but I have not got it to send.

Now, will the friends of the mission please help me in this emergency? He is getting old, and is a good and worthy man, and by contributing to him, you will help a worthy cause. The work in the hands of Bro. Donald, assisted by Bro. Jim, is prospering. God is blessing their labors and saving the Indians.

Now, let us furnish the means, and God will bless us, too. Let all the friends of the mission help some, if only a small amount.

Our Choctaw preacher, Jim Johnston, has been recommended to the Annual Conference for ordination to deacon's orders, and he will, doubtless, need some money and clothes to prepare him for the trip, and before Conference, therefore, I make this appeal.

Dear brethren and sisters, please help, and at once. Let everyone in close to me a small or large amount. Send, as before, postoffice order or registered letter to me at Hermanville, Claiborne county, Miss.

Please do not neglect this important matter, and let's make glad the heart of a faithful servant of God.

Yours in hope of the salvation of all men,

A. D. MILLER.

SHREVEPORT DISTRICT.

The third round, finished at Knox Point on yesterday, marked some advancement. The preachers generally held protracted meetings, and with good results. While not much was done in a financial way, there has been spiritual uplift on most every charge. Several new and handsome church-houses were dedicated free of debt, and several more have been started, and will likely be finished and paid for before Conference. Parsonages have been repaired and beautified, and the Conahatta pastor, heartily backed by his people, will soon replace his present parsonage by a new building to be erected according to a plan drawn by the Red River pastor. When done it will be "a thing of beauty and a joy" for years, if not "forever"—a solid comfort to every itinerant fortunate enough to live in it. We have had several camp meetings during the quarter, and an Epworth League or two have been organized. We are looking for a good time at Grand Cane Epworth Conference, Oct. and 20. Several brethren have tak good Twentieth Century collectio We have high hope that each of preachers will so bend to work d ing the fourth quarter that each m be able to report his charge far advance of where he found it.

The life of Dora Rankin, by Elli beth Davis Fielding, published order of W. B. F. M., is a rich c tribution to our missionary lite ture, and should be read by ev woman in the church. The book can be had of the Southern Met odist Publishing House for twen five cents.

In June, 1886, I was alternate W. B. F. M., which convened Augusta, Ga. It was at this meeti I met Miss Dora Rankin, and w ized, in her beautiful presence a cheerful, hopeful descriptions of t outlook in China, what it meant be a missionary. In the perf bloom of womanhood, with t keenest susceptibilities of intell nal and social enjoyments, t young woman grew radiant as s stood before the Board and pictur the possibilities of the work wh her fair hands, active brain and c secrated heart had assumed f those children of our Father's "the uttermost parts." Her boun less love was an inspiration to t home workers who had sent her, a who held her as a precious trust coming, she brought the far-aw "inheritance of Christ," and tender laid the charge at the door of o hearts; in going away again so she was followed by the vows of t Board to stand by her and the wo until all the world should know h "whom to know is life everlasting Her consecration was complete, a our trust in her so great that in o short-sightedness we felt that s was our stronghold for succe against the powers of darkness that heathen land; but God, w orders the work and workmen, sa "It is enough."

The W. B. F. M. in Augu greeted Miss Dora Rankin, June 1886 the cablegram from Shangh "Dora is dead," was dated Dec. 1886. In response to the messa fifty thousand hearts in the Woma Board bowed in anguish before t inscrutable decree. The beauti form of our beloved was laid to r among the people she died to sa and henceforth China became ho ground, and the Chinese a sacr trust to the women of our church.

Mrs. McGavock's appeal to t women of our church, followi close on Miss Dora's death, stir many hearts as never before, a the searching words are as pot now as when they were writte Listen to the call! "Dora Rankin dead! We can only put forth o hands in the darkness and lay ho on Him whose wisdom we dare n question. CHARLES DAVIS WILLIAMS.

Charles Davis Williams was born in Auburn, Ala., May 18, 1848, and died at his home in Bolton, Miss., April 20, 1899. His father, Samuel Moore Williams, was a native of South Carolina. Charles was the eldest of seven children. He attended school until he was thirteen years of age, when the Civil War broke out and closed the schools. Here his education was practically ended. At the close of the war between the States he came with his father's family to the State of Mississippi and engaged in farming. Mr. Williams, young in years, was thrown upon his own responsibility. He engaged as clerk in a dry-goods store in the town of Raymond, Miss., on a small salary. After a few years' experience there, he was employed as clerk by the firm of Harrison & Lewis, of Braids, Miss. During his few years' work for them he saved from his earnings enough to enter upon the mercantile business, in company with a brother, in the town of Bolton, Miss. As a result of close business habits they built up a large and lucrative business, and continued in prosperity till his death.

The above is a brief outline of a beautiful and noble life. It remains to point out some of its characteristics in the various relations he sustained.

As a friend. He was one of those rare, congenial spirits who found his way into every heart with which he came in contact. Being strictly honest and upright in all his dealings with men, he won the confidence of everyone in social and business relations. He was a man of deep convictions, and strength of character, and was above reproach among men. "None knew him but to love him."

As a brother. There was none more faithful than he. His father having died when some of the younger members of the family were quite small, he came to his help to look to their temporal welfare, and nobly did he do his part in guarding them.

As a father. Mr. Williams leaves three sweet little girls to mourn his loss. His association with them was most tender and affectionate, his care for them in all things was constant, and the aspirations for them were the highest and most worthy. It was beautiful to see the affection of father and children.

As a husband. He did not marry quite late in life; hence his married life extended over a period of only a few years. During this time it was the writer's privilege to be often in his home. In that home he was the loving companion, and the joy and comfort of his wife, whom she honored, trusted, and faithfully loved. Never was there a more beautiful home life, more hearty sympathy, more congeniality, more oneness of purpose, between husband and wife.

As a Christian. Mr. Williams joined the Methodist Church when about twenty-one years of age. He was one of those sweet, gentle Christians whose never made a great outward display of his religion, but there was a depth of piety in his soul, which led to a good lasting enjoyment of his religion.

The purity and charity of his life shone out before us as a living testimony of his love for Christ as his Redeemer. Besides his wife and children, brothers and sisters, many are the friends who mourn his death. But there will be a happy reunion "some glad day" in our Father's house in the skies.

A FRIEND WHO KNEW AND LOVED HIM.

FROM THE WORK.

Rev. Robt. L. Phillips, Porterville, Miss., Sept. 20, 1899: "We have just closed our last series of protracted services on Porterville circuit—seven in all. The pure gospel was preached, and was confirmed by the presence of the Holy Spirit. A few accessions; no sweeping financial or revival statistics to report. But a number of non-church-goers in regular attendance on the monthly services. I have never seen better attention and order than has been given us by the people of Kemper. Reverence for the gospel and the ministry is a resplendent virtue in the character of my people. The pastor's family have moved into a handsome and commodious parsonage built within the last ninety days. Prospects fair, financially. Bros. W. W. Moore, D. C. Farmer and R. E. Rutledge were with us in five meetings; the others were held by the pastor alone."

Rev. J. N. Ware, Damascus, Miss., Sept. 20, 1899: "On the night of the thirteenth of September our beloved pastor, L. J. Jones, of Walnut Grove circuit, closed one of the best revivals that I ever attended at Pine Grove Church. It was indeed a feast to my soul and also to many others. Our beloved Bro. P. H. Howse, of Neshoba charge, did most of the preaching. Bro. Howse preceded Bro. Jones on this charge, and was very much loved by the members of Pine Grove Church and vicinity, and I am sure he has lost nothing, but gained more of our love by laboring with us in this meeting, for he preached the pure gospel strictly on the line of holiness and sanctification. The church was wonderfully revived, quite a number professed conversion and sanctification, and fourteen persons joined the church. Bros. Murdock, McDonald, and J. R. Hays, L. P.'s, were with us, and rendered valuable service. God bless the good brethren and keep us walking in the steps of our blessed Savior every moment of our lives."

Rev. J. W. Raper, Montpelier, Miss., Sept. 21, 1899: "We have just closed our revival work for this year. The Lord has been with us in great power. We have had one hundred and sixty conversions and one hundred and eight additions to this, the Montpelier circuit. Our last meeting was held at one of the appointments that was virtually left out of the plan. We had a great meeting; 38 additions at that place. This is the best year that we have had on this charge, and this is our third year. Everything will be paid in full, and more. We have finished our new church at Sparta, or nearly so, and it will be dedicated at our fourth quarterly meeting by our presiding elder, Rev. J. M. Wyatt. Bro. Wyatt is steadily growing in favor with the people of this charge. This is now one of the best circuits in the Conference. We have some of the best people on this charge in the world. We have good churches at all the appointments on this charge. May God bless this charge, and may the people prosper and grow in grace and knowledge!"

Rev. G. D. Anders: "I have just returned from Bonita charge, Delhi district, where I spent eight days in a revival meeting with Rev. W. R. Harvell. There was a deep interest from beginning to the close. Some precious souls were converted, and if the meeting could have gone on for three or four days longer, there would have been many more conversions. Bro. Harvell is having a revival at every point on his work. Something near a hundred precious souls have been swept into the kingdom, and more to follow. His people are taking first-class care of their preacher and want him returned. I was domiciled at the parsonage and treated like a prince. Harvell has plenty to eat, and Sister Harvell knows how to make a weary itinerant feel at home. From present indications he will bring up the banner report from his district. I am quite sure that this would be the case if it were not for a mortal Barr on the south side of his work, and this Barr can't be moved for two years."

Rev. Geo. P. White: "I have been quite sick since my return from the 'wild,' have not been able to fill an appointment. I think I will be able to preach next Sabbath. Bro. F. N. Sweeney held a meeting for us at Concord. He did good and faithful work, which was honored by the Lord. The church was revived, three joined, several children baptized, some family altars erected. Bro. R. W. Tucker, 'our beloved presiding elder,' was present at the third Quarterly Conference at Morning Star, and preached to the delight and edification of all who heard him. He preached till Monday at noon; then Bro. J. W. Crisler, of Woodville, came to my rescue and preached twice per day till Thursday night. Bro. Crisler did a good work, and the people were delighted with him. Two joined, and seven children were baptized, and the church greatly strengthened. Our church at this place is in better condition in every respect than it has been for years. May the good Lord continue the good work! My people have been very kind to us in our sickness, caring for us and sympathizing with us. The above-named meetings were held in my absence, as I was not able to attend. Thanks to the brethren for their kindness."

DOWNSVILLE CIRCUIT, LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

The revival meetings on this work closed with the meeting held at Douglass, the third week in August. We held five protracted meetings with fairly good results at all points. We had considerable number of conversions and 36 accessions. As a whole, we consider the work deep and, we trust, abiding. At Douglass in particular the work was of a deep character. Several family altars were erected, old scores settled, and the church revived generally. We received 7 members, and four of them were past middle age. Bros. Ledbetter, Crews, Crocker and Pipes rendered us valuable aid.

It was with much reluctance and "fightings within" that we were forced to part from the good people of the Downsville circuit and return to school again; but the demands of the gospel, the rights of my church, and the dictates of my own conscience, and, I trust, the leadings of God's Spirit, compelled me to seek for a better preparation. The burning of the parsonage on the Downsville work since our leaving is a great calamity. May God bless those true, good people!

ROBT. W. VAUGHAN.

CARTHAGE CIRCUIT.

I am filling this year, as supply and assistant preacher in charge, three appointments on the Carthage circuit, of which Bro. M. L. White is preacher in charge.

I held my first protracted meeting at Pleasant Hill Church; had no ministerial help. Meeting closed Thursday. No accessions, but the church and Christians generally greatly revived, large congregations, the very best behavior, and quite a number of penitents.

My second protracted meeting was held at Rocky Point, commencing on the third Sunday in August and ending on Friday night following. Owing to a severe attack of bomaturial fever, which came near taking me to the other world, I was unable to attend, but Bro. White carried on the meeting, preaching twice a day to the delight and edification of all. His preaching was attended by the power of the Holy Spirit, and a gracious revival was the result. There were fourteen accessions and Christians were elevated to a higher and sweeter experience in the Christian life, many of them testifying to this effect from time to time during the meeting.

My third and last protracted meeting was held at Singleton, commencing on Saturday night before the fourth Sunday in August, and closing on Friday night following. I was able to attend this meeting, preaching, however, only four times during the meeting, and Bro. White did the balance. Here, as at Rocky Point, he preached with "power and demonstration of the Spirit," and we had one of the most gracious (old-fashioned Methodist) revivals I have attended in quite a while. Twenty-nine accessions to the church and Christians wonderfully blessed and built up. Our Baptist friends attended and participated in the meeting by singing and praying with us, and testifying to the power of God, and the uplifting of their own souls in Christian experience of "love, joy and peace." Bro. W. M. Sullivan organized a Methodist Church here four or five years ago with eight members, and we now number sixty-two. To God be all the glory! We are under many obligations to our Baptist friends for helping us build our church and support our protracted and quarterly meetings here since we first organized.

TEMPERANCE GAINS.

Despite the fact that strong eddies in the temperance current are plainly perceivable every now and then, there are indications not a few showing that the tide of opposition to the drink-evil is steadily increasing in volume and momentum, and bids fair in the not-distant future to sweep away like chaff the long established defenses of the liquorites. The mightiest contest of the future will be between the friends and the foes of the monstrous liquor traffic, which, though long tolerated by a suffering public, is unquestionably the greatest producer of crime, poverty, and disease known to man. As one reads the sickening story of the awful ravages of rum repeated a thousand times over in every country and in every age, the blood runs cold with horror. Hundreds of thousands have fallen victims to the rum fiend, countless homes have been blighted by his fell power, and widows and orphans without number have been made by his murderous hand; yet, still the awful work of destruction is allowed to go on, chiefly because of the tremendous political influence wielded by the wide-awake and thoroughly-organized legions to whom the liquor business is a source of revenue.

A brighter day, however, is about to dawn. One commonwealth after another is beginning to outlaw the traffic, while in every civilized country it is coming to be recognized as an unmitigated evil, and is being more and more restricted.

Time was when no questions were asked about the habits as to drink of the laboring or professional man; but now a wonderful change is noticeable. One of the first questions business men ask about one who wishes to serve them is, "Does he use intoxicants?" Nearly all the great railroad corporations of our country are pursuing the safe and commendable policy of employing, as far as possible, only men of temperate habits. With them it is not a mere matter of sentiment, but a measure of prudence and of financial profit. This attitude of many of the railroads towards the drink habit has had, as we might expect, a most wholesome effect. In a recent address before the railroad branch of the Y. M. C. A. of New York City, Chauncey M. Depew made the following encouraging statement regarding the decrease of drunkenness among railroad men: "Twenty years ago, when there were about 15,000 men in the New York Central service, the average proportion of men discharged for drunkenness within a certain period was at least 20 per cent. Now, with 30,000 men employed by the company, not one per cent. is dropped from the service for that cause."

Still another cheering sign is the fact that the Southern Pacific and the Union Pacific Railway Companies a short time ago issued orders prohibiting the sale of liquor in any of their eating-houses or stations, or on any of their property. The brewers, it is said, are greatly agitated over this order, and are trying to secure its repeal, but it is to be hoped that they will not succeed. The railroad companies, as well as the merchants, are finding out that prohibition greatly helps instead of injuring business. The oft-repeated cry of the saloon keeper is, "Prohibition means the ruin of trade and the abridgment of liberty." Yes, it does mean the ruin of the liquor business, but not of any other. It does abridge liberty, namely, that of making drunkards, widows and orphans, and of creating pauperism, crime, and endless disorder. What is true of the little town of Bolivar, Pa., located within fifty-eight miles of Pittsburg, is true of hundreds of other towns and communities where prohibition has had a fair trial. The principal business of Bolivar, which has not had a saloon in it for thirty years, is brick-making; the Reese Hammond Fire-Brick Company being in full control. This company has in its employ about two hundred and fifty men, nearly all of whom own their homes. There is no pauperism in the community, scarcely any suffering, scarcely any lawlessness, and no strife between capital and labor. Let the saloon, however, find lodgment there, and this ideal state of things would soon depart.

Forty-four years ago, when the liquor law was exacted, the Pine Maine Tree State was the poorest in the Union, and was burdened with a heavy debt. She supported thirty-five distilleries, a large number of breweries, and saloons and groggeries by the hundred. As the result of prohibition, there is now not a brewery, or a distillery, or an open saloon in the State. Every dollar of her public debt is paid, she has the lowest rate of taxation of any State in the Union, and ranks among the most progressive of our commonwealths. And yet some people say prohibition hurts business.

In an address on temperance in New York City, during March of this year, Congressman Johnson, of North Dakota, gave the following emphatic testimony regarding the benefits of prohibition in his own State: "Ten years ago the question was voted on and carried. The laws are so strict that it sometimes seems strange that you can get a judge to enforce them. We do, however, and we get convictions right along. The minimum for selling a glass of beer is a fine of $200 and ninety days in the penitentiary. A second conviction means a year. At first the capitalists were against the proposition, but after the law went into effect the stores formerly occupied by saloons were turned into shoe stores, at an increase in the rent. There are more pianos sold now in Dakota than in any other State of its size in the United States. The inhabitants now spend their money for pianos and silk dresses and parasols and shoes. It is a good law. We have seen it."

The Texas Liquor Dealer recently bewailed the fact that one-half of the populated area of the "Lone Star State" is under prohibition, fifty-five of the 220 organized counties being wholly so by local option.

Liquor men often try to scare taxpayers by asserting that the abolition of the saloon means a heavy decrease in revenue and a corresponding increase in taxation. But the enormous saving of the laboring classes that prohibition entails, and the increased prosperity that it brings to all lines of industry, demonstrate the fallacy of such an argument. When told that the liquor traffic meant large gains to the government, Gladstone replied, 'Give me thirty millions of sober people, and I will give you all the revenue you want, and a surplus."

The world took a grand stride forward when the Peace Conference met at The Hague to consider the question of international disarmament. Scarcely less significant, however, is the announcement that an International Congress on the drink question has been called by the French Republic, to meet in Paris in April, 1900, our government having already received an invitation to participate therein. Since the ravages of rum are even greater than the ravages of war, the holding of such a congress at the close of the nineteenth century is to be hailed as an event of mighty importance; and this proposition, coming from a nation hitherto the most backward in temperance reform, ought to meet with a hearty response from every civilized government on the globe.

"AWAY FROM ROME."

A movement which has the words above for its rallying cry is extending through the Roman Catholic countries of Europe in a marvelous manner, and bids fair to produce the most significant results. The Abbe Bonrrier is its principal leader in France. He resigned a high position in Marseilles a few years ago, and has been followed out of the church by several other abbes and very many priests. He has published since 1897 a monthly religious journal called The French Christian, which has some thousands of subscribers, fifteen hundred of them being Roman Catholic priests. He has established at Sevres a house for the "escaped ones," as the ex-priests are called, and a college at Paris to train them as evangelists. He has started an evangelization society, every member of which is an ex-priest. These men are going to every part of France and preaching, not to the Protestants—they do not call themselves Protestants yet—but to the Roman Catholic population. Their old parishioners welcome them with open arms. There is a marvelous stir among all classes of the people. It is thought, from the extensive correspondence that is being carried on, that there is definite ground for believing that when this movement is properly organized between four and five thousand Roman Catholic priests will withdraw themselves from the church. Many who have been soundly converted to a scriptural Christianity are remaining for the present in their places, hoping that the church itself may be lifted out of mediæval superstition and delivered from the political tyranny of a foreign head. Whether they will be able to establish a national church subject only to the authority of Christ is, of course, very doubtful. But there is no telling to what this matter may grow, and it is certainly one of the most striking signs of the times.

There are similar signs in other countries. There is a very large movement away from Rome in Austria, partly political, we judge, but not wholly so, and fraught with large moment. As many as eight thousand persons are said to have joined the Reformed Church during the last few months. No fewer than ten thousand persons in one district in Bohemia are prepared to enter the Protestant Church. South Germany is also getting affected, and the whole Catholic population seems likely to feel the thrill. The authorities are becoming anxious and resorting to persecution of various sorts, but this will not mend matters for them. The errors of the papacy and the immoralities of the priesthood are being denounced, and much light is pouring in.

There are still other cheering tokens along the same line. The English Wesleyan Mission in Spain is greatly encouraged by the recent addition to its preaching force of one who had been a very popular priest, and who, since his conversion, has addressed great crowds with much power. In northern Italy the Waldensian and the Free Church pastors are meeting with large success, the numbers attending their services being without precedent and very eager to hear the gospel. The organ of the Irish Presbyterian Church speaks of greatly increased interest and hopefulness in regard to the missions to Roman Catholics in Ireland, which country, it says, is becoming less and less hostile to the message of the gospel every year. In short, it is about the same story all around. Rome has suffered immense losses through the emigration from Europe and Ireland to America, will suffer largely through the recent defeat of Spain and the loss of all her colonies, and seems clearly on every side to be destined to give way to Protestantism. She has brought her decline on her own head through her obstinate refusal to learn anything and her continued acceptance of the rule of the Black Pope—that is, the General of the Jesuits, who dominates everything in the councils of the Vatican.—The Methodist Review, September-October.

LITERARY NOTES.

BY W. F. B.

In the October Cosmopolitan Magazine Mark Twain writes on "Christian Science and the Book of Mrs. Eddy." Frank Eberle contributes an article treating of the "Great Industries of the United States"—Zinc-Mining. "The Lady in the Box" is the title of a short story by Frank R. Stockton. C. P. Stetson tells "What Work Is," and J. B. Walker presents "A Plan for the Organization of a National Clearing-House."

The October number of the Pall Mall Magazine contains several articles of exceptional interest, and the usual number of stories, illustrated poems, etc. Under the title, "The American Language," Mr. William Archer discusses the question of "Americanism" with a thorough knowledge and sympathy for the subject. "Some Literary Landmarks of Paris" is an interesting paper to all lovers of good literature. "The Peace Society, and What It Has Accomplished," is an authoritative article by Dr. Evans Darby, the honorary secretary of the Peace Society.

The entire October Open Court is devoted to a consideration of the varied and manifold relations which exist between Germany and the United States. The opening article is devoted to an appreciation of the surpassing intellectual significance of Germany for civilization; the second article is on the Religion of Frederick the Great, by Prof. W. H. Carruth, of the University of Kansas, with metrical translations of some of the religious poetry of the great royal philosopher, and also with illustrations from Adolf Menzel's paintings representative of Frederick's life.

Bishop Potter contributes the first article in the October number of Appletons' Popular Science Monthly; it is entitled, "The Help That Harms," and is a discussion of the charity question from the moralist's point of view. "Christian Science from a Physician's Point of View" is the title of an article by Dr. John B. Huber. Prof. William H. Hudson, of Stanford University, is the author of an interesting paper entitled, "Bacon's Idols." Under the title, "A Feathered Parasite," L. S. Keyser describes the American "cow-bird," which has the curious habit of placing its eggs in the nests of other birds to have them hatched.

The October number of Self-Culture Magazine presents a handsome portrait of Admiral Dewey, and the Table of Contents displays a list of articles that will please all classes of readers. The "Social Salons of Our National Capital" continues the series of beautiful illustrations begun in the September number under the title of "Homes of the Diplomatic Corps at Washington." The work of the Armour Institute of Technology at Chicago is described in an interesting paper. Other illustrated articles are: "Twenty-five Years of Johns Hopkins University," "In Love's Dear Thrall," "The Old Missions of California," and "Chattanooga and Chickamauga." A lucid description of "Liquid Air: Its Nature and Possibilities," is of very timely interest; "The Truth about the Philippines" gives some personal experiences in "our new possessions."

MILLSAPS COLLEGE.

We invite special attention to the following from Dr. Murrah:

MR EDITOR: Please let me say to the readers of the ADVOCATE that we are going on with our work at Millsaps College, and do not feel that we are in peril because some yellow fever has been reported in Jackson. We have cut off communication with the town, and will continue this policy while the present conditions prevail. There is no yellow fever anywhere near the college, and all precautionary measures will be adopted to prevent its introduction.

W. B. MURRAH,
President.

DATE CHANGED.

Bishop Galloway has requested me to announce a change in date of holding the Louisiana Conference—from Wednesday, Dec. 6, to Thursday, Dec. 7. JOHN T. SAWYER.

INJUNCTION DISSOLVED.

The injunction suit of the Yocona Mills vs. H. P. Gibbs, which was temporarily granted by Judge J. C. Longstreet last April, restraining the said Rev. H. P. Gibbs from writing and having published in the Methodist Headlight a series of articles styled, "The Factory and Its People," and which had already, in consequence of the nature of the case and the publicity which had been given to it, become known far and wide, and had enlisted general attention, and which concerned every true and faithful minister of the gospel of the Lord Jesus, in that the nature and scope of the work of the ministry was directly involved in the injunction, because of the certain infringement, curtailing and restricting of the rights and privileges of all agencies for good, and especially the ministry, was tried in the court-house, this city, Saturday, Sept. 2 and after a patient and full hearing and careful consideration of all the facts, evidence and the law governing the case, the motion to dissolve was sustained, and the injunction was wholly dissolved by His Honor, Judge Longstreet.

No one doubts the righteousness of the decision of the judge, it being in the interest of the rights of the ministry, the freedom of the press, and the liberty and good of all concerned. Notice was given that the case would be appealed.—Methodist Headlight.

Bishop Hendrix, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, arrived in New York last week by the steamer "Havelius" from Brazil, where he held the Brazil Conference. He spent forty days in Brazil, and was greatly pleased with the evidences of missionary progress which he observed. He regards Brazil as one of the most hopeful and promising missionary fields in the world. The Methodist Episcopal Church, South, has about 2,400 members in Brazil, and twelve missionaries. During his stay in Brazil Bishop Hendrix was able to visit only ten charges, but wherever he went he found devoted and enthusiastic workers. He presented the claims of the Twentieth Century Fund, and among these ten charges he secured over $10,000 in contributions, running from eight cents to $500 each. This is a remarkable record of giving, when all the circumstances are considered.—Zion's Herald.

NOTES.

The address of Dr. W. H. LaPrade has been changed to 1407 State Street.

Rev. V. D. Skipper has removed to 937 Marengo street.

Rev. J. F. Foster has a meeting in progress at Felicity, which will continue through this week and the next.

The New Orleans District Sunday-school Conference will be held at Carondelet, Oct. 24-26. An interesting programme has been arranged and a good attendance is anticipated.

Tulane University opened on Monday last with an enrollment of 140. This is a considerable increase over the opening of '98, although the opening is a month earlier than last year. It is known that the enrollment will be largely increased during the next few days.

The Woman's College of Oxford is enjoying great prosperity. Its opening, as shown in our issue of last week, was quite large, and the prospects are that in a short while its boarding department will be full. This is a very remarkable showing for a college of high grade in its first session.

Under date of Oct. 2, Rev. C. A. Powell, pastor of our church at Crystal Springs, Miss., writes the following cheering note: "Education Day was observed here yesterday. The programme was followed up to the points where the sermon was to come in. There we had a parenthesis. The collection amounted to one hundred and eight dollars. The matter was placed in the hands of an influential committee of seven Christian women, who will carry it forward to a successful issue."

There lies on our table a copy of the "Minutes of the Twentieth Annual Session of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society of the Mississippi Conference, M. E. Church, South"—a neatly gotten-up pamphlet bearing the imprint of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE. As a record of the proceedings of the Conference, it seems to be full. The secretarial work is apparently done with care and skill. The officers of the society for the ensuing year are: Miss Addie V. Marshall, president; Mrs. A. A. Foote, vice-president; Mrs. C. R. McQueen, recording secretary; Miss Sallie E. Smylie, corresponding secretary; Miss Mary Andrews, treasurer; Mrs. Jas. A. Gulley, auditor.

The public schools of New Orleans opened on the second with an attendance of 23,886.

Rev. R. A. Sibley, Jr., writes: "We have just closed a meeting ... resulted in seven bright conversions, and thirteen accessions to the church, and a great spiritual uplift to the church and community."

Rev. M. L. White, Carthage, Miss., says: "Closed meeting last Sunday at Liberty (Edenburg) which resulted in 21 accessions and seven conversions. Accessions to date, 7. The good Lord is greatly blessing us. Our school is increasing in interest and numbers."

Greatly to the regret of the friends and patrons of Millsaps College, Prof. W. L. Weber has resigned and accepted the same chair—that of English—in Emory College. He leaves for his new field of labor last week. Emory is to be congratulated upon such an accession to her faculty.

Rev. G. W. Gordon writes: "Ellisville circuit has made some progress this year. About 30 souls claim conversion, and 21 joined our church. The people at Marion will soon have their new church ready for use. May the spirit of church building continue until three other houses on this charge are torn down and new ones built. We hope to make a fair financial showing at Conference."

Writing from Knox Point, under date of Sept. 25, Rev. W. G. Evans says: "At my Quarterly Conference yesterday, after a talk by the preacher in charge, Dr. Sawyer asked the congregation of 25 people (large for the work) for $200, and 15 people in a few minutes cheerfully gave $210. We have several others to see soon. ... we have only 38 members here, consider this a good start."

Our editorial of last week, "Children and the Church," has received most hearty commendation from many sources. As a sample utterance, we present the following from the pen of Rev. J. P. Duke: "I thank you for the timely editorial on 'The Children and the Church.' This is a question demanding the trenchant handling, lest our children go utterly away from the faith of their fathers."

Rev. L. J. Jones, writing from Walnut Grove, Miss., says: "We have gotten through with our protracted meetings. Revs. H. J. McDonald, P. L. White, P. H. Howse, T. J. O'Neal and Rev. Atwood, of the P. E. Church, assisted us. All did the work well. We had several accessions to the church. Many testified in our meetings, determined to live better lives. After all these good meetings we expect a good collection."

Writing to the Nashville Advocate of the last session of the Brazilian Conference of the M. E. Church, South, Bishop Hendrix says: "A young lawyer, a cousin of President Campos Salles, was received on trial, and hope is expressed that the prediction of Dom Pedro may be realized when the late Emperor placed his hand on the head of the schoolboy years ago and said: 'This lad will some day be a great blessing to Brazil.' The report showed some 500 adult baptisms and 341 infant baptisms, with a net increase of 335 in the membership of our church in Brazil, which is now 2,336. The spirit of self-support increasing every year."

On Sunday morning, at 11 A. M., Dr. W. L. C. Haunicutt ascended the pulpit and delivered a sermon of great power. The Doctor was in fine trim, and being greeted by a large audience, he seemed inspired for the occasion, and for more than an hour he swung clear—never failing in a single flight. Long the "star" preacher of the Mississippi Conference, his pulpit powers are ever on the increase. We are readily persuaded to the opinion that the lofty character and matchless scope of that sermon will intensify, magnify and multiply millennial agencies. Its worth, far beyond human calculation, above rubies and pearls and diamonds, will be known only when "the jewels are gathered up" at that day.—Rev. C. W. Scott, in Fayette (Miss.) Chronicle.

TESTIMONIAL.

July 28, 1889.

Dear Sirs:—I have used Brodie's Astringent Cordial in my family, and am using the third bottle. It always acts like a charm upon my children, correcting ailments of the bowels better than any medicine I ever tried. * * *
Yours, most respectfully,
MRS. A. W. MOORE.

MISSISSIPPI.

REV. HENRY G. HAWKINS, Madison, Miss. ASSOCIATE EDITOR.

The League of Madison held a social and business meeting on Wednesday evening, Sept. 27, at the residence of the president, Mrs. Margie Cronch. Some plans were made for the season's work. Two or three hours after the crowd had disbanded thunderings, as of cannon, were heard, arousing from slumber. It was the exploding of powder cans and oil tanks in mercantile establishments, for the town was on fire. Four store-houses, including all the merchandise of two, the meat market, tailor's shop, barber's shop, mayor's office, and a law office, are in ashes.

The purpose of the League reading course is to give the Leaguers spiritualized mental pabulum. What our people need is a sanctified knowledge. The youth who this Fall and Winter read and ponder the four books of the League course will get thereby mental and spiritual exhilaration.

Wanted: Young men and women who will read and think and do.

At the literary meetings it would be well to have an occasional reading from The Epworth Era. Sometimes also have some one to take up a certain issue of the Era, and comment upon the leading articles.

It is very rare that all the members of a chapter have the inclination to do anything like reading the course, but, if only a half-dozen will undertake this work, it is the thing to do. Have the reading circle; run this little wheel within the larger wheel. Sometimes a little wheel is very important in the operation of mighty machinery.

The editor for Mississippi will appreciate it, and it will help him in his work, if the secretary of each chapter in the Seashore, Brookhaven, Greenville and Columbus districts will, during the next two weeks, send him a short "write-up" of what literary work is being done or proposed in the chapter.

What a great many young men need is the love of a book. The young man or young lady who likes serious reading will not be satisfied with the society of the idle and unaspiring. Those who have learned to love the association of the great authors find enjoyment there, and are saved from the perils of the street and pleasure-hall.

A Word with Honest, Thinking Christian Readers.

You have a friend who is unfortunately the victim of the opium morphine or whiskey habit—the victim of mistaken purpose—having been led into the habit by using the narcotic for the relief of pain, whose life you can make better and home brighter by pointing out the way to freedom; "little acts of kindness." There is but one path back to freedom. To this end a treatment must take into account the segregation of nerve molecules—the result of morphine; must rebuild wasted nerve tissue, secure cohesion of nerve force, and thus re-establish the will, without which there is no lasting cure. The Specific Remedy Co., of Lafayette, Indiana, alone offers such a cure, positive as truth and harmless as a glass of milk—a fact fully proven by thousands of physicians, men of integrity and high standing in their profession. A treatment free from pain, exposure, or loss of time, and in reasonable time. They do not promise to cure in from three to five days—an impossible thing—and if they or anyone promises to cure any drug habit in three or five days, the writer believes that patient so cured do will never die of yellow or typhoid fever, small-pox, cholera, or consumption. The Specific Remedy Co., Lafayette, Ind., publish a booklet, "How Cured," describing their cure, with full particulars which they cheerfully send free to anyone interested on application. "Prove all things, hold fast that which is good." In all cases it is well to "look before you leap" to investigate.

THE BEST EVER MADE.

The very best premium offer we have ever made is our Sewing Machine Offer now running. You get the machine at a fabulously low price, and with it get a six months' subscription free. You have different styles to select from, and you have ten days to test the machine. Don't fail to read our offer.

PIANOS AND ORGANS BY MAIL.

The immense advantage in purchasing from us by the mail system is the guaranteed selection on the part of the oldest and largest music house South.

Selling over one thousand pianos and organs each year, and buying goods in enormous quantities, enables us to give those dealing direct the benefit of the closest possible prices on high-grade pianos and organs.

Dealing direct with the customer by mail enables us to eliminate all such items as agents' commission, hotel bills, etc., and to give our customers prices that many factories do not equal to their wholesale trade. Each piano or organ selected by us goes from our warerooms with a guarantee that if it is not as recommended, it can be returned at our expense. Any customer in the South can obtain our lowest net price by mail, and in case of purchase, the selection and instrument will be absolutely guaranteed, and from five to seven years' trial allowed to test same.

Easy payments will be accepted, and old pianos or organs will be received as part-payment.

Having been in business in New Orleans half a century buying and selling all grades of instruments we are in a position to judge of the merits and demerits of the different makes, and to know their adaptability to our trying climate. We give our customers the advantage of that experience.

SPECIAL OFFER ON COMBINATION BIBLES.

From now until the fifteenth of October we will sell our Combination Bible to any subscriber who will pay his subscription one full year in advance, viz, to October, 1900, at the very low price of $1.65. To those who will pay their subscription two full years in advance, viz, to October, 1901, we will sell it for $1 20. Read description and testimonials in this issue. After Oct. 15 the prices given in our regular offer will prevail.

N. B.—No commissions can be given under this offer.

Oliver Wendell Holmes once said, during the mighty struggle between the States, that the constant cry of the masses was for bread and newspapers. Now, since more than a third of a century has changed the political and financial issues, the great cry in the Southern States is for a pleasant and reliable Chill Tonic. Dicks' Chillifuge complies with this demand. It is as pleasant as orange syrup, and as prompt to cure malaria as the bitter Sulphate of Quinine. If you have a case of Chills or Fever which you can not break, try Chillifuge, and enjoy life once more.

Read What Is Said of the "Combination" Bible.

"I give your 'Combination' Bible my commendation and endorsement without one qualifying word."—Bishop Scarborough, Trenton, N. J.

"It should be in the hands of every clergyman."—Bishop Leonard, Cleveland, O.

"One of the most valuable forms in which the Holy Bible has been presented to the public."—Bishop Clark, Providence, R. I.

"Unique in plan, extraordinary in scope and exceptional in value. The arrangement of the two editions is most helpful."—Bishop Huntington, Syracuse, New York.

"I consider it as a great gift to every Bible student, and I hope that it will find a place in the hands of every Sunday-school teacher in our country."—Bishop Dudley, Louisville, Ky.

"It is a most valuable contribution to biblical typography and literature, a mine of information."—Bishop Atwill, Kansas City, Mo.

"I have carefully examined it from end to end and find it complete in all things. I give it my unqualified and emphatic endorsement."—Bishop Mallalieu, Buffalo, N. Y.

"There are great advantages in it for students, and especially for teachers. I give the plan of combining the two versions my most cordial approval."—Bishop Merrill, Chicago, Ill.

"The Combination and self-pronouncing features make it the most practically useful Bible that has ever been published."—Bishop Spalding, Denver, Colo.

"The handsomest and most serviceable edition of the Holy Scriptures that has come under my notice. The Bible Helps contain all that is essential."—Bishop Ninde, Detroit, Mich.

"The best, for use of teachers and students, ever published."—Bishop Wilson, Baltimore, Md.

"It deserves a place in every home."—Bishop Vincent, Topeka, Kan.

"It is one of the most perfect editions of the Bible I have ever seen."—Bishop Whipple, Faribault, Minn.

Are Your Kidneys Weak?

Have You Bladder or Uric Acid Trouble?

You May Be Afflicted and Not Know It.

To Prove for Yourself the Wonderful Curative Properties of Swamp-Root, the Great Kidney Remedy, Every Reader of The "CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE" May Have a Sample Bottle Sent Absolutely Free by Mail.

It is now conceded by eminent scientists that the most important organs of the body are the kidneys. They filter your blood and work away night and day, whether you are asleep or awake.

People are apt to believe that kidney disease is a rather rare disease, but statistics have proven that it is a most common trouble.

And the proof of this is that most diseases, perhaps 85 per cent., are caused in the beginning by disorders of the kidneys.

BECAUSE they fail to filter your blood.

Your other organs may need care—but your kidneys most, because they do most.

If you are sick, begin doctoring your kidneys, because as soon as they are well they will help all the other organs, to health.

When your kidneys are not doing their work some of the symptoms which prove it to you are pain or dull ache in the back, rheumatic pains, sciatica, sediment in the urine, scanty supply, scalding irritation in passing it, obliged to go often during the day and to get up many times during the night; uric acid, sleeplessness, nervous irritability, sallow, unhealthy complexion, puffy or dark circles under the eyes, loss of energy and ambition. If your water when allowed to remain undisturbed for twenty-four hours forms a sediment or settling, or has a cloudy appearance, it is evidence that your kidneys and bladder need immediate attention.

Swamp-Root is the great medical triumph of the 19th century, discovered after years of untiring effort and research, by the famous kidney and bladder specialist, Dr. Kilmer. It will be found by both men and women just what is needed in all cases of kidney, liver, bladder and uric acid troubles.

This famous new discovery, Swamp-Root, will set your whole system right.

The best proof of this is a trial, and nothing could be fairer than the offer to send a sample bottle of Swamp-Root and a book telling all about it, and containing some of the thousands upon thousands of testimonial letters received from sufferers cured. Both the sample bottle and book will be sent absolutely free, by mail, to any address.

DR. KILMER'S
SWAMP-ROOT
Kidney, Liver and Bladder
CURE.
DIRECTIONS.
May take one, two or three teaspoonfuls before or after meals and at bedtime.
Children less according to age.
May commence with small doses and increase to full dose or more, as the case would seem to require.
This great remedy cures all kidney, liver, bladder and Uric Acid troubles and disorders due to weak kidneys, such as catarrh of the bladder, gravel, rheumatism, lumbago and Bright's Disease, which is the worst form of kidney disease.
It is pleasant to take.
PREPARED ONLY BY
DR. KILMER & CO.
BINGHAMTON, N. Y.
Sold by all Druggists.

One half the size. Size—one quarter the $1.00 size.

The great discovery, Swamp-Root, is so remarkably successful that our readers are advised to write for a free sample bottle, and to be sure and mention reading this generous offer in the NEW ORLEANS "CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE" when sending their addresses to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y.

If you are already convinced that Swamp-Root is what you need, you can purchase the regular fifty-cent and one-dollar size bottles at drug stores. Don't make any mistake, but remember the name, Swamp-Root, Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root.

SPANISH-AMERICAN WAR PANORAMA

is one of the war books which is likely to be in continuous demand. It is a panoramic record of the triumph of Yankee Doodle. The eagle flaps his wings on every page, and "Old Glory" waves around and above every scene. Prominent officers connected with the war are here portrayed, as well as many of the "men behind the guns." Military life is pictured to the eye, from recruiting to guard mount and skirmish line. Nor is the ludicrous omitted. The company cook receives the attention due to his importance; the mess is shown; cavalry scenes are given; the hospital arrangements are depicted; the heroines of the Red Cross service are displayed; street scenes in Havana, Santiago and elsewhere are unrolled, the new citizens or subjects (which are they?) of Uncle Sam appear and disappear as the leaves are turned.

In a word, the gazer visits the new localities and sees the tumultuous new life, without the risk or expense of a sea voyage.

The Album is 5½x8 inches, weighs 12 ounces, printed on finest coated paper.

Sent FREE to any address in the United States, Canada, or Mexico, for 12 cents in stamps or coin, to cover postage and packing. Copy may be seen at any ticket office of the Big Four Route.

Order at once, as the edition is limited.

Address WARREN J. LYNCH, General Passenger and Ticket Agent "Big Four Route," Cincinnati, Ohio.

OUR $1 OFFER.

Much has been said about reducing the subscription price of the ADVOCATE. The only way in which a reduction can be brought about is by an increase in the number of subscribers. In order to facilitate this result, we make the following offer: Until further notice we will take new subscriptions at the rate of $1 for eight months. When seven thousand five hundred new names have been sent in at this rate with the cash, we will extend the time four months longer, thus reducing the price to $1 per annum. When the extension is made, old subscribers will get the benefit as well as new ones, provided they first pay up all arrearages. Of course, no commissions can be given under this offer. Address

THE MOTHER'S DREAM.

Hoy, your mother's dreaming; there's a picture
pure and bright
That gladdens all her homely tasks at morning,
noon, and night;
A picture where is blended all the beauty born of hope,
A view that takes the whole of life within its loving scope.

She is dreaming, fondly dreaming of the future when
Her boy shall stand the equal of his grandest fellow-men.
Her boy, whose heart with goodness she has labored to imbue,
Shall be, in her declining years, her lover proud and true.

She's growing old; her cheeks have lost the blush and bloom of Spring,
But O, her heart is proud because her son shall be a king;
Shall be a king of noble deeds, with goodness crowned, and own
The hearts of all his fellow-men, and she shall share his throne.

Hoy, your mother's dreaming; there's a picture
pure and bright
That gladdens all her homely tasks at morning,
noon, and night—
A view that takes the whole of life within its loving scope.
O, boy, beware! You must not mar that mother's dream of hope.

HOW GOD WORKS.

God works through persons. This is his invariable law. He links a man or woman to his purpose as a co-worker. Moses must superintend the Exodus; Deborah must lead his armies; Cyrus must issue the decree for the return of his captives; the twelve apostles must act as witnesses to his Son, and the 120 filled with the energy of his spirit must carry the gospel of salvation to the ends of the earth. Thus it is in the history inside the lids of the sacred Book; Luther must be the head and front in the Reformation in Germany; John Knox must be the soul of the Reformation in Scotland; Wesley must break the ecclesiastical shackles in England; Abraham Lincoln must pen the emancipation proclamation in the United States of America.

If God's truth is to succeed, it must incarnate itself; if God's cause is to win a victory, it must embody itself in a person. There is no substitute for whole souled, consecrated persons. Without them liberty perishes from the earth; without them abstract truth is simply principle on paper devoid of influence; and without them even the Bible itself remains forever a thing of cold type. The fifteenth Psalm needs to be incarnated in a Nathanael; when it is thus incarnated, then it walks Judea an impressive and spiritual beauty known and read in the community. The Old Testament needs to be incarnated in a Naomi; when it is thus incarnated, then it walks over into the land of Moab and converts the heathen Ruth to God and makes her a beautiful ancestress of Jesus Christ. God works through persons.

While God works through persons—and nothing in human history is clearer than this—yet the point before us at this time is this: something is requisite upon the part of those through whom God works in order to the success of his purposes and his principles and his gospel. Those through whom he works must be possessed by his purpose, and must be all on fire with his principles and must be full of his divine power. Elijah, the prophet of fire, succeeded, but he succeeded because the whole man was in his mission. The half of Elijah would have failed. The one hundred and twenty, who got their inspiration on the day of Pentecost, succeeded, but they succeeded because they kept nothing back from the cause of the gospel and shrank from nothing to which their mission called them.—Rev. David Gregg, D. D.

CHARACTER.

The best thing in this world is a good man. The greatest thing in this world is a great good man. The most blessed thing in this world is a blessed good man. The first thing that a human being should recognize about himself is that his character is his distinguishing feature. It is not the amount of money, the amount of power, the amount of brains that a man has that is his distinguishing feature, but his character. Whatever fellow-men may temporarily say or do to the contrary, this is a fact: that what separates him from others and gives him his individuality is his goodness or lack of goodness according to its degree. Money, power and brains have their place, and they do exert an influence in temporarily deciding a man's position and recognition. But the standard of the ages, by which anyone and everyone is tried, is character; and in God's sight, which is the final and determining sight, men are what they are in their wishes and purposes. It is not, then, too much to say that the supreme ambition of a person's life should be to secure a worthy character. Everything else, however important, is merely subsidiary. Beauty of person, brilliancy of achievement, acuteness of intellect, sway of authority, are secondary, while goodness is primary.—J. G. K. McClure.

W. C. BRYANT AND HIS WIFE.

The mutual love of Bryant and his wife, Fanny Fairchild, produced one of the most ideal marriages that is recorded in the history of celebrated men. A devoted and very dear friend of them both says:

"The union between Mr. and Mrs. Bryant was a poem of the tenderest rhythm. Any of us who remember Mr. Bryant's voice when he said 'Frances' will join in his hope that she kept the same beloved name in heaven. I remember alluding to those exquisite lines, 'The Future Life,' to Mrs. Bryant, and her replying, 'O, my dear, I am always sorry for anyone who sees me after reading those lines; they must be so disappointed.'"

Bryant, at the death of his wife, said:

"I never wrote a poem that I did not repeat it to her, and take her judgment upon it. I found its success with the public to be precisely in proportion to the impression it made upon her."

She was the blessing and stay of his life for forty-five years, and he was her poet and lover at seventy as at seventeen.—Great Thoughts.

DICKENS.

Dr. F. W. Farrar, the Dean of Canterbury, pays the following strong and beautiful tribute to the genius and usefulness of the late Charles Dickens: "It is immensely to the credit of the heart of the novelist and will be a permanent addition to his fame, not only that he devoted fiction to the high end of exposing manifold social abuses, but even that by the force of his genius he contributed a material element to their correction. If cheap private schools are no longer what once they sometimes were, it is due in part to Nicholas Nickleby. Oliver Twist helped to bring about the improvement of work-houses, and Little Dorrit of debtor's jails, and Bleak House of the Court of Chancery, and David Copperfield of Doctor's Commons. Fiction could have had no loftier aim than such an amelioration of social conditions." The novel is not only a source of instruction and amusement, but also an engine of power. It would be impossible to read the great masterpieces of fiction without a broader outlook upon life and a conscious uplift toward better things. Fiction has come to stay.—Literary Life.

THE BRIGHT SIDE.

It has been told us that if we wish to make ourselves miserable, we have only to complain and find fault with our surroundings. The misery will come of itself if we give it such encouragement. If anyone determines the earth is a howling wilderness, to him it is a howling wilderness. We can evoke shadows wherever we wish, and pain will come for our asking, or even for our believing, if we give it the proper patronage. But it is just as sure that if we wish to be happy, we can be so under the conditions in which God places us, no matter what those conditions may be. The shepherd of Salisbury Plain was poor, afflicted, overworked, and beset with embarrassments with which most of us would be appalled, but he knew nothing of unhappiness because he saw God in all, and felt that from him there can come nothing but blessing for his children. Let us look at the bright side and cultivate a thankful spirit, and to every soul, no matter how burdened, the day will break and the shadows flee away.—Exchange.

NEVER HEARD A PRAYER AT HOME.

I shall never forget the impression made upon me during the first year of my ministry, by a mechanic whom I had visited, and on whom I urged the paramount duty of family prayer. One day he entered my study, bursting into tears as he said: "You remember that girl, sir? She was my only child. She died suddenly this morning. She has gone, I hope, to God; but if so, she can tell him, what now breaks my heart, that she never heard a prayer in her father's house, or from her father's lips! O that she were with me but for one day again!"—Norman Mc Leod.

TRUE TEACHING.

There is no true teaching that does not inculcate moral conduct. The school that ignores the development of the moral sense and fails to inculcate the highest and purest morality in the character of its discipline fails in its most important duty. The very atmosphere of the schoolroom should be such as to inoculate the child with the purer and nobler sentiment of our human nature. It is not conduct merely, but the motives that prompt it, that it should be carefully guarded by the teacher.—Educational Exchange.

Hygiene.

A FELON CURE.

It is a remarkable remedy. Take the yolk of an egg and an equal quantity of strained honey; one tablespoon of spirits of turpentine, freshly drawn, and one teaspoonful of spirits of camphor. Mix well and thicken with flour to the consistency of a thin paste. Spread upon the sore thin and cold. It takes hold with astonishing power and draws matters to a crisis rapidly—even extracts the feverish blood itself, half formed into pus, and makes clean work with felonish fingers. Everyone ought to know it.—Exchange.

PRICE REDUCED.

GRACE—Elizabeth Cornelia Grace, the daughter of Perry Humphry Hanna, was born in East Carroll parish, March 18, 1853, and departed this life at Pleasmine Bridge, Acadia parish, June 7, 1899.

After the death of her father her widowed mother moved with her family from East Carroll to West Carroll parish, and settled near Floyd. It was here she first gave her young womanhood to Christ, and united with the M. E. Church, South. To use her own language: Like many others, I was not as consistent in my life and as faithful to my church vows as I ought to have been. I did not, however, sever my connection with the church." After several years her mother moved back to East Carroll with her family, taking their church certificates, and, with her mother, gave her letter in at Lake Providence. Sister Grace said, "I resolved to be more active in the church than ever before," which resolution she kept with great pertinacity and faithfulness until she crossed over the flood.

In 1895 she was married to R. C. Grace, a member of the Louisiana Conference. She at once entered upon the duties and self-denial of an itinerant preacher's wife, endeavoring to adapt herself to her new environment and sphere of action, and most wonderfully did she succeed. It was Sister Grace's ambition to promote the happiness and ministerial usefulness of her husband; hence she shared his toil and sacrifice without murmuring at her lot and complaining about her surroundings. Having no issue, she was at liberty to travel with him, which she did extensively, and in this way was a great comfort as well as a great help in his pastoral labors. She sought her husband's approbation in all things, and, finding it, her satisfaction was complete, her domestic happiness perfect. She deferred to his judgment in matters, and, therefore, their life and association was exempt from antagonism, and acknowledged perfect immunity from domestic discord and heated controversy. Thus home became the most delightful spot on earth and joyous precinct outside of heaven. Perhaps in the instance of Bro. Grace and his little wife (as he often appellated her) the teaching of our Lord concerning the relation of marriage had the fullest exemplification, "They twain shall be one flesh." The disturbance of a connubial bliss and domestic union so full and delectations is one of the providences of the Most High and permission of our Father in heaven, which admits of no satisfactory decipheration or reasonable explanation until the disclosure of eternity and the revelation of the judgment day shall be fully known and clearly comprehended. Until then we bow with supreme submission to him who worketh all things according to the good pleasure of his will."

The closing up of such a life could not be otherwise than glorious beyond depiction. For some days before her departure her religious frame of mind was attended by great enlargement and augmentation. In conversation with a friend she said: "I have recently thought so much of heaven. It is constantly before me. In whatever direction I turn its visions break upon my gaze, and its glories fill my soul with rapturous awe." If her life was beautifully consistent, her death was a glorious triumph over the king of terrors.

When informed by her grief-stricken husband of her speedy dissolution, the intelligence was received by her with heroic calmness and serenity. Looking into the face of her husband, who was watching by her bedside eager to catch every word that fell from her dying lips, she said, "Jesus is come for me, and I must go." Her husband replied, "Dear, I don't want you to leave me." She answered: "Yes; but Jesus says I must go. It will not be long before you will follow me. Do your work, and then come home. I will meet you at the gate." She sang with a strong voice, her husband joining her,

"'Tis so sweet to trust in Jesus,
Just to take him at his word."

Then in a few moments her blood-washed spirit, on wings of light, swept upward through ether's trackless waste to the city of gold, which, on reaching, she entered the pearly portals, and by kindred dear welcomed to the throne and companionship of the blest.

Weep not, my Bro. Grace; your loss is her eternal gain. Soon, if faithful, you will join her in realms of fadeless glory, never to part and never to suffer more. "I heard a voice from heaven saying unto me, Write, blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth; yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors, and their works do follow them."

BAINS—How attractive is the life of a young man, industrious, honorable and truthful, in these days of dissipation, idleness, and greed of gain without labor! How beautiful, well defined and prominent is the young child correct habits! Such was the life of our young brother, Willie S. Bains.

Reared in a family of correct dealings, he seemingly absorbed, without perception or effort, the refined and moral higher life of a Christian gentleman. Right living seemed to be the uppermost thought of his mind. He did not associate with nor entertain the thoughts of wild, frolicking life. Pure and chaste in conversation, uprightness in dealing with his fellow-men, and devotion to the God of the Bible, were the prominent features of his life. Such a life truly won for him a high place in the tender affections of his family. It also won for him the highest esteem, and attracted the attention of the notable busy world. Seldom, if ever, without employment, rising all the while until he reached an enviable place in the United States Navy Department at Key West.

While at home, in childhood and youth, he was a faithful member and constant attendant of the Methodist Sunday-school at Valden; and wherever his duties called him, he at once connected himself with the Sunday school, thus associating himself with the students of the Bible. At the time of his death "he was teacher of twelve bright little boys, who loved him dearly." His beautiful, simple Christian life won for him a host of Christian friends wherever he went.

In the Spring of 1893 he received a position in the Navy Department at Key West, where he labored unflinchingly during the epidemic of yellow fever. He was soon promoted to the honorable and important position of chief clerk at the naval station. Here he won to himself many admirers and friends, who speak of him, in letters to his bereaved mother, in the highest terms as a devoted Christian gentleman. One writes: "Mr. Bains lived a most exemplary Christian life, and has found rest. He suffered dreadfully, but was conscious nearly all the time; talked, sang, and prayed; said he was ready to go, and his end was like his life—beautiful in its simplicity and great faith." Another writes these words, "His death cast a gloom over the whole community, for he was loved by all who knew him."

What an example of devotion and fidelity to the right! A young man in the busy world to impress himself on the mind of strangers so hastily.

He was born in Valden, Miss., Nov. 21, 1872; joined the Methodist Church in 1885 when at a child; died at Key West, Fla., Sept. 4, 1899, and was laid away in the cemetery at that place to await the resurrection.

I pen these lines as his former pastor. We miss him, and I pray the blessings of God upon his weeping brothers and broken-hearted mother. J. F. Evans

BOSTON—Mrs. Mattie Warren Boston, whose maiden name was Dunman was born near McComb City, Miss., Sept. 30 1874, and died in Franklin, Ky., Aug. 15, 1899.

During her thirteenth year she was brightly converted, and joined the M. E. Church, South, in Ronston, Texas, under the ministry of Rev. J. L. Henley, now missionary to China. Several years later she united with the Baptist Church, in which communion she remained till her decease.

On May 26, 1892, in Meridian, Miss., she was married to Mr. John Boston, of Bowling Green, Ky., the first four years of their married life being spent at McComb City, Miss.

Sister Boston was a young woman of most amiable disposition, unselfish nature, and deep consecration, and wherever she went drew many to her by her gentle, winsome ways. For two years preceding her death she suffered intensely, but though her affliction was long and severe, she bore it with true Christian fortitude, testifying repeatedly to the sustaining grace of God. Her last hours were full of peace and rapture, and with joy she left the flesh to meet her Lord. Her mother, husband, two brothers and one sister remain to mourn her loss, while a large circle of friends also weep with them.

If there be nothing celestial without me, it is only because all is earthly within. If no divine colors upon our lot, it is because the holy light is faded on the soul. If our Father seems distant, it is because we have taken our portion of goods and traveled into a far country to set up for ourselves, that we may foolishly enjoy rather than reverently serve.—James Martineau.

The "Combination" Bible.

A SUPERB EDITION

of the Holy Scriptures, showing at a glance at the foot of the pages all changes made by the revisers.

New Type. All Proper Names Self-Pronouncing. The Most Valuable Collateral Matter.

There is a steady and increasing demand for first-class Bibles. Everybody is anxious to obtain a copy of the best edition of the Holy Scriptures. Old editions are constantly being replaced by Bibles that are in every way more attractive, and there is practically no limit to the demand.

OUR "COMBINATION" FEATURE.

Hitherto the King James and Revised Versions have been printed in parallel columns, but this makes comparisons of texts tedious and unsatisfactory, and makes the book very unwieldy. We have overcome this difficulty by "combining" the two Versions on the same page, showing at a glance in foot-notes all the Changes Additions and Omissions made by the Revisers.

THE OLD VERSION PRINTED IN FULL.

The King James Version is the basis, and this Version is read straight along from the text, while the Revised Version is read from the text in combination with the foot-notes. Our "Combination" Feature has met with universal approval and is strongly endorsed by all leading Divines and Biblical Scholars.

It is only by a comparison of the two Versions that the greatest benefit can be obtained from reading the Holy Scriptures, and this comparison every reader can easily make by our simple arrangement for showing the changes made by the revisers. This is the greatest triumph of Bible Publishing the World has ever known.

OUR OFFER.

To those unprogressive people who do not read and pay for the New Orleans Advocate we sell this Bible at the publisher's retail price—$4.25. To our subscribers we sell it at the very low rate of $2. The only condition attached to this offer is that the subscriber must pay his subscription one full year in advance, viz.: to October, 1900. We will send it postpaid to any person who will send us three new cash subscribers at the regular rate. For six new cash subscribers at the regular rate we will send two "Combination" Bibles, postpaid.

For fifty cents additional we will send a Bible with index.

For twenty-five cents additional we will have your name engraved in gilt letters on the outside.

Send for circular. Address Rev. W. C. Black.

P. S.—We can give no commission on renewals in connection with the above offer.

New Machine Offer.

By Far the Best We Have Ever Made.

Always on the watch for something good for our subscribers, we have succeeded in making arrangements whereby we can make a sewing machine offer which is far better than any we have been able hitherto to make. Read the following description and then read our offer:

Furnished Free with every machine are the following named accessories: One Foot Hemmer, One Screw Driver, One Wrench, One Oil Can and Oil, One Gauge Screw, One Extra Check Spring, One Package of Needles, Five Bobbins and One Instruction Book.

No. 4 Columbian

EXCELLENCE OF THE COLUMBIAN.—All wearing parts are of case-hardened steel possessing great durability, and by the turning of a screw all lost motion caused by wear can be taken up. All parts are fitted so accurately that the machines are absolutely noiseless, and as easy running as fine adjustment and best mechanical skill is possible to produce. No expense or time is spared to make them perfect in every respect, as every machine passes a rigid inspection by competent men before leaving the factory.

NICKEL PLATED.—The balance wheel and many of the fine parts are nickel plated, with other parts finely enameled and ornamented, giving it a rich appearance.

A Self Setting Needle and Self-Threading Cylinder Shuttle are used in the Columbian High-Arm Sewing Machine. They are so simple that any one can easily operate them in a few minutes' time, as our Instruction Book is fully illustrated, showing how to do all kinds of fancy work with attachments.

Extra Attachments, in velvet-lined case, sent free with each machine: 1 Tucker, 1 Ruffler with shirring plate, 1 Hemmer set (4 widths) and Binder, 1 Braider (Foot and Slide), 1 Thread Cutter.

ADDITIONAL ACCESSORIES.—Each machine is supplied with the following outfit: 1 Hemmer and Feller (one piece), 10 Needles, 6 Bobbins, 1 Wrench, 1 Screw Driver, Oil Can with Oil, Cloth Gauge and Thumb Screw, and a Book of Instructions. The Book of Instructions is profusely illustrated, and answers the purpose of a competent teacher.

No. 3—Drop leaf, Bent cover, case of two drawers at one end and center drawer. Dealer's price, $29. Our price, $17.

No. 4—Drop leaf table, Bent cover, case of two drawers at each end and center drawer. Dealer's price, $31. Our price, $17.75.

No. 5—Drop leaf table, Bent cover, case of three drawers at each end and center drawer, making a seven-drawer machine. Dealer's price, $33. Our price, $18.50.

The chief difference between Numbers 3, 4, and 5 is in the furniture, i. e., in the number of drawers. If you do not want to pay for the extra drawers, you need not do so. We sell these machines under a ten years' guarantee, by which we mean that if any part gives out by reason of any defect therein, the manufacturer will replace the same free of charge. Moreover, we allow the purchaser to test the machine ten days. If at the end of ten days you are not satisfied, you have only to drop us a postal card, and your money will be refunded.

OUR OFFER.

We will send any one of the above described machines at the prices named, and also send the Advocate free for six months. The only condition attached to this offer is that subscribers who are in arrears must first pay up all arrearages to date. It would be well to avail yourself of this offer at once, as we can not promise that it will last very long. Notice that you take no risk whatever. We do all the risking. Address

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

It is estimated that there are in the United States nearly 4,000,000 women who earn their own living.

An employers' association, representing from $7,000 000 to $9,000,000 of local capital, has been organized in Spokane, Wash., to resist any demand of organized labor which its members may regard as unjust.

William Owen Smith, who is to represent Hawaii at Washington during the coming session of Congress, was born in Hawaii about fifty years ago. He is one of the most prominent and influential men in the islands.

The Board of Trade of the city of Monroe, La, has issued a circular letter calling a convention for Nov. 8, to memorialize Congress for the improvement of the Ouachita river. The governors of Louisiana and Arkansas, and senators and members of Congress from both States, and the citizens of the parishes contiguous to the river, have been invited.

The functions and the receptions that have figured so prominently in the daily life of Admiral Dewey since his arrival off Sandy Hook have proven almost too much for his strength. The admiral has been under such a perpetual physical and nervous strain that he is now almost exhausted. Saturday's ceremonies were the most taxing on his strength of any that he has yet had to undergo.

The homecoming of Admiral Dewey—for henceforth the national capital is to be his home—was made the occasion of the greatest tribute ever paid by Washington to any individual. While the preliminary welcome in New York itself surpassed in its kind, it remained for the highest and greatest in the official world to hold out the hand of greeting to the famous admiral and to join with the people who are to be his fellow-citizens in bidding him welcome.

Aguinaldo's third attempt to shift his difficulties into the field of diplomacy is a repetition of the other one or two, with an impossible endeavor to obtain some sort of recognition of his so-called government. The Filipino envoys had an hour's conference with General Otis on Oct. 1. They brought from Aguinaldo a message that he desired peace and wished to send a civilian governmental commission to discuss the questions. General Otis replied that it was impossible for him to recognize Aguinaldo's government in any way.

The tremendous demonstration in Dewey's honor, while it has no doubt been very trying to the Admiral's strength, can not have failed to convince him of the great admiration felt for him by all his fellow-countrymen. It is not often that a great metropolis like New York devotes two entire days to honoring one man, however great, and this fact of itself is a fair indication of the great influence over the American people which Admiral Dewey's victory at Manila, and subsequent management of affairs in the Philippines, have exerted.

At a meeting of the State Board of Health of Louisiana, at which all the country members were present, the health situation was shown to be eminently satisfactory, as all the fever cases which have developed to date have been carefully guarded and there has been little inclination to spread shown. It was also developed that not a single case of yellow fever has appeared in the Charity Hospital, Hotel Dieu, Tonro Infirmary, or other public institution, this Summer or Fall, which is in marked contrast to the experience of last year and the year before last.

The War Department has given out a statement of exports of merchandise and gold coin at the port of Havana for the first eight months of American occupation. One of the most striking features of the report is the volume of products that passes month by month from the port of Havana, at a time when the agricultural resources of the island are at their minimum. If the volume of business continues for the next four months at the ratio of the past eight months, the export trade of Havana for the first year of American occupation will exceed the handsome sum of $29,000,000.

All further attempts at diplomacy appear now to have been abandoned by both Great Britain and the Transvaal Government, and both sides are devoting all their energies to hurrying troops to the Natal frontier, which is expected to be the scene of the first encounter. The preliminary steps towards declaring martial law in the South African Republic have already been taken, and the field cornets have mobilized their respective commands. A large force of Boers is reported to have been assembled close to the Natal frontier, and everybody looks for the opening act of the war within the next few days.

Agents taking the next census will not be required to offend the public by inquiring into family secrets and asking questions calculated to provoke a fight. The number of questions has been greatly reduced, and they are simpler than before.

NOTICE.

HOME MISSION SOCIETY, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

The Annual Conference of the Woman's Home Mission Society will be held in Brandon, beginning Friday, Nov. 3, 1899. Every auxiliary is earnestly requested to send a delegate. Appropriations were made to four parsonages last year. There are already a number of applications on file. Our ability to aid these needy parsonages depends on a more general organization of the Home Mission Society in our Conference. Wherever possible, will the preachers respond to our appeal to organize at once, and send a delegate to Brandon? Every auxiliary is urged to observe the "Week of Prayer," praying especially for an increase of interest in the work of the Home Mission Society. Brandon is situated in almost the center of the State, and is very accessible. Do not fail to send delegate. We ask the prayers of God's people for the approaching Conference, and trust the result will be greater usefulness of this right arm of the church. ADDIE PURNELL, Pres. H. M. Society.

NOTICE.

To the Members of the W. H. M. S. of the North Mississippi Conference;

Our annual meeting will be held at Maben, Miss., Oct. 28-31. Opening service at 7:30 P. M., Oct. 28.

Delegates will please notify Mrs. Irene Thomas, Maben, as to hour of arrival, etc.

Reduced rates will be secured, if possible. Bring your railroad certificates.

Let each delegate remember that a part of the responsibility of the meeting depends on her; so come prepared to do all you can, and praying that the blessing of God may rest on our labors.

CATARRH CAN BE CURED.

Catarrh is a kindred ailment of consumption, long considered incurable; and yet there is one remedy that will positively cure catarrh in any of its stages. For many years this remedy was used by the late Dr. Stevens, a widely-noted authority on all diseases of the throat and lungs. Having tested its wonderful curative powers in thousands of cases, and desiring to relieve human suffering, I will send free of charge to all sufferers from Catarrh, Asthma, Consumption, and nervous diseases, this recipe, in German, French or English, with full directions for preparing and using. Sent by mail by addressing, with stamp, naming this paper, W. A. Noyes, 820 Powers' Block, Rochester, N. Y.

OUR EXCELSIOR ART BIBLE.

In accordance with our motto, "Better and Better," we have gotten out a Bible which is superior to any hitherto offered. Besides the Holman self-pronouncing feature and all the Oxford Helps, it has the Combination feature, i. e., the revised version in foot notes, and also contains a number of magnificent illustrations, sixty-four New and Beautiful Full-page Phototype Engravings.

These Magnificent Illustrations represent the most important Scenes and Events in the Sacred Scriptures, and are the work of eminent artists.

No subjects are so well adapted for Illustration by Superb Works of Art as the Grand Scenes and Events described in the Holy Bible. And no other subjects have so occupied the Thought and Genius of the World's Greatest Artists.

The reader has all the most Important Scenes and Events of the Sacred Scriptures placed before him, and is delighted with the Artistic Beauty of these Unrivalled Engravings.

In mechanical workmanship, printing and binding, these Bibles are superb, while at the same time our prices are very low.

THE PRICE.

This magnificent Bible is catalogued by large Northern publishers at $6. We sell it to our subscribers for $3 on condition that they pay up all arrearages and pay their subscription a full year in advance.

Two Verdicts.

"After a fair and impartial trial you are judged guilty by this court, and you are sentenced to be hung by the neck until you are dead." The solemn tones of the judge, the despairing face of the prisoner, and the painful stillness of the court-room, makes it a scene of awful impress. Now turn to a brighter scene at the home circle. A mother radiant with joy over the recovery of a child snatched from the clutches of Malaria. An entire family rejoicing, and praising the merits of Dicks' Chillifoge, and giving their verdict that Chillifuge is without an equal for swiftness to cure.

HOME.

BY THOMAS MOORE.

The bird let loose in eastern skies,
When hastening fondly home,
Ne'er stoops to earth her wing, nor flies
Where idle warblers roam;
But high she shoots through air and light,
Above all low delay,
Where nothing earthly bounds her flight,
Nor shadow dims her way.

So grant me, God, from every care
And stain of passion free,
Aloft through virtue's purer air,
To hold my course to thee!
No sin to cloud, no lure to stay
My soul, as home she springs—
Thy sunshine on her joyful way,
Thy freedom in her wings!

ENGLAND'S UNCROWNED LAUREATE.

Upon no living writer, perhaps not even excepting the French Zola whose "j'ai accuse" caused the reaction in the Dreyfus case, or the Russian novelist and political economist, Tolstoi, are the eyes of the literary world fastened with greater interest and with more speculation as to the final outcome, than on that strong and virile young Englishman, Rudyard Kipling, poet and novelist. Speaking of him during his alarming illness of last Winter, our own Southern writer, Thomas Nelson Page, said: "The death of Mr. Kipling at this time would prove a world-wide calamity. It is impossible to foresee what he may become. Still under the age of forty, he may, like Scott, turn from one province of letters to another, and easily become the foremost poet of his time."

Happily for his admirers, Mr. Kipling's life was spared, and we trust that he will still find, in the universe of letters, more worlds to conquer.

To those who are fond of tracing effect to cause, it is interesting to remember that Kipling is a direct outgrowth of Wesleyan Methodism, his grandfather, on the paternal side, having been a minister of that connection, strong in faith and eminent for his piety, humility, and good works. If we are to believe some of the younger Kipling's critics, whatever else he may have inherited from this particular ancestor, no grain of humility was bequeathed to him; yet even those critics must concede that the lack of that particular quality in Englishmen is national rather than individual. Certainly the low-breathing strain of the Recessional, the grandest of modern religious odes, show no lack of dependence on the Unseen Power:

"Lord God of Hosts, be with us yet,
Lest we forget, lest we forget!"

Many poems and hymns breathe a spirit, if not deeply spiritual, at least highly reverential.

In one of his books of short stories, entitled "Plain Tales from the Hills," he gives us a weird and awe-inspiring account of a young subaltern in the Anglo-Indian Civil Service, who died in being considered an atheist—delighting on all occasions to air his disbelief in the existence of any intelligent power higher than man. A sudden and mysterious stroke of illness came upon him in the midst of a torrent of blasphemous words, depriving him, for the time, not only of the power of speech, but of connected thought, and his eager and unquestioning belief ever after in divine interposition, shows at least the bent of the author's belief, and that he has not entirely discarded the faith of his ancestors as to the supernatural. In another of those tales he refers to the simple faith and piety of the "Methody folks at home" among the mines of Cornwall and other parts of England, one very touching sketch being of the self-sacrificing labors in behalf of the souls of the poor miners of a young "parson" whose rival in a love affair was a "red-coat," a "sojer of the widder" as he called himself, who was at last triumphantly convinced of the purity and disinterestedness of the young preacher's efforts in behalf of his parishioners. In the author's abhorrence of sham in religion and social life we are reminded of Charles Dickens when at his best, though Kipling's types have not become as familiar to the reading public as those of Dickens.

Like Dickens also, Mr. Kipling has incurred the hostility of a portion of the American people by his unsparing denunciation of some of the national vices and weakness of our country; but, no doubt, we shall profit by those strictures as did the people who read Dickens' "American Notes" and "Martin Chuzzlewit" nearly thirty years ago.

Kipling's intense loyalty to his own country has, perhaps, strengthened the conviction that he is not an enthusiastic admirer of American institutions; but when we remember that he married an American, and for a time made her home, "down-East," his own, and that he is credited with the desire to have his children reared on the "American plan"—whatever that may be—and, above all, when we read his "White Man's Burden," a noble lyric manifestly addressed to the entire American people, it is hard to believe that he does not feel that "touch of nature" which make all Anglo-Saxons feel akin. In one of his books, at least, "Captain Conrageous," he pays a magnificent tribute to American skill and enterprise when he describes the journey across the continent from San Francisco to Boston of a railway magnate in search of a son supposed to be lost.

Mr. Kipling's influence as a writer is shown by the profound effect produced by his "Truce of the Bear," which, though voicing the sentiments of only one man, and that man a private citizen, was accepted by the world as the exponent of the feeling of distrust evidenced by the English nation at large in regard to the peace proposals of the Czar of Russia. Even the Czar himself might be proud of such a tribute.

Other works of Mr. Kipling, notably the "Day's Doings" and other works of a somewhat technical nature, show the immense diversity of his talents. His "Jungle Stories" are the equal of any folk-lore literature of any country. The knowledge of the nature and habits of birds, beasts and reptiles inhabiting the Indian jungles, is second only to the knowledge displayed by the author of the human nature of that and other countries in all its varied form.

CONFERENCE AUDITING BOARD.

I have just read the suggestion of Bro. Bowman, in the ADVOCATE of Oct. 5, in regard to a committee to audit the financial reports of the preachers at the Conference sessions. I want to give this suggestion my hearty endorsement, and ask that the brethren of the Louisiana Conference weigh this suggestion and come to Monroe prepared to, the first thing, make this Board a part of our Conference organization. This Board will, to a large degree, simplify and facilitate the work of the pastors in making their reports, and the work of the statistical secretary. It will also be a help to the treasurers, as they will then be able to know if a brother has anything to report.

I would suggest that the treasurers of the Boards of Missions, Finance and Church Extension constitute this Board, and that to them all the preachers be required to report all their collections, with their reports for the statistical secretary, not later than the afternoon of the second day of the Conference. These three brethren can have their table near the church door, and by dividing the eleven items to be reported upon between them, and calling for the brethren a district at a time, make short work of their collections and the verifying of the pastors' reports.

Bro. Bowman sums up the good to be attained as follows: "All reports and moneys correspond; every report is verified; a great deal of confusion is averted; a considerable time is saved in announcing the meeting places of various Boards."

Surely this is what we need.

NOTES FROM THE DISTRICT.

BY REV. T. B. HOLLOMAN.

MR. EDITOR: This brings me to the close of the third quarter, and a busy one it has been—too much so to allow the fulfilling of that promise to send an occasional letter. During the quarter the pastors have been engaged in special meetings, and all have been unusually busy.

The one especial feature since my last was a trip by buggy through the swamp country in the district. We were forcibly impressed with the rapid settlement of this territory. Where in my younger manhood were impenetrable forests and scarcely an evidence of civilization, I found large plantations, steam gins, and machinery of most modern make, and whole colonies of tenants. Where was, only a decade or two ago, the almost undisputed home of the deer and bear, are now to be seen the domestic animals in perfect peace (indeed, in a two-days' travel I saw not even a coon or opossum); and what rabbits are to be found have been made shy by the indomitable boy and his dog.

Time was, only a few years ago, when for a stranger to adventure a trip through that section was at a great risk of turning up somewhere lost; but now, if one is led astray by some way (which was my fortune, and resulting in an addition of three or four miles to my journey), he has only to keep going, fully assured that he will soon get out of the brush. Not many whites, however, have entered, the country being owned and operated by merchants who employ negro labor almost exclusively. Formed into communities, with their own teachers and preachers, with school-houses and churches, they seem as contented and happy, yea, more so than many others who have more inviting surroundings.

In this territory, near Campbellsville (on the bank of the Sunflower river), we have a church which bears the name of "Sharborough's Chapel," which owes its origin and continued existence to the three sons of Rev. Frank Sharborough, once an honored member of the Mississippi Conference. Settling in the wild woods, and "beginning at the stump," they have each comfortable homes, and seem in all things studious to observe that command, "Honor thy father and thy mother."

From this place the schedule called me to "Phillip's," on Lake City and Lodi charge. Here we had a crowded house (school-room 12x15), and with seats for about thirty children. While this may appear small to the more thickly-settled sections, it was a larger per cent. of citizens. The pastor visits every family regardless of creed, and says if he stays in a neighborhood too long, he has to repeat. The difficulty with all this valley country is the sparcity of white people. However, in no part is the ministry more respected and honored. I have been informed of two places where our Baptist brethren preach, but none live within these borders. Methodism must do the work, and virtually has the field. May God impress us with the weight of our obligation! As Sam Jones says, it will require "grit, grace, and patience;" but the day will certainly come when the fruits of the work now being done will be "thirty, sixty, and an hundredfold."

Boarding the train for home, I was informed by the conductor that Pocahontas, sixteen miles out, was as near as they were allowed to Jackson; so I resolved to drop off elsewhere and return by other route, but, fatal step!—once on, I was told to pass on. All my arguments of long distance from the infection, continued absence from home, and immunity, were of no avail. I had been in Jackson; so on I went, and through the exceeding kindness of a Baptist brother, Bell, I reached Jackson noon of next day. Well, I have no censure and no unkind criticism to offer. Better one to be inconvenienced than a whole town to probably suffer.

Realizing the uncertainty of railroad connections, I planned to use the horse and buggy, and did, by a sixty-mile drive, get to two appointments. I was now flattering myself that I was independent, and, with my argument of immunity, could go anywhere; but, alas! for my plans! With Geo. Dewey hitched and ready to start, I am called to the "phone." "Hello! is that you, Bro. Holloman?" "Yes." "Where are you?" "At home, and will start in a few minutes for your Quarterly Conference." "Well, wait. Our people say you must not come." "But I'm immune." "Can't help that; don't come." So here I am, and all my boast of immunity of no avail. "Tied up," "sidetracked," "locked out," or rather in. I had hoped to meet every appointment, but must consent, with Robert Burns, as to the best-laid plans of mice and men. Finding my way blocked, I resolved to give what aid I could to the work in the city; but I am glad to report that the spread of the fever has been so slow—only sixteen cases to date—that there has not been any tax upon nurses or people. The expense is depressing. Bishop Galloway has been with us all the time, and just as good a leader in an epidemic as in a prohibition campaign. None escape him. He sees or knows of every case, regardless of church relations. I am certain that he was not more eloquent before that grand Educational Rally in Atlanta, only last week, than he appeared going down the street yesterday with bedding for a poor boy stricken with the fever. Mississippi Methodism has a right to be proud of such a man.

We had planned to give special emphasis to the Twentieth Century Movement on our fourth round, but can not now tell when I can get out into the field. Brethren will please give emphasis to this cause. The Jackson district should lead the Conference, if not the State, in this matter. Why not so resolve and so work?

Jackson, Miss., Oct. 4, 1899.

MORE ENCOURAGEMENT.

Bro. W. G. Harris promises a contribution from the Sunday-school at Webb. Midway Sunday-school, through H. S. Swayze, superintendent, and Miss Alice King, secretary, has forwarded two and 60-100 dollars; and Bro. W. E. Strock has sent three dollars from the Sunday-school at Orange Grove. Others will report later.

Rev. W. W. Simmons, P. E., assures me, "The Twentieth Century Fund is being looked after in the Seashore district."

Rev. H. C. Morehead, P. E., writes a most hopeful letter about the work in the Grenada district, and is confident of large success. He is in correspondence with all his preachers, and is advocating the cause through the columns of The Methodist Headlight, the Grenada district paper, of which he is editor.

Revs. J. B. Mitchell, J. B. Stone, B. F. Lewis, M. E. Tumlin, J. J. Garner, W. D. McCullough, J. H. Shumaker, D. W. Babb, J. H. Holder have given much thought to this interest, and laid wise plans for large success, and are hopeful of good results. Some of these already have money in hand; all will report amounts later.

Rev. R. E. Rutledge reports seven and 75-100 dollars from Binnsville.

Rev. J. P. Drake, Bay St. Louis, reports an additional amount of nine and 50-100 dollars. This is Bro. Drake's fourth report. His perseverance is worthy of all commendation.

Rev. P. E. Duncan, Crawford, reports twenty-one dollars from one of his churches, and thinks "we will make a good report."

Rev. D. C. Foust, Guntown, reports twenty-four dollars from Baldwyn, and "expects to observe the day at other churches on the work."

Rev. H. T. Cunningham, Carrollton, reports fifteen new names and forty dollars added to the fund.

Rev. H. P. Crowe, Arcola, reports sixty-two and 50-100 dollars, and not half the members have been seen. When the others contribute the per capita idea will not be "in it."

Rev. R. O. Brown, Lexington, reports sixty-five and 75-100 dollars, and, "of course, all the membership will be canvassed for a contribution." Of course!

Rev. E. S. Lewis, Brooksville, reports an additional amount of seventy-two and 25-100 dollars, which makes more than one hundred dollars from this charge, and the best part of the report is yet to be sent.

Rev. Thos. H. Dorsey, Cleveland, reports ninety dollars.

Rev. T. W. Lewis, Corinth, reports one hundred and fourteen dollars, and "the canvass has just begun. Have appointed a committee of ten to canvass the entire membership. Divided the roll into lots of fifty, and expect to push the work to success." Whether "nothing succeeds like success" be true, or not, none succeed better than T. W. Lewis and J. H. Smith.

Rev. W. S. Lagrone, Water Valley, had the assistance of Dr. R. W. Jones, and secured one hundred and twenty-seven dollars, and hopes to make it more than two hundred. They are putting one thousand dollars' worth of repairs on the parsonage. Good for Water Valley.

Now for reports from the "October brigade." Is there a single preacher in Mississippi who has done nothing for this great cause? I hope not. But if there be one, I ask him to read this from one of our most intelligent, consecrated, active and, of course, successful young preachers: "The trouble with most of us is that, because we can't do something handsome, we will be satisfied with doing nothing. But in this great movement, if we are to succeed, the poor, as well as the rich, must help."

Now, Bro. Do-nothing, read that over again, and then write to me.

NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE NOTES.

The Durant district parsonage debt, of several years' standing, is a thing of the past, the last dollar on the same having been recently paid. It is to be hoped that this news will stir the people of Winona district to co-operate with their earnest presiding elder for a similar consummation before Conference.

The future home of the presiding elder of the Columbus district will be in the classic city of Columbus, the committee having the matter in hand having recently purchased a $2,500 house for that purpose.

Rev. H. M. Young, preacher in charge of Nettleton circuit, has been sick a month and a half, and unable to fulfill his work. He is now improving, and hopes to resume his work soon. So may it be.

Rev. T. W. Lewis, Corinth station, writes that he has received to date 118 into the church, and had during the past four weeks made 170 pastoral visits—all this notwithstanding much personal affliction and the almost constant sickness of his wife. May they soon be restored to health and vigor, and enabled to do full service in the pastorate!

We rejoice to note the improving condition of Rev. Geo. H. Lipscomb. He has been two weeks under special treatment in Birmingham, Ala., where he is reported as doing well after a surgical operation for an abscess on the liver. Many hearts are burdened with prayer for his recovery.

A visit to Grenada College this week was enjoyed very much by this writer. The courtesies shown by President McIntosh and the teachers and pupils of the school were heart-cheering. All that I saw and heard in and of the work of the school was lovely, and worthy of good report. The friends of this cherished institution will be glad to hear of its prosperous condition. The student body is up with any previous record, and the management seems to be all that could be reasonably desired. The greatest need is more room and better equipments, all of which will, doubtless, be furnished in due course of time. To these ends let all plan and labor who are concerned for the Christian education of the girls of North Mississippi Methodism.

JAPAN MISSION CONFERENCE.

The Japan Annual Conference met Thursday, Aug. 31, and closed Tuesday, Sept. 5. The session was very pleasant and harmonious. There was a good spiritual tone pervading nearly every meeting. One week earlier would have given us the hottest weather of the Summer; but, fortunately, a typhoon a few days before Conference had broken up the excessive heat, and we had much cooler and pleasanter weather than we could have expected at that season.

Dr. W. R. Lambuth was with us, and contributed much to the enjoyment and good of the Conference. Having been known and greatly beloved by nearly all the Japanese as well as the foreign members of the Conference, he met with an exceedingly warm reception, and his words of counsel and exhortation carried additional weight because of the high regard, personally, in which he is held.

The reports were very encouraging. Our net gain, which was 75 (our total membership being 666), is the best we have had for five or six years. There was an encouraging increase in the amount paid on native preachers' support and on the missionary collection. There was a falling off in the number of Sunday-schools and of Sunday-school scholars, but it was due principally, if not entirely, to the closing of some of our chapels on account of lack of funds.

Action was taken with reference to the Twentieth Century Fund, and I think that $500 was fixed as the amount that we would try to raise. I think we shall raise more than that. I heard yesterday that the first Japanese subscription made was for 100 yen ($50 gold). Of course, we can not expect very many like that, but it is a good omen of the spirit in which they take hold of it.

Bro. Moose and Miss Carroll, who are on their way to Corea; Bro. Whiteside, who is on his way to China, and Miss Leverett, who is over here for the Summer from China, were present at the Conference several days. We were glad to have them with us; to give to the new missionaries a hearty welcome to the mission field and a godspeed for the rest of their journey.

We begin the new Conference year in most places with good prospects. May the coming year be, by the blessing of God, the best year we have ever had! B. W. WATERS.

FEAR NOT.

BY REV. HENRY BURTON.

Fear not, O soul! the winds that blow
Come from the heavens, and can not harm;
They only bring the deeper calm—
His peace, who bids them "Come," or "Go."

Fear not the waves that vainly roar,
The angry surges' sullen beat;
They make a pavement for His feet,
Who leads thee to a safer shore.

Fear not the cloud that darkly lowers,
With muffled thunder, rain of tears;
It comes to bless the after years,
And make the earthly, heavenly flowers.

Fear not the fire, if thou art tried
In pain, or sorrow's furnace heat;
He seeks to make thy life complete,
As gold by fire is purified.

Fear not what future days may bring;
They only bring what He may send;
The veiled to-morrow is thy friend,
With harp beneath her angel wing.

And so I bid my craven fear
Spread her dark pinions and away!
The shadows flee at break of day,
For Love, Eternal Love, is near.

MINISTERIAL POWER.

BY REV. ELTON WILSON.

There are three distinct sources of "ministerial power," viz.: the physical, the mental or psychic, and the spiritual. These elements enter into all sermonic activity, in both study and pulpit. The two first are necessary constituents of all literary production. God has correlated the physical and mental in the constitution of everyone. There is inherent power within the psychic constitution. There is a subordinate power within the physical organism. The physical is only an instrumental factor, but a very necessary one amid material environments.

Thought is not a secretion of the brain; neither is it a chemical product of brain changes. It is the activity of an immaterial principle called the soul. The physical is the organ of soul-development. The physical and psychic are parts of a Hottentot or Shakespeare. In the Hottentot the physical dominates the psychic element, while in Shakespeare the order is reversed. The consciousness of a Hottentot is overshadowed and almost obscured by the material world. The light of nature that breaks upon his darkened consciousness is dim and vague. His strength and power resides in his body. There is a faint activity of his psychic life, while he is totally destitute of spiritual life.

Here we have a type of personality whose power is almost wholly physical. In Hume and Shelley we have a type of personality in which the psychical dominates, and the spiritual has been extinguished. In Jonathan Edwards we have a happy illustration, embodying the harmonious activity of the physical, the psychical, and the spiritual, in the unity of a ministerial personality. We find the same harmonious factors in the personality of John Wesley.

We could name a great number of historic characters whose physical and psychic power would equal either that of Wesley or Edwards. The secret and source of their power as ministers of the gospel is found in their close touch and fellowship with the Holy Spirit. Their great psychic power was subordinate to the Holy Spirit.

To what extent does the Holy Spirit enter into the personal life of the minister? The genesis of the ministerial consciousness is the work of the Holy Spirit. The continuity and permanence of the ministerial consciousness is conditioned upon the continuous access and fellowship of the Holy Spirit. This is the subjective foundation of the objective life of the minister. The Holy Spirit does not create the ministerial consciousness, nor sustain it only in a converted personality that has been made holy and acceptable to God. To each a person there is a continuous influx of spiritual power and energy. The Holy Spirit has access to the ultimate ego, and, furthermore, breathes upon the conscious activity of thought, feeling, and volition.

This is not the communication of knowledge, but the impartation of spiritual power. Some people are afraid to admit the fact that the Holy Spirit has anything to do with the generation and development of sermons, because they at once jump to the conclusion that the Holy Spirit furnishes the preacher with sermons "cut and dried," and ready for delivery. Such an assumption is mere nonsense. The Holy Spirit does not impart one iota of material to the preacher's resources.

God, in the creation of the human constitution, prescribed a uniform law in the acquisition of knowledge. The natural channels of knowledge are sensation, consciousness, and intuition. The sources of knowledge are the material world without and the subjective sphere of consciousness. All mankind are subjected to this law. There is a supernatural method of acquiring knowledge. This exalted privilege was only bestowed upon apostles and prophets. This is inspiration. It ceased with the apostolic age. None are inspired in this age. And the preacher who neglects preparation and waits for inspiration will be as a hollow drum. A preacher must have material, either conscious or unconscious, before he can recall or dispense it. He can not give that which he has not.

The law of mental association is ever operative in active thought. It is the preacher's greatest ally. A loud voice and great physical exertion can not atone for lack of intelligent thought. The Holy Spirit does not do for the preacher what he is required to do for himself. For a minister to enter his pulpit without preparation, expecting the Holy Spirit to do his thinking, is nothing short of indolent fanaticism.

Now, it is evident that the Holy Spirit exerts an influence upon the preacher's personal life. If this is not a fact, the preacher who goes into his pulpit or study, and prays for the power, guidance and assistance of the Holy Spirit, labors under a delusion, and his request is vain babbling. The Holy Spirit does not gather the material, nor do the thinking, nor put forth the necessary physical energy. This is the preacher's work, and if he does not do it, it remains undone. This is the human sphere of effort in sermonizing. What influence does the Holy Spirit exert upon the ministerial personality in its origination and development of sermons? The promise of Jesus, "I am with you always, even unto the end of the world," is here verified through the Holy Spirit.

The human consciousness (using the term in its widest sense) flows on in one unbroken stream of thought, feeling, and volition. Man is sovereign in this conscious sphere. He can surrender his consciousness to the guidance of the Holy Spirit, or he can reject his gracious leadings.

Jesus is ever ready to make real the promise, "He shall guide you into all truth." This is conditioned upon a volitional surrender of consciousness in fervent prayer and earnest thought. The preacher performs all necessary activities of thought; he only surrenders those activities to the guidance of the Holy Spirit. A preacher may have a strong and well-disciplined mind, a vast accumulation of material, and a perfect physique, with the addition of all the natural gifts for a successful preacher, and after all this he may be a failure, his ministry barren, and his preaching powerless. He may be a negative and destructive factor in the church, instead of being a powerful constructive force. There are many ministers in the various pulpits of to-day who possess all the natural elements and conditions of a successful ministry, and yet they are really destructive factors in their denominations. They have thrown off the guiding influence and the conscious fellowship of the Holy Spirit, and have drifted into rationalism and the open skepticism of the age. They have a wealth of mental and physical power, but are utterly bankrupt in spiritual power.

Modern sermonic thought falls short of spiritual power. The ministry of the age needs a deeper and more vivid consciousness of the presence and power of the Holy Spirit.

THE LORD'S GLORY SHOWN.

It is a wonderful truth that the Lord's glory is revealed unto sinful men. I know that some Christians affirm that if one would have the Lord's glory shown to him directly, he must, first of all, be cleansed from all sin; he must be thoroughly holy; but this is evidently a mistaken notion. Read these words, "And Moses said, This is the thing which the Lord commanded that ye should do: and the glory of the Lord shall appear unto you." That thing is stated thus, "Draw near unto the altar, and offer thy sin-offering and thy burnt-offering, and make atonement for thyself and for the people." This was done, and the glory of the Lord appeared unto the people. They approached God as sinful men, confessing their iniquities, and making an atonement, through Moses and Aaron, for their sins; then the Lord showed them his glory in a direct, special manner. Through their offering of an atonement the people approached the Lord, and through that atonement the Lord revealed his glory to them. The atonement was a ritual recognition of the sinfulness of those who approached the Lord. Had the people not been sinful, there would have been no need of a present and direct use of the atoning sacrifice. They went before the Lord because they were sinful and had need of the atonement. This was a condition for the reception of the glory of the Lord.

God does not show his glory to those who do not recognize their need of the atonement. He does not reveal his glory to those who do not acknowledge that they are sinful; who do not own to the truth that they have sins to confess. It is the contrite man, feeling his need of the atonement, and imploring God to forgive him of his sins, that God shows his glory to. It is the glory of God in pardon, and his testimony to the soul that he is pardoned and delivered from the legal accusation of all past guilt.

C. H. WETHERBE.

THE AMOUNT WE SHOULD GIVE GOD.

Giving is a subject that does not engage the thoughts, prayers and practices of the masses as it should. Indeed, there are few stewards who give it the attention necessary. Many pastors are limited, and oft-times materially crippled, in their work by stewards who stand in the way of their finances. However, for all this there is a remedy, and that remedy is the regular payment into God's treasury what is due him from stewards and people. It is quite evident that all should give nothing less than the tenth, and as much over it as necessary, and especially as they can.

We give the following reasons why we should not pay less than the tenth:

1. The tenth is the only form of giving that has a history, and not only has it a history, but its history extends from Abraham to the present time—that is, its recorded history, for Abraham gave the tenth as if it had been an old practice before him, and if it were, then we do not know when its practice began.

2. God commanded the Jews to give the tenth, and it does seem that we should give as much as they, and when we remember that Christ said, "For unto whomsoever much is given, of him shall be much required," it seems quite conclusive that we should by all means give nothing less, but much more than the tenth, for a very great deal more has been given to us than to the Jews.

3. Abraham gave Melchizedek "tithes of all," and, therefore, it is quite reasonable that we should not only give Christ the tenth, but more. He is worthy of all, and more besides.

4. God prospers those who give the tenth. This is the testimony of all who have tried it.

5. The words of Christ to the Scribes and Pharisees, "Ye pay tithe of mint and anis and cummin, and have omitted the weightier matters of the law, judgment, mercy, and faith: these ought ye to have done, and not to leave the other undone." (Matt. xxiii, 23.) In this verse Christ censures them for neglecting judgment, mercy, and faith, and adds that paying tithes should not be neglected. This is a very strong reason for paying the tenth.

6. God gave us his Son to make it possible for us to have all the good possible in this life and the life in the world to come; and does it not, therefore, look quite ungrateful in us not to give him ten cents of every dollar we get—and, indeed, our all—as an expression of our appreciation of his gift, Christ our Savior? Certainly it does. We know it does. The tenth is little enough to give, and let us not give less, but more, if possible. If all would give the tenth, the cause of our blessed Lord would not be embarrassed and hindered as it is now, and we all would be much better off.

FROM THE PHILIPPINES.

[The following is an extract from a private letter to Rev. P. O Lowrey from his brother, who is a soldier in the United States Army at Manila.—EDITOR]

We have just returned from hearing the usual Sunday morning sermon, which is rendered at eight o'clock in the morning, before the heat becomes so intense, because at eleven it is "mucho calliente." We are not able to tell you the text, nor the quality of the discourse, but we can testify to the sweetness of the music produced, both by the baritone singers and the nice pipe organ which they have in this land of "no-clothes-and-heathens," as a great many of the boys term it. The services here are much more impressive than those of the home Catholics. The cathedrals, of the ancient type of architecture, are of stone build and tiling roofs, the whole of which are rain-beaten, moss-covered, and, in the large crevices, vine-covered. The interiors have smooth stone floors and never a seat. There is an imaginary aisle down the center of the church, which divides the women from the men while worshiping. What time the women—who have, without exception, a head-gear of an indescribable make-up—are not kneeling they are sitting flat on the floor, while the men stand. There is one part of the spacious church reserved for the native soldiers, who march every Sunday to the church, never forgetting to bring their arms, which are of long-pointed spears. The spectacle is a fine one, especially when all the worshipers pose on their knees at the call of the bugle, and listen, with all reverence, to the litanies as they are chanted by those in each end of the church. Every Sunday we put on our kakhai suits and clean clothes, and go to see these performances. The music is sublime, and the time spent there varies the monotony of the idle hours spent in barracks. We have been detached from the regiment since November of last year, and have heard but few sermons, except those in unknown tongues. FRANK M. LOWREY,

SIMPLICITY OF SPEECH IN PREACHING.

A recent work on theology, which has made a strong impression upon many readers, numbers among its distinctive attractions the fact that it avowedly refuses to use the stereotyped and formal terms in vogue for centuries in theological writings, such as soteriology and eschatology, and instead thereof invariably employs terse and simple English words which anybody can apprehend. This method, wisely applied, helps to make the volume one to be enjoyed by the ordinary reader, while it really freshens and invigorates its contents for the clerical student, who is not often helped in his researches by the professional terms which serve to outline the different branches of theological science.

This method, perhaps, can not be applied wisely by all writers on theology, as there is still need of the philosophical and metaphysical terminology in the more elaborate works; but in the pulpit the policy ought to be followed, almost without exception. Indeed, one of the duties of the preacher is to turn the abstruse statements of scientific theology into ordinary language. This process is almost as difficult in some cases as the task of translation from a foreign tongue, but it richly rewards the man who undertakes it, and brings new visions of truth to the hearers of the Word. It is rarely necessary for a preacher to use abstract and metaphysical terms. When he does he may immediately paraphrase them so as to guard himself against being misunderstood. The expression, "pardon of sin," for example, is usually preferable in every way to the more formidable theological term, "justification," and a man may talk pompously about the "ethical principles which are involved" in a passage, without making it clear to half his audience what he means.

We admit that there are times when a man, in order to be exact, needs to use a technical term; but these occasions are rare in the pulpit. A diligent preacher will seek to enlarge his vocabulary, to make it rich, vigorous, and even exuberant; but he will be chary concerning the professional words used constantly in the standard works of theology. These terms add nothing to the sermon; they rather detract from its clearness and force, and sometimes suggest a pedantic display of needlessly big words.—Central Advocate.

WHAT SHALL WE DO WITH THE CAMP MEETINGS?

Our English Wesleyan exchanges bring us pretty full accounts of the Southport Convention, which has been held in June annually since 1885, managed much after the manner of the Keswick meetings, except that it is kept somewhat more closely to Methodist methods.

It calls up the question, pertinent to this season, and no doubt much in the thoughts of many, Are we reaping from our camp meetings all that we ought? Are we not trying too pertinaciously to hold them strictly to the old lines, when the old conditions have so largely vanished? The congregations that confront the preachers on the stand are almost a solid mass of church members morning, noon, and night. They are asked to listen to a series of sermons of a very miscellaneous nature, all good in a certain sense, but rarely adapted to make any deep impression, or be remembered beyond the hour. There is no unity of plan and but little result of value.

Is this the best way? Possibly it is, but many wise judges have grave doubts. Might it not be well to give another system, something like that at Northfield, a fair trial? Is it not more in accordance with the demands of the times, better adapted to present circumstances, and likely to issue in more permanent benefit to the churches? Are there not available among us a class of teachers who could command respect, attract attention, and impart large profit by a series of addresses or Bible readings on topics connected with the higher ranges of Christian experience? Is there not among our church members generally a sufficient call for this kind of thing to give success to an attempt to organize a camp meeting around this idea? If there is anything that can be done to promote deeper spirituality among our people, to join with the increasing education increasing religious fervor—surely the two are not incompatible—we ought to know it and be about it. We can not afford to waste such opportunities as are presented by our Summer gatherings. Education has laid hold of them, and is turning them, in many instances, to good account. Let us not allow vital godliness to be put in the background, and its interests suffered to go by default, for lack of wise measures and vigorous initiative.—Zion's Herald.

A PLACE AT LAST.

It is a well-known fact that itinerant preachers, especially on the poorer charges, never accumulate property, and very often they have to add manual labor to their ministerial toils in order to get bread. Such devotion and sacrifice call for tender sympathy from the church. With children to clothe and educate, travelers to house and feed, friends to welcome and entertain, the demand upon the scanty purse is frequently embarrassing, if not painful. Yet such men are generally sweet and happy, "rejoicing in hope, patient in tribulation, continuing instant in prayer," and looking patiently ahead for the reward. Mrs. Elizabeth Hawley Fenn, herself the wife of an itinerant, has drawn a little sketch of the closing scene in such lives:

"A place of my own at last!" he said,
As he stretched his limbs in his dying bed,
Then his smile grew strangely sweet and bright,
And his eye lit up with a heavenly light.

"Just a little place, six feet by two,
Is all that I need with my travels through;
To the world my grave in flowers will smile
As my dust returns unto dust the while.

"Body and spirit I am content—
The way now shines where my Master went—
Hardships forever gone with the past,
A city appointment hails me at last!"

—The Michigan Christian Advocate.

The Christian Life.

THE RELIGION THAT SINGS.

Christianity is the religion that sings itself. Atheism has no songs; agnosticism is not tuneful. We have never heard of a Brahmanic hymnal or a Confucian psalmody. The meters of heathendom or savagery, so far as paganism is vocal at all, are not once to be compared with the lively heartiness, with the freeness, fulness and depth of Christian song. There is a spontaneity and abandon to the singing of Christians that is sadly lacking in any of the music exercises of paganism. The believer in Jesus explains his own songfulness in the conclusive question, 'How can I keep from singing?' Christianity is not only a religion that sings, but also it is "the" religion that sings. No other faith has the cult of carols and the school of praise. The Christian sings because he has something to sing about. The believer's face is aglow with joy, and his speech inevitably quickens into song. When Jesus Christ put himself into the world he put song into it also. By saving men he saves their music, too. And so ever and everywhere the religion of Jesus is a cult of hope, of brave joy, of cheery optimism. Christian faith already puts the heaven to which it is going into its earthly phraseologies and psalmodies. It elevates song while it quickens it. It inspires a poetry which is peerless. Atheism is dumb, but there is music to Christianity. Skepticism is not singable, but Christ to-day is leading the grandest choruses of the world. English literature is already full of the lyrics of the Christ, while the poets are still searching for new tributes to bring to his name. The sublimest oratorios have had inspiration from the Nazarene. Christianity is a religion that can sing and that does sing.—New York Observer.

QUIET RESTING-PLACES.

There is always peace in the heart which is conscious of God's presence. "It is because we do not know that he is with us," some one has said, 'and more than half doubt that he is anywhere, that we become nervous, irritable, uneasy and unhappy." It is possible to reach such a height of faith as to find perfect freedom in the petty perplexities and daily cares and small worries which produce mental restlessness and physical disease. From these rare altitudes a man looks down on the troubles of life with calm indifference, and looks up to God with serene trust.

The experiences of life can not seriously disturb a soul to whom the Infinite seems close at hand. Heaven has already begun in such a heart. Christ's "Peace, be still," has been uttered over all the billows that threaten to toss the bark. It has its ward rest, whatever the outward commotion. Environment is a small matter to him who entemples the Almighty. Not easy of attainment is this point of vantage from which to survey the world, this perfect poise of complete faith, but it is well worth all it costs.—Zion's Herald.

WORK FOR GOD.

And do not expect immediate results. Immediate results are not worth working for. History is long and is slow, but the clock keeps ticking and the brook keeps flowing. Do something, and do it in a straight line, and if you do not at last get to finish it, God will top it out, or get some one to. Very likely your own inspiring activity will be just the influence that will create the discipleship that will take up the work and carry to completion the enterprise which you inaugurated; something as the quickening spirit of the Lord Jesus Christ endowed the twelve with the power and wisdom to complete what their ascended Lord had begun.—C. H. Parkhurst.

There is a best way of doing everything, of carving a joint, or sweeping a room, or holding a plow, or keeping books. The educated man or woman is the one who does things he or she has to do in the best way, without waste of time or force. Many of these "best ways" we have not wit enough to discover for ourselves. There is an immense stock of experience handed down to us through older people. To a child the father or mother represents the wisdom and skill of the race. If they do not, some one else does. At any rate, we enter into our heritage of the past in just so far as we learn from some one how to do the things we are called to do in the best way. Few people realize that the things that will make them efficient and skillful is just this matter of learning in some way or other how to do things in the best way. That is the difference between the raw "hand" and the trained servant, between the bungler and the artisan, between the man or woman who is always worried, flurried, and driven, and the person who does twice as much, and yet has plenty of leisure. We have made a great gain in the art of living when we set before ourselves the problem of finding out the best way of doing common duties.—Watchman.

FROM THE WORK.

PALMER CREEK CAMP MEETING.

Old Palmer Creek Camp Meeting, on Whittington circuit, was in every se of the word a grand success. Deethe wild rumors about yellow fever, first service began on Thursday be- the third Sunday, and continued il Sunday night, the twenty-fourth. We reached Palmer on the evening of fifteenth in a pouring rain. Rev. W. Blackwell preached that night, and was evident from that first service t the Lord was present with us. h service grew better unto the end, but a short while had lapsed until heard people exclaiming on every d, "This place is none other than the e of heaven;" and indeed it was to y precious souls. Sinners got under at conviction, and, crying out in all agonies of soul, threw themselves n at the altar, nor would they leave il God spoke peace to their souls. Then y would rise up, blessing God for his t salvation, and begin telling to rs what wondrous things God had e for them. This caused the hearts hristians to break forth; some into ntiog, some singing, some praying, altogether thanking God for his rit's presence with his people.

never heard such singing. The t of it all was that it was furnished consecrated choir, whose hearts had rnly tuned to sing God's grace. I told that many of them who fured us such excellent music were converts from the Coleville and te Plains meetings, recently held on same work. It is marvelous what power of God can do for sinners. only did these young Christians for the Lord, but they rushed gladly o the altar, there to work and pray he salvation of those troubled souls rning for their sins, and, above all, seemed pleased to hear their prayin their behalf. The altar services d many times far past the hours of ight, closing only when there were more souls unsaved at the altar. faith and such a consecrated com- of young and old Christians I saw before. How I thank God I went to "Old Palmer!"

Monday, the great day of the , we commenced with a prayer ce at 9 o'clock, led by Bro. J. ESCATAWPA, MISS.

have been at our post since the Sunday in January, revolving with regularity once a month around and about our appointed circuit, which, geographically and territorially, is the last thing in the Mississippi Conference. On the west we are bounded by the Pascagoula river, the north by the Americus circuit, which at one time was headquarters of Jackson county; on the east by the State of Alabama, and on the south by the Gulf of Mexico.

Our people have treated us nicely ever since we came, and their appreciation shows no abatement. Nice packages of edibles have found their way to the parsonage from time to time, as evidence of their good-will toward the preacher.

We have had four protracted meetings, all of them good. At Zion (Escatawpa) Bro. N. B. Harmon, of Ellisville, did the preaching, which he did well, and to the delight of most all who heard him. Bro. Harmon is a good protracted-meeting preacher. The Lord blesses his labors. In the other three meetings I was without ministerial help. Thus far we have had 28 accessions to the church—20 of them on profession of faith. We are looking forward to our camp meeting, which is Oct. 12, as a time of refreshing from the Lord.

In the matter of finances we are doing only reasonably well for ministerial support; not quite half of assessment has been paid. We have hopes that the full assessment will be paid. We have 83 per cent. of the Conference collections in cash and pledges. I don't apprehend much trouble in getting the balance. We paid the assessment for Conference claimants in March, and recently half of our foreign and domestic missionary assessment.

The Twentieth Century rally day has been observed at Zion, and collection taken, which amounted to $18.25 in pledges, with the exception of the 25 cents, which was given by a Baptist brother. Considerable interest has been taken in the parsonage by the elect ladies of Escatawpa, who, with the assistance of the pastor, organized themselves into a Ladies' Aid Society, in March, since which time they have made a Parsonage and Home Mission Society out of it. As a result of their labor, much has been done to the parsonage. The old gallery has been torn away and built anew, the body of the house weatherboarded, and the kitchen ceiled, and the windows all repaired, and some additions to the furnishing of the inside of both house and kitchen. We now have the money in hand with which to paint the outside; then we will have a neat, respectable parsonage.

W. J. DAWSON, P. C.

Rev. H. W. Bowman, P. C., Coushatta circuit, Sept. 25, 1899: "The eighteenth of July this scribe was changed from the Mooringsport circuit to the Coushatta circuit, to take the place of Rev. P. M. Brown, who has taken charge of a school. We reached here the twenty-second, and found everything ready to move onward. The people were sad at the thought of giving up Bro. Brown, they having learned to love him dearly. It is a pleasure to hear the people talk kindly of former pastors. I feel sad when I am forced to listen to bitter complaints against my predecessors, for then I think that my turn will come for a scoring after a while. Everything is moving nicely, and we are in the midst of building a nice parsonage, which we hope to have completed by Conference. Rev. W. G. Evans is the architect, and those who know him are assured that it will be up to date. . . . . Our third Quarterly Conference convened Sept. 2 at Glen Martin, the new church that Bro. Patterson worked hard to build, with that prince of laymen, W. B. Clark, assisting. The presiding elder, Dr. J. T. Sawyer, was on hand attending to the affairs of the church, and on Sunday preached an able sermon, after which he proceeded to raise a collection to meet a debt on the church. He asked for $100, and in a few minutes it was paid, and more has been handed in since, making a total of $124. After the dedication the congregation repaired to the beautiful lawn of Bro. Clark's, where under an arbor built for the occasion a dinner was spread that was all that could be asked for. In the afternoon all enjoyed another sermon from the presiding elder, and then went to their homes with pleasant and lasting memories of that day."

Rev. D. W. Babb: "We have gotten round with our protracted meetings, which did not result as well as we had hoped. However, the church was revived at each appointment. Twenty-five additions, some new family altars erected, and one or more prayer meetings revived. We are much indebted to the following brethren for valuable aid given: Rev. V. C. Curtis, M. E. Tumlin, J. H. Hall, R. M. Evans, R. A. Clark, and P. E. Duncan. May the Lord reward them abundantly! The hand of affliction has been on my charge from the beginning of the year up to now—measles being the chief trouble—and they still prevail seriously in one part of my work. No year of my ministry has been fraught with such stubborn opposition to successful church work as this. While we have been held back much in the financial part of our work, as well as other departments, we hope to make a good showing. This winds up our four years on the Louisville circuit, which have been years of spiritual profit to us, and we also hope to others. We have made many observations by which we hope to profit, and do better church work in the future than ever before. The Lord has blessed us with good health and many very dear friends (and somebody with a few enemies—just 'a thorn in the flesh'), 'but his grace is still sufficient.' Who ever my successor may be will have the best parsonage, the most conveniently situated we have ever lived in, and a compact circuit of clever people to serve. May he be a better pastor and preacher than the present encumbent!"

Miss Callie Compton, Farmersville, La., Oct. 2, 1899: "When Bro. P. O. Lowrey came to us last October and organized our little church, just six miles from Farmersville, we felt so helpless in the midst of so much unbelief; but realizing that nothing is too hard for God, we went to work in his name, and now we have much to encourage us. We have had a series of meetings with good results, and the Holy Ghost has been with us in great power, and Christians have been built up in the faith. The Lord has wonderfully blessed the labors of our pastor, H. B. Thommason, than whom a more devout Christian can not be found. May the blessings of heaven rest upon the good works Bro. Thommason did here! Now, just a word about Bro. Lowrey, through whose agency these results have been attained. We believe the success to be part due to his implicit faith in God, his reliance on the power of the Holy Ghost, and his skillful and persistent use of the sword of the Spirit. We praise God for what he has done for us here, and take courage to do more in his name. After our meeting closed Bro. Thommason and Rev. Courtland P. Smith protracted the meeting at Farmersville. Bro. Smith did the preaching. The meeting commenced on Monday night, Aug. 21, protracting until the twenty-eighth, and closed with a fine service. May God bless the CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE and all its readers!"

Rev. B. W. Lewis, Chunkey, Miss., Sept. 28, 1899: "We have just closed our round of protracted meetings—six in number—and are home for a few days' rest, feeling somewhat relieved. Were assisted at Spring Hill and Concord by Rev. J. T. Lewis, at Chunkey by Rev. B. F. Lewis, at Sageville by Rev. J. H. Foreman, and at Shiloh by Rev. H. P. Lewis, Jr. We failed to get any help for Suqualena, and the pastor did all the preaching. The people say we had a better meeting there than they have had in years—another instance showing that the people are getting rid of the idea that we can't have a meeting without a visiting brother. We have received thirty upon profession of faith, and have baptized eighteen adults and two infants. Had thirty very bright conversions and several were reclaimed. . . . . Our third Quarterly Conference was held at Concord, Sept. 9 and 10. Bro. Mellen was with us and conducted the Conference in his usual methodical manner. Sunday, at eleven o'clock, he preached a spiritual sermon on infant baptism. Bro. Harmon, of Paulding, one of our superannuates, spent a few days with us recently and filled our pulpit while here. We occasionally pick up a subscriber to the ADVOCATE, and in the meantime keep the subject and their obligation to their church paper before them."

A SILLY CONCEIT.

The following incident related by the New York Advocate of a very conceited lady who was introdnced to Bishop Newman at a reception given the Bishop in the city where he resided, illnstrates a failing which characterizes not a few chnrch members, and also teaches a valuable lesson. After a few words with this lady Bishop Newman casnally inqnired where she attended church. She replied: "Oh, I go all aronnd among the chnrches, wherever I can hear the best preaching. Bishop, if yon preached in any of onr chnrches, I shonld attend that chnrch regnlarly; bnt nsnally I get very little ont of the sermons I hear." The Bishop replied: "Well, madam, I have traversed all lands, and wherever I happen to be, in city or connty, on the Sabbath day, I attend divine worship. I have never yet, even in the hnmblest place of prayer, heard any sermon that did not bring to me great benefit."

There are professing Christians in nearly every community who entertain the same lofty opinion of themselves as did this lady, and who, in consequence, feel little or no attachment to any particnlar church. They become vagrant worshipers, who neither know the meaning of church loyalty nor care a fig about attending church, save when their curiosity can be gratified, their fancy tickled, or when the occasion is one of more than ordinary interest. Supposing themselves too wise or too spiritual to be edified by the preaching of their own pastor, because, perchance, he is a man of but mediocre ability, they either betake themselves to some other church, or, as is not seldom the case, remain at home until a Bishop, or some noted evangelist, or some other special attraction draws them to the sanctuary. The notion is entertained by a good many that if they could enjoy the ministration of a great man like Moody or Talmage, they wonld attend church regularly and lead godly lives; but since such a privilege is denied them, they are gnilty of the inexcnsable folly of neglecting their dnty to God and to the chnrch.

The people who have itching ears have by no means vanished from the earth. Many still clamor for signs and wonders, and fancy that if an angel from heaven were sent to preach to them, they would repent and believe. Fortunately for the world, however, God is not restricted to the agency of the mighty and the learned in the execntion of his plans for the salvation of the human race. He constantly uses feeble instruments and things that are insignificant in onr eyes to show that "the excellence of the power is God, and not of ns." While we donbt not that there is some foolish preaching, we nnhesitatingly assert that the average sermon contains enongh gospel to be the means of saving every sinner who will hear and heed it. If the evangelization of the world depended mainly npon the efforts of its Spnrgeons and Talmages and Moodys, countless millions who now rejoice in the hope of the glory of God would still be wandering in the darkness of sin. The majority of believers were saved under the ministry of men of average ability and intelligence. While the average minister is neither a scientist, nor a scholar, nor a genius, his utterances are not on that account to be despised. Versed in the teachings of the Sacred Scriptures, having a personal experience of the things of God, and having his mind and heart illuminated by the Holy Spirit, he is wondronsly prepared to give spiritnal instruction and guidance to all who seek salvation. If his life be holy and his words be earnest, thongh he possess no extraordinary gifts, all who wait upon his ministry in seriousness and sincerity are snre to be greatly profited. God does not pnt a premium either upon ignorance or incapacity in the pnlpit, bnt it needs to be remembered that the chief qualification that he insists upon for service in his kingdom is love, and he who possesses this in large measure, whether he be gifted or not, is the one who will be greatly efficient.

Scarcely is anything more hurtful than for a Christian to imagine he is too intellectnal to need the spiritual instruction fnrnished by the average preacher. What a rebnke to such arrogance and conceit we find in the example of Christ, "in whom dwelt all the fnllness of the Godhead bodily," and who "needed not that any shonld teach him." Lnke asserts of him that, "as his cnstom was, he went into the synagogne on the Sabbath day." Thongh Jewish worship at that time was in the hands of leaders who were shamefully corrupt and hypocritical, and though the Master often had to listen to gross misinterpretations of the Scriptures, he absented not himself from the accnstomed place of worship. The devont disciple who goes up to the honse of God to worship will always get good, as Bishop Newman testified of himself, no matter who preaches; bnt the shallow-minded believer who is skeptical of mental and spiritnal benefits, save when listening to an Apollos or to an advocate of some favorite doctrine, is more than apt to be unstable.

Says the Wesleyan Advocate: "Daniel Webster went, on one occasion, to hear a very plain, godly man preach. After the service a consequential man said: 'Well, Mr. Webster, I suppose you learn very little from snch a sermon as the one you have just heard.' Mr. Webster replied at once: 'Yon are much mistaken, sir. That preacher may not know mnch about some things, but he knows a great deal about God.'"

Preachers of commanding ability will always be in great demand, and the church has great reason to thank God for gifted leaders; but let us not make the mistake of imagining, as some seem to do, that little of worth can be accomplished without their presence and service. Let us not despise the men of one talent, nor "the day of small things."

LITERARY NOTES.

BY W. F. B.

The October nnmber of The American Illustrated Methodist Magazine opens with "The Twin Cities of the North," by Rev. Samuel G. Smith. The sketch of Joel Chandler Harris, by Forrest Adair, is exceedingly interesting. Humorous incidents characteristic of the genial writer of Southern stories, and illustrations of Georgia scenes, are interesting featnres of the sketch. "Reminiscences of Gilbert Haven and Ephraim E. Wiley," by Rev. George C. Rankin, is an appreciative article on two representative leaders of their respective divisions of Methodism. A strong argument in favor of sacred music and its influence for spiritual good is "The Ministry of Music in the Church," by Albert H. Walker. The eighth chapter of "The Illustrated History of Methodism" is entitled, "Whitefield and the Great Awakening." The scene is New England, and the chapter deals with the ministry of George Whitefield in the land of the Puritan, where he died and is buried.

Frank Leslie's Popnlar Monthly, for October, contains the first part of a masterly review by the Hon. Lyman J. Gage, Secretary of the Treasnry, of "The Finances of Our Wars." The Mexican War, the Civil War, and the late Spanish-American conflict, will be treated in a second paper. Walter Camp writes a seasonable and sensible article upon "College Athletics." "Edgar Allan Poe's College Days" at the University of Virginia, Charlottesville, are discussed in a richly-illustrated article by Jennie Bard Dugdale, apropos of the unveiling of Zolnay's famous bust of Poe, in commemoration of the fiftieth anniversary of the poet's untimely death—Oct. 7. "Women as Farmers" are written about by W. R. Draper, who asserts that "women who own and run their farms without any male assistance, constitnte thirty per cent. of the farming population of Kansas and Oklahoma." Frank R. Stockton's wonderfnl sea yarn, entitled "The Snowflake of the Service," and capitally illnstrated by Rosenmeyer, is the leading short story.

Three notable series of articles are begnn in the October Ladies' Home Journal: "Her Boston Experiences," analyzing Bostou society; "The Theater and Its People," covering the whole theme from both sides of the footlights; and "The Autobiography of a Girl," her life from sixteen to twenty-six. Through Rudyard Kipling's glasses, "The American Girl" is a charming creature. Edward Bok writes of "The Fee of the Doctor," and points out "The South's Literary Chance." In "The Candy-Pull System in the Church," Ian Maclaren protests against turning the church into a place of second-class entertainment.

The October Century opens with a profusely illustrated paper on "Fascinating Cairo," by Frederick C. Penfield. A pictnresque view of "The Streets of Peking" is given by Miss Scidmore. Major J. B. Pond relates his reminiscences of "A Pioneer Boyhood" in Illinois. Special literary interest attaches to the announcement of the winners of the Century prizes for the best poem, story and essay by recent graduates of American colleges. Last year women gradnates of Eastern colleges won all the prizes. This year all three were won by Westerners, the prize poet only being a woman.

Scribner's, for October, contains "The Water-Front of New York," by Jesse Lynch Williams. Mr. Williams takes a new view of some of the pictnresque featnres of New York which are neglected by the nsnal sight-seer, and his vivid text is accompanied with a striking series of drawings by McCarter, Guerin, Peixotto, Leigh, and others. A new development in photography is described by Dwight L. Elmendorf, the amatenr and expert whose work is so well-known. Under the title, "Telephotography," he describes the attachment to an ordinary camera by which views are taken at a distance of twenty or thirty miles, as though the instrument were within a few hnndred feet of the object. Stevenson's letters are fuller of life and movement than any preceding instaliment. There are poems by Bliss Carman, Arthnr Colton, and Marguerite Merington. The Field of Art discusses "Art in the Schools," and "The Point of View" has something to say on how women snffer from war.

Ainslee's Magazine, for October, contains, among others, the following articles: "What Hope for the Shamrock," a conversation with Sir Thomas Lipton; "The New Dawn in Education," "The Story of Reid of Newfoundland," "The Camera Club of New York." Other timely and readable features are: "A Man and a Colony, the Story of Newfoundland;" "The Solving of the Servant Problem," and short stories by E. W. Hornung, Henry G. Catlin, Arthur J. Stringer, Howard Fielding, and Edith Robinson.

"SHAKE, JOHN, SHAKE."

It is anything but creditable to this country that only by special permission of the Secretary of the Treasury were the Chinese members of the "Olympia" crew permitted to march in the procession last Saturday at New York, and that this permission was granted on the condition that immediately after the parade they return to their ship and make no attempt to remain in this country. In Dewey's fleet there were about fifty Chinamen, who rendered efficient and courageous service in the battle of Manila Bay. In recognition of their gallant conduct Dewey addressed a letter in May, 1898, to the Secretary of the Navy, urging that they be admitted to the United States, if they so desired, but for some reason his letter was not communicated to Congress. These Chinamen have certainly won the right of residence in the United States, and he is a queer kind of American who would not extend a hand to any of them and say: "Shake, John, shake. Pigtail, or no pigtail, heathen or Christian, I am glad to welcome you to America."—Central Advocate.

REV. JOSEPH H. STONE.

Rev. Joseph H. Stone, a superannuated member of the Louisiana Conference, passed away at his home in Athens, La., Snnday, Oct. 1, at 5:15 P. M.

Bro. J. H. Brown, preacher in charge at Gibsland, writes me: "When I visited him, a few days before his departure, he said, 'I have not the ecstacy that I have often had, but a deep peace pervading my soul.'"

So our dear, venerable brother, who fought so valiantly and long, and never flinched, and who suffered so excruciatingly and patiently, "kept the faith," and has passed into the realm of the "spirits of the just made perfect," and is with the sacramental hosts. He is no stranger there.

I knew him in the early fifties in the old Tennessee Conference. I preceded him one or two years to Louisiana; so he must have come to this field in 1857. He was a fine preacher, strong and vigorous in thought, convincing in logic, true and tried and faithful—a man of God. He has two sons.

"Thus star by star declines
'Till all are passed away."

Our ranks are thinning. Oh, to be ready!

Let some brother write his memoir who has more data and points.

T. B. WHITE.

Ruston, La., Oct 3, 1899.

REV. T. B. WHITE DEAD.

On this page will be found an article from the pen of Rev. T. B. White, written since our last issue, announcing the death of Rev. J. H. Stone. Before it was put in type the hand that penned the announcement was also still in death. We are in receipt of the following note from Bro. C. H. Carson, Jr., giving particulars concerning his death:

Ruston, La., Oct. 9, 1899.

Rev. T. B. White, D. D., after preaching to the evening congregation at Siloam Camp Ground, last Saturday, was stricken with apoplexy, and died within two hours. He was 67 years old, and had been in the ministry of the M. E. Church, South, about 46 years. He transferred from Tennessee to Louisiana in 1856; from Louisiana to Colnmbia in 1872; from Colnmbia to Denver in 1881; from Denver to Colnmbia in 1882; from Columbia to Louisiana in 1884. He was the best pastor I have ever known, and the amount of work he performed during his ministry was extraordinary from any point of view.

Many hearts will be made sad by this announcement, as Bro. White's friends were numerous wherever he was known. He was a thoroughly consecrated Christian and a man of most exemplary life. Thongh he had been on the superannuate list for the last few years, he was still diligent in the Master's service, doing "whatsoever his hands found to do" up to the very last. "He ceased at once to work and live."

MILLSAPS COLLEGE.

Millsaps College opened on Sept. 27. The classes are all organized and work is progressing satisfactorily. No student, however, who may come in late will be pnt back on that account. His classification will be the same as if he had been present at the opening of the session. This applies to both old and new students.

Students will be received at any time they may see fit to come.

AUSTRIA'S GRAPPLE WITH THE JEW.

The anti-Jewish party raised the false flag of Christian socialism for political purposes, and got an immense majority in the Vienna Town Council and the Provincial Diet of Lower Austria; but they did nothing for the working classes, the destruction of the prerogatives of the nobility, the loosening of the burdens of militarism, nor for the removal of distress among the poor; they said nothing about the liberty of the press, or the right of association. All they wanted to do was to drive the Jews out, and if they could not do that, to deprive them of the rights of citizenship. They proposed to drive them from public places, and from the numerous chairs they have in the universities. Of the million and a half of the people in Vienna, one hundred and twenty thousand are Jews—not one in ten. But of the four thousand physicians half are Jews, and of the one thousand lawyers about six hundred and fifty; and the majority of the medical professors, that place Vienna in medical science at the head of the cities of the world, are Jews; while the greater part of the daily newspapers, and the bulk of the trade, wholesale [illegible]

The fight will still be long. These anti-Jews are playing, of course, into the hands of the Roman Catholics. It is affirmed that nearly all the celebrated professors from Germany are abandoning their chairs at Austrian universities, while most of the German professors who have had chairs offered them in Austria have refused them. These enormities, it is believed, will bring about a tremendous collapse in a short time.

What a testimony to the Jew's relative brain power!—New York Advocate.

NOW IS THE TIME.

The struggle is on, and both patriots and Christians must meet it. Mormonism is making an issue on the seating of B. H. Roberts in Congress. It is announced that the Mormon hierarchy will spend a half million dollars rather than see him expelled. It believes in the liberal use of money, and will buy votes, if possible, in his favor. In view of these facts, it is necessary for the constituents of our respective congressmen to be upon the alert and not be caught napping. Do not wait until your representative gets to Washington before making sure of him, but bring pressure to bear upon him in advance, and not subject him to the temptation of Mormon gold. Now is the time to give Mormonism a deadly blow. If it succeeds in its present attempt, it will claim a legal recognition, which it will press in the future for all it is worth.—Presbyterian.

CHURCHES NOT WANTONLY DESECRATED.

The charge having been made by certain Roman Catholic ecclesiastics that Catholic Churches are being seized and used for military purposes, General Otis cables that sixteen churches in different localities have been occupied by United States troops, four only partially occupied, and religious services not interfered with, also three convents occupied. He cables that these three convents and ten of the closed churches were formerly occupied by insurgents, and that church property is respected and protected by our troops. In all wars it is frequently necessary to use church property, sometimes for fortifications, sometimes for barracks, and frequently for hospitals. It has also been found advisable to use some such buildings to prevent their being a place of refuge for the enemy.—New York Advocate.

FRANCE MARVELS.

The French press marvels at the fact that the "maddening enthusiasm" shown over the return of Dewey has not turned his head and aroused selfish ambition in him. The Temps observes: "In twenty-four hours a French general in Dewey's position would be plotting to overturn the government." This assertion, which is doubtless true, emphasizes not only the difference between Dewey and the French generals, but between the people of the United States and those of France. Were there good reason to suspect that Dewey was cherishing the dream of a coup d'etat for his personal aggrandizement, his receptions at New York and Washington, which owe most of their enthusiasm to the belief that he is a simple and true man as well as a great naval officer, would have been comparatively tame affairs.—Central Advocate.

ROMAN CATHOLIC LOSSES.

Very suggestive was the remark of Rev. L. A. Delury, president of St. Thomas' College (Roman Catholic), Villanova, Penn., at the Catholic Educational Congress in Chicago the other day. He said: "There is not only a drifting of Catholic students to non-Catholic colleges, but a positive march. We admit it. We must admit it. Regarding the remedy, I would say that more attention be given in Catholic colleges to better breeding, better manners, gentlemanliness and manliness. More attention must be given to accommodate the student, and greater efforts must be made to give more instruction in the sciences."—Treasury.

EPWORTH LEAGUE DEPARTMENT.

"ALL FOR CHRIST."

LOUISIANA.

REV. THOMAS B. CLIFFORD, Jackson, La., EDITOR.

Be loyal to the church.

Don't forget the solemn vows voluntarily assumed at her altar.

Supposed superiority of judgment can not be taken as an excuse for non-fulfillment of pledges made.

The Methodist Church has stood the test during all the years; at her altars multiplied thousands have found the pearl of great price, and to-day, as in the past, no more pious and faithful people are to be found anywhere than those numbered among her communicants.

The loyal Epworth Leaguer is a living witness to the power and potency of the gospel according to Methodism. May each one prove true to the trust committed to their hands!

To the young men and women of to-day, with the dew of youth upon their brow, the church looks for great things in the coming days.

Our fathers were true to God and wrought gloriously. May we prove worthy sons and daughters of such noble sires!

The League work in New Orleans flourishes, and Presiding Elder Keener has good right to be proud of the host of young people in his district, who, true to God and the church, are found "instant in season and out of season."

The Shreveport district—Rev. Jno. T. Sawyer, D. D., presiding elder—comes second upon the list of districts in Louisiana in point of League work. Bro. Crews, of the Arcadia, is, however, not far behind with his faithful band.

We think the reports at Monroe, in December, will show a large increase—from many standpoints—in the work of the League in this State by the Gulf, as compared with those made at previous times.

"Tempus fugit," and the annual roll-call will soon be heard. Let the Leaguers help the pastors in all the work of the church, that "everything in full" and "many conversions" may be the response on every hand.

MISSISSIPPI.

REV. HENRY G. HAWKINS, Madison, Miss ASSOCIATE EDITOR.

Bro. D. Gordon Patton, of Jackson, who was recording secretary for the State League Conference, held at West Point in July, informs us that Bro. Spragins, of the North Mississippi Conference, was to attend to the publishing of the Minutes, and that they will be in print by Oct. 15. It is hoped that these Minutes will be widely, but wisely circulated among the League workers of the State, and carefully, thoughtfully perused. Let the host of young people see what these gatherings aim at, let them study the questions that arise in them, and be prepared to make them more and more factors in the solution of our educational, social, economic, and religious problems.

It is an object of pride with this Associate Editor that the two leading articles of the Sept-Oct. Methodist Review are by men at whose feet he has sat as student. Prof. T. C. McCorvey, of the University of Alabama, writes upon "Henry Tutwiler, and the Influence of the University of Virginia on Education in Alabama"; Prof. Joel C. DuBose, of Knoxville, Tenn., writes upon "Æschylus and the Seven Against Thebes."

Wood Street Epworth League contributed $15 toward building a walk from the Home to the corporation line. The Wood St. League has been kind to us.—Our Home.

Our young friend, Mr. W. L. Lagrone, of West Point, a clothier, proposes to clothe one of our boys during the coming season.—Our Home.

Where a church is not making other provision for the Orphanage at Water Valley, it will be in order for the League at such a church to have a special service on Thanksgiving Day, and let the collection be for the Orphan's Home.

Bro. Ellis, of the League page in the Alabama Advocate, commends the North Alabama Conference College at Birmingham for being the first college in his State to organize an Epworth League. Whilst this writer has not believed that Methodism should have two male colleges in Alabama, and that the two Conferences ought to combine on Greensboro, or else both go to Birmingham, yet we trust that the new educational enterprise will prove itself worthy of perpetuation. The church is in need of many Sunday-school and League leaders. Our colleges should give us practical help in this direction.

Preparations for literary work in the Leagues are being somewhat interrupted by the delay of the Publishing House in getting out the books. We have been expecting a set of the books every day for two weeks. But a book is not made in a day.

Workers of the Columbus, Greenville, Brookhaven and Seashore districts will please send to the Associate Editor at Madison, Miss., something about their literary departments. What have you done in the past with the League course, or of other literary work? What are you doing now? What do you propose to do?

Whereas, We, the faculty of Centenary College, feel the loss sustained by the death of our senior member, Prof. George H. Wiley; therefore, be it

Resolved, That we recognize the ability and success which marked Prof. Wiley's management of the Department of Ancient Languages at Centenary during the forty years of his labors at the college, his unfailing devotion to his work, and the sincere love for the institution which he manifested from the time of his election in 1855 to his last illness and death on Sept. 21, 1899.

We further recognize the genuineness of his Christian character, the purity and nobility of his life, and the valuable example which has made its impress upon the large number with whom he has been associated.

Recognizing the will of Almighty God in removing Prof. Wiley from our midst to his reward, we feel grateful for so many years of this useful professor's active labor, and for the godly influences that survive him here.

PAINT TALKS, XXI.
AMATEUR HOUSE PAINTING.

It stands to reason that the professional painter is a better workman in his own line than any inexperienced novice can be. It is therefore reasonable to insist that if the house owner wants the best work a professional workman should be employed to furnish it.

So much for the superiority of the painter as a painter, but when it comes down to the question of painting materials, the most honest painter is not always the best authority. I have, in this series, given some information which certain painters may see cause to contradict. The fact is, however, that the best authorities support my position, and many of the most advanced painters apply in practice the principles laid down in these articles.

While the painter is always to be employed for painting when that course is practicable, it sometimes happens that, on the score of economy, opportunity or for some other reason, the alternative for amateur painting is no painting. Now paint is essential to the preservation of property, and amateur painting, while not as desirable from an æsthetic point of view, serves the purpose of preservation almost as effectively as professional painting.

When amateur painting becomes necessary, the color cards issued by the various paint houses will be found very helpful in the selection of tints; and if ready mixed paints, without water or alkali, can be obtained, they will be found the most convenient for use. Scarcely less convenient, however, and generally perhaps safer to use, are the paste paints manufactured in white and a variety of tints by many of the leading paint houses. These require only the addition of linseed oil and, in some cases, turpentine, to fit them for use; and as almost the whole structure of durable painting depends on the use of pure linseed oil, it may be safer to rely on procuring pure oil than pure ready mixed paints.

The essentials of a good house paint are that it shall contain a fair proportion of zinc white, pure linseed oil and no water or alkali; and the conditions requisite to a good job of painting are that these surfaces shall be perfectly dry, that plenty of time shall be allowed for each coat to dry before the next is applied, and that each coat shall be laid on evenly. With these conditions in mind, even an amateur can do presentable and durable work.

PIANOS
AND
BY MAIL.

The immense advantage in purchasing from us by the mail system is the guaranteed selection on the part of the oldest and largest music house South.

Selling over one thousand pianos and organs each year, and buying goods in enormous quantities, enables us to give those dealing direct the benefit of the closest possible prices on high-grade pianos and organs.

Dealing direct with the customer by mail enables us to eliminate all such items as agents' commission, hotel bills, etc., and to give our customers prices that many factories do not equal to their wholesale trade. Each piano or organ selected by us goes from our warerooms with a guarantee that if it is not as recommended, it can be returned at our expense. Any customer in the South can obtain our lowest net price by mail, and in case of purchase, the selection and instrument will be absolutely guaranteed, and from five to seven years' trial allowed to test same.

Easy payments will be accepted, and old pianos or organs will be received as part payments.

Having been in business in New Orleans half a century buying and selling all grades of pianos, we are in a position to judge of the merits and demerits of the different makes, and to know their adaptability to our trying climate. We give our customers the advantage of that experience.

KIDNEY TROUBLE.

The Most Prevalent, Dangerous and Deceptive Disease

Thousands Have it and Don't Know it.

Pains and aches come from excess of uric acid in the blood, due to neglected kidney trouble. Kidney trouble causes quick or unsteady heart beats, and makes one feel as though they had heart trouble, because the heart is over-working to pump the thick, kidney-poisoned blood through the veins and arteries.

Soreness or uncomfortable feeling in the back indicates kidney trouble of no small importance.

The passing of scanty or profuse quantities of urine is a warning of kidney trouble. If you want to feel well you can make no mistake by first doctoring your kidneys.

The famous new discovery, Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, is the true specific for kidney, bladder and urinary troubles. It has cured thousands of apparently hopeless cases after all other efforts have failed.

Sold on its merits by all druggists in fifty-cent and one dollar sizes. A sample bottle sent free by mail to any address. Also a book telling all about Swamp-Root and its wonderful cures. When writing, address Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., and mention that you read this generous offer in the New Orleans Christian Advocate.

SPANISH-AMERICAN WAR PANORAMA

is one of the war books which is likely to be in continuous demand. It is a panoramic record of the triumph of Yankee Doodle. The eagle flaps his wings on every page, and "Old Glory" waves around and above every scene. Prominent officers connected with the war are here portrayed, as well as many of the "men behind the guns." Military life is pictured to the eye, from recruiting to guard mount and skirmish line. Nor is the ludicrous omitted. The company cook receives the attention due to his importance; the mess is shown; cavalry scenes are given; the hospital arrangements are depicted; the heroines of the Red Cross service are displayed; street scenes in Havana, Santiago and elsewhere are unrolled, the new citizens or subjects (which are they?) of Uncle Sam appear and disappear as the leaves are turned.

In a word, the gazer visits the new localities and sees the tumultuous new life, without the risk or expense of a sea voyage.

The Album is 5½x8 inches, weighs 12 ounces, printed on finest coated paper.

Sent FREE to any address in the United States, Canada, or Mexico, for 12 cents in stamps or coin, to cover postage and packing. Copy may be seen at any ticket office of the Big Four Route.

Order at once, as the edition is limited.

OUR $1 OFFER.

Much has been said about reducing the subscription price of the Advocate. The only way in which a reduction can be brought about is by an increase in the number of subscribers. In order to facilitate this result, we make the following offer: Until further notice we will take new subscriptions at the rate of $1 for eight months. When seven thousand five hundred new names have been sent in at this rate with the cash, we will extend the time four months longer, thus reducing the price to $1 per annum. When the extension is made, old subscribers will get the benefit as well as new ones, provided they first pay up all arrearages. Of course, no commissions can be given under this offer. Address

THE GIRLS THAT ARE WANTED.

The girls that are wanted are home girls—
Girls that are mother's right hand,
That fathers and brothers can trust in,
And the little ones understand;

Girls that are fair on the hearth-stone,
And pleasant when nobody sees;
Kind and sweet to their own folk,
Ready and anxious to please.

The girls that are wanted are wise girls,
That know what to do and to say;
That drive with a smile or a soft word
The wrath of the household away.

The girls that are wanted are good girls—
Good girls from the heart to the lips;
Pure as the lily is white and pure,
From its heart to its sweet leaf-tips.

THE DETERMINED MAN.

A constant struggle, a ceaseless battle to bring success from inhospitable surroundings, is the price of all great achievement. There is scarcely a great man in history who has not had to fight the way to his eminence, inch by inch, against opposition, and often through ridicule, and abuse of friends as well as enemies.

Even Washington was threatened by a rude crowd because he would not pander to the clamor of the people; the Duke of Wellington was mobbed in the streets of London, and his windows broken while his wife lay dead in the house. Dr. Priestley, the discoverer of oxygen, had his house burned and his chemical library destroyed by a mob, and he was forced to flee from his country. Bruno was burned in Rome for revealing the heavens, and Versalins was condemned for dissecting the human body. Roger Bacon, one of the greatest thinkers the world ever saw, was terribly persecuted, his books burned in public, and he was kept in prison for ten years.

Barnum began the race in business life, barefoot. At the age of fifteen he was obliged to buy on credit the shoes he wore to his father's funeral. His museum was burned several times, and he met with reverses which would have disheartened most men; but he had that grit and pluck which know no defeat.

Robert Collyer brought his bride to America in the steerage. He worked at the anvil in Pennsylvania nine years. By dint of hard work and great determination he became one of the greatest preachers.

Columbus was dismissed as a fool from court after court, but he pushed his suit against an incredulous and ridiculing world. Rebuffed by kings, scorned by queens, he never swerved a hair's breadth from his great purpose. The "New World" was engraved upon his heart; and reputation, ease, pleasure, position, life itself, if need be, must be sacrificed. Threats, ridicule, ostracism, storms, leaky vessels, mutiny of sailors, could not shake his mighty purpose.

Seven shoemakers sat in Congress during the first century of our government—Roger Sherman, Henry Wilson, Gideon Lee, William Graham, John Halley, H. P. Baldwin, and Daniel Sheffey. Galileo with an opera glass made greater discoveries than has anyone since with the most powerful telescope.

John Brighton, the author of "The Beauties of England and Wales," used to study in bed because too poor to afford a fire.

The great founder of Boston University left Cape Cod for Boston to make his way in the world with only four dollars. But he was not afraid of hardships and obstacles. He could find no "opening for a boy" any more than Horace Greeley could, so he made one. He found a board and made it into an oyster stand on the street corner; he borrowed a wheelbarrow, went three miles to an oyster smack, bought three bushels of oysters and wheeled them to his stand. Soon his little savings amounted to one hundred and thirty dollars, with which he bought a horse and cart. This poor boy kept right on until he became the millionaire, Isaac Rich.

See young Disraeli, sprung from a hated and persecuted race, without education, without opportunity, pushing his way up through the lower classes, through the middle classes, through the upper classes, until he stands self-poised upon the topmost round of political and social power.

Scoffed, ridiculed, rebuffed, hissed from the House of Commons, he simply says, "The time will come when you shall hear me." The time did come, and the boy "with no chance" swayed the sceptre of England as prime minister for a quarter of a century.

Thomas Carlyle and Hugh Miller were masons. Dante and Descartes were soldiers. Jeremy Taylor was a barber. Andrew Johnson was a tailor. Cardinal Wolseley, Defoe and Henry Kirke White were butcher's sons. Faraday was the son of a blacksmith, and his teacher, Humphrey Davy, was an apprentice to an apothecary. Kepler was a waiter boy in a German hotel; Bunyan was a tinker; Copernicus, the son of a Polish baker; Claude Lorraine, the son of a pastry cook; and the boy Herschel played the oboe for his meals. Marshal Ney, "the bravest of the brave," rose from the ranks. Richard Cobden was a boy in a London warehouse. His first speech in Parliament was a complete failure; but he was not afraid of defeat, and soon became one of the great orators of England.

How can you keep a determined man from success? Place stumbling-blocks in his way, and he takes them for stepping-stones, and climbs to greatness. Take his money away, and he makes spurs of his poverty to urge him on. Cripple him, and he writes the Waverly Novels. Lock him up in a dungeon, and he writes the "Pilgrim's Progress;" leave him in a cradle in a log cabin in the wilderness, and in a few years you find him in the White House.

Teach youth that labor is the great schoolmaster of the race, and that industry and perseverance are the price which all must pay for distinction: show that it takes courage to persist in an undertaking which everybody ridicules as foolish and visionary; that it takes courage to wear threadbare clothes, while one's schoolmates and companions dress in broadcloth; that it takes courage to say "No," when all the world says "Yes."

Show young men and women that, to succeed, they must pour their whole hearts and souls into their work; they must be fired by a determination which knows no defeat, which cares not for hunger or ridicule, which spurns hardship and laughs at want and disaster; and that he who would get the most out of life must fight his way up to whatever worthy prizes he would win.—Success.

IDLENESS.

There is no danger so great for man and boys as idleness. If mothers and fathers would save their boys, they should give them something to do. Let them saw up the wood. Let them keep the tall grass from the garden, and the tall grass from the lawn, the dirt from their clothes and the dust from their shoes. Don't do everything for them. It pays to teach the boys to work—not so much for what they can do, but what it will do for them. If more boys could have a piece of ground, a shop, or a place of some kind where they could work off their superfluous energy, we would hear less of truants and reform schools. In the matter of reading, too, if you do not wish the boys to read worthless and trashy books, you must put into their hands good, well-written books, and not those of a dull type which will discourage a young man.—Exchange.

HOME COURTESIES.

A correspondent gives us this experience: "I am one of those whose lot in life has been to go out into an unfriendly world at an early age; and of nearly twenty families in which I made my home in the course of about nine years, there were only three or four that could be properly designated as happy families, and the source of trouble was not so much the lack of love, as the lack of care to manifest it."

What a world of misery is suggested by this brief remark! Not over three or four happy homes in twenty, and the cause so manifest, and so easily remedied. Ah! in the "small, sweet courtesies of life," what power resides! In a look, a word, a tone, how much of happiness or disquietude may be communicated! Think of it, dear reader, and take the lesson home with you.—The American.

CIRCUMSTANCES ALTER CASES.

A young lady of Martinsburg played a cruel joke on her mother recently. She accidentally found a love letter that her father had written to her mother. Substituting her own name and that of her lover for the names in the letter, she handed it to her mother to read. The old lady raved with anger, stamped her foot in disgust and indignation, and forbade her daughter having anything to do with a young man who could write such sickening, nonsensical stuff to a girl. The young lady then handed the letter she had found to her mother to read, and then the house became so quiet she could hear the grass grow in the back yard. Moral—Circumstances alter cases.—Exchange.

HOW TO SUCCEED.

Boys, the world is wide. If you wish to be somebody, "pitch in." The brave always have friends. Where others have gone, you can go. If the old track don't suit, make new ones. Success is not obtained without effort. If you fail once, try it again. If it's dark, strike a light. Are you in the shade? Move around—for if there's shade on one side, there is sunshine on the other. Take time, boys; don't hurry too fast. Go slow, especially till you know the road or become acquainted with your team.—India Witness.

The native Christians of the South Sea Islands are model Sabbath-keepers. On Saturday they prepare all their food for Sunday; not a fire is lighted, nor flesh nor food is cooked; not a tree is climbed, nor a canoe is seen on the water, nor a journey on land is undertaken on God's holy day.—Central Methodist.

Hygiene.

OVER-EXERCISE.

Interference with digestion is a by no means uncommon effect of excessive exercise, and so far as training is concerned, it is one of the most destructive. The blood can not flow in full stream to every part at once. As Dr. Brunton says, "Everyone knows that while moderate exercise tends to produce appetite, a long and exhausting exertion tends to destroy the appetite, and even to produce actual sickness, as one finds in mountain climbing." People differ greatly in this respect, but in some—great, ponderous men as they may seem—the digestion is so easily upset by muscular exercise that, although they may be giants for a momentary exertion, anything like a sustained effort disturbs digestion, and outs at the very root of their nutrition. In many cases, however, the limit to exercise lies in diminished excretion. Unless the excretory organs are thoroughly efficient the tissues become crowded with products which can not be got rid of, the senses become dimmed, and effort becomes a mere automatism in consequence of a self-poisoning by the products of muscular waste. Interference with digestion so lowers nutrition, while accumulation of waste products so poisons the system that in either case further exertion becomes impossible—the very will to make it passes away. But it is different in regard to the heart. The heart, although strained, may yet be driven on to its own destruction. Every muscular effort not only demands from the heart an increased flow of blood, but also drives an increased quantity toward it. So long as the heart can pass this forward all is well, but when it fails not merely is the circulation of the blood rendered imperfect, but serious damage is done to the heart itself. If when the heart was overdriven it merely struck, the enfeebled circulation would soon put a stop to further effort. The willing heart, however, taking at each beat a wider sweep, and driving into the vessels a larger quantity of blood, so meets the call that the athlete can struggle on, perhaps to win his race. But the strained heart suffers, the stretched muscle does not quite come back, the dilated cavity does not quite close at each contraction, and permanent mischief is set up. Thus it is that exercise, driven to the limit imposed by the heart, is over-exercise in the most serious sense of the word. If it is the heart that stops it, the chances are that it has already gone too far.—London Hospital.

Oliver Wendell Holmes once said, during the mighty struggle between the States, that the constant cry of the masses was for bread and newspapers. Now, since more than a third of a century has changed the political and financial issues, the great cry in the Southern States is for a pleasant and reliable Chill Tonic. Dicks' Chillifuge complies with this demand. It is as pleasant as orange syrup, and as prompt to cure malaria as the bitter Sulphate of Quinine. If you have a case of Chills or Fever which you can not break, try Chillifuge, and enjoy life once more.

IN MEMORY.

Little Pearly Tucker Keer
In our home is seen no more;
Parents, friends, and loved ones,
Strive to meet him over on the other shore.

Yes, we miss our little darling;
God in heaven only knows;
But he has gone to join the angels
Over on the other shore.

Yes, he has gone to join the angels
Up in heaven, so pure and fair;
Cheer up, friends and parents,
And meet our darling there.

He has crossed the waves of Jordan,
And is safe with Jesus there;
Beckoning to papa and mama
To meet him over there.

Christ is calling his little ones to him;
One by one they pass away;
In a land of joy and happiness
Many a darling has gone to stay.

AUNT LUCY.

HAYES—Death comes to every home, and always takes us by surprise. How truly so on the morning of June 1, 1899, the peaceful home of our friend, Mr. F. M. Hayes, was visited by the death angel, which took from them the loving companion and affectionate mother, Mrs. SALLIE HAYES, the daughter of J. E. and Sarah Parker. She was born in Hinds county, March 5, 1843; made a profession of faith and united with the Baptist Church (Damascus) in 1858; was a consistent member to her death; was married to Mr. F. M. Hayes, Aug. 16, 1860; departed this life June 1, 1899.

Sister Hayes was a sufferer several years, yet she bore her afflictions with great patience without murmuring. She was a woman with a bright mind, always ready and willing to give good advice; helpful to the sick or distressed; a woman who looked well after her own household. She was the mother of ten children. Of these eight survive her, some many miles from the parental roof, and the sad message was flashed over the wires, "Your mother is dead." What a heart-rending sentence! How full of deep sorrow! Yet we must all taste the cup which Destiny has mixed for us.

Sorrow is indeed a crown of thorns, but it often becomes a wreath of light to the brows which it has lacerated. The bereaved ones have the comfort of knowing that their devotion and tender care smoothed her declining days. She is gone, but her pious influence still lives. When you see the vacant chair by her favorite window we know your hearts say:

We miss you from our home, "dear mother;"
We miss you from thy place;
A shadow o'er our life is cast;
We miss the sunshine of thy face.

We miss thy kind and willing hand,
Thy fond and tender care;
Our home is sad without thee;
We miss thee everywhere.

Sweet be thy rest, and peaceful thy sleeping;
God's way is best—thou art in his keeping;
O blessed sleep, where ills ne'er molest thee,
Why should we weep?—for heaven hath blessed thee.

Sweet be thy rest; no more we may greet thee,
'Till with the blest in heaven we meet thee;
O union sweet, that death can not sever,
There we shall meet where sad tears fall, no, never.

A TRUE FRIEND.

FERGURSON—JOSEPH A. FERGURSON was born in Jasper county, Ga., in 1803; came to Mississippi in 1810; was married to Miss Elizabeth Haley, daughter of Jacob Haley, of Copiah county, Miss., Dec. 23, 1824; died July 1, 1899, at the Price House, in Jackson, Miss., where his son, J. T. Fargurson, was providing for his temporal necessities.

"Uncle Joe" Fergurson was one of the oldest and best-known landmarks in our State. He knew more about the history of the State than any man with whom I ever conversed. He felled the first tree where the capital of the State now stands. When he first came to Jackson it consisted of one log hut. He was an eye-witness to the laying of the foundation of the old capitol building. His life would fill a good-sized history of interesting events. He was circuit clerk of Rankin county for twenty-two years. He was converted and joined the Methodist Church when he was eight years old.

I have known "Uncle Joe" since I was a boy in Rankin county. I have never heard aught against him. For the last two years he has been with his niece, Mrs. William Thompson, near Mt. Pleasant Church, on the Gallman charge. Most of the time he was confined to his bed. I have never seen greater devotion and care to anyone than was given by Sister Thompson to her invalid uncle. I visited him often during his last illness. I always found him cheerful and resigned to his condition. He had abiding faith in God. He said to me, "I am ninety-seven years old, and have been serving the Lord since I was eight years old, and find God's promises true, and his service more delightful than all else in this world." His life was in keeping with his profession. He said to me, "I am just waiting for the summons." He was a loyal Methodist, yet he was ready to aid the cause of Christ through any denomination. He gave thirty acres of land to the County Line Baptist Church, in Copiah county, and hewed the logs with his own hands to make the seats for the first church built there. Everyone said he was a good man. We buried him at County Line Church by the side of his wife and many other relatives. This writer felt honored that "Uncle Joe" should request him to perform the last sad rites. He has gone to his reward.

W. M. WILLIAMS.

VEST—Mrs. REBECCA JANE VEST, wife of Bro. J. A. Vest, of Bethesda Church, Gallman circuit, and daughter of W. C. Enochs, late of Steen's Creek, Rankin county, and sister to Judge J. R. Enochs, of Brandon, and Rev. K. S. Enochs and Samuel Enochs, of Jackson, Miss.

Sister Vest was born April 16, 1850, in Rankin county, Miss.; married Dec. 18, 1872, to Mr. J. A. Vest; died at her home Aug. 19, 1899.

Sister Vest leaves a sorrowing husband and eleven children to mourn their loss. To say that Sister Vest was an affectionate wife and a tender, loving, and painstaking mother, only faintly expresses her devotion to her family. My wife has often remarked, after a visit to that home, that that was one of the happiest homes we ever visited.

Sister Vest was converted and joined the M. E. Church, South, when about fifteen years old. While modest and retiring, yet she was positive and aggressive in her Christian character. She loved much; therefore, she did much. No pastor or parsonage ever had a better friend than Sister Vest. Surely "she hath done what she could." Her life was a sacrificial life, as that of her Lord's. She has followed her Master, she has finished her course, she has kept the faith; therefore, she has received the crown of everlasting life at his right hand. Thank God for such witnesses of his power to save.

W. M. WILLIAMS, P. C.

Gallman, Miss.

CARR—Sister MARY CARR was born Oct. 5, 1837, in Noxubee county, Miss., and died Aug. 26, 1899.

In her case it was pre-eminently true that "death loves a shining mark." She was a splendid exponent of the doctrines of our religion, and had all the graces and virtues that adorn human life. Like Mary of old, she gave her Lord the best possession of her life—her heart's love. She has left an indelible impression upon the community in which she lived so long. Many hearts were sad when death seized her, but her sky was clear, and she went to her Master like a ripened sheaf to the garner.

Below are some resolutions prepared by her Sunday-school class, which she taught for many years. E. S. LEWIS.

Death has again visited our ranks, and this time has taken from us our beloved teacher, Mrs. Mary N. Carr. We realize our great loss, but we are thankful that she has left with us the memory of her beautiful example. Truly she was one who dwelt in high altitudes, mentally and morally; one who could say to those whose feet she strove to guide in paths of righteousness, "Follow me, even as I follow Christ." Be it, therefore,

Resolved, That we, her pupils, mourn most tenderly for our departed teacher, and that we are determined to profit by her example, and follow more closely in the steps of Jesus than we have done before.

Resolved, That to her sorrowing family we extend our heartfelt sympathy, and we would point them in their bereavement to Him "who knoweth our frame, and remembereth that we are dust," and who has promised never to try us beyond what we are able to bear.

Committee: Mary Price, Annie Cole, C. Y. Jackson, Estelle E. Zepernick, Frank Cole.

CLIMAX SEWING MACHINE,

With Six Side Drawers and Full Set of Attachments.

The Climax is manufactured by the New Home Sewing Machine Company, whose reputation for reliability is second to none in the

The "Climax" Sewing Machine is constructed on the most approved mechanical principles, under the immediate supervision of the best inventive talent obtainable. Has large space under the arm. Each machine is furnished with castors. Loose balance wheel, whereby bobbin can be wound without removing the work. New automatic bobbin winder, enabling operator to automatically wind the bobbin without guiding the thread. The stitch can be regulated while the machine is in motion. Old ideas have been discarded in its manufacture, and in accordance with the progressive spirit of the age new combinations and devices have been used to obtain desired results.

It uses a straight self-setting needle, which can not be set wrong, and makes the double-thread "lock-stitch." Has all the improvements known to the sewing machine art, including the equalized tensions, open-end cylinder shuttle, oscillating shuttle carrier, and double direct acting feed.

It is guaranteed to give satisfaction. If you want one of these machines at rock-bottom price, write at once to

Rev. W. C. BLACK, 512 Camp St., New Orleans.

P. S.—The machine will be shipped direct from the factory in the North.

The "Combination" Bible.

A SUPERB EDITION

of the Holy Scriptures, showing at a glance at the foot of the pages all changes made by the revisers.

New Type. All Proper Names Self-Pronouncing. The Most Valuable Collateral Matter.

There is a steady and increasing demand for first-class Bibles. Everybody is anxious to obtain a copy of the best edition of the Holy Scriptures. Old editions are constantly being replaced by Bibles that are in every way more attractive, and there is practically no limit to the demand.

OUR "COMBINATION" FEATURE.

Hitherto the King James and Revised Versions have been printed in parallel columns, but this makes comparisons of texts tedious and unsatisfactory, and makes the book very unwieldy. We have overcome this difficulty by "combining" the two Versions on the same page, showing at a glance in foot-notes all the Changes Additions and Omissions made by the Revisers.

THE OLD VERSION PRINTED IN FULL.

The King James Version is the basis, and this Version is read straight along from the text, while the Revised Version is read from the text in combination with the foot-notes. Our "Combination" Feature has met with universal approval and is strongly endorsed by all leading Divines and Biblical Scholars.

It is only by a comparison of the two Versions that the greatest benefit can be obtained from reading the Holy Scriptures, and this comparison every reader can easily make by our simple arrangement for showing the changes made by the revisers. This is the greatest triumph of Bible Publishing the World has ever known.

OUR OFFER.

To those unprogressive people who do not read and pay for the NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE we sell this Bible at the publisher's retail price—$4.25. To our subscribers we sell it at the very low rate of $2. The only condition attached to this offer is that the subscriber must pay his subscription one full year in advance, viz.: to October, 1900. We will send it postpaid to any person who will send us three new cash subscribers at the regular rate. For six new cash subscribers at the regular rate we will send two "Combination" Bibles, postpaid.

For fifty cents additional we will send a Bible with index.

For twenty-five cents additional we will have your name engraved in gilt letters on the outside.

Send for circular. Address REV. W. C. BLACK.

P. S.—We can give no commission on renewals in connection with the above offer.

New Machine Offer.

By Far the Best We Have Ever Made.

Always on the watch for something good for our subscribers, we have succeeded in making arrangements whereby we can make a sewing machine offer which is far better than any we have been able hitherto to make. Read the following description and then read our offer:

No. 4 IMPERIAL.

THE IMPERIAL HIGH-ARM SINGER will be found the perfection of mechanism as regards simplicity, durability and adaptability to the wide range of work embraced in the general family needs.

A Handsome, Light-Running, Lock-Stitch, High-Arm Machine that will not fail to please the most fastidious. Embracing all the advantages with all desirable improvements of other first-class sewing machines, so simple in mechanism that the most inexperienced need no assistance in operating it. Book of instructions with every machine. Any child can learn to run it.

Extra Set of Attachments also free with each machine consisting of the following: One Tucker, One Foot Ruffler, One Set of Plate Hemmers, four different widths up to ⅝ of an inch, One Binder and One Thread Cutter.

No. 3 Machine, drop leaf table, gothic cover, case of two drawers at one end and center drawer. Dealer's price, $24.
Our price, $14.75.

No. 4 Machine, drop leaf table, gothic cover, case of two drawers at each end and center drawer. Dealer's price, $25.
Our price, $15.50.

No. 5 Machine, drop leaf table, gothic cover, case of three drawers at each end, making seven drawers in all. Dealer's price, $26.
Our price, $16.25.

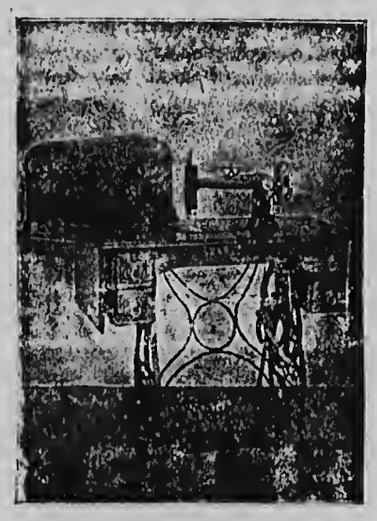
No. 4 Columbian



EXCELLENCE OF THE COLUMBIAN.—All wearing parts are of case-hardened steel possessing great durability, and by the turning of a screw all lost motion caused by wear can be taken up. All parts are fitted so accurately that the machines are absolutely noiseless, and as easy running as fine adjustment and best mechanical skill is possible to produce. No expense or time is spared to make them perfect in every respect, as every machine passes a rigid inspection by competent men before leaving the factory.

NICKEL PLATED.—The balance wheel and many of the fine parts are nickel plated, with other parts finely enameled and ornamented, giving it a rich appearance.

A Self Setting Needle and Self-Threading Cylinder Shuttle are used in the Columbian High-Arm Sewing Machine. They are so simple that any one can easily operate them in a few minutes' time, as our Instruction Book is fully illustrated, showing how to do all kinds of fancy work with attachments.

Extra Attachments, in velvet-lined case, sent free with each machine: 1 Tucker, 1 Ruffler with shirring plate, 1 Hemmer set (4 widths) and Binder, 1 Braider (Foot and Slide), 1 Thread Cutter.

ADDITIONAL ACCESSORIES.—Each machine is supplied with the following outfit: 1 Hemmer and Feller (one piece), 10 Needles, 6 Bobbins, 1 Wrench, 1 Screw Driver, Oil Can with Oil, Cloth Guage and Thumb Screw, and a Book of Instructions. The Book of Instructions is profusely illustrated, and answers the purpose of a competent teacher.

No. 3—Drop leaf, Bent cover, case of two drawers at one end and center drawer. Dealer's price, $29. Our price, $17.

No. 4—Drop leaf table, Bent cover, case of two drawers at each end and center drawer. Dealer's price, $31. Our price, $17.75.

No. 5—Drop leaf table, Bent cover, case of three drawers at each end and center drawer, making a seven-drawer machine. Dealer's price, $33. Our price, $18.50.

The chief difference between Numbers 3, 4, and 5 is in the furniture, i. e., in the number of drawers. If you do not want to pay for the extra drawers, you need not do so. We sell these machines under a ten years' guarantee, by which we mean that if any part gives out by reason of any defect therein, the manufacturer will replace the same free of charge. Moreover, we allow the purchaser to test the machine ten days. If at the end of ten days you are not satisfied, you have only to drop us a postal card, and your money will be refunded.

OUR OFFER.

We will send any one of the above-described machines at the prices named, and also send the ADVOCATE free for six months. The only condition attached to this offer is that subscribers who are in arrears must first pay up all arrearages to date. It would be well to avail yourself of this offer at once, as we can not promise that it will last very long. Notice that you take no risk whatever. We do all the risking. Address

REV. W. C. BLACK,
512 Camp St., New Orleans.

P. S.—The machine will be shipped direct from the factory in the North.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

The local chapter of the Daughters of the Confederacy elected delegates to attend the national rennion.

The transport "Indiana" sailed from Manila, Sunday, with the officers and men of the First Tennessee Regiment.

It has leaked out at Washington that the press censorship established at Manila by Otis was discontinued Sept. 9.

English reports say that the natives at Johannesburg have been reinforced by the lawless element, and anarchy is threatened.

Gen. Otis has adopted a comprehensive scheme of local self-government for municipalities in Luzon nnder American occupancy.

Lord Salisbury hesitates to enter upon a war with the Transvaal, and there is now talk about the ignominy of beginning hostilities.

The corner-stone of the new Federal building in Chicago was laid on Monday by President McKinley, Premier Laurier of Canada and Minister Mariscal of Mexico assisting.

The employment bureau of the U.C.V. recommend the purchase of Beauvoir, Miss., for an indnstrial farm to be cnltivated by ex-Confederate soldiers who are nnable to do hard work.

After a long and patient struggle, the women physicians of Rnssia have secured a decree placing them npon an eqnality both socially and politically with the male physicians in the empire.

Admiral Dewey believes that the frightful sitnation in the Philippines can be cnred by striking the leaders of the Tagalos a hard blow and then giving the Filipino people the fullest liberty and self-government.

The Chicago department of the Volunteers of America, the organization which separated from the Salvation Army some time ago, has decided to discontinue the nse of tambourines and other noisy instruments hereafter in its religions services.

Steps are being taken in Hartford, Ct., for the erection of a free library building in memory of Noah Webster, the lexicographer. A memorial association has been formed, with Charles Dndley Warner as president. It is proposed to raise $50,000, whioh is to be abont equally divided between the building and a fnnd to maintain it.

The summoning of the British Parliament, and the calling out of 25,000 reserves to fill regiments intended for service in Sonth Africa to their full war strength, must be accepted as indications that Great Britain has abandoned hopes of a peaceable settlement of the trouble with the Sonth African Republic, and is seriously preparing to resort to the sword.

General John B. Gordon, of Georgia, has declined the offer of Confederate veterans to aid in rebnilding his home, which was recently destroyed by fire. He says he is grateful to them, but can not permit them to carry out this generous pnrpose. "With the land on which my home stood free from incnmbrance," he adds, "and with my health somewhat improved, I hope to be able by my own efforts to rebnild my home before a great while."

President McKinley's trip to the West, for the purpose of assisting at the laying of the corner-stone of the new Government bnilding in Chicago, is being made the occasion for a series of political speeches. At many of the towns through which his train has passed, the President, as well as other members of his party, have briefly addressed the people who assembled to greet him, and all the speeches inculcated the same idea, namely, the necessity for retaining our new possessions.

Notification has been sent by cable to both General Otis and Admiral Watson at Manila of the intention of the Navy Department to re-enforce the navy in the Philippines to a considerable extent, and stating that the "Brooklyn" and several other vessels would be dispatched at the earliest possible moment to the islands. So far the only orders issned are to the "Brooklyn," the "Nashville," the "New Orleans" and the "Badger," bnt in the course of a few weeks others will be added to the list in the shape of some of the smaller gunboats. The Navy Department is not aware of the use to whioh Admiral Watson and General Otis will put this force, but undoubtedly it is the purpose to make a snpreme effort to crush the insnrrection at an early day.

Admiral Dewey has elected to accept a honse in Washington, already constrncted, instead of having one built for his occnpation. In accordance with the plan of the committee which has had in charge the Dewey home work, he called at the office of Assistant Secretary Allen, at the Navy Department, to indicate his preference in the matter of a residence. The admiral was formally informed of the pnrpose of the people of the United States to present him with a home in Washington. He frankly expressed his gratification. He said had the proposed home been the gift of a wealthy man he should feel indisposed to accept it, but he noted that the fnnd had over 43,000 subscribers, indicating that the home was to be really the gift of the American people, and as such he would accept it with as much pleasure as he had the sword bestowed upon him by Congress.

A Prominent Minister Writes.

After ten years of great snffering from indigestion, with great nervous prostration, biliousness, disordered kidneys and constipation, I have been cured by Dr. Mozley's Lemon Elixir, and am now a well man. REV. C. C. DAVIS, Eld. M. E. Church, Sonth, No. 28 Tatnall St., Atlanta, Ga.

A Prominent Memphian Writes.

DR. H. MOZLEY, Atlanta:—Having been a great sufferer for three years from indigestion, and been treated by many physicians, who failed to give me any relief. Continuing to grow worse my brother advised to try Dr. Mozley's Lemon Elixir, which remedy he had used for several years. I commenced its use, and must say that your Lemon Elixir is the greatest medicine on earth. I have never suffered a day since I commenced nsing Lemon Elixir.
R. L. ROCCO, 206 Hernando St., Memphis, Tenn.

A Card.

This is to certify that I used Dr. Mozley's Lemon Elixir for neuralgia of the head and eyes with the most marked benefit to my general health. I would gladly have paid $500 for the relief it has given me at a cost of two or three dollars. H. A. BEALL, Clerk Superior Court Randolph Co., Ga.

Two Verdicts.

"After a fair and impartial trial you are judged guilty by this court, and you are sentenced to be hung by the neck nntil you are dead!" The solemn tones of the judge, the despairing face of the prisoner, and the painful stillness of the court-room, makes it a scene of awful impress. Now turn to a brighter scene at the home circle. A mother radiant with joy over the recovery of a child snatched from the clutches of Malaria. An entire family rejoicing, and praising the merits of Dicks' Chillfnge, and giving their verdict that Chillfnge is without an equal for swiftness to cnre.

Combination Oil Cure Co.
THE ONLY PERMANENT CANCER CURE
LONG DIST. PHONE 1838
OFFICE 916 N. ILLINOIS ST.
LABORATORY 916 N. CAPITAL AVE.
INDIANAPOLIS, IND.

PILGRIM HOME was built for God. A religious work will be carried on in it for the salvation of souls and the healing of diseases without remedies, depending alone on Jesus, who healed all who had faith in His name, as in the Apostles' time. Dr. D. M. Bye claims that after twenty years of success as a specialist for cancers and tumors, the Lord led him to the Oil Cure and for the last eight years the Doctor has been curing all manner of malignant diseases by anointing with oils. The remedy is not only mild and safe, but cures internal as well as external cancers and tumors and gives relief from unceasing pain. Many thousands of bad cases of cancers and tumors have been cured by using Dr. Bye's Oil Treatment and many healed by faith alone. The Doctor has received thousands of good letters from persons cured. Hundreds from ministers and Christian patients are printed in books and papers, which if one will read they will plainly see that surely God's blessing is with the Oil Cure. In the large book there are many half-toned photos showing conditions before and after treatment, which is sent FREE, giving particulars and price of Oil. Its just popularity is shown by the fact that at this time over three thousand patients are taking home treatment. Its great success has caused many counterfeiting imitators, therefore be careful. This country is full of frauds. Note this one thing: Of all the great number who have come to Indianapolis for treatment, not one has yet died on the Doctor's hands; no undertaker has yet received one cent. PRAISE THE LORD. The Doctor firmly believes it won't be long when more persons will be healed at Pilgrim Home by faith alone in Jesus than by oils, yet all have not so great faith and must use the Oil Treatment administered with God's blessing for a cure. How a Woman Suffers.

HOWELL, IND., Nov. 28.
I will always praise Wine of Cardui. It has done me more good than all the medicines I have ever taken in my life. Please send a book about female diseases to the ladies whose names I enclose.
Mrs. MINNIE STODGHILL.

McELREE'S Wine of Cardui

It isn't necessary for a woman to give particulars. When she says she has "female troubles", other women know what that means. It means days and nights of endless suffering. It means headaches which no tongue can describe. It means that terrible bearing and dragging down in the lower abdomen. It means agonizing backache, and shoulder ache, and arm ache, and aches in the lower limbs. It means nerves on edge—the blues—despondency and loss of hope. It means debilitating drains that the doctors call leucorrhœa. It means martyrdom—sometimes even death seems preferable. And still Wine of Cardui will utterly put those diseases and pains to rout. It has cured thousands of cases when nothing else on earth would. To the budding woman, to the bride, to the wife, to the expectant mother, to those going through the Change of Life, this Vegetable Wine is a blessing.

THE GIFT OF LOVE.

BY M. ELLA RUSSELL.

It is in loving not in being loved,
The heart is blessed;
It is in giving, not in seeking gifts,
We find our quest.

If thou art hungry, lacking heavenly bread,
Give hope and cheer.
If thou art sad and wouldst be comforted,
Stay sorrow's tear.

Whatever be thy longing or thy need,
That do thou give;
So shall thy soul be fed, and thou, indeed,
Shall truly live.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From Our Regular Correspondent.)

The attitude of this government towards Great Britain and the Transvaal Republic, the two governments which seem to be so near war, is not determined by sympathy, but by international law and well-defined rules. The State Department declined to recognize Col. O'Beirne, of New York, as a diplomatic agent of the Transvaal Republic simply because he was an American citizen, and there is a rule prohibiting the recognition of an American in that capacity. But it is doubtful whether any diplomatic agent from that government will be recognized by the State Department, because of the existence of a treaty between Great Britain and the Transvaal Republic, which gives the former control of foreign relations of the latter, except those with the Orange Free State. Recognition of a diplomatic agent from the Transvaal Republic, while that treaty is in force, would be considered an unfriendly act towards Great Britain, and, although Germany is said to have already done so, it is not likely that this government, which has unofficially announced its strict neutrality, will do so. Officials say that under existing circumstances an offer of mediation on the part of the United States is out of the question.

Admiral Dewey is a regular church-goer, as well as a church member. He is a member, and was, when he was stationed in Washington, an officer of St. John's P. E. Church. Last Sunday he attended services in that church, and Dr. Mackay-Smith, the pastor, offered the following special prayer: "Most gracious Lord, whose mercy is over all works, we praise thy holy name, that thou hast been pleased to conduct in safety, through the perils of the great deep, this thy servant, who now desireth to return his thanks unto thee in thy holy church. May he be duly sensible of thy merciful providence toward him, and express his thankfulness by a holy trust in thee and obedience by thy laws, through Jesus Christ, our Lord. Amen."

Dr. Randolph McKim preached a notable sermon this week on "The National Crisis—Our Danger, Our Unity, and Our Destiny," with special reference to the results of the war with Spain. His text was from Deut. viii, 11, "Beware that thou forget not the Lord thy God," and it was a key-note which was not departed from in the sermon. He incorporated the Lest We Forget "Recessional," thought by many to be the best thing ever written by Mr. Rudyard Kipling, in his sermon, and said, "I think we may well take up the strain of this Recessional, and make it ours at this critical juncture in our national history." He said so much that might be repeated with profit that it is difficult to make selections in the space of an ordinary letter, but the following quotations give an idea of how he sought to impress upon the large congregation that it is the hand of God which has been making use of the United States: "Just in proportion as we realize that it is the hand of God which is placing the scepter of dominion in our keeping, and the voice of God that is calling us to take a larger place among the nations, just in that proportion should we look up in the spirit of humility to the Supreme Governor and Ruler of the universe, invoking his help for the work he is calling us to do, either as guides or governors, in our new island possessions." . . . "God has planted our feet in the Philippines not that we may exploit those islands for any selfish ends, but that we may lift them up into the light of liberty and justice and humanity, which he, in his goodness, has shed upon us. The greatness to which he is calling us is not the greatness of mere bigness, of mere material wealth and power, or mere vastness of territorial dominion, but the greatness of leadership in the best ideals of liberty, of law, of order, of civilization, of education, of immortality."

The admiration of Washington people for the philanthropy of Mr. Andrew Carnegie was increased, if that were possible, by the announcement that he had added $50,000 to his previous donations of $300,000 to build a free public library at the National Capital, because the increase in the cost of building material had made it impossible to carry out the plans adopted by the committee in charge.

The Woman's Foreign Missionary Society of the Baltimore Conference of the M. E. Church began its annual session of three days at Hamline Church to-day, with a good attendance of delegates.

Two women who have distinguished themselves in special lines of work for the betterment of the world spoke to Washington audiences this week. Mme. von Finkelstein-Mountford, of Jerusalem, who is a prominent member of the World's W. C. T. U., and who has a wide reputation as a temperance orator and worker and a lecturer on oriental subjects, talked interestingly to the Ladies' Missionary Society of Calvary Baptist Church one afternoon, and the next evening was one of the principal speakers at a large meeting held under the auspices of the District W. C. T. U., at Hamline Church. Miss Jessie A. Ackerman addressed the same meeting, and received her usual warm Washington reception.

SOUTH CAROLINA LETTER.

We are on the "home-stretch" in the South Carolina Conference, and the preachers are all on the go winding up the year's work. We shall soon be assembling at Orangeburg for our annual review, and to receive the appointments and disappointments for another year. In some respects we have had a successful year. In many places there have been gracious revivals, and the evidences are that there will be a considerable increase in membership this year. So mote it be.

We are expecting a gracious time at our Conference. There seems to be a growing disposition among the brethren to have more of the presence and power of the Holy Spirit, and less of useless discussions. Many feel it a fortunate thing that we are to have with us this year Bishop Key, whose deep spirituality is known throughout the church. He will surely receive a hearty welcome at the hands of the South Carolina Conference. We are earnestly praying that his coming may prove a benediction to everyone of us. We understand, too, that the Bishop has some strong convictions as to the limitation of the terms of the presiding elders. We hear that he believes in having a change even among the "beloveds" occasionally. So mote it be. Amen. Salah.

Death has invaded our ranks recently. Bro. W. B. Verdin, a consecrated and promising young preacher, after battling with the dreadful disease of consumption for some time, passed to his reward. Bro. D. Z. Dantzler was another to fall. He was one of our purest and most lovable preachers. He was indeed a scholarly and sweet-spirited Christian.

Our camp meetings are in full blast. Most of them are in the Charleston and the Orangeburg districts, there being four in the Charleston district alone. One of them was held last week. It was the famous "Indian Fields" meeting, which is situated only a few miles out of the town in which your scribe lives. The great trouble here is that the social feature overshadows everything else. Our zealous and consecrated presiding elder, Rev. A. J. Stokes, D. D., used every means to make the occasion one of great spiritual power. Unfortunately he was called away to the bedside of his sick wife right in the midst of the meeting. We believe he will do much in turning the tide in favor of more spirituality. Many of us are praying that he may be successful.

By the way, the mention of Dr. Stokes reminds me of my promise to let you know how the new elders appointed at our last Conference turned out. As to Dr. Stokes, let me say that he has made a very fine impression all over the district. I have never known a presiding elder more concerned about all the interests of the church. He is a friend to both preachers and the people, always looking to the highest interest of each. The old Charleston district, under his wise administration, will make a splendid showing at Conference. As to the other two, Rev. Darion Dargan and Rev. H. Bascom Browne, let me say that I hear the very best of reports. Not having been associated with either, I can not speak from experience; but those who have been associated with them speak in high terms of their preaching and administration. Their districts will make fine showings at Conference. Bro. Browne is the secretary of the Twentieth Century Committee, and has been abundant in labors along that line.

Our colleges have all opened with increased attendance, and, in fact, everything points to better days for South Carolina Methodism in the near future. For this we devoutly pray.

We have had some unfortunate occurrences in our Conference in the past few years which have worked detriment to our Zion, but we are trusting the great Head of the church to lead us to harmony and victory.

A VENERABLE SOLDIER FALLEN.

After preaching Saturday night, Oct. 7, 1899, at a camp meeting on the Gansville circuit, Rev. T. B. White went to his reward. He had expressed a desire that he might go to God just after preaching at a holiness camp meeting. The desire was realized. He left the pulpit with a headache, and within an hour, or two, had fallen on sleep—"the sleep that knows no waking." The end was peace, the transit beautiful, and he rests. He fell at his post, and from the din of battle he went to his reward. He had fought his fight, and God took him. We submit to his providence, and say, "Thy will be done." After comforting many he himself rests.

In his reverence for sacred things Bro. White was exceptional. As a pastor, he was most remarkable, and in zeal he was abundant. He was in many ways an exceptional man. If he made mistakes, those who know him best know that back of all there was a deep conviction of right, and a never-yielding loyalty to God and his truth. His faults grew small when his heart was known. He believed in the old Methodist doctrines of grace, and delighted to testify, not of self, but of Christ dwelling in him through faith. Being converted in childhood, he knew nothing but Christ among men, and to him the gospel was "the power of God to salvation to everyone that believeth."

When the end came Sister White and all their children were present to see him laid to rest. His desire for a simple funeral service by a Methodist preacher, according to the Methodist ritual, was given him; and in accord with his wish for his "son in the gospel" to minister the last Christian rites over his remains, the writer joined with the pastor in this sad duty of laying his body to rest. The concourse of people and the school en masse that assembled at the Methodist Church bears witness to the love and esteem in which he was held in Ruston and adjoining towns. The choir sang beautifully three of his favorite songs: "Asleep in Jesus," "How blest the righteous when he dies!" and, "Where he leads me I will follow." Some simple talks were then made, and we "sowed in weakness" what will be "raised in might."

"Soldier, rest; thy warfare's o'er;
Dream of battle-fields no more.
Days of danger, nights of waking;
Sleep the sleep that knows no breaking."

P. O. LOWREY.

Shreveport, La., Oct. 11, 1899.

20th C. E. F.

Rev. J. H. Bass, Webb, is giving constant attention to this interest, canvassing his membership privately, and confidently expects to make a good report at Conference.

Rev. C. A. Powell, Crystal Springs, writes: "Our people made a commendable start here on Education Day. The matter is in good hands, and will be carried forward. The collection is in good subscriptions, ranging from one to twenty dollars."

Bro. J. G. Irving has sent four dollars from the Sunday-school at Weir. Other superintendents should follow his example, and lend a helping hand.

Rev. R. Selby, Hazlehurst, has secured twenty-seven dollars, and will secure more.

Rev. W. W. Cammack, South Vicksburg, reports: "We made a second effort, and secured thirty-four and 45-100 dollars. I will continue to agitate the subject and to secure subscriptions till Conference."

Rev. M. M. Black, Gloster, has secured ninety-seven and 50-100 dollars. "The roll has been divided into lists of twenty, and placed in the hands of a committee of active and consecrated young ladies, who will see every member who has not already made an offering to the fund, and, if possible, obtain a contribution. They are also furnished with literature for distribution."

Rev. T. W. Adams, Brookhaven, has secured one hundred seventy-seven and 50-100 dollars, and the canvass has not been completed.

Let every brother who has raised, or who will raise, any amount report to me. We must succeed, and to that end the motto must be, "All at it, and constantly at it."

A DEARTH OF PREACHERS.

MR. EDITOR: "Gilderoy," in your issue of last week, on the subject of the scarcity of preachers, has struck oil, and if he will bore deeper, he will reach the fountain. I know it to be true, as he says, the well-educated preachers, as a rule, "will not stay in some sections of this Conference, and if they were to go and stay, they would not be largely useful. The margin between them and the people would be too great." "It is urged that the preacher must be one of, and one with the people." Hence Christ called his preachers from among the common people, and the church which pursues this course is the church which will bring the masses to Christ.

Thousands of young men are converted in our highways and hedges, and feel that it is their duty to preach, but, in their ignorance, do not think that they can ever reach our educational standard, and join some other church, or fail to make an effort. There are many of them, if they could once be encouraged to begin work, would become sons of thunder.

These poor sections are the tributaries from which our church must be supplied in the future, and if we do not hold this class, our loss will be great in the next generation. It is already telling on our increase, and is one of the causes, if not the main cause, of our small increase, compared with what we did in the past.

Dr. Hoss has said that the time will never come when we will not need all the educated men we can educate, and it will not come soon that we will not need the uneducated from among the people. We have made no mistake in trying to educate our preachers, but we have made a very serious mistake in driving from our ranks many who would have entered but for the fear that they could not succeed. Many of them would have become educated, and others would have remained in these hills to preach to the people as in the days of yore.

IS CHRISTIANITY MAKING PROGRESS AMONG THE JEWS?

In many Jewish circles it is regarded as a well-established fact that no Israelite becomes a Christian except for sordid reasons. Christians, on the other hand, point to such cases as Neander, Pick, Philippi, and others prominent in Church and State, as evidence of the fact that the gospel is a power also among "the lost sheep of the house of Israel." A careful statistical study of this problem is found in Nathanael, the mission journal published by Prof. Strack, of the University of Berlin. The article, which covers nearly fifty pages, is from the pen of Pastor de le Roi, himself a convert, who has published a three-volume work on the subject. The substance of his article is as follows:

"In the present nineteenth century the attitude of Israel toward modern civilization has been completely changed, and this change has been of a kind that paved the way for a recognition of the claims of Christianity among this people. Before the present century, both by choice and by necessity, Israel sought absolute isolation from the rest of the natives, and did not seek to enter into the life and development of the peoples in the midst of whom they lived, preferring to remain a religious commun ion by themselves, not influencing others nor being influenced by them.

"Largely through the efforts of the philosopher, Moses Mendelssohn, this attitude has been changed, and the whole modern Jewish type of life has become something new. Mendelssohn demanded of his fellow-religionists that they should become a part and portion of the peoples among whom their lot had been cast, and be not only Jews, but also Germans, French, or English. It was thought that such a union could be effected without any detriment to the religious views of the Israelites; but in this respect those who advised the innovation were seriously mistaken. Modern civilization is essentially a product of Christianity, and participation in its best work is possible only by recognition, to greater or less extent, of the principles of Christianity. Moreover, the new attitude of the Jews could not but make them more susceptible to the same influences that have given to other peoples their unique type of culture and civilization. In this way the ground was prepared for a greater influence of the gospel on the Israelites, and this influence has been at work all along with good results.

"The only reliable basis, however, for a computation of the extent to which Christian principles have become a factor in modern Jewish life is that of actual statistics. Such statistics are accessible from the Protestant, the Roman Catholic and the Greek Catholic Churches, as also from the many special mission societies and from the official lists of converts as reported by the statisticians of Germany. Taking all these sources together, and putting only a conservative estimate on their data, we have the remarkable fact that gospel work among the Israelites has, from the point of numbers, been relatively more successful than among any other people of the world. The summary of the accessions made to the Christian church from the Israelites since the beginning of the present century, as collected from all the reports of baptisms, are as follows:

"Received into the Protestant Church	72,700
"Received into the Roman Catholic Church	77,300
"Received into the Greek Catholic Church	54,500
"Total	204,500

"Then, too, in the case of 'mixed marriages'—i. e., marriages between Jews and Christians—it has been demonstrated a hundred times over that the gains in conversion of parents and children are in nearly all cases in favor of Christianity, and the accessions from this source have been during the past hundred years nearly 20,000, making in round numbers nearly 225,000 additions to the Christian churches from the Jews during the present century. These baptisms are, as far as the leading countries are concerned, distributed as follows: Russia, 84,500; Austro-Hungary, 44,760; Great Britain, 23,500; Germany, 22,500. A regular proportion has not been maintained in these additions, the lowest numbers being in the sixth and seventh decade. At present the average additions per year number:

"Protestant Church	1,450
"Roman Catholic Church	1,250
"Greek Catholic Church	1,100
"Mixed marriages	1,450
"Total	5,250

"These figures are increasing each year, and it is becoming more and more apparent that the Protestant type of Christianity is proving more attractive to the Israelites than either of the Catholic Churches."

These conclusions are in part corroborated by the figures published in the new annual, the well-known Jahrbuch for 1899, of the Church of Germany, edited by Pastor J. Schneider, of Elberfeld, which (pages 201–210) enters fully upon the question, supplementing to a considerable extent the account of Nathanael. From this source we extract the following data:

"The number of conversions from Judaism to Christianity in Germany has increased right along. Twenty-five years ago the average number was about sixty-five, but of late years it has been about 500, or more, most of these taking place in Berlin. Among these converts are many philologists, jurists, and other educated men."—Northwestern Advocate.

HIS BEST PARISHIONER.

"Which sort of man is most helpful to you?" asked one clergyman of another. "I mean to you, personally and individually."

His friend looked puzzled, and the questioner went on. "Is it the man who agrees with all your views, and so helps you with his sympathy and comprehension, or the independent thinker, who argues with you and stimulates you to write convincing, stirring sermons?"

"If you really want to know," said the older man, with symptoms of a smile at the corners of his mouth, "it isn't either of those men who helps me most. It's the man who may, and may not, agree with my views, but who cares enough about my sermons to come to church on stormy Sundays, when most people stay at home. He's my best helper!"—Exchange.

NOT FORSAKEN.

BY MARTHA SHEPARD LIPPINCOTT.

I thought I was forsaken,
But Jesus heard my call,
And led me to the Father,
Who loves and cares for all.
Oh, if we all would trust him,
And lay our burdens there,
And ask his help and guidance
He'd lighten every care.

Our hearts would be less weary,
More hopeful would we be,
And look upon life's bright side,
Instead of misery.
We'll never be forsaken
When trusting God for all,
For he is always listening
To hear his children's call.

Then surely we can trust him,
And turn our hearts that way,
For God will ne er forsake us,
But with us dwell each day.
Then we will call upon him
And his protection ask,
And all his loving service
Will never be a task.

MINISTERIAL POWER.

BY REV. ELTON WILSON.

No preacher can afford to enter his study or pulpit without a deep sense of the Divine Presence. There is a sense of strength in the consciousness that he is not alone; that his finite personality is in touch with the Infinite Spirit. The ultimate analysis reveals the fact that "it is in Him we live and move and have our being." An entire dependence upon the Holy Spirit for the power of life, for the power that sustains action and thought, and the power that continues us in existence. The power of volition is accorded unto man in order that he might make the best uses of his God-given resources.

The Holy Spirit does not do the preacher's thinking, but only exercises a gracious influence upon his conscious activities when there is a surrender of personality. This power, energy, influence and guidance that is the result of conscious communion with the Holy Spirit can not be described as we describe the qualities of a concrete material object. The deep things of the Spirit are not like the tangible entities of the material world; but they move in that deep and fundamental channel of the invisible and immaterial far below the short vision of the senses. We can not form an image of such spiritual quantities; we can not hope to describe them. We know them best in our consciousness of subjective effects; we know that such communion with God is the great source of power in the ministerial personality.

Take away this definite element generated in the ministerial consciousness by the Holy Spirit, and there remains no spiritual power. This is the great source of power. This definite element through the grace of God is superadded to the natural elements of psychic and physical power. In the natural order the psychic and physical come first. Grace can not make a preacher without them. The psychic and physical are the foundation pillars upon which God rears the structure of ministerial character. The strength and durability of this structure will depend upon the strength and power of its foundation. Natural qualifications taken alone can not make the minister. The natural elements and the supernatural must meet in the same person. There is neither an increase or decrease in mental capability, but there is given an energizing stimulus to those existing capacities. The pulsations of the Spirit's power thrill the psychic energies, awakening, arousing and quickening the latent capabilities into action.

There is the element of spiritual illumination, an unconscious discernment of truth, the swift and rapid intuition of some mighty thought crossing the threshold of consciousness. The great and lofty flights of genius are somewhat akin to this state of consciousness. The genius leaves the beaten paths of humanity, and treads alone the highest path of mental exaltation possible to man without the assistance of the Holy Spirit. All this stuff that is often written to show that genius is the ordinary mind, exhibiting eternal concentration and perseverance, is ignorant prattle. It is the highest type of mind; presents the highest type of mental activity and the highest type of mental production. This is true notwithstanding the "insane theory" of Lombroso and the various other degenerative theorists of his tribe.

But this is not spiritual illumination. It is the human consciousness under the illumination of truth. In spiritual illumination we not only have the light of truth, but also the light of the Holy Spirit. If the Holy Spirit does not illumine, energize, arouse, guide and impress the ministerial consciousness, then Rationalism and Unitarianism is true. Some seem to think that the Holy Spirit only operates through the truth. The creation and sustenance of the Christian, as well as the ministerial consciousness, is dependent upon the word of truth. There can be no consciousness of any truth without first having an intellectual perception of that truth.

But there is a direct operation of the Holy Spirit upon the human consciousness co-existent and co-active with the truth. Oftentimes the Spirit moves upon the face of the preacher's consciousness when all is darkness, and the Spirit breathes, "Let there be light, and there is light," and the germ-thoughts of a sermon come forth out of chaos. And under the Spirit's guidance thought after thought is marshalled together, and presently a sermon is the result.

The Holy Spirit does not interfere with the constitutional characteristics of individuality. There is no change in mental constitution or personal peculiarities. The ideal, all around mental constitution is a dream. There is a certain angularity about every man. Without it all men would be alike, and this would destroy the variety of individuality and plunge society into the gulf of an awful monotony. The conventional, all-around minister is not a philosophical reality. He is the subjective product of preconceived notions, that fancy transmutes into its ideal.

Psychic power is a personal acquisition, the product of education. The minister stands upon the same level with all other students. There is no royal road for the "gum-log." He must pay the price that all pay for admission into that circle of earth's choice spirits.

Knowledge is not psychic power, but it is the means of its attainment. Mental power is primary, knowledge is secondary. Knowledge is the tool of the thinking power. The three elements of thought, feeling and volition each have their appropriate function to perform in the evolution of the psychic life of the preacher. The spontaneous activity must be converted into voluntary activity. The whole mental machine must be made to render obedience to the command of the will. The single machine that we term soul is composed of three parts—the thinking part, the feeling part, and the willing part. Three parts, yet one indivisible apparatus—a trinity in unity.

There is great disproportion and inequality in the great mass of thinking machines; inequality in the three elements of thought, feeling, and will. This is the result of training along special lines. The spiritual is an ethical quality, or state, predicated of the psychic elements.

The one-sided development of preachers is often expressed in phrases; he is a "feeling preacher," or he is an "intellectual preacher," or he is a "powerful, active preacher." These expressions indicate three distinct types of ministerial character. Each have their natural sphere, for these mental types run through every audience. The preacher has more influence with that mental type that corresponds with his own peculiar mental constitution, because they move on a common mental plane. The isolation of greatness is almost proverbial. The preacher is only able to move men as he enters their sphere of thought and experience.

A mutual sphere of thought and experience is necessary to mutual understanding and sympathy. This is a law of mind. A community of thought, experience, feeling, observation, mental training and interest is the basis of sympathy, understanding, and friendship.

SOME GRATIFYING SIGNS OF PROGRESS.

MR. EDITOR: The field notes from the preachers this year have the old-time ring about them. Quite a revolution has been witnessed during the past quadrennium. Three, or more, years ago nearly all the revivals were under the leadership of self-constituted specialists. Now the preachers are helping one another, and when they can not secure help from a brother pastor, they sensibly proceed to help themselves, relying upon the Holy Spirit and the co-operation of the church.

This revolution, which is a reformation, means more to the future of Methodism and to the cause of Christ, in my judgment, than the raising of millions of dollars with which to enlarge the circle of usefulness, and make permanent our educational institutions. Reinstating the pastor in Episcopal Methodism makes the Twentieth Century Educational Movement an assured success.

Bishop Galloway, in his appeal to the church, in the February number of the New Century Education, strikes the key-note when he alludes to the pastor in his relation to any and all forward movements in the church. Let us quote his eloquent words: "Upon the pastors rests most heavily the success of this movement. What they ordain will surely come to pass. . . . The preacher in our Methodism is the key to every situation, the determining factor in every equation, the condition of every success or failure."

These eloquent words, uttered twenty years ago, would have saved us from many hazardous divergencies and many jack-o-lantern pilgrimages into the quagmire and swamps of delusive hallucination.

One fact of monumental importance is the number of conversions which have taken place among all classes and throughout the entire connection. I mean conversions to pastor-evangelism. Why, some of our head-lights, our D. D.'s, have been reconstructed and seemingly transformed. This is gratifying to the highest degree. It augurs a luminous future and a forgotten past.

It was with feelings of no ordinary interest that I noted the closing sentences of the article by Rev. J. A. Parker, D. D., anent the affairs of Alexandria district, Louisiana Conference. This article appeared in last week's issue of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE. These are his words: "I desire to say right here that without an exception, known to myself (and I think I am informed fully), the pastors who have helped one another have been far more successful in winning souls than the evangelists have been as helpers."

I should like to shake hands with the Doctor and offer my congratulations for this eminently fitting and, in all respects, discriminating utterance; and I would not so much as even hint at an examination of the files of the ADVOCATE of a few years ago.

The outlook for universal Methodism and the M. E. Church, South, was never brighter and more cheering than now. The croaking pessimist has been thrown from his pedestal by the electrical, conquering march of the church. His case is well-nigh hopeless if he can not catch enthusiasm enough from transpiring events to see light flashing upon the aggressions of the church in all departments of her activity.

The impetus gained by the agitation of the subject of education will be cumulative, and will continue to broaden and deepen the channels of progress for millenniums to come.

The long-meter Doxology should be sung with more zest now than at any time within the past hundreds of years.

Fraternally yours,

C. A. POWELL.

FROM "A PARSONAGE."

I have just overheard my "present occupant" read to his family from the ADVOCATE, of Oct. 5, "Some Suggestions" by "A Parsonage Supporter." I appreciate the interest expressed in my welfare, but in justice to myself and my present occupant, a brief reply is necessary.

1. I am horrified at the suggestion that I commit suicide and thus "stop the disgrace." Two wrongs will not make one right. I did not create myself, and can only legitimately be uncreated by my creators. While I am destitute of many conveniences, and most willingly would give place to another of larger dimensions and more compatible with "civilization and enlightened Christianity," I am still better than none at all. The reproach is not so much my own as it is those in whose charge I am.

2. My "complaint" has been placed in the hands of successive occupants from time immemorial. Through them it has repeatedly "reached the ears of those whose duty it is to see that I have better existence."

If "wind and air-pudding" were conducive to my longevity, my condition to-day would be healthy in extenso.

"Those whose duty it is to see that I have better existence" have not visited me this year to see if my "complaints are based on facts or imaginations." A list of interior things needed have twice during the year been given by my present occupant to my warders, but without success. Surprise was only expressed that "things at the parsonage wear out so soon."

On account of some recent environment I have agreed to cease my complaint temporarily anent my exterior deficiencies. But it is an ultimatum.

My general debility and long-neglected condition, perhaps, can be attributed in part to a few of my occupants. One, at least, in recent years expressed satisfaction with my condition. He was more humble than all his predecessors and successors combined by preaching that he did not care for a better home, a better bed, a better plate, better food, et cetera, than the poorest of his parishioners. The doctrine was pleasing indeed, took immediate root, and is bearing an abundant harvest. The reaping has been to my hurt, and it has been harder since to successors who desired a more comfortable home with necessary domestic conveniences. When this particular occupant gave place to his successors I took my hands off my nose, drew a breath of relief, gave myself a thorough scrubbing, and burned up some of my interior effects. Such was the outcome of my most humble occupant who did not care to live better than the poorest of his poor.

3. In my "autobiography," of July 20, I did not intend that everything should be received literatim; however, my belongings enumerated were not underestimated. If "Parsonage Supporter" thinks to the contrary, and desires to make a purchase, and will pay express charges, he can have my "four knives and forks" for seventeen cents, or at the rate of "fifty cents a dozen." I will put in one of the "wash pans" and an "iron spoon" for good measure. He will be at liberty to put them in his museum and label them "relics of antiquity."

4. There is no Parsonage and Home Mission Society within the bounds of the charge where I am existing. Efforts were made in the past to organize one, but it died with the organization. My present occupant will again stir up their "pure minds" by way of remembrance. If I do not follow your advice by suiciding, I will inform you of the result.

DIFFICULTIES.

I see there is a good deal said now in reference to the uplifting of our Zion, both in reference to the all-important revival and a call to the ministry, or rather that of making the sacrifice of joining the traveling connection; but, so far as I am able (from an experimental point) to judge, the tap-root of the whole matter has not been touched in a single instance. In the first place, what is a revival, if it is not a deep spiritual interest pervading a community? Is it not an active, stirring excitement on the question of personal salvation? But some will say times have changed, and that we do not need these all-animated seasons just at this time. But where is the argument at this point? Is not the world as sinful to-day as it has ever been? Indeed it is, and what the church needs just at this time is more men, women and children that are willing and ready to make some sacrifice for the salvation of the world.

There is possibly an Achan in the camp. Have we found him, or have we searched, or have we tried and failed? Probe deep if you will drive the core from its hiding-place. Methodism is said to be the mother of revivals, but where is she to-day? I fear the mother is dead and buried in the pond, deceitful hearts of her children.

What was Methodism back in Bates' time or Honnoli's younger days, when the preacher, with wardrobe and library, went riding over the country, visiting from house to house, preaching the gospel and praising God for his goodness? These men were not fishing for compliments or positions. What they wanted was a place, and they went to work. Furthermore, the church was religious back in those times. The family altar blossomed as the rose, and they all rejoiced to be in the class meeting. Why, then, are we so stagnant? Has time changed that much? Has religion been altered, or has the Father changed the plan of salvation? Nay! The plan of salvation, of which all have a right, has not been changed, and religion is the same love to God and to all men; therefore, let us come to a halt, and get back on the same principles that have characterized the lives of our fathers, and I think that it will not be long before our Conference will be filled with men who will be a power for good, and our revivals will mean a Sunday-school, Epworth League, and prayer meeting, as well as receiving members in the church. We do not only need a consecrated ministry and prayer, but a consecrated church and life.

R. S. LAWSON.

Tatum, Miss., Oct 6, 1899.

THEY WERE TEMPTED.

In recently thinking of the list of Old Testament worthies, to whom particular reference is made in the eleventh chapter of Hebrews, I was especially impressed by the phrase, "They were tempted." I had passed over these words from my childhood to this time, but had not had my attention riveted to them till now. In connection with these words the apostle records the facts that some of those faith-heroes "had trial of mockings and scourgings; yea, moreover, of bonds and imprisonment: they were stoned, they were sawn asunder, they were tempted, they were slain with the sword." I have been asking myself, Wherein were they tempted? What were they tempted to do, or not do? I apprehend that they were tempted, most strongly tempted, to abandon their faith in God and to give up following Christ. When we consider the fact that many Christians in these days, under comparatively small trials and ordinary discouragements, are tempted to quit faith in God, to cease living a Christian life, we may well believe that those ancient Christians, while enduring tortures, scathing mockings, venomous persecutions and galling imprisonment, were most sorely tempted to give up their Christian warfare and cease professing faith in Christ. What are the trials and afflictions of the most of Christians in this country to-day, as compared with those of the Lord's children in the dark ages of history—at least, many of them? They are mere trifles. And yet, when some of us have our plans thwarted, our pet wishes denied, or meet with the loss of some loved treasure, or can not have some position in the church which we covet strongly, are often inclined to yield to the temptation to quit the Christian course and return to the world.

Ah, me! what a contrast do we present to those stalwart faith heroes of former years who, though mightily tempted, while under the severest tortures and tribulations, to desert Christ, yet clung to him with a purpose which carried them steadfastly to the gates of death. Brave men and women!

The Christian Life.

ABIDING JOY.

Every pastor can remember at least a few Christian people whose joy was so deep and abiding that it pervaded even their greatest sorrows. There is an emotional gladness which is delightful so long as it lasts, yet is comparatively valueless because evanescent. Unlike this is true spiritual joy, which originates in strong faith and is sustained by the open vision of eternal realities. This joy can triumph even when the heart is wrung by the anguish of loneliness, persecution, or bereavement. There is such a thing as being "sorrowful, yet always rejoicing." To those enduring a great trial of faith and "in heaviness through manifold temptations" Peter says, "Believing, ye rejoice with joy unspeakable and full of glory." Those who are strong in faith are as susceptible to physical pain, or mental distress, or the agony of bereavement as any, and yet deeper than either or all of these, and co-existent with them, is their abiding joy. A sick child, though in pain and fear, is calm and happy in the arms of its mother; so the suffering, tempted and bereaved believer can be happy when conscious that around and underneath are the everlasting arms.

The light of infinite love shines in darkness. Heaven's steadfast stars cheer earth's midnights. Christians can be cheerful in sorest calamities. It is recorded of the apostles that "they departed from the presence of the council rejoicing that they were counted worthy to suffer shame for His name." The lonely, the persecuted, the poor, the bereaved can "soothe their wounded hearts with balm from the amaranths of heaven." Those who live near to God know the mystery of "being strengthened with all might, unto all patience and long-suffering with joyfulness."—Exchange.

"The Lord was not in the wind." In a sense, this is true of all natural phenomena—in the spiritual sense, no amount or kind of study of the physical world can be a substitute for the spiritual apprehension of God as the Father. It was only "the still, small voice" that reached the inner ear of the prophet, and was recognized as the speech of the Infinite. Then the prophet wrapped his face in his mantle, and went and stood in the entrance of the cave—to hear what God would say to him. Duty is always inwardly learned; no external study will make it clear what we ought to do. We must commune with our own hearts; we must hear the still, small voice. How feeble that voice in comparison with the strong wind, the fire, the earthquake! And yet the prophet heard that small voice, and knew the Lord was in it. Why? Because he wanted to hear it. Because he was acquainted with it. Because his whole heart and life were perfectly surrendered to duty. We are not compelled to hear this still, small voice. We may mistake the strong wind for the Lord's commanding order. We must learn the language of God—the still, small voice in which he calls us to duty. To learn this spiritual speech is the occupation of a Christian life. To go forth covered with the mantle of reverence when that voice speaks to us—that is, to go where God wants us to go, and to do his work in perfect confidence that it is his work.—Selected.

The world has been astonished at the sight of the aged, the afflicted, the poor, being in a perfect state of quiet and peace. Looking out into a future which, in the eyes of the world, was dark and forbidding, they were calm, cheerful, and sweet-spirited. Why? Because the "springs and foundations" of their happiness were within. They were sustained by an immortal hope. They knew whom they believed, and were persuaded that he is able to keep that which they had committed unto him against that day.

In this sweet, calm, peaceful state of mind they went down to the brink of the Jordan of death, and while friends heard the splash of the muffled oars and, with eyes dimmed with tears, vainly strove to pierce the mist and see what was on the other side, the boatman pushed out, and they were gone. The world wondered; but the believing friends left behind, comforted with the same immortal hope, rested their bereaved hearts on the bosom of the world's Redeemer. The source of their comfort was from within, not from without. These things the world can not understand, for "they are spiritually discerned." But they are, of all things, the most important. They, and they only, put the soul in possession of true happiness.—Religious Telescope.

That life is but a poor, fragmentary one which seeks God by fits and starts; and that seeking after God is but a half-hearted and partial one which is only experienced in the moments of pain and grief. It is well to cry for him in the wilderness, but it is not well that it should only be the wilderness in which we cry for him. It is well when darkness and disaster teach us our need of him, but it is not well when we require the darkness and the disaster to teach us our need.—Alexander MacLaren, D. D.

If some men had killed Goliath, they would remind the Lord of it every day in the week.—Exchange.

THE MAN WHO IS READY.

Every great victory is the result of years of preparation. It is not given to any man to achieve success in life without this preparation. Dewey began years ago to prepare for the victories that have within a year made him the idol of the people of his country. His triumphs have been due to the preparation that made him capable of making use of the opportunity when it came to him.

Every success in life is the expression of a man's ability to recognize and lay hold of opportunity. And no man can do this without preparation. The man who expects to achieve victories "off hand" never achieves them. No great book was ever written, no great sermon was ever preached, no great picture was ever painted, "off hand." They are all the result of the cumulative power of work and growth and development. The man who writes the great sermon began to master all the details of it during his first years at college. The man who wrote the great book began to adapt himself to the work of writing it years before a line of it was ever penned. And only the artist who paints a great picture knows of the years of patient, wearisome preparation back of the finished work.

Charles Kingsley says of Turner, the great painter, that he spent hours and hours in the mere contemplation of nature without using brush or pencil. An authentic story is told of how Turner was once known to have spent a whole day sitting upon a rock, throwing pebbles into a lake. When evening came his brother painters showed him their sketches and rallied him upon having done nothing. He said, "I have done this, at least: I have learned how a lake looks when pebbles are thrown into it."

None of his fellow-students could ever paint the ripples as Turner painted them.

Many men and women find to their sorrow and dismay that when the opportunity of a life-time is presented to them, they are utterly unable to grasp it because of lack of preparation. They are not ready for the hour of opportunity when it comes. They have not that keen discernment, that mastery of details, that ripened judgment, that only preparation can give.

When a great man achieves a great triumph in art or literature, or even in business or war, it is often said of him that he is a genius. So he is. He has the sort of genius Carlyle had in mind when he wrote that "Genius is an immense capacity for taking trouble." Genius and work go hand in hand.

The man who is ready when the hour of opportunity comes, and who sees that opportunity and uses it, has so trained his powers as to compel them to obey his will. His self-reliance is based on good judgment and not on vaunting egotism. The man who is ready is the man who has a profound sense of the responsibilities and possibilities of life. He sets no limit to his own development, and yet his ambition does not exceed his powers of achievement.

The man who is ready is the man whose life takes on its appointed honor and glory.—Zion's Herald.

THE DYSPEPTIC BROTHER.

The "whey-faced brother," whom Dr. Holmes scored in severe, but fitting language nearly half a century ago, is still alive, a troubler of the churches, a breeder of pessimism, a helper of infidelity, a stumbling-block in the way of every good cause, and all in the name of the betterment of the church, the condemnation of laxness of living, and bold testimony against the evil which abounds in the world and which he pretends to believe has taken possession of a large section of the church. He is a horribly persistent fellow, and bores editors of religious and even of secular journals with his doleful lucubrations concerning the desperate and increasing formality of the modern church. Sometimes he almost succeeds in persuading himself that he is the only righteous man left on earth. He has all of Elijah's pessimism, without any of that grand old prophet's courage or self-sacrifice. The only thing he is willing to sacrifice freely is advice, which costs him nothing, and of which his supply is never diminished, no matter how much he manages to give away from day to day. Sometimes his conduct is such as to lead to the suspicion that he feels convinced that the world would long ere this have been shattered into millions of fragments had it not been that he has not yet been translated.

This brother is a great trial, and something worse. He has acquired a certain insolent and dogmatic manner, the result partly of natural disposition and partly of long immunity from deserved punishment. How would it work, think you, if some other brother should line the "whey-faced brother" up against the church wall and proceed to unfold the plain and unadorned truth to his inner consciousness? How would it do to tell him what everybody has been thinking and many have been saying under their breath? And then, after the whole truth has been unfolded in his own brutally direct manner, the experiment might be brought to a healthful and highly satisfactory conclusion by telling him that you have treated him as he has treated others.—Central Advocate.

"It is a bad idea for a pastor to be constantly finding fault with his people. He can fuss at them for this thing and that thing until his scolding becomes an irksome song. They go to church to worship and get instruction and not to be nagged at every service. A fussy preacher will soon thin out the occupants of the pew, and when a real reproof is needed it amounts to nothing from him, because he has indulged the censorious spirit until his complaints go in at one ear and out at the other."—Texas Christian Advocate.

FROM THE WORK.

Rev. A. D. Miller, P. C., Hermanville, Miss., Oct. 9, 1899: "Our third Quarterly Conference has come and gone, and with it came our beloved Rev. E. H. Mounger, D. D. We enjoyed his visit and preaching very much. He preached us three very fine sermons, which we are sure did much good. My people are very fond of Bro. Mounger, and so am I. We have a good people on this, the Hermanville, circuit, Vicksburg district, and we hope, though now very much behind, to bring up a good report at Conference. God bless all the people."

Rev. A. T. Buck, P. C., Sallis, Miss., Oct. 6, 1899: "Our fourth Quarterly Conference is a thing of the past. In the absence of Rev. J. S. Oakley, P. E., whose afflictions prevented him from being with us, Rev. N. G. Augustus, of Durant, gave us both pleasure and profit by his presence and two strong, masterly sermons. He is a good substitute for a presiding elder. This has been a pleasant and profitable year with us. Have had gracious revivals at nearly all the churches, resulting in more than seventy conversions and forty five accessions to the Methodist Church. For valuable services rendered in revival work we are indebted to Revs. Robt. A. Clark, student in Millsaps College; T. H. Porter, local preacher of Coldwater, and W. M. Commander, of this charge, and assistant preacher of the same. Since the close of our meetings we have organized two prayer meetings and a promising Epworth League. This League is in the country, where we have as fine a class of Christian young people as can be found anywhere, and we hope for and expect great results from them. We expect to make the best report at Conference that has gone up from this charge in years. Have one meeting to hold, viz.: at Sallis."

Rev. H. A. Gatlin, P. C., Beauregard, Miss., Oct. 9, 1899: "We have closed our round of protracted meetings, four in number. We had very good meetings at all the churches. Bro. C. McDonald was with us at Martinsville, and did some good preaching. We had two accessions to the church; membership revived. We next went to Pleasant Ridge. Bro. J. A. Parker was with us there, and did some faithful preaching. We began our meeting at Mathews Chapel the first Sunday in August, and ran on six days. The writer did the preaching. We had a fine meeting; one of the best meetings they have had in years. They had paid scarcely anything up to the meeting; since then they have paid the preacher's salary up in full, and will pay up the other collections. God is graciously blessing us at Mathews Chapel. We began our meeting at Beauregard the second Sunday night in September, and continued ten days. God was with us in great power. We had a gracious refreshing from the Lord. All say we had the best meeting they have had in ten or fifteen years. We had twenty accessions to the church, and the membership wonderfully revived. The attendance was good. Men came who had not attended church in several years. Bro. Rawls, of Tylertown, Miss., was with us six days, and did some faithful work. Bro. Rawls is a good preacher, and good help in a meeting. We have just held our third Quarterly Conference. Dr. Featherstun was with us; preached two fine sermons, which were highly appreciated by my people. He dedicated our church yesterday at Pleasant Ridge, and organized an Epworth League. We now have two Leagues on the charge. We hope to be able to pay up everything in full on the Beauregard charge this year. We have our parsonage very near paid for. They have furnished the parsonage very nicely. We have some good people on this charge."

WHITTINGTON CIRCUIT.

"Palmer Camp Meeting began Sept. 14, and closed Monday, Sept. 25. The Lord was with us in every service, and the oldest tenters and members of our church say this was the best and most successful meeting ever held at Palmer. Sinners crowded the altar, and most of them refused to leave it until they were converted. Some of the penitents remained at the altar for several hours before they found peace, but every earnest seeker was happily saved. One poor fellow came to the meeting drunk; he was gloriously saved, and worked earnestly for the salvation of his friends. Some of the "I-hope-so" crowd object to Methodist altars; but they can't prevent this work of saving souls.

Rev. W. W. Simmons, P. E., was with us Saturday and Sunday, and preached to the delight of all who heard him. R. L. Webb was with us in great power and gave us some strong sermons. Webb's sermon on the "Prodigal Son" can not be excelled by any living preacher.

Dr. W. L. Hightower, the biggest little man in the State of Mississippi, was with us throughout the meeting. A better preacher and a more successful worker is hard to find. Hightower asked a man if he had religion, and the old fellow said, "No I'm a Baptist, and I don't believe in that altar business, and I have Scripter to prove my pint." "No, you haven't," said the Doctor; "you have no 'Scripter' to prove your 'pint.' You don't know anything about the 'Scripter;' you don't know how many chapters there are in the Book of Hezekiah; whether there are 15 or 16." "Yes, I do, too; it's got 16 chapters." It is useless to say the laugh was on in full force. Our deep-water friend decided at this stage of the game to hunt more comfortable quarters, which he did with a vengeance.

Bro. Blackwell, from Vanoleave, the sweet singer, earnest preacher and consecrated Christian, was with us, and rendered most efficient service in the pulpit and choir.

Revs. Mike Cox, Jordan and Scarborough, local preachers, and Fayard, Williams and Ballew, exhorters, and Bro. James Smith, a class leader, rendered most excellent service. We can not praise the men too highly for their untiring energy in bringing about this revival.

The visible results of this meeting are 38 accessions and 60 conversions. I have received during this year 175 members, and have had more than a hundred conversions. We are building a beautiful church in the town of McHenry.

The Automaton chess player is a wonderful thing. It plays a perfect game inside its limitations. But once outside the routine moves, the Automaton is a failure. Much o medical practice is as limited in its way as the moves of the [illegible] of chess. No medical man can move with success outside his experience and training. For that reason the local doctor, often gives up as hopeless a case which is quite curable when greater skill and experience are brought to bear.

It is the so-called "incurable" and "hopeless" cases, which come in such numbers to Dr. R. V. Pierce, of Buffalo, N. Y., for treatment. Men and women with weak lungs, obstinate coughs, emaciated bodies and fevered cheeks have found in Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery the true elixir of life. "The blood is the life" and the "Discovery" by increasing the activity of the blood making glands, and restoring to healthy action the digestive and nutritive organs, places the entire system in a condition to throw off disease. There is no alcohol, opium, or other narcotic, in "Golden Medical Discovery."

Mr. Chas. Hunwick, of Lenox, Macomb Co., Mich., writes: "I have never felt better in my life than I do now. I have taken Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery right along. I think I am doing finely. I do not cough now and I can sleep like a school boy. I think I will have to change my mind about 'Patent Medicines,' as I never had much faith in them; but you must know that I have been treated in two hospitals and by three doctors besides, and received no benefit; so I think your medicine is the only medicine for me."

THE NEED OF CONSECRATED POCKET-BOOKS.

While such a statement often provokes a smile and sometimes resentment, there is no little truth in the saying that a consecrated heart means a converted pocket-book. One of the surest tests of loyalty to God and love for humanity is the liberality or illiberality we manifest in the handling of whatever money the Lord permits to come into our hands. Since money is the thing that the average man loves most and strives hardest to obtain, need it appear strange that there should be hesitation about counting a man a Christian who puts dollars before duty and self-interest before the interests of Christ's kingdom? How exceedingly slow Christians are to learn and put into practice the teaching of Christ that "it is more blessed to give than to receive." While liberality of purse is largely a matter of education—of enlightenment as to the needs of humanity and as to the stewardship of property—there are multitudes in the church who are ungenerous and close-fisted, simply because they esteem the riches of this world more than the riches of the kingdom of heaven. Paul was not mistaken when he said, "They that will be rich fall into temptation and a snare, and into many foolish and hurtful lusts, which drown men in destruction and perdition." Neither was he fanatical when he uttered the caution, "If riches increase, set not your heart upon them."

A loud wail is heard every now and then about worldliness in the church; nor would we seek to make the evil appear less great, or the danger therefrom less real than it is. Our deliberate conviction, however, is that covetousness is an evil of far greater magnitude among us. This is the sin that is eating the heart out of the spirituality of no small number in every church and community. Professing Christians by the hundreds seem to act upon the belief that all contributions made for religious purposes are so much dead loss, and, consequently, they pay as little as possible to the church, giving the steward or other collector the dodge whenever they can. Such persons evidently have little conception of the turpitude of the sin of robbing God, "who gives us richly all things to enjoy," and who will hold every man to a rigid account for the use made of this world's goods, not one particle of which can be carried away. Is it not a marvel that believers in Christianity are some of them so foolish as to imagine they can cheat God out of tithes and offerings with impunity? Has he not declared that they who rob him are cursed with a curse? Has the Master not said, "With what measure ye mete, it shall be measured to you withal"?

The difficulty with the average disciple is that he is so much for self that he fails to perceive how dwarfed in soul he is. His affections have become so set upon this world's goods that it costs him a severe pang to part with a single cent that does not promise a return in earthly coin. While not every liberal man is a Christian, on the other hand, every consecrated, God-loving, humanity-serving disciple is liberal with his means, whether he have much or little. The poor man who, out of his hard earnings, contributes a quarter or a half dollar to the Lord's cause, is as generous in the eyes of God as the capitalist who, out of his abundance, contributes his hundreds or his thousands. The New Testament injunction is for every man to contribute "according as God has prospered him," bearing in mind that "he that soweth sparingly shall reap sparingly."

Never before, perhaps, in the history of Christianity has there been so great need of self-denying liberality for the spread of the gospel as now. From every heathen land, with scarce an exception, the loudest and most heart-penetrating appeals are coming to us for the Word of Life, for more missionaries, for the blessed gospel that has made ours a delightsome land. The fields are indeed "white unto the harvest," and from every mission-field station comes the most encouraging news of success and conquest. As one of our hymns fitly expresses it:

"Each breeze that sweeps the ocean
Brings tidings from afar,
Of nations in commotion
Prepared for Zion's war."

The Master's command to disciple all nations rings in our ears. Hundreds of consecrated and splendidly trained young men and women now stand ready to carry the gospel to the unevangelized millions of the earth, if the church will only send them; but, alas! because of the lukewarmness and shameful stinginess of vast multitudes in the church, the Lord's treasury is often empty, and the workers are forced to tarry at home.

It is estimated that the average contribution per year of the men in Southern Methodism to foreign missions is fifteen cents per capita, while that of the women is seven cents. A writer in the January (1899) Review of Missions calls attention to the startling fact that "the men of America spend more in one year for tobacco than the whole church—Methodist, Presbyterian, Baptist, and all—has given in eighteen centuries for the spread of the gospel." When we call to mind that, though we boast of this as a Christian nation, there is spent in this country every year fifteen dollars a head for intoxicants, and only eighteen cents a head for the conversion of the heathen, are we not amazed at the forbearance of God? Is it not enough to bring the blush of shame to our cheeks, and cause us to repent in sack-cloth and ashes? Says Mrs. Isabella Bird Bishop: "When we remember that every minute five souls pass into eternity—1,400 dying every hour in India and 1,600 in China—it seems to me that the time has come when we should adjust our expenditures at the foot of Christ's cross. We must choose whether we must spend upon ourselves or give to Him." It is stated that Judge Tucker, who served for some time as official in India, gave $2,000 a month for missions. His reply to those who thought him too liberal was: "There are 86,000,000 adult population; 5,000 die daily; every day's delay means 5,000 souls."

We have seen hundreds hurt by over-generosity to fashion, folly, and self; but over-generosity to the church, where is it to be found? Who has suffered injury thereby? There are well-to-do Methodists who spend more money on a single party, dinner or reception than their contributions to the church amount to in ten years. How exceeding generous most of us are to ourselves, yet how niggardly towards the Lord's cause! In Christian service one thing is plain: if we serve our pocket-books, then we might as well reserve our hearts, for the only acceptable consecration is that of all we have and are.

THE TWENTIETH CENTURY FUND.

Why should our people who are unable to send to our institutions of learning be required to support this fund? Thousands of our people are asking this question. We answer, Because they have an interest in the Methodist Church, and are benefited indirectly. As well ask, Why should we, as citizens of the United States, be required to support its institutions? We must have educated men at the head of our church, and we should encourage Christian education, and furnish as many men for high places in the nation as possible who have received a Christian education, and we will all reap the harvest of good results. The only way to encourage Christian education is to support our church schools. What is learning without religion? What did it do for France a little over one hundred years ago? It was not the want of education that led to the Reign of Terror, but education without religion. Educated women could stand by the blood-stained block on which a neighbor's head was severed from the body, and thrust their fingers into the warm blood as it ran from the neck-veins, and laugh and chatter like demons from hell. Infidelity had gone to seed.

J. W. HONNOLL.

Holly Springs, Miss., Oct. 11, 1899.

Bro. Honnoll speaks wisely. We wish to emphasize what he says about contributions from the rank and file of the church. Every member of the church, the poor as well as the rich, should contribute to the Twentieth Century Education Fund. No good citizen objects to the appropriation of a part of the revenues of the government for the maintenance of government schools. On the contrary, good citizens, rich and poor alike, feel an interest in our national institutions of learning. Every American citizen feels a pride in the Naval Academy at Annapolis. Why? Because it turns out Deweys, Sohleys, Hobsons, and their like. Everybody glories in West Point. Why? Because it produces Grants, Lees, Stonewall Jacksons, and their like. In like manner every Methodist ought to feel a pride in our Methodist institutions of learning. Vanderbilt ought to be to Southern Methodism what West Point and Annapolis are to the American people. And every Methodist Conference ought to feel a deep interest in the schools of his own Conference. What West Point and Annapolis are to the nation, that our colleges are to us as a church. Does anybody believe that Methodism would have to-day occupied the high ground she does occupy without these institutions of learning? Who can estimate the beneficent influences that have gone forth from these radiant centres of spiritual light and power? And the value of these higher institutions of learning increases with each revolving year. The world is astir. Civilization is advancing. Progress is the watchword in every realm of human activity.

In order to keep abreast of the times, the church must educate. And in order to do this, we must have proper facilities. Our institutions of learning must have equipments in keeping with those of their competitors. As a denomination, we need ampler educational facilities. These can be supplied if every member of the church will contribute according to ability to the Twentieth Century Fund. Let everybody give something—the poor as well as the rich. Let us have done with this twaddle about leaving it to the rich to do this work. The poor, as well as the rich, ought to feel a deep interest in our educational institutions as well as in every other department of church enterprise. Let it be remembered that God values a gift, not according to its monetary value, but according to the self-sacrifice it represents. The mite of the poor widow, though insignificant in pecuniary value, is worth more in the sight of God than a large contribution which represents no sacrifice on the part of the donor. Let everyone give according as God hath prospered him.—EDITOR.

LITERARY NOTES.

BY W. F. B.

The Review of Reviews, for October, contains several important articles on the commercial and industrial conditions and problems of the moment. The Hon. Thomas L. James, formerly Postmaster-General of the United States, and now president of the Lincoln National Bank in New York, writes on "The New Era of Prosperity." Dr. E. Benjamin Andrews, of Chicago, gives an economist's impressions of the recent conference in that city on the subject of "trusts," while the presiding officer of that gathering, the Hon. William Wirt Howe, of New Orleans, states the conclusions to be drawn from the deliberations of the conference as to desirable legislation. The editor also treats this topic in "The Progress of the World." There is a brief article on the National Export Exposition now in progress in Philadelphia, and Mr. Curry M. Stadden reviews our diplomatic relations with Nicaragua, with reference to the prospective canal and other commercial developments.

The October number of the Critic contains a paper on William Morris' Printing and Art Works. Other features of the number are reviews of the latest works, and a list of the publications announced for this Fall.

THE EDITOR OF THE CENTRAL BAPTIST ON A CURRENT CRAZE.

The movement which moves under the banner of "Christian Science" is growing. Whatever may be its power of winning followers, it has not yet drawn all who are susceptible to its fascinations. This is a free country, and any body has a right to call itself by any name it chooses, unless, in so doing, it wrongs others who bear that name, or unless the name it selects for itself is deceptive. With all due regard to the few good people who have taken up with this latest and most foolish of all the modern fads, we do not hesitate to say that the name which they have adopted is a slander on science and Christianity; and we further affirm that the name is misleading and deceptive to those who are thoughtless enough to be caught by a respectable title. Christianity is well known now in all the world. It stands for a definite kind of faith and doctrine and philosophy. Jew and Gentile, Mohammedan and Buddhist all adopt their own titles, and choose to keep themselves apart from Christianity in the popular mind. But this new delusion—for it is not a faith—clothes itself in the title of respectability which has been made honorable by others and appears under a purloined name. It is not Christian. We say this without bitterness or malice. Christian Science, so-called, possesses almost nothing in common with the religion of Jesus. It denies that there is any such thing as sin, for which he claims to have suffered and died. He professed to have come in the flesh, and to have undergone the limitations and humiliation which belong to the popular conception of material and physical life. What he did was to die on the cross in a deep agony of pain as atonement for the sins of men. In all this he was deluded, or was guilty of gross deception, if this heresy which sails under his name is true. The Son of God did not become flesh, if there is no flesh; he did not suffer hunger, if there is no hunger; he did not come to save men from a mistaken belief that there is sin, but to save them from a sin which is real; he did not suffer and die on the cross, if there be no real suffering. The story of the cross is a delusion, a fancy, a blasphemous fraud, if there is no such thing as suffering and sin in this world. This heresy has no place for redemption, no place for atonement, no regeneration, no removal of penalty, no future condemnation of the impenitent—in fact, it has nothing which Jesus believed and taught. If these deluded, possibly well-meaning, folks want to indulge a craze of self-righteousness, let them do so, remembering they are answerable to God and not to men therefor; but they have no right to assume a name which means something definite, and palm off their contradictory and unchristian dreams under that sacred and well-known banner. In business circles the man who collects money under the name of another man is treated accordingly. It is deception, gross and unpardonable. And then as to the name "science," its inappropriateness is seen in the jargon and meaningless phrases which contradict the first principles of science. Again we say, let them have their beliefs, let them choose a name to please themselves; only do not let them start out filching the good name of Christ's disciples, with whom they hold nothing in common, and do not let them mislead the unsuspecting by that pious plagiarism.—Central Christian Advocate.

STEREOTYPED PHRASES.

With regard to specific teachings of every kind a few suggestions may be helpful to some of our readers. Whoever devises peculiar words to express spiritual truth becomes a slave to the letter, or else in a short time will use the words and illustrate something out of them or into them, changing the original meanings of the said words. If he has the capacity to be a leader, his peculiar words will become shibboleths, and a generation enslaved by cant will be developed. Form without power is in many instances as sure to follow either a temporized or set words for spiritual truth as it is to accompany an obligatory liturgy. We have carefully watched the discussions in the M. E. Church on entire sanctification. At least seven sorts of phraseology have been developed by partisan teachers, who have sometimes contended over the words to the complete demonstration that they possessed not the thing.

The subject of conversion has been treated in the same way. There is a book known as "The Crucible," that at one time attracted many readers and drove some people into insanity.

What the church needs is a straightforward, simple declaration of the fundamental principles of redemption, regeneration, conversion, justification, "growth in grace," and "being perfected in love." If one were to take these very words and adhere to them, as if he were giving a lesson in mathematics, he would confuse the mind. The new birth has been materialized by many Christians, in their treatment of it, as blindly as it was by Nicodemus, the difference being that he did not accept it, and they do. We think it would be difficult to find in the history of the Christian church any class of special teachers that in the end do not develop, either by ignoring or unduly emphasizing, unsymmetrical Christian characters.

Upham's "Interior Life," Madame Guyon, and Fenelon's meditations, literal and figurative, seemed to be for a time well suited to certain classes of minds, and they contain much that is profitable; but the result in many, if not in all, cases clearly illustrates what we are endeavoring to set forth. Between such speculations, and the rhapsodies of Santa Theresa, and the splendid vagaries of Swedenborg, the difference is much less than might be imagined, all being fruits of abnormal abstraction.—New York Advocate.

PREFERS THE FAITH OF HIS MOTHER.

Dr. Charles A. Briggs, who was so long "a thorn in the flesh" of the Presbyterian Church on account of his latitudinarian views concerning the inspiration of the Scriptures, is also causing trouble in the Protestant Episcopal Church. As a result of his ordination to the ministry of that church, Dr. B. F. De Coss, rector of the Church of St. John the Evangelist, in New York City, has not only resigned his pastorate, but also withdrawn from the ministry. From his published deliverance on the subject we quote as follows:

"The Bible, so far as Episcopalians are concerned, has met with its Sedan. This diocese and the Episcopal Church at large is dominated by what the ruling factions call 'the spirit of the age.' They forget to say 'what' age. The 'spirit' that they talk about is simply the belated ghost of the age of Arianism. It recalls the words of one who spoke of the Georgian as a period when things were shelving down into a well-written, able, moral, gentlemanly deism. The Episcopal Church has made a new departure, and I can not go along with it. Consistency requires a repudiation of the whole scheme, and I think I have adopted the best method. I prefer the faith I learned at my mother's knee to the inventions of sociologists. If any of my old friends are grieved, I shall feel very sorry."

She was interred at Forest, the funeral service being conducted by Rev. T. L. Mellen and Rev. D. Scarborough. She was a most excellent woman, and greatly beloved wherever she was known.

As will be seen in our news columns, the threatened war between Great Britain and the Boers has become an actuality. As usual, both parties are to blame. England's demands, we think, were not altogether just. Yet the responsibility for the commencement of hostilities rests upon the Boers. What the result will be it hardly takes a prophet's eye to foresee. A pigmy in the grasp of a giant is the picture before us. That the Boers will gain a few small victories before England can concentrate her forces is quite within the range of probability, but that will count for little in the end.

EPWORTH LEAGUE DEPARTMENT.

"ALL FOR CHRIST."

Rev. THOMAS B. CLIFFORD, Jackson, La., EDITOR.

MISSISSIPPI.

Rev. HENRY G. HAWKINS, Madison, Miss., ASSOCIATE EDITOR.

The Leagues of Pearl River Church and of Pocahontas Church have paid the amounts asked of them for the Jackson district parsonage.

The Epworth League, with its characteristic enterprise, will not be behind in the Twentieth Century Movement. Who can doubt that when it once takes hold it will do the work in a flash? Who that knows the League can doubt that it will take hold? Already there are heard calls from different quarters for an Epworth League Twentieth Century organization. The League could not be better organized than it is for such a movement. A little effort in distributing amongst its members suitable literature, and in getting the matter on their hearts, will do the work. No work of the church is more in line with the highest ideals of the League than the movement which has for its object the highest Christian culture of the youth of the church.—New Century Education.

And it comes to pass that the average college graduate is not any more a lover or inteiligent student of the Bible than any other average man. And the writer believes this to be true concerning the students in our church colleges, omitting those who are preparing for the ministry, as it is of those who have attended secular institutions. Even our candidates for the ministry take their baccalaureate degrees, ofttimes, without having received any direct tuition in the Holy Scriptures, so far as their regular college work is concerned. . . . If the great Twentieth Century Movement now sweeping through Methodism, and throughout the world, may be made to include the elevation of the Sacred Scriptures to their proper place in our systems of culture, will it not be of greater final import to the church than even the collection of the millions of money that is so wisely and ardently proposed?—C. M. Bishop, in Methodist Review.

It is impossible to come into contact with an uncommon man without receiving some sort of beneficial and moral stimulus.—Nashville Advocate.

Bishop Keener's book, "Bible Truths," which is in the reading course for 1899-1900, has five chapters: "The Creative Glory in Its Two Distinct Realms—The Natural and the Moral;" "Job, a Prince of the East;" "The Apocalypse of Jesus Christ," "The First Resurrection," and "The Ascension of Our Lord." Dr. Hoss, of the Nashville Advocate, says of these chapters: "Every one of them is a piece of keen and penetrating thought clothed in a vesture of transparent English, and the whole atmosphere which they carry with them is distinctly devout, showing that the closet, as well as the library, has had to do with their elaboration."

It is easy to imagine that we are exerting a good influence on the depraved fellow we like to associate with. But it is easier for others to see that most of the influence is being exerted by the depraved fellow.

BOSTON DENTAL COMPANY.

Owing to excellent work and satisfactory prices, this firm has a large and constantly increasing practice. It includes among its patrons leading professional and business men.

Oliver Wendell Holmes once said, during the mighty struggle between the States, that the constant cry of the masses was for bread and newspapers. Now, since more than a third of a century has changed the political and financial issues, the great cry in the Southern States is for a pleasant and reliable Chill Tonic. Dicks' Chillifuge complies with this demand. It is as pleasant as orange syrup, and as prompt to cure malaria as the bitter Sulphate of Quinine. If you have a case of Chills or Fever which you can not break, try Chillifuge, and enjoy life once more.

HERE'S YOUR CHANCE.

Our premium price on our Holman Bourgeois Bible, with Index cut in edge, is $2—$1.50 for the Bible and 50 cents for Index. From now until the fifteenth of November we will sell this Bible with Index to any subscriber who will pay his subscription a full year in advance, viz.: to October, 1900, for $1.75. This offer will close Nov 15. Therefore, don't delay.

A HOME FOR REV. M. C. MANLY.

The home that we are building for Rev. M. C. Manly in Rayne, La., will go up purely as an individual house belonging solely to Bro. and Sister Manly.

No subscriptions will be received, as it is desired that no debt shall be created. Let contributions be sent either to Bro. Manly, at Rayne, La., or to myself, at Lake Arthur, La., and the same will be acknowledged through the ADVOCATE.

Up to date the following amounts have been received and are in Bro. Manly's hands:

Mrs. Girard, Lafayette, La.	$25 00
F. A Daniels, Algiers, La.	25 00
Methodist Children of Lacasine, La.	12 00
John Handy, Monroe, La.	10 00
Total	$72 00

We hereby thank our good friends for their cheerful contributions, and pray the Lord to prosper them.

Let other dear friends of Bro. and Sister Manly send in something at once, that they may have a home of their own, as he is blind and is a superannnate member of his Conference. It will be remembered that only a few years ago the good people helped us to secure a home for our now sainted Bro. Faust and family in Rayne. Now that he is gone home to heaven, they are comfortably situated. We can not afford less for this worthy cause.

A GOOD RULE.

It is a good rule to never write a letter when angry. One is always sure to say something that he ought not to say, and that he will one day wish he had never said. He is not himself, and generally betrays his weakness. He puts himself in another's hands. He loses, to a certain degree, his independence, and is at the mercy of the one whom he assails or abuses. The wise man, recognizing the force of these considerations, cools off before putting his pen to paper, and then says as little as possible, and in the most guarded terms.—Presbyterian.

ENCOURAGING

All petitioners for the unseating of Mr. Roberts can find encouragement in the private information from Salt Lake City, reported in the Northwestern Christian Advocate, as follows: "Last week Heber J. Grant, one of the twelve apostles of the Mormon Church, pleaded guilty in open court to the charge of unlawful cohabitation, that is, living in polygamy, and paid a fine of $100. A few weeks ago Angus M. Cannon, president of the Salt Lake stake, a high position in the Mormon Church, pleaded guilty to a similar charge and paid his fine of $100. On Sunday, Sept. 3 George Q Cannon, the premier of Mormonism, one of the presidency of the whole church, defended the practice of polygamy in a large meeting at Mount Pleasant. Polygamy was preached in the Mormon tabernacle here yesterday." These convictions of high Mormon officials show that the law against polygamy is not a dead letter, and may be effectually used by the people in their efforts to have the House of Representatives refuse to admit Mr. Roberts to a seat in Congress.—Christian Intelligencer.

WHEN WE FACE THE PAST.

A rich landlord cruelly oppressed a poor widow. Her son, then a little boy of eight years, witnessed it. He afterward became a painter and painted a life-likeness of the dark scene.

Years afterward he placed it where the man saw it. He turned pale, trembled in every joint, and offered a large sum to purchase it, that he might put it out of sight.

Thus there is an invisible painter drawing on the canvas of the soul a life-likeness reflecting correctly all the passions of our spiritual history on earth. Eternity will reveal them to every man. We must meet our earth-life again, whether it has been good or evil.—Exchange.

PIANOS AND ORGANS BY MAIL.
The immense advantage in purchasing from us by the mail system is the guaranteed selection on the part of the oldest and largest music house South.
Selling over one thousand pianos and organs each year, and buying goods in enormous quantities, enables us to give those dealing direct the benefit of the closest possible prices on high-grade pianos and organs.
Dealing direct with the customer by mail enables us to eliminate all such items as agents' commission, hotel bills, etc., and to give our customers prices that many factories do not equal to their wholesale trade. Each piano or organ selected by us goes from our warerooms with a guarantee that if it is not as recommended, it can be returned at our expense. Any customer in the South can obtain our lowest net price by mail, and in case of purchase, the selection and instrument will be absolutely guaranteed, and from five to seven years' trial allowed to test same.
Easy payments will be accepted, and old pianos or organs will be received as part payments.
Having been in business in New Orleans half a century buying and selling all grades of pianos, we are in a position to judge of the merits and demerits of the different makes, and to know their adaptability to our trying climate. We give our customers the advantage of that experience.

Do You Get Up With a Lame Back?

Do You Have Rheumatism?
Are You Sleepless, Irritable, All Run Down?
Kidney Trouble Makes You Miserable.

SWAMP-ROOT IS THE GREAT REMEDY FOR KIDNEY, BLADDER AND URIC ACID TROUBLES. TO PROVE FOR YOURSELF ITS WONDERFUL CURATIVE PROPERTIES, YOU MAY HAVE A BOTTLE SENT FREE BY MAIL.

You are in no danger of being sick if you keep your kidneys well.

They filter your blood and keep it pure and free from disease-breeding germs.

Your other organs may need care, but your kidneys most, because they do most.

If you are sick, begin with your kidneys, because as soon as they are well they will help all the other organs to health.

The treatment of some diseases may be delayed without danger, not so with kidney disease.

Swamp-Root is the great medical triumph of the nineteenth century; discovered after years of untiring effort and research by the eminent kidney and bladder specialist, Dr. Kilmer, and has truly wonderful healing action on the kidneys and bladder.

It will be found by both men and women just what is needed in all cases of kidney and bladder disorders, lame back, dull pain or ache in the back, gravel, catarrh of the bladder, rheumatism, sciatica, neuralgia, uric acid troubles and Bright's disease, which is the worst form of neglected kidney trouble.

If your water when allowed to remain undisturbed in a glass or bottle for twenty-four hours, forms a sediment or settling or has a cloudy appearance, it is evidence that your kidneys and bladder need immediate attention.

Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root corrects inability to hold water and promptly overcomes that unpleasant necessity of being compelled to go often during the day and to get up many times during the night.

This prompt, mild and wonderful remedy is easy to get at the drug stores, in fifty-cent or one-dollar bottles. Make a note of the name, SWAMP-ROOT, Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, and remember that it is prepared only by Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y.

Swamp-Root has been tested in so many ways, in hospital work, in private practice, among the helpless too poor to purchase relief, and has proved so successful in every case that a special arrangement has been made by which all readers of the "CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE," who have not already tried it, may have a sample bottle sent absolutely free by mail. Also a book telling more about Swamp-Root and containing some of the thousands upon thousands of testimonial letters received from men and women who owe their good health, in fact their very lives to the wonderful curative properties of Swamp-Root.

The great kidney remedy Swamp-Root is so remarkably successful that our readers are advised to write for a free sample bottle, and to kindly mention the NEW ORLEANS "CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE" when sending your address to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y.

OUR $1 OFFER.

Much has been said about reducing the subscription price of the ADVOCATE. The only way in which a reduction can be brought about is by an increase in the number of subscribers. In order to facilitate this result, we make the following offer: Until further notice we will take new subscriptions at the rate of $1 for eight months. When seven thousand five hundred new names have been sent in at this rate with the cash, we will extend the time four months longer, thus reducing the price to $1 per annum. When the extension is made, old subscribers will get the benefit as well as new ones, provided they first pay up all arrearages. Of course, no commissions can be given under this offer. Address

THE BIBLE.

"Thou truest friend man ever knew,

My counselor and guide.
The mines of earth no treasures give

In teaching me the way to live,

DEWEY.

It is doubtful if history has any counterpart to the fame and career of George Dewey.

A youth of 28, commissioned as Lieutenant Commander at the close of the war of the rebellion, in which he served with courage and distinction, he passed the next thirty-three years in unconspicuous bureau service and routine sea duty in honorable obscurity. He had nearly reached the age of compulsory retirement.

Assigned early in the year to the command of the Asiatic Squadron, the first American Commodore in those waters since Perry, it is said that he was averse to the station. War with Spain was imminent, and, like all naval experts, he felt the Atlantic would be the theatre of active operations, in which he wished to participate.

To the mass of the people he was unknown. At sunrise Sunday, May 1, 1898, his life had not been of consequence enough to find a place in the Century Cyclopædia of proper names, which rescues from oblivion so many insignificant celebrities.

By noon that day he had inscribed his name indelibly in the list of the world's great Admirals. No cyclopædia will omit his biography hereafter till there is no more sea.

In six hours he changed the geography of a hemisphere.

Subig and Cavite and Corregidor, unknown when he entered the harbor of Manila, the next day were prononnced by nations. In that brief interval he closed one epoch for Spain and opened another for America.

When Dewey left Mirs Bay the odds were against him. The modern warship was as yet an untried experiment. The charts of the channels were worthless. The location of the mines, torpedoes and shore batteries was unknown. The position of the Spanish fleet itself was uncertain until daybreak.

That mysterious night voyage at slow speed, beneath dark and alien skies, with the tremendous possibilities of the morrow, will rank with the most impressive episodes of undaunted and indomitable fortitude. With no reinforcement, nor base of supplies, nor friendly haven or refuge, defeat meant hopeless and irremediable ruin to this forlorn hope of the seas.

That the unprecedented triumph was achieved with so small sacrifice does not, as some carping critics claim, disparage, but rather enhance the genius and heroism with which it was won. Neither Dewey nor his men knew that half his ships would not be sunk and half his crews be slain. It was not till the battle was over that the infirmities of their antagonists were disclosed. Their only presage of success was that their intrepid souls contained the prophecy.

We all remember the week of silence and apprehensive suspense after the cables were cut and direct communication ceased. The final result of the battle was for days unknown. Vague and ambitious rumors of disaster to our fleet came from Madrid. The tension was extreme. Even the most sanguine were conscious of a shadow of dread and solicitude.

None can forget the sense of relief and exultation and gratitude with which, after delay that seemed interminable, Dewey's brief, terse, laconic bulletin was read by millions of his countrymen:

"The squadron arrived at Manila at daybreak this morning. It immediately attacked the enemy, destroyed the Spanish fleet and a water battery at Cavite.

"The squadron uninjured and but few men slightly wounded.

"I shall communicate with the American Consul at Hong Kong."

No fustian mock-heroics here. No bombastic rodomontade; no cheap, self-conscious, swaggering buncombe, no grand-stand play; no tawdry rhetorical phrases about "making presents" to the country. In the sober literature of war that dispatch will stand out unique, incomparable and unapproachable forever. It will thrill till Glory's thrill is o'er. It did as much as the battle to make Dewey solid with the American people.

Here at last was a man who could not only win a great victory, but was master of himself which is the conquest of all. They felt instinctively he could be trusted to do the right thing at the right time and in the right place, and that no emergency could come to which he would not be equal.

He has amply justified their confidence. Whether in diplomacy, etiquette, international law, business or battle, he has been always ready, and has met no master.

With no land forces to occupy Manila, and in the presence of unfriendly fleets, he blockaded the harbor and held possession of the Philippines, while the administration, perplexed by the new problems, hesitated through weary weeks of indecision before sending reinforcements, and in the conflicts that followed he exhibited neither jealousy nor hesitation in the discharge of his duty.

The world has never found the meat on which its Cæsars feed, and there is no prescription for renown. Greatness can not be analyzed. Success does not always come to those of whom it might be predicted.

The fame of Dewey perhaps seems incredible to himself, but he is the one colossal figure of the Spanish-American war. He has no rival nor any competitor on land or sea. He is so much the first that the rest are nowhere.

In these days of push and pull, of posing and advertising, it is refreshing to contemplate this correct, cold, calm Vermonter, who is indifferent to the interviewer and the photographer, who stands four square to all the winds that blow, and has found the path of duty the road to glory.

American citizenship needed no lustre, but Dewey has made it a prouder title. We fear no foe, but his life and example will give courage a warmer glow and patriotism a higher pulse wherever the flag floats, and there are human rights to be enforced and human wrongs to be redressed.—New York World.

THE GREATEST MAN.

Many are the standards of greatness. Very diverse are the ideas as to what constitutes a truly great man. And because most of the ideas are mistaken, much harm results, for people strive after that which, when achieved, is a mockery. As we conceive the matter, the greatest man is he who possesses the greatest receptivity for God, who manages to embody the most of Deity. It is not largeness nor fineness of intellect any more than of body that takes the first rank. It is not the sage nor the soldier, but the saint, that has pre-eminence. It is the measure of faith and love and holiness that grades men. He that humbleth himself, that puts self out to take in something better, shall be exalted—nay, he is exalted in the very act. The farther he goes down the farther he goes up. The smaller he grows, the greater he gets. This is a standard not often recognized on earth, but sure to be sanctioned in heaven.—Central Advocate.

GRAND NATIONAL PRIZE OF 16,000 FRANCS AT PARIS.

Some people who are rude, inconsiderate, impolite, and crusty in the home, or among the intimate friends with whom they constantly associate, imagine that they have "good manners," because they are able to conform to the rules which polite society has made for the government of special and formal occasions. But these people deceive themselves only. The dictionary defines "manners" as "general modes of life and conduct, especially behavior." What they fondly conceive their "manners" is only "airs," assumed for a special occasion, and their awkwardness reveals the assumption to all but themselves.—Baltimore Advocate.

Hygiene.

The hygienic value of fruits and vegetables in the general dietary of people in health seems to be only partly recognized, as is evidenced by the large variety of meats on our ordinary bills of fare and the quantity served, as compared with that of the vegetables. The albumins have long been considered the ideal foods of a highly nutritive diet, and their value is undoubtedly great, but it is now a well-known scientific fact that an even greater amount of starchy food is essential to the nutrition and development of the body. But besides this, our body has need of certain mineral salts in small quantities, it is true, but still the demand is imperative, and the supply of potassium, sodium, calcium, and other salts, and of iron, phosphoric acid, phosphates, etc., must be furnished, and is best furnished, by a diet containing an abundance of fresh vegetables. We are not aware that anyone has given a complete explanation of the way in which fresh fruits act to prevent scurvy, but the fact is too well known to need mention, as well as the favorable influence of many fruits in preventing constipation and aiding digestion. The special value of certain vegetables is now becoming generally known; for example, the action of celery and lettuce on the nervous system, the easily assimilated small quantity of iron contained in spinach, the slightly stimulating effect of asparagus on the kidneys, and so on almost ad infinitum. These effects are no doubt too slight to be of any great value in treating pathologic conditions, but still sufficient to be of decided value in maintaining the healthy balance. We have no desire to take sides either for or against vegetarianism, but we believe that an increase of the number of well-cooked vegetables on our bills of fare to that usually found on European menus would add not only to the pleasures of eating, but to the health of the eaters.—Health Journal.

MRS. MARTHA H. DAMERON.

In the passing from earth to heaven of Mrs. Martha Henry Dameron, April 20, 1899, the church and country sustained a loss of no ordinary magnitude. Born in North Carolina on the twenty-eighth of May, 1822, of Joseph and Martha Peebles, she lived to the ripe age of seventy-seven years, lacking only three weeks. Of her early life we know very little, except that she had a happy and rather frolicsome girlhood and young womanhood.

In Decatur, Ala., Feb. 16, 1844, she was married to Dr. George P. Jones. He lived only till 1849, leaving her with several children. Of these the survivors are Dr. Chas. H. Jones, of Greenville, Miss.; Mrs. Sykes, of Aberdeen, and Mrs. Pattie P. Pond, now living in Jackson.

In the month of March, 1854 she was married to Dr. Robert C. Dameron, whose death in November, 1867, left her widowed for the second time, and with two little girls of the last marriage. These are now Mrs. J. H. Powell and Mrs. J. H. Williams, both of Bolton, Miss.

Soon after the Civil War she removed from her beautiful country home in the Brownsville neighborhood to "Bolton's Depot," now the stirring, thriving town "Bolton," in Hinds county, Miss. She was one of the original settlers of this place, and to her progressive spirit it owes much of its lively history, for she was ever awake to whatsoever things were truly good. She cast in her lot with the people called Methodists near the time of her coming to Bolton, and under the ministry of Rev. C. G. Andrews, for whom she retained through life a reverential love.

Her religious life was one of steady growth. In doing the will of God she learned to know more fully of the truth of his Word. Her later years were marked by deep spiritual insight, coupled with eminent practical sense and to unusual freedom from anything approaching "cant." Hers was a wholesome, active, every-day religion. She loved the house of God; 'twas as the "gate of heaven" to her soul. A more intensely interested listener to the preached Word I've seldom had the privilege of ministering to. No preacher could afford to speak flippantly with those deeply-searching eyes looking up to him from one of the front seats, where 'twas her constant habit to sit when any kind of service was had in that church, which was "dear as the apple of her eye." She had donated the lot on which it stands; had given liberally towards its upbuilding and improvement; had been among the first to welcome and to cheer each new pastor, to aid in purchasing, enlarging and furnishing a parsonage at a suitable distance. What wonder that the tones of the bell she also gave were to her ears like music stealing from "the bright world far away." She is now listening to the ringing of harps that are strung by angel hands, and participating in that mighty threnody of song "unto Him that loved and redeemed us," while we who remain must often sigh for "the sound of that voice which is still" on earth. Yea, while she rests from her labors, "her works do follow her." Not only do her children to the third generation (numbering about twenty-seven) rise up to call her blessed, but a whole community mourns the loss of one who, for so many years, was a ministering angel to all the sick and suffering. For whole nights and successive days did this genuine "sister of mercy" nurse the sick of every class and condition; and usually back to health again. Who will, or can, take the place of "Grandma Dameron" to that bereaved community? As a mother in Israel, she will probably be missed by pastors of that work more than any within the circle of our acquaintance. Her warm-hearted welcome, coupled with substantial tokens, made each new preacher feel he was among friends; and this was no evanescent interest. Her hospitable home was wide open to the pastor and to "the visiting brother." Her interest in all the affairs of the church was abiding. Of quick intelligence, she grasped and held every vital concern in Church and State. For a little while she is separated from us. May we and all her loved ones meet again "where the faithful part no more!" A bereaved friend, WOOTTEN—A memorial adopted by the Quarterly Conference of Brookaville circuit, at X Prairie, July 15, 1899, in memory of R. K. WOOTTEN, who, for many years, was a member of this body.

Bro. R. K. Wootten, though dead, will ever live in the memory of his friends. He was born Dec. 8, 1838; married Miss Annie Wilkinson, Sept. 25, 1860. When he was young he joined the church [illegible] than all his life. He was an ardent Methodist; served for many years as one of the stewardbearers of the Brookaville Church. He had a genial disposition, and numbered his friends by the score. His pleasant country home, the ornamental and fruit-bearing trees which gave shade and food to many a tired pilgrim, give evidence of his taste, enterprise, and thrift. By industry and economy he had reached the stage of life where prosperity smiled upon him. When he went away he left his widow and four children well provided for. He will be greatly missed by the community and by the church. He was always in his place on Sunday, and the preacher never had a truer friend. We are grieved because of his loss, but we believe that the accomplishment of God's will is for the good of all his children. When he was laid to rest his presiding elder said of him, "He was a man." To have the qualities of broad manhood, and then have added the graces of the Christian religion, is the highest point a man ever reaches in this world. May we all meet him in heaven!

Committee: D. Hardin, Walter Price, E. S. Lewis.

BRITT—Little Art, infant daughter of F. M. and Mittie Britt, died at their home in Hanghtoo, La., July 8, 1899. She was nine months and thirteen days old. She was sick thirteen days. All was done for her that devoted parents and the kindest of friends and the doctor knew to do. The good Lord saw fit to take little Art to himself. While we do not understand the dispensations of Divine Providence, we do know that he doeth all things well; that he is too wise to err and too good to be unkind. We realize that our loss is her gain. Precious little jewel, her mission on earth was not long. She was the light and sunshine of the home.

Sisters and brothers, let the memory of her who has been such a blessing and comfort to the home ever remain a blessing by encouraging you to work more zealously to win souls for Christ.

Precious little one, she is watching and waiting for mama and papa and sisters and brothers. She is not so far away as we think, and parents can go to little Art, though she can not come to them. Only be faithful to God, and you will see little Art again in the land of Beulah, where the flowers bloom forever.

H. J. BOLTZ.

OVERHULTZ—Sweet little ones gone, MARY HILDA and ETTA PEARL OVERHULTZ. The first died July 30, 1898, aged five months and ten days, little Etta following her sister in one year and one month, at the age of four months and seventeen days.

Although these dear little ones tarried with us but a short time, they so endeared themselves to their parents and friends that the parting seemed like tearing vital cords, leaving home and hearts desolate. The memory of their sweet baby ways will remain always until united with them in their home with their blessed Savior, who wipes away all tears and changes tears of sorrow to songs of joy. Sing on, sweet ones, in your home above; we can almost see your little baby hands beckoning come. Bless God we are on the way, and will soon meet you. A FRIEND.

Rosedale P. O., La.

STEVENS—LAURIE MCLAUNIN, infant daughter of W. F. and Daisy M. Stevens, was born Aug. 16 1898, and passed away Oct. 3, 1899.

This little span of life seems short to the busy world, but in that year were crowded devoted love, fond hopes and bright plans for the future that will last forever in the loving hearts of father and mother. A little soul that never forgot a friend, always happy and loving even in the most painful and protracted suffering, sensitive as the plant to every unhappy influence, requires so little change to be an angel that we expect to find her just as we gave her up; and who can say we will not know her there? AUNTIE.

Carrollton, Miss.

MECHILIK—MARY MELVINA MECHILIK was born Sept 21 1875, and died Nov. 1 1898. She was married to Joe Mechilik. Two children were the fruit of this union. She had a severe spell of sickness in February, 1898 from which she never recovered. The writer visited her during her sickness. She professed faith in Christ in August, and was baptized and received into the M. E. Church, South. She was a constant sufferer from the time she was first taken until death. She died trusting in Christ. May the Lord bless the sorrowing!

WINE OF CARDUI

HEALTHY OLD AGE.

LARUE, BENTON CO. ARK., Aug. 4.

I am 49 years old and have been suffering with Change of Life. I had flooding spells so bad that none thought I could live. My husband got me Wine of Cardui and it saved my life. I am like another person since taking it.

MRS. E. B. TOWNSEND.

McELREE'S Wine of Cardui

It is the devout wish of nearly all people to live to a ripe old age. None of us want to die young. This universal desire can be realized if care be taken of the health in early and middle life. A little precaution then will add many years to our existence. Death can be kept away a long time. Happy, healthy old age will be the lot of the woman who promptly corrects the ailments which afflict her sex. In youth, Wine of Cardui will take the female child safely over the dividing line between girlhood and womanhood. As a wife she needs it to help her through the trials of pregnancy and childbirth with as little discomfort as possible. At the Change of Life it will help her over the dangerous place that appears in her pathway between 40 and 50. Then will come many years of truly blissful existence. She will grow old slowly and gracefully. To the last she will preserve that charm and beauty which are always characteristic of perfectly healthy grandmothers. It is for women alone to decide whether they will be healthy or sick. The remedy for their sickness is close at hand.

The "Combination" Bible.

A SUPERB EDITION

of the Holy Scriptures, showing at a glance at the foot of the pages all changes made by the revisers.

New Type. All Proper Names Self-Pronouncing. The Most Valuable Collateral Matter.

There is a steady and increasing demand for first-class Bibles. Everybody is anxious to obtain a copy of the best edition of the Holy Scriptures. Old editions are constantly being replaced by Bibles that are in every way more attractive, and there is practically no limit to the demand.

OUR "COMBINATION" FEATURE.

Hitherto the King James and Revised Versions have been printed in parallel columns, but this makes comparisons of texts tedious and unsatisfactory, and makes the book very unwieldy. We have overcome this difficulty by "combining" the two Versions on the same page, showing at a glance in foot-notes all the Changes Additions and Omissions made by the Revisers.

THE OLD VERSION PRINTED IN FULL.

The King James Version is the basis, and this Version is read straight along from the text, while the Revised Version is read from the text in combination with the foot-notes. Our "Combination" Feature has met with universal approval and is strongly endorsed by all leading Divines and Biblical Scholars.

It is only by a comparison of the two Versions that the greatest benefit can be obtained from reading the Holy Scriptures, and this comparison every reader can easily make by our simple arrangement for showing the changes made by the revisers. This is the greatest triumph of Bible Publishing the World has ever known.

OUR OFFER.

To those unprogressive people who do not read and pay for the NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE we sell this Bible at the publisher's retail price—$4.25. To our subscribers we sell it at the very low rate of $2. The only condition attached to this offer is that the subscriber must pay his subscription one full year in advance, viz.: to October, 1900. We will send it postpaid to any person who will send us three new cash subscribers at the regular rate. For six new cash subscribers at the regular rate we will send two "Combination" Bibles, postpaid.

For fifty cents additional we will send a Bible with index.

For twenty-five cents additional we will have your name engraved in gilt letters on the outside.

Send for circular. Address REV. W. C. BLACK.

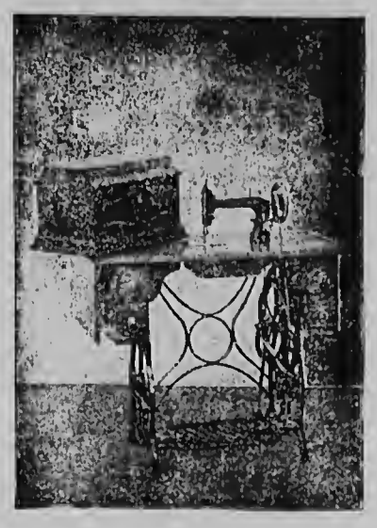
P. S.—We can give no commission on renewals in connection with the above offer.

New Machine Offer.

By Far the Best We Have Ever Made.

Always on the watch for something good for our subscribers, we have succeeded in making arrangements whereby we can make a sewing machine offer which is far better than any we have been able hitherto to make. Read the following description and then read our offer:

No. 4 IMPERIAL.



THE IMPERIAL HIGH-ARM SINGER will be found the perfection of mechanism as regards simplicity, durability and adaptability to the wide range of work embraced in the general family needs.

A Handsome, Light-Running, Lock-Stitch, High-Arm Machine that will not fail to please the most fastidious. Embracing all the advantages with all desirable improvements of other first-class sewing machines, so simple in mechanism that the most inexperienced need no assistance in operating it. Book of instructions with every machine. Any child can learn to run it.

Extra Set of Attachments also free with each machine, consisting of the following: One Tucker, One Foot Ruffler, One Set of Plate Hemmers, four different widths up to ½ of an inch, One Binder and One Thread Cutter.

No. 3 Machine, drop leaf table, gothic cover, case of two drawers at one end and center drawer. Dealer's price, $24. Our price, $14.75.

No. 4 Machine, drop leaf table, gothic cover, case of two drawers at each end and center drawer. Dealer's price, $25. Our price, $15.50.

No. 5 Machine, drop leaf table, gothic cover, case of three drawers at each end, making seven drawers in all. Dealer's price, $26. Our price, $16.25.

Furnished Free with every machine are the following named accessories: One Foot Hemmer, One Screw Driver, One Wrench, One Oil Can and Oil, One Gauge Screw, One Extra Check Spring, One Package of Needles, Five Bobbins and One Instruction Book.

No. 4 Columbian

EXCELLENCE OF THE COLUMBIAN.—All wearing parts are of case-hardened steel possessing great durability, and by the turning of a screw all lost motion caused by wear can be taken up. All parts are fitted so accurately that the machines are absolutely noiseless, and as easy running as fine adjustment and best mechanical skill is possible to produce. No expense or time is spared to make them perfect in every respect, as every machine passes a rigid inspection by competent men before leaving the factory.

NICKEL PLATED.—The balance wheel and many of the fine parts are nickel plated, with other parts finely enameled and ornamented, giving it a rich appearance.

A Self Setting Needle and Self-Threading Cylinder Shuttle are used in the Columbian High-Arm Sewing Machine. They are so simple that any one can easily operate them in a few minutes' time, as our Instruction Book is fully illustrated, showing how to do all kinds of fancy work with attachments.

Extra Attachments, in velvet-lined case, sent free with each machine: 1 Tucker, 1 Ruffler with shirring plate, 1 Hemmer set (4 widths) and Binder, 1 Braider (Foot and Slide), 1 Thread Cutter.

ADDITIONAL ACCESSORIES.—Each machine is supplied with the following outfit: 1 Hemmer and Feller (one piece), 10 Needles, 6 Bobbins, 1 Wrench, 1 Screw Driver, Oil Can with Oil, Cloth Gauge and Thumb Screw, and a Book of Instructions. The Book of Instructions is profusely illustrated, and answers the purpose of a competent teacher.

No. 3—Drop leaf, Bent cover, case of two drawers at one end and center drawer. Dealer's price, $29. Our price, $17.

No. 4—Drop leaf table, Bent cover, case of two drawers at each end and center drawer. Dealer's price, $31. Our price, $17.75.

No. 5—Drop leaf table, Bent cover, case of three drawers at each end and center drawer, making a seven-drawer machine. Dealer's price, $33. Our price, $18.50.

The chief difference between Numbers 3, 4, and 5 is in the furniture, i. e., in the number of drawers. If you do not want to pay for the extra drawers, you need not do so. We sell these machines under a ten years' guarantee, by which we mean that if any part gives out by reason of any defect therein, the manufacturer will replace the same free of charge. Moreover, we allow the purchaser to test the machine ten days. If at the end of ten days you are not satisfied, you have only to drop us a postal card, and your money will be refunded.

OUR OFFER.

We will send any one of the above-described machines at the prices named, and also send the ADVOCATE free for six months. The only condition attached to this offer is that subscribers who are in arrears must first pay up all arrearages to date. It would be well to avail yourself of this offer at once, as we can not promise that it will last very long. Notice that you take no risk whatever. We do all the risking. Address

REV. W. C. BLACK,
512 Camp St., New Orleans.

P. S.—The machine will be shipped direct from the factory in the North.

James Dickson Carr, a young negro lawyer of New York, has been appointed deputy assistant district attorney by Colonel Asa Bird Gardner. He is the first negro ever to receive such an appointment in the State.

The National Bank of Mexico, which has a capital and surplus of some $20,000,000, is about to build a magnificent edifice, probably adopting the plan, now becoming popular, of a steel frame structure, with stone facing.

A five-year-old boy of Brentwood, England, has received the Royal Humane Society's diploma for jumping into the water and saving the life of his baby brother. He is believed to be the youngest certified life-saver on record.

The "Columbia" won the first of the trial races for the America's Cup on Monday, leading the "Shamrock" all the way. Owing to a breakage of one of the sails of the "Shamrock" on Tuesday, she withdrew from the contest. The "Columbia" went over the course alone, and is entitled to the race.

Attorney-General T. S. Smith and Assistant R. H. Ward, of Texas, are in Washington to appear before the Supreme Court to oppose the petition for injunction which Attorney E. H. Farrar will bring against the State of Texas for maintaining an embargo on interstate commerce between Louisiana and Texas, operated under the guise of quarantine.

The New England Sugar Beet Company has announced that a sugar beet plant, believed to be the largest in the United States, to cost $300,000, would be built for operation next season at North Judson, Ind. The location of the plant at North Judson was conditional on securing 5,000 acres of land to be devoted to beet culture. The acreage has been secured.

Although the cables bring all sorts of rumors and reports as to the progress of events in South Africa, there is very little reliable information available, and practically nothing official. Not a single one of the many reports of skirmishes have been confirmed, with the exception of the derailing and destruction of an armored train sent out from Mafeking, and even in that affair, there seems to have been no loss of life, the British detachment having been taken prisoners.

All Europe is watching Great Britain at this crucial moment of her military affairs. Foreign statesmen and military men regard the result of the war with the Boers as a foregone conclusion. What they scan with such anxious interest is England's tremendous preparations for the contest. By the result of these efforts will her strength be gauged. By assembling an army considerably greater than Wellington's force at Waterloo, England is offering an illustration, for the first time in many decades, of her ability to fight on land.

Congress has already authorized the Navy Department to contract for the construction of the great floating dock to be located at Algiers. A dock without repair shops and store-houses would be of absolutely no value for naval purposes; hence the investment of $850,000 in the dock made a further investment for the construction of a naval station absolutely necessary. The Chief of the Bureau of Construction and Repair of the Navy Department, in his annual report, calls attention to the need of a naval station at Algiers, if the new dry dock now building is to be utilized. He recommends that an appropriation be made for the construction of the necessary shops and warehouses.

DR. H. MOZLEY, Atlanta:—Having been a great sufferer for three years from indigestion, and been treated by many physicians, who failed to give me any relief. Continuing to grow worse my brother advised to try Dr. Mozley's Lemon Elixir, which remedy he had used for several years. I commenced its use, and must say that your Lemon Elixir is the greatest medicine on earth. I have never suffered a day since I commenced using Lemon Elixir.

Two Verdicts.

"After a fair and impartial trial you are judged guilty by this court, and you are sentenced to be hung by the neck until you are dead." The solemn tones of the judge, the despairing face of the prisoner, and the painful stillness of the court-room, makes it a scene of awful impress. Now turn to a brighter scene at the home circle. A mother radiant with joy over the recovery of a child snatched from the clutches of Malaria. An entire family rejoicing, and praising the merits of Dicks' Chillifuge, and giving their verdict that Chillifuge is without an equal for swiftness to cure.

Dr. D. M. Bye Combination Oil Cure Co.
THE ONLY PERMANENT CANCER CURE
LONG DIST. PHONE 1638
LABORATORY, 916 N. CAPITAL AVE.
INDIANAPOLIS, IND.

PILGRIM HOME was built for God. A religious work will be carried on in it for the salvation of souls and the healing of diseases without remedies, depending alone on Jesus, who healed all who had faith in His name, as in the Apostles' time. Dr. D. M. Bye claims that after twenty years of success as a specialist for cancers and tumors, the Lord led him to the Oil Cure and for the last eight years the Doctor has been curing all manner of malignant diseases by anointing with oils. The remedy is not only mild and safe, but cures internal as well as external cancers and tumors and gives relief from unceasing pain. Many thousands of bad cases of cancers and tumors have been cured by using Dr. Bye's Oil Treatment and many healed by faith alone. The Doctor has received thousands of good letters from persons cured. Hundreds from ministers and Christian patients are printed in books and papers, which if one will read they will plainly see that surely God's blessing is with the Oil Cure. In the large book there are many half-toned photos showing conditions before and after treatment, which is sent FREE, giving particulars and price of Oil. Its just popularity is shown by the fact that at this time over three thousand patients are taking home treatment. Its great success has caused many counterfeiting imitators, therefore be careful. This country is full of frauds. Note this one thing: Of all the great number who have come to Indianapolis for treatment, not one has yet died on the Doctor's hands; no undertaker has yet received one cent. PRAISE THE LORD. The Doctor firmly believes it won't be long when more persons will be healed at Pilgrim Home by faith alone in Jesus than by oils, yet all have not so great faith and must use the Oil Treatment administered with God's blessing for a cure. Add. Dr. D. M. Bye, Lock Box 25, Indianapolis, Ind.

SPANISH-AMERICAN WAR PANORAMA

is one of the war books which is likely to be in continuous demand. It is a panoramic record of the triumph of Yankee Doodle. The eagle flaps his wings on every page, and "Old Glory" waves around and above every scene. Prominent officers connected with the war are here portrayed, as well as many of the "men behind the guns." Military life is pictured to the eye, from recruiting to guard mount and skirmish line. Nor is the ludicrous omitted. The company cook receives the attention due to his importance; the mess is shown; cavalry scenes are given; the hospital arrangements are depicted; the heroines of the Red Cross service are displayed; street scenes in Havana, Santiago and elsewhere are unrolled, the new citizens or subjects (which are they?) of Uncle Sam appear and disappear as the leaves are turned.

In a word, the gazer visits the new localities and sees the tumultuous new life, without the risk or expense of a sea voyage.

The Album is 5½x8 inches, weighs 12 ounces, printed on finest coated paper.

Sent FREE to any address in the United States, Canada, or Mexico, for 12 cents in stamps or coin, to cover postage and packing. Copy may be seen at any ticket office of the Big Four Route.

A CALL TO SERVICE.

Oh, thou who wouldst a laborer be with God,
Win others to the path thy feet have trod;
Advance, advance, and keep thee to the task,
Give first, thyself, the service thou wouldst ask.
Let God speak through thee. Who would not rejoice
To be the trumpet for a leader's voice?
Of such a temper, all of beaten gold,
That his true signals may through it be told;
Of such a form, without a fleck or flaw,
That it shall rightly sound his righteous law,
And shout, in clarion tones, distinct, afar,
"Enlist, enlist, and rally to this war."
Strive not to sound thine own poor human words.
Remember that the message is the Lord's.

Correspondence.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From Our Regular Correspondent.)

Washingtonians are proud of the extraordinary growth of the Young Men's Christian Association, which everybody recognizes as a powerful factor for the betterment of the community by influencing for good the young men of the city. How great this growth has been may be judged from the following extract from the report of the secretary, made at the annual meeting held this week: "On Jan. 1 the total membership of the Association was 164. On March 31, six weeks after the occupancy of the new building, it had grown to 929. On Sept. 30 it was 1,510, and up to 5 o'clock to-day (Oct. 16) it had reached the splendid mark of 1,660. When we entered the building 300 lockers sufficed for the members desiring to use the gymnasium. To-day 830 are in use, and more will be immediately installed to meet the demand." The officers, prominent business and professional men, who have brought about this very gratifying condition, were naturally re-elected for the coming year, during which everything points to a continuation of the growth of the association. The Y. M. C. A. has staggered under a series of misfortunes, including two fires, for some years, but it has at last emerged into the sunlight of prosperity, and bids fair to stay there.

This week the Commissioner of Indian Affairs heard a second protest from a delegation of Creek Indians against the enforcement of the Dawes treaty and the Curtis Act, in Indian Territory. Commissioner Jones heard the delegation patiently, and then informed them that what they asked for could only be done by Congress.

When the ten army chaplains now under orders to proceed to the Philippines reach there, there will be a total of eighteen chaplains for an army of 65,000 men. That this is a totally inadequate provision for the spiritual welfare of the men in that army is fully recognized by the authorities, but the fault is chargeable to Congress, which failed to make provision for the appointment of a sufficient number of chaplains in the act authorizing the enlistment of volunteers.

Miss Florence Maskell, who has been a missionary in India for eleven years, and who is now on a leave of absence, is spending a few days in Washington; addressed a large audience in Metropolitan M. E. Church, Monday evening, talking mostly of the customs, habits and dress of the people among whom she has been doing missionary work, and of her personal experiences. She said that the Mohammedans were very careful about whom their wives associated with, which is by no means a fault, and told of some more or less amusing experiences she had in getting audiences with them. After getting acquainted with one of them, the wife of an official, she asked the official to allow his wife to visit her, and after much coaxing and the solemn promise that no male eyes should be allowed to see her, the Mohammedan consented.

The Central Union Mission celebrated its fifteenth anniversary this week, with services at the E Street Baptist Church in the morning, at the Mission in the afternoon, and at the First Congregational Church in the evening. At the first service Dr. J. J. Muir, pastor of the church, preached a home missionary sermon, his theme being, "Jesus and the Masses," and his text, Matt. ix, 36, "But when he saw the multitude he was moved with compassion on them, because they fainted and were scattered abroad as sheep having no shepherd." The sermon was a strong plea for increased zeal in carrying the gospel to the masses. He said: "Humanity can never be studied at long range. The masses are not now reached by the gospel. The fringes of the multitude are reached, perhaps, but not the great body. The Central Union Mission represents all the evangelical churches of Washington. It is an agent of the churches, and dependent upon them for support, both in workers and means. During the fifteen years of this mission, through straightened conditions and enlarged life, there has been a prayerful regard for the mission by the churches. The mission has had its perplexities and perils, and has been embarrassed by conditions, but it closes its year with thankfulness to God and the churches, whose servant it is. Help, so far as is consistent with absolute church engagements, the mission in its up-hill and frequently discouraging toil, prove in a way that you possess the compassion and concern of Jesus for the masses, for their salvation by the grace and power of God." The afternoon meeting was addressed by Dr. H. R. Naylor, Dr. J. G. Butler, and Dr. J. T. Kelly, and the evening meeting by Dr. S. H. Greene, Dr. J. J. Muir, Dr. J. J. Heisse, Dr. Alexander Mackay-Smith, Dr. Wallace Radcliffe, and Dr. S. M. Newman.

The congregation of Mount Vernon Place M. E. Church, which is the mother of all the Southern Methodist Churches in Washington and of one in a Virginia suburb, celebrated the thirtieth anniversary of the occupancy of the present church-building Sunday. The building has just been thoroughly renovated.

Communications.

A STUDY OF THE MINUTES.

MR. EDITOR: Your last article from the pen of "Gilderoy" suggested a review of the Minutes of the Mississippi Conference. While our file of Minutes run back to 1870, we date from 1878 only in our review. In the decade from '78 to '88 there were received on trial 58, and in the same time 44 were received into full connection. During the next decade, from '88 to '98, received on trial 87, and admitted 60 in full connection, making for the twenty years a total of 145 on trial and 104 into full connection—an average of nearly six annually for first decade on trial and more than four into full connection. During the last decade the annual average has been nearly nine applicants on trial and just six into full connection. Thus we see a healthy condition as to the supply of the ministerial ranks in our Conference. Of the 149 on our Conference roll, 112 come within these two decades, and of this number not more than 12 are transfers. Of the 87 admitted on trial during the past ten years, 64 are with us to-day, showing a loss of only about 25 per cent. for transfers, deaths, and removals otherwise.

In 1878 there were seven districts and ninety appointments. In 1888 these seven districts embraced 119 appointments, and in 1898, notwithstanding the Louisiana territory, which composed nearly one entire district, had been ceded to the Louisiana Conference, we still have seven districts and 120 appointments, thus showing a healthy and steady development in our territory.

In 1878 the seven districts paid to the presiding elders less than 6,000 dollars, and the ninety pastors received little more than 32,000 dollars. In 1888 these same districts paid their presiding elders 7,313 dollars and their 119 pastors 50,348 dollars. In 1898, with a loss of all our Louisiana territory, our seven districts report 7,904 dollars for the elders and 54,364 dollars for the 120 pastors.

These figures show a gradual, but not a commensurate increase in salaries paid. Our highest figures (1898) show an average salary to our pastors of about 460 dollars, which, as an average, is not equal to our strength, and which, considering that we have twenty appointments which paid $1,700 and over, brings the average to the remainder exceedingly low—too low for comfort. "The laborer is worthy of his hire," and our Official Boards should see that the wages are better, or appeal for extension of territory—larger circuits—more work for the pastor and better pay.

While I repudiate the idea that any of our preachers enter the ministry for a money consideration, I can appreciate the depression which must follow when there is failure at this point. A young man whose education will secure to him a thousand dollars in the school-room or behind the desk can but hesitate when he compares this with the meagre salary—scarcely a living—which comes in the ministry. Solomon says, "There is that withholdeth more than is meet, and tendeth to poverty," and this applies as forcibly to the church as to the individual. An intelligent, educated ministry will command and demand more for their living. If we would compete successfully with our sister denominations, we must educate more liberally and support more freely. Let the Conference door be discreetly guarded, and let those who are unprepared take advantage of the educational facilities offered at our schools, and tarry for a season with our educators. During the past four years two young men have appeared before the Committee for Admission on Trial, and each was refused the second time. When they were finally admitted both stood creditable examinations; they had given time to preparation. T. B. HOLLOMAN.

Jackson, Miss., Oct. 18, 1899.

GEO. HARRIS LIPSCOMB.

Geo. Harris Lipscomb, son of Dr. W. L. and Talula H. Lipscomb, and my personal and life-long friend and Conference class-mate, is dead. He was born in Columbus, Miss., June 27, 1864; was converted in early childhood and joined the M. E. Church, South; was licensed to preach at Columbus and recommended to the Annual Conference for admission into the traveling connection, Sept. 25, 1889; was admitted on trial at Holly Springs, Dec. 5, 1889; was admitted into full connection at Macon, Miss., and ordained deacon by Bishop Hendrix in 1891; was ordained elder at Columbus in 1893 by Bishop Hargrove. He served the following appointments: Indianola and Faisonia, 1890; Jonestown, 1891 and '92; Carrollton, 1893 and '94; Como, 1895 and '96; Booneville, 1897; Winona, 1898 and '99, where his labors were ended. Such is the brief sketch of a life that was "hid with Christ in God."

1. Bro. Lipscomb was conspicuous for his piety from early childhood. It might be said of him more truthfully than of anyone I have ever known, "He was filled with the Holy Ghost from his mother's womb." "From a child" he had "known the Holy Scriptures," "which were able to make" him "wise unto salvation." From the age of five years till death called him home he had been a worker in the Master's vineyard. His testimonies and prayers in the services of the church in Columbus and in time of special revivals, his zeal and solicitude for the salvation of others, causes a feeling of devout gratitude to God in the heart of this writer that such a man has lived and wrought his influence on my life. I doubt if he ever knew when he was converted, so faithfully had he been "brought up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord," and taught to seek the direction and follow the guidance of that Spirit whom the Father giveth to all who ask.

2. Bro. Lipscomb was a "man of fiery zeal for righteousness." Like the prophets of old, and like the forerunner of the Master, he would "cry aloud and spare not." It is to be expected that such a man should make some enemies. "The servant is not above his master." Every saint is a disturber of the careless and indifferent in Israel. While as fearless and bold in denouncing sin as was John the Baptist, he was as loving and kind as the "beloved disciple" in pointing the way back to the loving Redeemer. Errors he may have made in his zeal for righteousness—and who of us makes them not?—but they were errors of the head, and not of the heart. He was one of the most conscientious men I ever knew.

3. Bro. Lipscomb was a successful and useful man in the pastorate, and a good preacher. His preaching was designed to be helpful and fruitful in bringing souls to Christ; hence was mainly practical. He wrought well, and the fruit of his labors are seen in the advancement along all lines of the charges he has served, the enterprises brought to completion in the face of difficulties, and the numbers who "rise up and call him blessed," to whom he has been helpful in the Christian warfare. Many were the sheaves he gathered for the Master's garner, and no work was so pleasant to him as engaging in special effort for the salvation of souls.

I have no particulars of his death, save the statement sent me a short time previous to his death that he was joyously awaiting the summons. It could only be so, for he had "so lived that when the summons came to join the innumerable caravan that moves into the pale realms of shade, where each shall take his chamber in the silent halls of death," he went, "not like the quarry slave at night, scourged to his dungeon, but, sustained and soothed with an unfaltering trust, approached his grave like one who wraps the drapery of his couch about him, and lies down to pleasant dreams."

May God's grace be sufficient for the bereaved ones in their great affliction!

Thou art gone from us, companion of my youth, friend, class-mate, brother. May God grant us a happy meeting bye and bye!

THE PASTOR'S EXAMPLE.

Peter, in addressing ministers, tells them these words, "Making yourselves ensamples to the flock." The apostle knew that a pastor's preaching did not avail much to his hearers unless his example before them, during the time when he was not preaching, was fairly in accord with the truths of the gospel which he declared. I doubt not that Peter believed that a pastor's good example in every-day life was quite as effective in impressing the truths of the gospel upon the hearts of his people as his preaching was. He knew that if the pastor's example were particularly faulty, his people would thereby be so prejudiced against him that his formal sermons would be seriously ineffectual. And just so it is now, and it always will be so. It is not to be expected that a pastor's example shall be faultless. Allowances must be made for some degree of weakness in the pastor. He is liable to say some indiscreet words. His temper may not always be under judicious control. He may repeat the words of others in such a way and in such places as to lead to trouble among the flock. A wise pastor will constantly seek to guard himself against such a practice. He may, however, unwittingly do such a thing occasionally. But reasonable people will quietly bear with the pastor whose general aim appears to be to avoid causing trouble to others. If, however, a pastor repeatedly forfeit his word, if he make a practice of prying into other people's affairs, if he be habitually in debt, making no strong efforts to pay his debts, but, rather, acts indifferent about them, he sets an example before his flock and before the world which no preaching of his, however biblical and instructive and pathetic it may be, can neutralize or dissipate. I once knew a pastor who, both personally and through his children, repeatedly got goods from a store on Sunday. Of course, that example hurt him immensely. Above all things, pastor, set a rightly-moulding example to your flock; then you may ask them to follow you.

THE COLLECTIONS.

MR. EDITOR: I am enjoying the privilege and pleasure which has been denied me for two years past—that of attending the quarterly meetings on my fourth round without interruption from yellow fever. Cotton has risen, and our people are cheerful, in happy contrast with their feelings a year ago, when four-cent cotton and yellow fever combined to afflict them. We are thankful for health and better prices. I have actually found a steward who has already collected all that is due from his list for pastoral support. I will not give his name, lest I should not be able to publish the names of all others who are going to do the same. Heretofore most stewards have proceeded on the plan of getting some money for the preacher, acting on the method of "catch-as-catch-can," the whole Board often falling nearly fifty per cent. behind with the pastor's salary. The plan of giving each steward a definite list, from which he is expected to raise a specific amount, works much better. By this plan a steward may know when he has done his duty; by the old plan the shortcomings of one or a few were counted against all.

If our pastors will now use due diligence to get a contribution from every member for their collections, they will aid, rather than hinder, the stewards in doing the same, and each will help the other in bringing about the financial millennium, when every professor of Christianity shall habitually contribute to its support. Can the preachers expect the stewards to do for them what they can not do for the missionaries in the field, and for all the other great and worthy causes for which they collect? Let us all press the collections. The causes are worthy, and the people are able to pay all assessments.

MISS LILY WHITMAN.

Last Monday morning our beloved friend and co-laborer, Miss Lily Whitman, left our home for her new field of labor in Cuba. As the Southern ports were closed on account of yellow fever, she went by way of New York, thus avoiding all infected points. Her assistant, Miss Best, of Maysville, Ky., will join her in New York, from whence they will sail direct to Matanzas.

It has been our privilege to have her an inmate of our home for several months past, and to have known her intimately for several years, and her whole life has been a beautiful mission spent in the service of others. She has only stepped out on a higher plane by severing the ties of blood and friendship to go labor for a strange people in a strange land. But with the sweet assurance that she goes not alone, that the Lord shall preserve her going out and coming in from henceforth, we send her bearing the message to the children of that blood-bought land, that Christ alone can make them free.

Since her friends have known of her plans, many loving remembrances have come to her that will cheer and brighten her new home. A handsome watch and chain presented by the W. F. M. S. of the North Mississippi Conference, a generous outfit from the Greenville district, a beautiful Oxford Bible from her Gunnison "children," a flag of her native land—its stars and stripes never before so dear—books, periodicals, and much else of use and beauty.

The last meeting of our auxiliary was given in her honor at the parsonage. The sweet songs, the chain of precious promises, the deeply spiritual prayers, the feast that followed, the bravo words of appeal instead of a farewell—all will make the occasion a precious memory always.

The last ten days spent in our great metropolis has been a treat she hardly anticipated. Even a bird's-eye view of that great city is a privilege not to be despised.

Miss Whitman is sent out by the Woman's Board to open a mission school in the city of Matanzas. To her many friends I will say that her present address is No. 56 Contreras street, Matanzas, Cuba.

VICTORY

Is assured if we will all do our best. Since my last report encouraging letters have been received from Revs. J. A. Poe, J. F. Evans, R. H. B. Gladney, Ira B. Robertson, Geo. H. Thompson, R. W. Bailey, E. P. Craddock, M. D. Fly, J. C. Mimms.

The Sunday-school at Stonewall, through T. W. Alexander, secretary, has forwarded two and 26-100 dollars. Another superintendent will report a collection next week, and others later.

Rev. E. S. Lewis, Brooksville circuit, makes an additional report. X Prairie Church has given sixty-one dollars, and forty members have not yet contributed.

Rev. Jno. H. Mitchell, Greenwood, reports "more than one hundred dollars, and this is just a beginning. Our people take to it well." Greenwood has just completed a twenty-thousand-dollar church. They will do the handsome thing for the Twentieth Century Thank-offering.

Rev. H. S. Spraggins reports one hundred and ten dollars from Mayhews and Tibbee.

Other preachers and superintendents are at work, and will be heard from. Why not you, brother?

REV. GEO. H. LIPSCOMB.

The death of Rev. Geo. H. Lipscomb in Birmingham, Ala., Oct. 19, removes from the itinerant ranks of the North Mississippi Conference one of its bravest, boldest, truest men. He was a loyal Methodist preacher, and will be greatly missed by us all.

T. W. LEWIS.

Corinth, Miss., Oct. 21, 1899.

The worst thing that ever happened in Methodism was the adoption of the five-year limit. Five years is too long for a man to remain in any charge, unless he can remain longer. The man who is capable of remaining five years, doing good work all the while, could do better work every year after. A five-year term is neither short enough nor long enough; it is too short to allow the man anything of the strength and influence of the settled pastor, and too long for him to exercise merely the functions of an evangelist. The next General Conference should either remove the time-limit altogether, or return to the three-year rule.—The New York Advocate.

GOOD BYE.

Good-bye, good-bye! it is the sweetest blessing
That falls from mortal lips on mortal ear,
The weakness of our human love confessing,
The promise that a love more strong is near—
May God be with you!

Why do we say it when the tears are starting?
Why must a word so sweet bring only pain?
Our love seems all sufficient till the parting,
And then we feel it impotent and vain—
May God be with you!

O may he guide and bless, and keep you ever,
He who is strong to battle with your foes,
Whoever fails, his love can fail you never,
And all you need he in his wisdom knows—
May God be with you!

Better than earthly presence, e'en the dearest,
Is the great blessing that our partings bring;
For in the loneliest moments God is nearest,
And from our sorrows heavenly comforts spring,
If God be with us.

Good-bye, good-bye, with latest breath we say it,
A legacy of hope and faith and love;
Parting must come, we can not long delay it,
But, one in him, we hope to meet above,
If God be with us.

Good-bye—it is all we have for one another;
Our love, more strong than death, is helpless still;
For none can take the burden from his brother,
Or shield, except by prayer, from any ill—
May God be with you!

PRIMITIVE PHYSICS.

Water is the most ancient of all remedial agents for disease. The ancient Egyptians, Hebrews, Greeks, Persians and Hindus all employed water in this way. A Chinese record dating back several hundred years before Christ records a similar use of water. In Japan the cold bath has been in use nearly eight hundred years. Cold bathing among the Spartans of Greece was required by law. Hippocrates evidently had a good idea of the physiological properties of water, both hot and cold, which he employed in the treatment of fevers, ulcers, hemorrhages and other troubles. He directed that cold baths should be of short duration and should be followed by friction. He records the observation that, after a cold bath, the body quickly recuperates its heat, while a hot bath produces the opposite effect. Among the ancient ruins at Rome and Pompeii, bath equipments have been found to be very complete. The famous baths contained facilities for taking hot and cold baths, also hot-air and vapor baths. According to Pliny the bath was the almost exclusive method of treatment employed in Rome during five centuries.

John Wesley, the founder of Methodism, wrote a book of which the present day knows little, if anything, but which might be reprinted with profit to the people. This forgotten volume bears the title

"PRIMITIVE PHYSICK"

It was published in 1747. This little book indicates that the people in Wesley's day understood how to use water in the treatment of disease. A few of the directions which he gives are as follows:

For ague or intermittent fever, 'Go into the cold bath just before the cold fit, or drink a quart of cold water just before the cold fit and go to bed and sweat.'

In cases of tertian ague, it is recommended to use the cold bath, save in persons of advanced age, or who are in reduced strength. A few of Wesley's simple directions for using the cold bath are well worth repeating. He says:

"Do not enter the water while the body is overheated, remain in only two or three minutes, never bathe on a full stomach.' "To prevent apoplexy, use the cold bath and drink only water." Wesley's remedy for asthma was "to take a pint of cold water every morning, bathing the head in same, and using the cold bath once a fortnight. For convulsive asthma, he recommended the cold bath three times weekly." "To prevent swelling from a bruise, immediately apply a cloth five or six double, dipped in cold water, and newly dipped when it grows warm." "To cure a swelling from a bruise apply cloths dipped in very hot water, morning and evening."

"For a burn or scald, immediately plunge the part into cold water. Keep it in an hour, or if not well, perhaps four or five hours."

"To prevent rickets, tenderness and weakness in children, dip them in cold water every morning, at least until they are near one year old." "For whooping-cough, use the cold bath daily."

"For a cold, drink a pint of cold water lying down in bed."

"For colic, drink a pint of cold water, or a quart of warm water, or apply hot water in a bladder, or steep the legs in hot water fifteen minutes."

"For chronic headache, keep the feet in warm water for fifteen minutes before going to bed, this to be kept up for two or three weeks."

"For headache from heat, apply to the head cloths dipped in cold water, renewed when warm and kept up for an hour."

"For rheumatism, use the cold bath, with rubbing and sweating."

Dr. J. H. Kellogg says: "Although Wesley was not a physician, one can not but note the sagacity and wisdom displayed in any of these recommendations, which, in many instances, could scarcely be improved upon at the present day."

The action of water when applied to the body is not difficult to understand. In case of a bruise, sprain, laceration or wound, cold water applied to the part contracts the blood vessels and thereby prevents congestion. After inflammation has set in the application of hot water dilates the blood vessels, accelerating circulation and bringing the part under the restorative influences of fresh blood.

Water acts as a stimulant to the nerves. An application of hot and then of cold water by means of the spray is a powerful stimulant to the circulation and a resultant tonic to the nerves. By first applying hot water the blood vessels are dilated and a free circulation induced. To immediately succeed this by an application of cold water is to contract the blood vessels and force the blood back into the large vessels, by which means the circulation is quickened and many sluggish corpuscles forced into circulation that were previously dormant in some of the internal organs. It is estimated that the average human body contains two hundred and thirty quadrillion, five hundred billion blood corpuscles, and that many of these are constantly losing their activity. It is estimated that a million inactive corpuscles will be forced into renewed circulation by means of a cold bath.

The use of water as a remedial agent is growing apace in this country. Hot and cold alternately applied to the spine is a standard remedy for weak nerves. This treatment consists of applying to the spine a piece of blanket folded in several thicknesses, about three feet long and six inches wide. This blanket is wrung out of very hot water, then wrapped in one thickness of dry blanket and applied to the spine. This is usually repeated three times, the duration of each being about five minutes. During the intervals between the changes ice, or very cold water, is rubbed along the spine.

The pail douche is a splendid tonic treatment. To apply it, provide three pails of water, one warm, one tepid, and one cold. Pour each of these on the patient, beginning with the warm and ending with the cold water. The patient should stand erect and receive the water on the head and shoulders, and allow it to run down over the body. A dry rub should follow the pail douche. This treatment can be taken with good effect an hour before breakfast by all persons whose vitality is not greatly reduced. The reaction produced by the water, applied in this way, is a great stimulant to circulation, and acts as a tonic to the internal organs. As an emergency remedy in cases of wounds, water is without a peer.

Dr. J. H. Kellogg relates an incident worthy of repetition. While traveling in Mexico, some time ago, the doctor was in a railway wreck. A number of persons were badly burned. The victims were in great agony until the doctor wrapped them in sheets procured from the sleeping-car, and then poured water, taken from the engine tank, over their bodies, saturating the sheets which covered them, and keeping them so for hours. The pains of the patients disappeared as if by magic, and they slept well through the ensuing night. The cool water contracted the blood vessels and prevented congestion.

Not long since the writer sprained an ankle quite badly. The ankle was quickly swollen to double size. Hot water applied for an hour reduced the swelling and relieved the pain, so that walking was not overly difficult the following day. Such soreness and congestion as remained were removed by alternate applications of hot and cold. Twice each day the foot was first held in hot water and then in ice-cold water.

To relieve heat headache, the head and hair should be thoroughly wet with cold water, and afterwards a wet cloth, dipped in cold water, wrapped around the head and neck. As soon as the wet cloth has become warm from the heat of the body, it should be fresh-dipped in the cold water. Fresh wounds should at first be treated with cold water, and in the ensuing days of inflammation hot and cold should be used alternately. An ordinary bad cold may be cured by applying hot and cold water to the body, which has the effect of increasing circulation and removing the congestion. Aches and pains of well-nigh all descriptions may be relieved in the same way. For burns, pin-sticks, cuts, stone-bruises, tooth-ache, ear-ache, sprains, cramps, and nearly all painful maladies, hot and cold water applied freely will give relief.

BY REV. ELTON WILSON.

There are but few preachers who are so many-sided as to enter into the varied types of intellectual life, and move with them upon a common plane. "The manifestation of the Spirit is given unto every man to profit withal." No one man has such a wide variety of gifts and knowledge as to be able to enter all spheres of knowledge and action; but among the most diverse types of character there still remains a few points in mutual possession. These constitute the mutual bond of communion. Two individuals without anything in common are completely isolated from each other. The power of the intellectual life is obtained through self-activity. This implies environments and teachers to stimulate and arouse this self-effort.

Sir William Hamilton, whose knowledge of the mental life has never been surpassed by any thinker of modern times, says: "That it is not by anything done by others for you, but what you alone do for yourselves, that your intellectual improvement must be determined. Reading and listening to lectures are only profitable inasmuch as they afford you the means and the occasion of exerting your faculties, for these faculties are only developed in proportion as they are exercised." Aristotle says, "The intellect is perfected not by knowledge, but by activity." Thinking is power. There are degrees in the culture of the mental life, but few minds ever attain development in all the stages of complete psychic evolution.

We can illustrate by examples of preachers. We have the acute observer. Nothing escapes his keen observation. All the details of events, scenes, images, features of people whom he has met, and the continuous chain of external things that have impressed themselves upon his memory, are accurately at his command. His is the practical mind. It deals with objective nature. It will reach the stage of rational knowledge, but will never reach the higher regions of critical analysis. Analytical insight will be wanting. It is the mind that deals only with phenomena and their relations. Bob Ingersoll possessed such a mind. He was utterly unable to enter into the regions of causal thought. His vision was confined to the sphere of the senses; he had no philosophic insight at all. This makes the orator, the word-painter, but not the thinker. The middle type of intellectual culture is, doubtless, the most common and the most useful. It combines the observative and rational development in harmonious proportions with a feeble development of the critical analytical powers. The higher analytical mind is combined with the rational, but with a deficiency in the observative and imaginative powers.

How often do we see these intellectual types in the pulpit?—the observer, the thinker, and the analytical, or critical, thinker. There is not one man out of every thousand who has attained the ability to think freely, easily and clearly in each sphere of thought. It is possible for an individual to be a walking encyclopedia of facts, dates, and events, and then be a mere child in the strength of the higher intellectual powers. The preacher needs something more than the accumulation of the mere material of knowledge. He must have those activities that assimilate, arrange, generalize, and formulate the material into a rational system. Material is a necessary element of all vigorous thinking. This is the "full man." All knowledge is valuable to the preacher. The pulpit, to command the leaders of thought and action, must give evidence of its ability to command; ability to demonstrate, enforce, defend and make clear the truths of Scripture. Extensive knowledge is necessary for this great work. This knowledge can be gathered from a thousand sources. From books, nature, men, and general observation; from books of theology, history, biography, science, literature, poetry, fiction, philosophy, and metaphysics. In this age of extensive information the preacher can not afford to confine himself to any single channel of information. His mental culture must have breadth as well as depth and height. His culture ought not to be confined to his "dusty barrel" that an automatic memory dispenses, like unto a mechanical automaton. The book of nature is ever open, with an infinite variety of objects, revealing transcendent beauty and profound wisdom. Her resources are inexhaustible.

The preacher should study men, for he must classify them. Many types and phases of character are found. The intuitive analysis of character can be brought to a high state of cultivation. This means, first, an analysis of our individual consciousness. Each individual is an epitome of the whole. The preacher who has observed his own flowing consciousness, as thoughts, images, emotions, motives and incidents are brought up from the depths of his soul according to the law of association, is better able to approximate the nature and character of those whom he comes in contact with than if he was ignorant of his own consciousness. Men usually know more of others than they do of themselves.

Knowledge and vigorous mental activity are complementary elements of the intellectual life of the preacher. The minister is not the channel through which certain opinions of a definite number of his charge find expression, but he is an "ambassador for Christ." He must "declare the whole counsel of God" in intelligent and manly thought, clear, strong, and accurate thinking, without sentimentalism or sensationalism. A scholastic gospel of glittering generalities and word-paintings can not take the place of a strong, heart-searching, sin-convicting gospel. Plain, honest preaching can only restore to the consciousness of the church the biblical estimate of sin.

The religious life has its genesis in a personal consciousness of guilt. The enormity of sin is a gospel picture. This element of the gospel has almost perished by absorption in certain quarters. A sermon on "National Expansion," or a sermonette on "The Man with the Hoe," never will crowd an altar with anxious penitents. A weak, diluted gospel is powerless. When we have correlated the spiritual element, the psychic element and the physical element in the unity of a ministerial personality, there emanates from this personal nucleus a source of wonderful power—the practical application of thought, knowledge, ability, and energy. Without application all resources are in vain.

This is a practical age, intensely blunt and materialistic. It demands living facts. So intense is the tendency that it desires to include everything—mind, spirit, and the Christian consciousness—within the narrow circle of scientific investigation. The so-called scientific-practical hides much that is shallow, false, illusive, and superficial. The practical that is not based upon the sound philosophy of truth and common sense is worthless. Truth, thought and theory must precede the practical; they are the foundation of all that is practical.

NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE, W. F. M. S.

A cheering note comes from the Okolona Auxiliary. The writer, Mrs. Mattie Davis [in writing for our column, please state distinctly Mrs. or Miss, to avoid errors.—Ed.], forwards the appended letter from Etelvina Benavides, saying: "Miss Holding has sent some very encouraging reports of our 'special,' and we look up with glad hearts, rejoicing in our Master's work, and feeling encouraged to go forward in his name."

As we read the earnest words of this truly Christian woman reclaimed from idolatry, and turned by the grace of God into a zealous worker for Christ, let our hearts send forth a prayer that the lives of our home workers—yes, of every woman of the church—may be consecrated to the Master's service even as is the life of this useful woman.

"During the time I have been in the mission work under the supervision of our dear Sister Holding, it has been a time of blessed experience in my Christian life. In my daily work I have met with souls who hunger and thirst for the bread and water of life, which is the Word of God. I have seen persons under the influence of Satan, who are bound to infidelity, ignorance and superstition, who reject the Word of God. This causes sadness in my heart, but, at the same time, it shows to me the fact of the struggle between Satan and the gospel of Christ. When I see this I say, 'My Savior's gospel shall triumph, because it is the power of God unto salvation.' This gives me comfort and encouragement, and inspires me to work patiently and with hope against the evil influences, and keep trusting that the light which darkness comprehendeth not will shine in the hearts and souls that are darkened and stained with sin.

"The plan of my work is as follows: I go out visiting daily in the morning and afternoon. Wherever I am permitted I pray with the people, and read to them a portion of the Bible. I invite families to our church, and sometimes take them with me. I give religious tracts and sell books, such as copies of New Testament and Psalms. Sometimes I make a present of a Testament to parties who are not able to buy, but are willing to read it. Thus many are being instructed, and I hope they will be converted."

"ETELVINA BENAVIDES."

Laredo, Texas.

The following from the pen of our president, Mrs. M. I. Hoskins, will give pleasure to many:

VALE! VALE!

On Monday, Oct. 9, Miss Lillie Whitman, our young lady missionary en route to the Pearl of the Antilles, stopped over in Grenada to bid her sister and friends at the college a long farewell. She goes to Mantanzas, and is the first missionary sent out by the Woman's Board to that point. In the afternoon she addressed the "May R. McIntosh Society," composed exclusively of college girls; also the woman's auxiliary. Her talk was about her mission in life and the wonderful "story of love." In the still hush of the dying day, when the brilliant rays of crimson and gold illumined old Theobald Chapel, crept in through the open door, tenderly touching and baptizing the peaceful hour with a glory supernal, making an open pathway of light from earth to heaven, her loving words of admonition fell upon eager, waiting hearts, and those hearts were lifted in prayer for the brave, sweet woman who stands to-day upon the threshold of a divine work, and, with a determination born of a higher power, grasps the precious promises, and "presents her body a living sacrifice, holy and acceptable unto God."

Her last message to the girls of Grenada College was to find their mission in life, and fill it according to the great plan that was formed and shaped for them when this glad old earth of ours was rocked in the cradle of its infancy.

As the train left the depot, bearing Miss Whitman away from her loved ones, the student body, in charge of Miss Mabel Morehead, waved a long farewell, and more than one heart breathed the sweet promise, "Lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world."

Amid the trials and disappointments that our brave missionary may be called upon to meet in that priest-ridden island, may she hear the tender, loving voice of her Savior speaking unto her soul:

"Child of my love, lean hard,
And let me feel the pressure of thy care.
I know thy burden, child; I shaped it,
Poised it in mine own hand; made no proportion
In its weight to thine unaided strength;
For even as I laid it on I said,
'I shall be near, and while she leans on me
This burden shall be mine, not hers;
So shall I keep my child within the circling arms
Of my own love.' Here lay it down, nor fear
To impose it on a shoulder which upholds
The government of worlds. Yet closer come;
Thou art not near enough; I would embrace thee
here,
So I might feel my child reposing on my breast.
Thou lovest me? I know it; doubt not then,
But, loving me, lean hard."

The Christian Life.

THE DIGNITY OF SUFFERING.

There is an ennobling quality in suffering. Pain, trial, discipline, bereavement—these are the experiences which write lines of spiritual dignity and strength upon human faces, which deepen and sweeten human hearts, and make life silently serious and purposeful.

Even physical suffering has a dignifying power. Who does not feel touched with a sense of reverence and humility in the presence of one who lies in bodily pain or weakness? Note the face that is thinned and scored by years of physical suffering. What a strange, sweet nobility it has! Pain's refining chisel has been at work there. Though the outlines of an invalid's face lack the rounded beauty of health, they possess another and more abiding kind of beauty—that which grows out of the fortitude and the patience and the love and the faith of long years of physical suffering and dependence. The kings and queens of the sick-chamber are nobler oftentimes than the kings and queens of courts. There is that which unconsciously moves one to uncover the head, almost to bend the knee, in the wards of a hospital. Stretched on these white cots are the brave children of the house of pain. They are fighting grand, but silent battles—battles which demand all the courage and the endurance and the faith of which humanity is capable. Theirs is a true bravery, a true dignity, a true nobility.

But there is a still greater dignity in spiritual suffering. The soul which has been wounded by disappointment, stricken by bereavement, torn by trial, assailed by misconception, crushed by the sense of sin, even in the depth and darkness of its suffering, is nobler and stronger and more god-like than when it basked in life's sunshine. Out of that pain and sorrow God is fashioning something finer and purer than common metal; and the dignity, the nobility of the divine process writes itself upon that which is purified. The outcast, in the pain and tears of his degradation, is the man to be profoundly pitied rather than to be blamed. The greatness of his suffering serves to dignify him. Through pain and tears God is seeking to restore his image in that heart.—Exchange.

DIFFICULTIES OF SCRIPTURE.

Making difficulties out of Scripture is a very useless thing for a practical Christian to do—and there is no other kind of Christian. He wants two things—salvation and a rule of conduct. There are no mysteries or perplexities about either in the Bible. And men who are intent on being saved from their sins, and knowing how to behave themselves, never have any trouble over the Scriptures. They find their plain ways of faith and duty, and following these highways of the Lord keeps them busy and happy. The man full of doubts about the meaning of this or that in the Book is a man evading by intellectual fencing the dictates of conscience and the teachings of a plain gospel. Many a one has confessed it after surrender to duty. And so it is waste of time to follow a doubter into his fence-corners to argue him out of doubt; better far to appeal to his conscience about the plain duties of faith and obedience. Until that is awakened, and hurts him, and stings his self-complacency out of him, he will find pretexts in things too deep for him for neglecting things which are as clear as the sun at noon-day.—Wesleyan Christian Advocate.

It is not the bulk, but the quality of work that God looks at. He needs Jacobs as well as Isaacs, but he does not want faint copies of either. He requires men in the ranks as well as men in command, and his rewards are determined by the degree of fidelity, not by the accident of one's place. If you have great gifts, hold them humbly and use them ungrudgingly. If your gifts are few and meagre, despise them not, but use them faithfully.—Rev. Charles A. Berry.

EXTRA GOOD ORGANS

Epworth organs cost more to make than the common kind. But our direct-from-factory selling saves that heavy middle expense. By saving in the selling, we put more in the making.

The more people know how good the Epworth is — and how we deal — the more our business grows. Write for catalogue today.

GANSVILLE, LA.

...y lot had been cast this year ...ngst a very kind people, though a ... people, financially. Yet, to take ... as a whole, I have never seen a ...er or truer people to their pastor. ... since our camp meeting, which ...n on the fifth instant, has closed, we ... that the good "Lord has done great ...gs."

...owever, there was one of the saddest ...ts took place during the meeting ... any present had ever witnessed, ...h was the very sudden and unex...ed death of Bro. T. B. White, of ..., La. Bro. White preached the ...noon sermon on Saturday, and ... to his tent and complained of a ...en attack of the severest headache ... he ever had in all his life. Willing ...s and loving hearts administered ..., but to no effect. A physician being very near at hand, he was called in at once, but to no effect; he was dead—crossed over Jordan in less than two hours. He fell at his post. Our sympathy is with the bereaved family. God grant them the consolations of grace. Though shocked by the sudden death of dear Bro. White, it seems to have done its part in helping others think seriously of the necessity of preparing to meet death.

The results of the meeting were far-reaching. The church was greatly edified and strengthened, backsliders were reclaimed, and one hundred and twenty professed faith in Christ as a present Savior from sin, declaring their purpose to serve God and get home to heaven. There were twenty-eight received into the church on profession of faith, twelve children baptized, and more to follow. The Baptist Church will increase its membership as a result of the meeting.

I now record my faith in the providence of God in leading us to secure the aid of Bro. H. R. Singleton, recently transferred to us from the St. Louis Conference. Though Bro. Singleton is like the writer in one respect ("little of stature"), he will meet the demand of pulpit and altar work anywhere. Bro. Singleton preached on an average of three times a day from beginning to the close of meeting. I wish to say that if I had an unbroken series of meetings from now until Conference I would want Bro. Singleton with me. He is a man of power, full of the Holy Ghost. He will be without work until Conference, and brethren who need help will do well to get him. He has endeared himself to this entire charge as well as to the pastor.

Much valuable service was rendered by Bro. J. H. Brown, the former pastor of this charge. No preacher will ever serve this charge who will be more highly esteemed and respected than he. May God bless both these dear brethren and keep them in his love! May the consolations of grace be given to Sister White and the entire family!

H. M. BANKS, P. C.

P. S.—We are under lasting obligations to Bro. W. A. Clark, of the Vernon charge, for his visit to camp, who stayed just long enough to give us two much appreciated sermons.

H. M. B.

VERNON CHARGE.

Bro. W. A. Clark closed his round of protracted meetings on Vernon charge, Louisiana Conference, the second Sunday in August. There was not that marked success attending his meetings at his other three appointments as at New Prospect. The trouble lay at the door of the church in a great measure, depending upon the individual efforts of the assisting brother to arouse sinners and bring them in the fold over a spiritually dead church. Bro. Clark had, as he thought, secured assistance at New Prospect; but when the day arrived for the brother to put in his appearance, a postal card came instead bearing the news that sickness would hinder his attendance. It was like shutting out the light of the sun at midday to preacher and people, like a covering for the dead. No evangelist. Bro. Clark saw and felt its effect and thought it best to close the meeting; but at the earnest solicitation of a brother or two he concluded to continue, but not without a further effort to secure the assistance of another preacher. Another partial collapse. But he rallied and realized if help come, it would be from above; so to the wilderness he repaired and, like Paul, came forth and preached the gospel in the power and demonstration of the Spirit. Sinners of long years' standing quaked and trembled. The church was aroused and began itself to a more lively and active faith. Another instance proving that the success of a meeting does not depend upon a visiting brother.

There were five accessions to the church, several family altars erected; all in all, there was much good accomplished. We learned to love our dear Bro. Clark better, the people closer united, and we all have learned to trust more implicitly in the power and mercy of a great and gracious heavenly Father, who does give bountifully out of his unwasted fullness.

M'COMB CITY STATION.

This charge has enough work to keep a preacher busy all the time. Indeed, it has more than one preacher can possibly do, and besides, it is building up all the time. There are no vacant houses, but there is an increasing demand for more. We have two telephone systems which are doing much work. A company has been formed to build a cotton factory soon. We have an ice and soda-water factory which does large business during the Summer. I suppose nearly everybody knows that the I. C. railroad shops are located here. Just out of the southern corporate limits of this place on this railroad Capt. J. J. White has a very large saw-mill which does an extensive business. I suppose he has about three hundred employees.

Our church work does not progress as I desire. Since we came here about the middle of last January we have had 111 accessions to our church, and we have baptized seventy-one infants. I have held twenty funeral services and assisted in four besides. I have married nine couples and assisted in another. The ladies have painted our parsonage, and, of course, it looks much better than it did. We have not held our protracted meeting yet, but hope to begin to-morrow night, and we shall expect Bro. Powell on Monday to do the preaching for us next week. Before it closes we hope to have with us Bros. Selby, Adams, Boen, Morse, Thurman and Rawls. Dr. Belbea has conducted our prayer meetings this week, and will likely remain with us during our meeting. We are hoping, praying and working for great results in the name of our blessed Jesus.

The editor and the brethren generally will please to pray daily for our unconverted members to be converted, and backslidden ones to be reclaimed, and for sinners to be saved. We shall have our Rally Day services to-morrow morning.

WATER VALLEY CAMP MEETING.

The Water Valley Camp Meeting, commencing Sept. 8, and ending the fifteenth, of this year was from some points of view a great success. First, that we could have a camp meeting at all was a surprise to many, because of the stampede with which it closed last year. Second. Notwithstanding the small number of tenters, it was well attended. Third. The preaching was with power and demonstration of the truth, and sinners were converted up to the number of 25 or 30.

An enthusiasm was created for a great camp meeting next year, and arrangements to that end by appointing committees—one, a Finance Committee; the other on Arrangements—this committee to look after the improving of the grounds and the tents. We are going to make the whole camps an inviting place, so that big editors like yourself will come to us. We have been having a big colporteur in the person of Rev. G. W. Bachman, but we want a big editor, too.

Now, let all the friends of Water Valley Camp Meeting rally to its support and make of it a great institution for the glory of God.

We have organized a church there of some thirty-odd members.

E. H. ROOK.

CANTON, MISS.

The Canton Methodist Church has taken on new life. Our prayer meetings are well attended, and Bro. McLaurin, our dear pastor, in his quiet way, has gotten the men to attend prayer meeting. We never have less than four, and whenever they are asked to pray or lead the prayer meeting they do it cheerfully. Our Sunday-school is well attended, and all of the pupils, old and young, love Bro. McLaurin.

The Epworth League is working with bright prospects with our pastor's help. Work was begun this morning to repair the church. This was badly needed. With a quiet and earnest plea from the pastor, the money has been collected, and we hope soon to have our church one of the prettiest in Canton. Pray for the Canton Methodist Church.

Tap, tap all day at the machine until the head throbs with every tap. And when the machine stops for the day the throbbing still goes on. More than any other class of women the large army of women clerks needs to closely watch the health of the organs peculiarly womanly. For the general health will be disturbed just in proportion as the local health of the delicate, womanly organs is disordered. With irregularities there will come pains in the head, the back or side, nausea and general misery. The happiness of the future life of the wife and mother may be entirely ruined by neglect of the health at this critical period.

Women confined in offices, shut out from necessary exercise will find a faithful friend in Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. It so regulates the womanly functions and so strengthens the delicate organs that pain from these causes will be absolutely done away with and future health be perfectly assured.

There is no opium, cocaine or other narcotic in "Favorite Prescription." Neither does it contain alcohol, whisky or other intoxicant.

"I was so weak I did not have breath to walk across my room," writes Miss Isibell Miller, of New Providence, Calloway Co., Ky. "My periods occurred too often and the hemorrhage would be prolonged and the loss of blood very excessive. I also had spells which the doctor said were fainting fits. I could not tell when they were coming on but they left me very weak. My stomach would cramp until I could not straighten. This would last for several hours. I did not gain strength from one monthly period to another; was very weak and nervous all the time. I was advised by a kind friend to try Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, which I did and before I had taken two bottles of it I could work all day. I took in all six bottles of the 'Favorite Prescription' and about five bottles of Dr. Pierce's Pellets. I used no other medicine. I have never had a return of this trouble since, and never can praise Dr. Pierce's medicines enough, for I know they saved my life."

ENGLAND'S WAR WITH THE BOERS.

The whole civilized world is watching with deep interest, as well as with feelings of genuine regret, the contest now going on in South Africa between Great Britain and the Transvaal Republic. War, no matter how honorably conducted, is always a cruel and deplorable thing; but it is doubly so when the occasion thereof seems so ill-founded as in the present instance. That the Uitlanders, as they are called, have considerable grievances, can not be denied; but that they are of sufficiently grave a character to justify England in the course she is pursuing towards the Boers, whose paramount aim is the preservation of their national independence, is, to say the least, questionable. It seems to us, at this distance, that the Boers have acted with undue and, perhaps, unwarranted and foolish haste in precipitating the war, and for this reason they will lose a large measure of the sympathy which a weaker power would naturally receive in such a struggle. As matters stand, the Boers having thrown down the gauntlet, Great Britain has been obliged, for honor's sake as well as for the protection of her interests and the lives of her subjects in South Africa, to resort to arms, and seek to maintain her supremacy in that quarter of the globe.

The war has resulted from British aggression and arrogance, on the one hand, and from the conservatism, stupidity and stubbornness of the Boers on the other hand. We think that neither party to the war can claim to have done its utmost to preserve peace and bring about perfect agreement. As the first settlers of the country, as the pre-emptors of the soil and the subjugators of the savages who thronged the country before their arrival, the Boers claim the right to control in governmental affairs, and to exist as an independent State, though they now constitute only about one-third of the total population, the country having rapidly filled up with foreigners and adventurers immediately upon the discovery of gold and diamond mines. The Boer is by nature a hunter and agriculturist, and looks with disfavor upon town life, the construction of railroads, the exploiting of mines, and the hustle of modern civilization. As one writer asserts, "He is, in fact, the backwoodsman of the last century in the United States, come to life again in Africa." The Uitlanders, the majority of whom are English, have built the towns, developed the mines, and introduced all the essential features of an up-to-date civilization, and since they pay the bulk of the taxes, they have for some time been demanding a voice in the government and in legislation. As they have persistently refused, however, to renounce allegiance to England, the Boer government, not without reason, has firmly denied this request.

Though the Boers are narrow and non-progressive, we should not condemn them too harshly, lest in doing so we cast reproach upon our patriotic forefathers, who, in their struggle for independence, might also have been called "stubborn and bigoted and non-progressive."

The following graphic picture of the grievances of the Boers is drawn by Olive Schreiner, an English South African writer of considerable note, in her book on "The South African Question." She says: "Rightly to understand the problem before the little Transvaal Republic to-day, it is necessary for Englishmen to imagine not merely that, within the space of ten or twelve years, 40,000,000 Russians, Frenchmen and Germans should enter England, not in driblets and in time extending over half a century, so that they might, in a measure, be absorbed and digested into the original population, but instantaneously and at once; not merely that the large bulk of them did not intend to remain in England, and were there merely to extract wealth; not merely that the bulk of this wealth was exported at once to other countries, enriching Russia, France and Germany out of the products of English soil—that would be comparativoly a small matter—but that the bulk of the wealth extracted was in the hands of a few persons, and that these persons were opposed to the continued freedom and independence of England, and were attempting by the use of the wealth they extracted from England to stir up Russia and France against her, that through the loss of her freedom they might the better obtain the command of her wealth and lands."

On the other hand, the Uitlanders are discriminated against and oppressed in a variety of ways, and are so completely ignored in politics and legislation as to make submission to Boer authority extremely galling. The charge is made—and it seems to be well substantiated—that the Boers are guilty of no little cruelty towards the Kaffirs, or the natives. Mr. Wm. Hosken, chairman of the Chamber of Commerce in Johannesburg, and also chairman of the Uitlander council, says in a letter to the London Methodist Times: "The same spirit of injustice and tyranny is shown toward the British people here. We are overwhelmingly the majority in number, we bear nine tenths of the taxation, we own one-half of the surface of the country, and beyond the crudest forms of agriculture we carry on all the trade and industries of the country. We are taxed under a most inequitable and unjust system, a policy of monopolies and industrial concessions is placed upon us, and corruption and maladministration everywhere obtain."

Evidently, then, both sides have had considerable grievances, but taking all things into consideration, it does seem an unrighteous and unnecessary war.

Diplomacy ought to have been competent to the task of averting war But upon whom rests the responsibility for the failure of diplomacy and the commencement of war? Some say, "Upon Great Britain." Says Mrs. Schreiner: "The greatest empire upon earth, on which the sun never sets, with its 500,000,000 subjects, may rise up in its full majesty of power and glory, and crush 30,000 farmers. It may not be a victory, but at least it will be a slaughter. We ought to win. We have the ships, we have the men, and we have the money. May there not be something else we need? The Swiss had it when they fought with Austria; the 300 had it at Thermopylæ, although not a man was saved; it goes to make a victory. Is it worth fighting if we have not got it? . . . Today the women of the Transvaal are demanding guns, that they may take their part in the last stand. We may crush the little people with the aid of Australians and Canadians, since the British isles seem unable to crush them alone. We may take their land and lower the little flag of his independence, so dear to the Boer, but we shall have placed a stain upon our own that centuries will not wash out."

This view of the matter, however, is not accepted by the British public. Sir Joseph Chamberlain, Colonial Secretary, through whom the negotiations with the Boers were carried on, in a speech in Parliament, a few days since, said: "I challenge anyone to show a sign of blood-guiltiness, of desire for war, in the negotiations. . . . I have been as anxious for peace as any man, but the government held that there are other considerations which are even more important than peace, and one of these is the maintenance of equality between the white races in South Africa. In its endeavor to maintain peace the government has shown endless patience. It was President Kruger who settled the issue. He appealed to the God of battles. If I may say so with reverence, I say we accept that appeal, believing our quarrel just." Parliament, by an overwhelming majority, sustained the administration. And in this matter Parliament undoubtedly voices the sentiments of the people. War was initiated by the Boers.

That Great Britain will triumph in the not-distant future seems to be the consensus of enlightened public opinion throughout the world. That British rule in the Transvaal, as well as in the rest of South Africa, would be more beneficent than that of the Boers, is hardly to be disputed, and "manifest destiny" seems to point to the complete triumph of Anglo-Saxon civilization in that region. It seems a pity, however, that blood should be the cost thereof. Christians everywhere should pray that wise counsels may prevail, and that the land now being baptized in blood may soon enjoy once more the blessings of peace and prosperity.

REV. GEORGE H. LIPSCOMB DEAD.

Our Conference is again under a cloud of deep sorrow, because of the death of our dear brother and fellow-laborer, Rev. George H. Lipscomb, which occurred in Birmingham, Ala., at 7 P. M., the nineteenth instant. He had been sick eight weeks, during the last three of which he had been under wise medical treatment in the Copeland Institute in Birmingham. For awhile he improved, so as to inspire hope of recovery, but on the ninth instant a violent change in his condition was manifested, which resulted fatally, as above stated.

His remains were brought to Columbus, the home of his nativity and rearing, and tenderly laid away in Friendship Cemetery yesterday afternoon. Appropriate funeral services were held in the Methodist Church in the presence of a large congregation of friends and relatives, including ten preachers of the Conference and a good delegation from Winona, his pastoral charge. The exercises were participated in by Revs. Shipman, Burroughs, Bowen, Woollard, and the writer. By the grace of God we will meet our dear brother in "the promised land." A suitable memoir will be furnished later.

G. W. BACHMAN.

The above, from Bro. Bachman, will be read with painful interest throughout the North Mississippi Conference. Bro. Lipscomb was thoroughly consecrated to the work of the ministry. He was a diligent, faithful pastor. Under any and all circumstances he was true to his convictions of right. How sad that he should be stricken down in the prime of young manhood! We hope to meet him bye and bye. A sketch from the hand of one who knew and loved him will be found on our first page.

Since the above was put in type we have received the following from Rev. J. A. Bowen:

The funeral of Bro. G. H. Lipscomb took place from our church here last Friday, Oct. 20, at 2:15 P. M. All Columbus feel bereaved by the death of our ascended brother. No man ever exerted a greater influence for good in Columbus among all classes of people than he. There will be memorial services next Wednesday night in Winona.

A GOOD CONTAGION TO SPREAD.

Only a few days ago the daily papers contained accounts of a most enthusiastic meeting of the Christian Missionary Alliance in Carnegie Hall, New York City, during which the sum of $68,000 was raised for foreign missions. So high did the tide of interest rise that women took off their jewels and threw them to the collectors, shouting "Glory to God!" and "Hallelujah!" as they responded to the appeals for offerings. While the leaders of the Alliance are guilty of some follies in their methods of raising missionary funds, depending too largely, it seems to us, upon extraordinary appeals and to spasmodic giving, an unwholesome reaction frequently following thereafter; yet there would be a grand move forward if all the cold and selfish churches in our Zion (and they are numerous) could catch the contagion of liberality which seems to pervade the Missionary Alliance. There is little danger that any of our churches are going to be killed by excessive contributions to the missionary cause, or to the Twentieth Century Fund.

AN INSPIRING EXAMPLE.

Some weeks ago the following encouraging letter appeared in the Wesleyan Advocate from Rev. S. R. Belk, the Methodist pastor at Elberton, Ga. The liberality of our Methodist people at Elberton and the generous gift of the young Chinaman mentioned are most eloquent testimony to their interest in the cause of missions. Says Bro. Belk:

"Last Sunday, after a sermon on missions, I presented the Conference assessments, and called for seven hundred and sixty-four dollars. The Good Spirit was present, and the congregation responded liberally. While the contributions were coming in, Joe Lee, a young Chinaman, walked to the front, and laid down five dollars for missions. The congregation was thrilled by the Chinaman's liberality. Joe Lee is a young Chinaman who has recently joined our Sunday-school, and seems to be much interested in the church. We only called for seven hundred and sixty-four dollars, but our collection went beyond nine hundred dollars. The power of God rested upon the people, and many pronounced this one of our most spiritual and helpful services."

WISE WORDS FROM A GREAT WOMAN.

Here is what Helen Gould has to say anent the seating of Roberts, the Mormon polygamist. We hope many of our readers will act upon her suggestion about writing to their representatives in Congress protesting against the recognition of the head of an oriental harem as one of the law makers of our land.

"I feel that the principle of polygamy for which Mr. Roberts stands strikes at the root of what is sacred and beautiful in our home life, and I am glad to lend what little influence I may have to oppose it. I am glad to have an opportunity to protest against the seating in the House of Representatives of a man who advocates and practices polygamy. Our country has been noted in the past for the beauty of its home life, and the chivalry and respect shown by men to women. It would be sad, indeed, to see a man who stands for the oriental harem seated among our law makers. I earnestly hope that men will feel willing to write to their congressmen, urging them to rise in protest against Mr. Roberts when the House opens."

A NEW BOOK.

POLITENESS ON RAILROADS. By Isaac L. Peebles, of the Mississippi Conference. Nashville, Tenn: Publishing House M. E. Church, South. Barbee & Smith, agents.

The aim of the above-named work is thus stated by the author in the preface: "Having observed too great laxity of true politeness on the railroads, the author of this booklet has written it with the hope of doing something toward correcting the evil."

The aim thus stated, the author keeps steadily before him through out the forty pages of the book. The author's idea of what constitutes politeness is given in the following quotation: "Genuine politeness grows out of an assiduous self-denial and a constant consideration for the happiness of others. The forms and usages of etiquette derive all their beauty and significance from the fact that each of them requires the sacrifice of one's own ease and convenience for another's comfort." A noble ideal truly. The work can be had in either cloth or paper from the publishers.

RELIGIOUS PANICS.

The extraordinary furor raised by what is called higher criticism is lamentable evidence of the weak faith good people may have in the ability of the Word of God to vindicate itself. We do not mean that no opposition should be offered to the destructive criticisms of rationalist critics, but we do think that Christian people should have confidence enough in God's Word not to get into hysterics every time an assault is made on its integrity. No attack on the Scriptures lasts longer than a generation, and lovers of the Word should remember that God's anvil has worn out many a hammer, and will wear out many more. The trouble, however, is not so much with the Bible as it is with people's theories about the Bible. They think their theories are infallible; they do not derive these theories from the Bible, but they try to make the Bible square with their theories; and then, when their theories are dissipated by the heat of criticism, the cry is raised that the Bible is in danger, and a general panic ensues. There is nothing reasonable in this. We should in all candor draw a line between the Bible and our theories. Our readers will remember what a panic struck the public last Spring over certain utterances in the New York Preachers' Meeting. For some weeks we received letters and newspaper clippings requesting some explanation of the dreadful affair. Many of these panic-stricken folks forgot that Methodism was no stranger to higher criticism, and that many of the statements relating to discrepancies and to authorship were old, very old, to Methodist scholars.

A well-known Methodist work on the shelves of most Methodist preachers has more objections, more criticism, more suggestions as to change of text in the Holy Scriptures than may be found in many works professedly opposed to popular views. . . From this author, whose great work has been and is accepted by English-reading Protestants the world over, we could glean any number of instances showing that they exist. . .

But, who is this Methodist author that handles so freely the text of Scripture and who was so far ahead of his time in higher criticism? Adam Clark! Take down his commentary, even to-day equal in much to the best, and carefully read it through, especially his introductions to the various books, and let it no more be said that Methodists are panic-stricken at the new revelations of higher criticism. They are not "revelations," for we have them already, and they are not "new," for Methodists have had them since 1810. The Word of the Lord abideth forever. There is no ground for anyone being alarmed at the results of Christian scholarship.—Methodist Advocate-Journal.

BREAKING COMMERCIAL RECORDS.

This has been a year of record-breakers in New Orleans from a commercial point of view. We have had bumper shipments of grain, tobacco and almost every other article dealt in here; and we have also broken the record in imports on several occasions.

The British steamer "Knight Bachelor" broke the record Monday, Oct. 16, with the largest cargo of sugar ever imported into New Orleans, 73,567 bags, or 8,109 tons, which came from Hamburg. This resulted in another record-breaker yesterday, when the New Orleans Custom House received $304,906.51 in duty, the largest receipts for a single day in its history. The cargo itself was a remarkable one, for if the duty be added to its invoiced value, it will amount to the splendid total of $663,703. It ought to be a big commercial year for New Orleans, in spite of quarantine and other adverse conditions.—Times Democrat.

SEED-SOWING.

Much of the crime among boys and young men is easily traced to the reading of sensational literature, and not infrequently the victim can designate the particular book which sowed the evil seeds in his mind which afterwards yielded the inevitable harvest of evil deeds. In like manner it will be often found in the life of a great man that the reading of some good book was the largest factor in settling his faith and determining his career. The book which your boy or girl borrows from a friend may seem a matter of little moment to you, but it may be the influence which shall determine their present and eternal destiny.—Literary Life.

"LAMBASTING" THE CONGREGATION.

If two or three people go wrong in the matter of cards, or dancing, or theaters, the preacher has no right to lambast the whole congregation on account of the acts of the few. Let him go in person to the offenders and talk to them kindly about the matter, and in nine times out of ten he can remedy the trouble without calling even public attention to it at all. The people generally do not infract the rules of the church in this way, and they ought not to be made to suffer on account of the few.—Texas Advocate.

BUSINESS AND INTEMPERANCE.

Excessive drinking is being slowly stamped out by other agencies than legislation. Society does part of the work, the church another, but among the more potent new factors is the attitude of large employers toward intemperate men. Railroad companies will no longer have them, and that means more than 1,000,000 men compelled to abstain from intemperance. Large manufacturers are falling in line, and the siege is being tightened about the topor. He will soon have disappeared from honorable and profitable employments, and his departure will cause no regret.—Minneapolis Times.

EPWORTH LEAGUE DEPARTMENT.

"ALL FOR CHRIST."

LOUISIANA.

REV. THOMAS B. CLIFFORD, Jackson, La., EDITOR.

Be natural.

Don't put on airs.

This is an intensely practical age, and common sense is at a premium.

True education embraces a practical knowledge of, and general adaptability to, conditions about us.

We would discourage the use of obsolete terms and high-sounding words, unless in "cases of necessity"—and these cases, we think, are rare.

The League in the country is a success in many places. Why should it not be? From the rural districts has come some of the best material the Church and State have had in the past.

Many of the great preachers of our Methodism have come from "the log meeting house with puncheon floor." The League of to-day ought to be a great training-school in the interior, helping to prepare young men for the ministry.

The fact seems to be assured that two League Conferences will be held within our (Southern) bounds next year—the Tri-State at the Seashore, and the Conference of Southern delegates at a place yet to be selected.

Dr. DuBose is in high favor as a General Secretary, and his work upon the Era is hard to beat. Never before has there been as much interest manifested concerning the training and development of the young life in our church.

MISSISSIPPI.

REV. HENRY G. HAWKINS, Madison, Miss., ASSOCIATE EDITOR.

Sister Parker reports that every member of the Caseyville League will pray in public. Praying, or asking to be prayed for, bespeaks a humility that shall be exalted.

Miss Sallie Kilpatrick, of Verona, secretary for the Aberdeen district, writes that there are eight Senior and two Junior Leagues in her district, the most of them doing active work. We will hear from the Aberdeen district again, too.

We gladly give space this week for the notes sent by our State secretary:

EPWORTH LEAGUE NOTES.

The State League directory, compiled by the secretary, shows 157 Leagues, with a membership of 4,436.

Our State president reports the organization of two new Leagues in the Brookhaven district—one at Beauregard, and the other at Pleasant Ridge. Rev. R. A. Gatlin is pastor in charge of both. I request the pastors to report all new Leagues promptly to me.

We are glad to learn that Bro. Bradley has brought to life the dead League at Booneville. Let us have other resurrections.

We regret the delay in regard to the publication of our State Conference Minutes, but it was unavoidable, and they shall be promptly issued from this office when received.

Joe M. Ramsey, the "blind boy preacher," who was the life of the West Point Conference, will be in Columbus on the last Sunday in October, and will stop at Tupelo on his way down.

The Senior Leagues at West Point and Bahala are reported to be in a flourishing condition, while the Junior Leagues at Sardis and Starkville are both claimed by the pastors in charge to be the best in the State.

Many Mississippi Leaguers are glad to know that Mr. Gus W. Thomasson is now domiciled in the Epworth Era office. Mr. Thomasson, while secretary of the Texas State League, did much for the systematizing and promotion of the State work generally; besides, was ever ready to kindly and courteously assist the officers in other States. The Mississippi secretary is much indebted to him for assistance rendered her.

A call has just been made from this office for the prompt payment of the State assessment. Last year this fund was not called for till just before the State Conference; but we are working and praying for this to be the best year in the history of the Mississippi State League; consequently, we are putting on foot plans which require the printing of circulars, blanks, records, tracts, pamphlets, etc. These must be paid for, and that right away. The State officers can do nothing without an expense fund, and we trust each League will do its full share.

President Featherstun has called for a meeting of the State officers at Greenwood during the session of the North Mississippi Conference, on Friday, Dec. 1, at 3 P. M., and again at 7 P. M. The object of this meeting is to plan the State work at large, and to allow the officers from the Mississippi Conference to come in touch with the League and Mission Boards of the North Mississippi Conference.

At the last session of our State Epworth League Conference it was resolved to undertake, instead of the "Special Work," the aiding of our pastors in raising the regular assessment for missions in full, or the "Holston Plan," as it is becoming rapidly known throughout our church. In this plan the Leaguers are pledged to the presiding elders and pastors, as their commanding officers, for a faithful work. It remains to be seen whether they will lead to the glorious victory which has been realized in the Holston Conference, or not. Circulars and tracts, explaining in full the plans adopted from the Holston workers, have been issued from this office to the district secretaries, presiding elders, League presidents, and pastors having Leagues on their charge. President Featherstun earnestly requests the co-operation of all parties concerned. We Leaguers in Mississippi can not afford to lose one inch of ground in this missionary movement which is proving the very life of the Epworth Leagues.

TWENTIETH CENTURY MOVEMENT.

WHAT DOES IT MEAN?

A revival in every charge; the diffusion of information concerning Methodism and its place in history and among the uplifting forces of to-day; the aggregation and consecration of energies for the work of the coming century; the securing of a liberal thank-offering from each member or friend of the Methodist Church—this is what is meant by the Twentieth Century Movement.

The preacher in charge must be the moving spirit in all. If he should be listless, indifferent, uninformed, the membership will be so likewise, and the movement will fail.

How can the preacher succeed? First, by much prayer. "Except the Lord conduct the plan" all will fail. The presence, power and guidance of the Holy Spirit must be invoked. The church must acknowledge her utter dependence upon Him.

Next, a study of the situation What hath God wrought through us? Our history is inspiring. Methodism is the religious marvel of the century. Under divine leadership she has conquered vast territories. How may she garrison her holdings?—how adjust herself to the conditions and needs of the new century?

"To spread Christian holiness over the land" will always be her God given mission; but how best do this? The day of the pioneer preacher is well-nigh gone. Methods must change with changing conditions. We constitute now an army of occupancy.

Methodism has hitherto been so busy seeking to occupy the waste places that little time or thought, save here and there, could be given to moulding into permanent form the society she has created. Training processes have not kept pace with the rapid movement of conquest—possibly could not have done so. Not that these have been wholly neglected, but the work has been too largely tentative. Here must be broad foundation, large provision, ample furnishing. Without abating one jot her spirit of conquest; without losing sight for a moment of her holy mission; with an ever-increasing sense of dependence on the Holy Spirit, she must adjust herself throughout all her borders to Twentieth Century conditions. She has built her log meeting-house side by side with the settler's cabin; has erected her modern church building in the centers of wealth and culture; now she must establish, on ample foundation, her college and her university in the midst of the world's best culture. Methodism will not have accomplished her mission until she shall have dominated the thought of the age.

"Educate for Christ" must be her motto for the coming century.

NOTICE.

To the Preachers in the Forest District, Mississippi Conference, M. E. Church, South—

DEAR BRETHREN: In taking Twentieth Century Educational Fund collections, please do not trust to passing around hats for contributions. Follow directions given in the books sent you by the Board of Education through me. You can not well improve on that plan. Think of a church of nearly 100 members and a big congregation giving 72 cents! And a whole circuit preacher and all paying $1.40 to foreign missions! Away with the hats! Get subscription cards, and use them.

Yours faithfully,

PIANOS AND ORGANS BY MAIL.

The immense advantage in purchasing from us by the mail system is the guaranteed selection on the part of the oldest and largest music house South.

Selling over one thousand pianos and organs each year, and buying goods in enormous quantities, enables us to give those dealing direct the benefit of the closest possible prices on high-grade pianos and organs.

Dealing direct with the customer by mail enables us to eliminate all such items as agents' commission, hotel bills, etc., and to give our customers prices that many factories do not equal to their wholesale trade. Each piano or organ selected by us goes from our warerooms with a guarantee that if it is not as recommended, it can be returned at our expense. Any customer in the South can obtain our lowest net price by mail, and in case of purchase, the selection and instrument will be absolutely guaranteed, and from five to seven years' trial allowed to test same.

Easy payments will be accepted, and old pianos or organs will be received as part payments.

Having been in business in New Orleans half a century buying and selling all grades of pianos, we are in a position to judge of the merits and demerits of the different makes, and to know their adaptability to our trying climate. We give our customers the advantage of that experience.

'TIS THE LITTLE THINGS THAT COUNT.

Just a little here and there, boys;
Such a trifling thing, you think;
A dime for a yellow novel,
And another one for drink;
A little spent in the card-room,
A nickel for a cigar,
But, oh, do you ever think, boys,
'Tis the little things make or mar!

Just a little while from the home, boys,
And, ah! your unwary feet
Will be lured to sin-stained by-paths
That will lead to ruin's broad street;
It is just the first wrong thought, boys,
Just a few vile words, ah me!
And your current of life is changing,
You are drifting out to sea,

Where no human hand can save you,
Rudderless, hopeless, and lost:
Don't you think these boasted pleasures
Are bought at a fearful cost?
'Tis the little things that count, boys,
That make up the mighty whole;
'Tis the little thoughts and deeds, boys,
In the balance against your soul.

—Our Young People.

THE LOVE THAT BINDS.

It is remarkable "on what various trifles hang the momentous things of our lives" oftentimes. It is the "common tasks and daily cares" that really make up our lives, and yet how lightly we hold their significance at times, losing sight of the fact that to our peace and well-being small things are more necessary than great ones.

Mrs. Hawthorne, in one of her letters, says, "If there is anything immortal in life, it is the home relations," and is there not danger in these days of so many outside interests for women, that the mother, wife, daughter and sister may drift from the moorings of home life? Is it not of vital importance that the home should be the place of all others in the world that the growth of character into "whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are lovely," should be cultivated?

How often a trifling thing may mar the whole day's happiness—sometimes the happiness of a life.

A husband and wife had an unpleasantness at the breakfast table one morning over some matter of minor importance. "Some words," as the young woman who waited on them would express it. It had been the husband's custom to give his wife a good-bye kiss when he left her for the work of the day. But he went off that morning without giving it. He stopped on the steps a moment after he had closed the door, for a good impulse came to go back and speak the kindly word and give the farewell kiss. But it would look as if he acknowledged himself in the wrong, and a foolish pride stayed his feet. He passed down the street to the busy mart of life. As he turned away, the sad-hearted wife remembered the couplet her mother had so often repeated in her hearing,

"It takes two to make a quarrel,
But one can always end it;"

and she moved aside the portieres to pass into the hall and lift her face for the kiss, but that would be making concessions. Why should she give in to her husband's opinion? She closed the portieres, but through the blinds watched the one she loved best on earth go down the street. That same foolish pride overpowered her good impulses.

The husband had not gone far before he met a hearse with a white coffin in it, covered with flowers. Somebody's young, sweet wife had gone out of the home forever. What if such a terrible sorrow should come to him! He was passing a florist's window at that moment—it was filled with fresh-cut flowers. His wife loved flowers, especially roses, which were displayed in profusion. He went into the shop and bought a bunch, and sent them, with his card, by a messenger, to the wife he had left without the good-bye kiss.

Ever since the parting that morning the home-keeper had been wretched. What a little matter to make such an outcry over! How could she have been so angry, so unreasonable! She would be so glad when the day was over and her husband would come home again. But what if anything happened to him before the home-coming time!

"For some go out in the morning,
Who never come home at night."

She hurried about the duties of the home and finished her rounds, with the thought in her heart that she would go to her husband's office, "I will not speak of the morning's unpleasantness, but I will just go in, as I often do, and let him know by my manner that all is forgotten and forgiven." She was putting on her wraps when the roses came. They were so suggestive of his thoughtful love that the tears came into her eyes. She put a bunch of them on her gown and went to his office.

He might think he was the first to make the wrong right, and just because of the roses she had come to smile on him and speak the loving words. She could not help whispering in his ear, "I was so sorry, dear, for my unpleasantness even before you left the house, that I had put on my things and was just ready to come down and see you when the roses came."

As Miss Sedgwick says in one of her old-time New England stories, "It is such love as this in the sanctuary of home that binds all in 'one bundle,' sustains the old and prepares the young for conflict." But O, the pity of it all! So many such trivial beginnings do not result as this one did. "It is so much easier for some to begin a coil than to end it." Some of the most momentous things in life hang on the results of such small beginnings. The getting on with some members of the home circle is not always an easy matter. All are not so willing to forgive and forget. But what says Jeremy Taylor, "It is no great matter to live peacefully and lovingly with humble and meek persons, but he that can do so with the peevish and perverse hath the true spirit of love."

Some people do not speak unadvisedly, or say unkind words, but they show in their faces the disagreeable state of the weather in their hearts. As Sydney Smith would say to such, "Your very face is a breach of the peace." They make all those about them uncomfortable and constantly weary of what they do, or say, lest they offend.

Some one has said: "Two people or sets of people meet at a given point in life, much as two trains meet at a station. That they may run together for awhile, however brief, there must be an interval of switching, and in life, as in railroad management, so much depends either for safety or danger upon the working of those switches."—Selected.

EARNESTNESS.

The one secret of success in any undertaking is that a man put his whole soul into it. He who performs his duties in a careless, dilatory, perfunctory manner, makes life a burden to himself and all who have to do with him. Smiles tells the story of a professor in one of the technical school in Paris who, hearing that a friend was thinking of buying an estate in a certain district in France, went to him and urged him not to settle there. "Do you know the district?" his friend asked. "No," replied the professor, "but I am sure the people there are a poor, miserable set. The boys who come to us from that section do not strike hard on the anvil." It is this striking hard on the anvil that makes all the difference between a happy, useful life and an ineffective one. The world owes all the progress it has made under God to earnest men. The man who takes a pleasure in his work, who tries to do it well, whether it be obscure or conspicuous, is the man who succeeds and who helps his fellowmen. There is a tendency, especially in religious work, to the feeling that only in certain offices can successful effort be made. "If I were a minister, or if I could go as a missionary, or could be an evangelist, I could do good service," is a remark often made. But the really earnest soul does the work nearest to his hand and uses the opportunities God has placed within his reach. He can not be idle, and he will not spend in reverie or in vain repining the time that he might use in Christ's service. And it is astonishing how many opportunities come to the man who is really looking out for them. The one question for everyone is whether he is in earnest in his desire to work. If he is, his unconverted friends, his business associates, and the sick and poor people in his neighborhood will soon become aware that there is some one near them with the spirit of Christ in him, ready for service. Much of the depression of the spirit and the painful self-questioning, which depress many Christians, would disappear if they were really in earnest in this Christian activity. Earnestness is a cure for many ills which afflict the soul.—Christian Herald.

SPECIAL MESSAGES FROM GOD.

Who doubts that, times without number, particular portions of the Scripture find their way to the human soul as if embassies from on high, each with its own commission of comfort, of guidance, or of warning? What crisis, what trouble, what perplexity of life has failed, or can fail, to draw from this inexhaustible treasure-house its proper supply? What profession, what position is not daily and hourly enriched by these words which repetition never weakens, which carry with them now, as in the days of their first utterance, the freshness of youth and immortality? When the solitary student opens all his heart to drink them in, they will reward his toil, and in forms yet more hidden and withdrawn, in the retirement of the chamber, in the stillness of the night season, upon the bed of sickness, and in the face of death, the Bible will be there, its several words how often winged with their several and special messages, to heal and to soothe, to uplift and uphold, to invigorate and stir. Nay, more, perhaps, than this; amid the crowds of the court, or the forum, or the street, or the market-place, where every thought of every soul seems to be set on the excitements of ambition, or of business, or of pleasure, there, too, even there, the still small voice of the Holy Bible will be heard, and the soul, aided by some blessed word, may find wings like a dove, may flee away and be at rest.—William E. Gladstone.

WHOSE PLACE WILL YOU TAKE?

You are looking for a place. You may make a place for yourself. By some invention or wise management you may originate some work which no one ever did before, and so have a place which is all your own. But in most cases boys, as they grow up, take the places which other men occupied, and do work which other men have done. It is quite important, therefore, for boys to consider what places they will take when they grow up.

"I read," says one writer, "of a boy who had a remarkable dream. He thought that the richest man in town came to him and said: 'I am tired of my house and grounds; come and take care of them, and I will give them to you.' Then came an honored judge, and said: 'I want you to take my place; I am weary of being in court day after day. I will give you my seat on the bench if you will do my work.' Then the doctor proposed that he take his extensive practice and let him rest, and so on. At last up shambled old Tommy, and said: 'I'm wanted to fill a drunkard's grave. I have come to see if you will take my place in these saloons and on these streets.'"

Every boy should be preparing himself for the place that he is to fill. The boy who is studious, honest and true is fitting for a good place. The boy who runs the streets nights, who lies and swears, smokes cigarettes, drinks beer, and keeps bad company—what kind of a place will he fill?—The Little Christian.

CONSIDER THE LILIES.

During Napoleon's reign, Charney was imprisoned as the enemy of the government. He neither knew God nor believed him. "All things come by chance," was a favorite word of his. One day, while pacing the small yard into which the prison opened, he saw a tiny plant just breaking through the ground by the wall. It was the only green thing there and he spent hours watching it. When its beautiful white, purple and scarlet flower began to unfold he was delighted. He made a frame to support it, and "All things come by chance," he had written on the wall above it. Its gentle reproof as it unfolded shamed the man's unbelief. He erased the lying words and said, "He who made all things is God." In the same yard was an Italian prisoner, whose daughter was permitted to see him. The little girl, pleased with Charney's love for the flower, told the story of this prisoner and his flower, which went from lip to lip until it came to the Empress Josephine. "He who so loves a flower can not be a bad man," she said, and persuaded the Emperor to release him. Charney carried the flower home and carefully tended it. It had taught him faith in God and been his deliverer in prison.—Homiletic Review.

COKER—Bro. J. H. COKER was born in Madison county, Miss., Dec. 14, 1804, and died Oct. 20, 1898. He was the eldest son of Dr. J. E. Coker, known to all the preachers who have served Madison station charge as the faithful steward of Livingston Church, whose house was the preacher's home, and where a warm welcome always awaited him.

Bro Coker's death was indeed sad. In the prime of young manhood, strong and healthy, with every prospect of long life, he was cut down by the hand of an assassin while in the discharge of his duty, leaving a heart-broken wife and two little children.

It seems to me that I was never so shocked as when, on Sunday morning, Oct. 30, I entered the church in Yazoo City and heard some one whisper, "Mr. John Coker was killed last night at Belle Prairie." I immediately left the church and went to the telephone station to call up his brother, Dr. Chas. Coker, to know if what we had heard was true; but, sad to say, in a voice trembling with emotion, he confirmed the report.

He was manager of a plantation, and on Saturday evening, as was his custom, left the house and went over to the store, a short distance away, to settle with the hands, and while sitting on the counter was shot and almost instantly killed by one of the negroes, and his lifeless body was taken back to the young wife whom he left only a few moments before, happy and hopeful, and in the best of health.

Bro. Coker was a man of great physical strength and wonderful energy. He was the most industrious and successful farmer I have ever known. He built with his own hands a handsome residence on the old home-place, much of the work being done by lamp-light after his day's work on the farm.

He joined the Methodist Church when a boy, and was always a liberal supporter of the institutions of the church and a faithful friend to his pastor.

He was married, May 2, 1894, to Miss Maude Myers, of Rolling Fork, Miss., who, with two children, one brother and two sisters, are left to mourn his untimely death. His wife writes: "The saddest part of his terrible taking off is that it was so sudden. He had not time to assure us that all was well with his soul, but he had told me that he loved God." The first and great commandment is to "love the Lord thy God with all thy heart," and we trust that this was fixed in his soul.

Our brother, who was ever ready to hasten to those in any trouble, will be sadly missed by his friends and neighbors. The hand that was ever open to the distressed and needy will no more offer unto them the token of sympathy and love of the heart that directed it.

In his death the church at Livingston has sustained a great loss, and will be keenly felt. His sisters have lost a kind, attentive, and affectionate brother; his wife a devoted, true, and faithful husband; his children a fond and indulgent father.

May the God of all comfort throw around each one his everlasting arms, and comfort their hearts as he only can give comfort in such sorrow!

We carried his body back to Madison county, and laid it to rest in the family burying-ground near Livingston to await the second coming of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ.

JAS. G. GALLOWAY.

FLOWERS—THOMAS M. FLOWERS, son of Rev. E. A. Flowers, of the Mississippi Conference, was born in Franklin county, Miss., Jan. 16, 1851, and died Sept. 10, 1899, in Wilkinson county, Miss., from getting his hand and arm cut off in a gin. Medical aid was secured as soon as possible, but to no avail. He joined the church in 1871, and was married to Miss Mary A. Jacobs, Nov. 6, 1873. Nine children were the fruit of this union, seven of which, with his wife, survive him. No man has ever died in this community leaving a better record than T. M. Flowers. In all relations of life he was a true man. As a citizen, he was held in the highest esteem by all that knew him. His strong mind, in connection with his sense of justice and right, made him a wise counselor and true friend. As a Christian, he was regular in attendance at the house of God. He was true to every trust committed to him. Honor, honesty and integrity were the marked features of his noble character. He never refused to work whenever called upon. He served as class leader, Sunday-school superintendent, steward and church secretary, and teacher. In the Sunday-school he will be greatly missed. He died in the triumph of a living faith in Christ. His remains were laid to rest in the Mt. Carmel Graveyard, Sept. 17, 1899. The funeral services were conducted by the writer at Mt. Carmel Church, attended by a large congregation. It was the most affecting funeral that I ever witnessed. We shall miss him in the community. We feel deep his loss to the church, not only because he was one of its most liberal supporters, but because of his exemplary life and the influence for good which he exercised over others; but nowhere is his loss so greatly felt as in the family circle, where, as husband, he was a model, and as a father he was so kind and gentle. His home was the preachers' home. He was the preachers' friend. We commend the sorrowing to Him who only is able to sustain them. His pastor, C. C. GRIFFIN.

BROWN—Bro. WM. R. BROWN was born Dec. 13, 1827, in East Baton Rouge parish, La., and died June 18, 1899, in Livingston parish, La., near Live Oak Church. He was twice married,—first in 1849 to Miss Sarah Campbell, who died about one year after marriage. This union was blessed with one child, who still survives. His second marriage was to Miss Hanna Goodrich in 1862, who died six years ago—Nov. 4, 1893. To them were given nine children, four of whom preceded them to the better land.

This faithful servant of God united with the Methodist Church when ten years of age, at old Salem Camp Ground. He remained a faithful member and consistent Christian until his Master called him to his reward.

Bro. Brown was a typical Christian character. It was a benediction to be with him, especially in his last days, when he was "enduring affliction as a good soldier of the cross." He lived the gospel before men while in health. He was over thirty years a Methodist steward. He leaves one brother, Rev. Wiley Brown, a local preacher, who has been in the service twenty years. His eldest son, Rev. H. Newton Brown, is on trial in the Louisiana Conference. All his children are

"Traveling home to God
In the way their father trod."

As he lived so he died.

May God bless, cheer and comfort those whose sad lot it is to give him up!

J. M. ALFORD, Pastor.

PHILLIPS—CLARENCE W. PHILLIPS, son of H. A. and E. I. Phillips, was born Feb. 1, 1884, and died June 25, 1899.

After a few days of suffering the "silver cord was loosed, the golden bowl broken, and the spirit returned to God, who gave it." Fifteen bright, sunny years were given to our young friend to enjoy this life and prepare for the life to come. The parents leaned with confidence on their noble boy; brothers, sisters, and friends loved him; but God saw fit to remove him to another home, and the family circle is broken, a chair is vacant, and his voice still in death. He left no dying testimony, but his sister told me he joined the church when only six years old, and had been converted, and always attended church and Sabbath-school regularly, when not providentially hindered. Being trained by a sanctified mother, we believe he is with Jesus to-day.

To his brothers, sisters and young companions I would say: Live for God, for you know not how soon death may come; and if you are ready, it will be a joyful day. Parents, mourn not; Clarence is not dead, only gone before; and if you be faithful, it will only be a "little while," and you will meet your darling boy in that city whose builder and maker is God.

Resolved, That in her death we have lost one of our most valued members in all the different branches of church work, especially the Missionary and Ladies' Aid Societies, of which she was prominent.

Resolved, That we meekly bow to Him who doeth all things well, for He hath said, "Thou hast fought the good fight, and kept the faith; come to the place prepared for you."

Resolved, That we who survive her should be the better for the memory she has left us a memory laden with the perfume of kindly and generous deeds.

NEWMAN—WALTER CALVIN NEWMAN, son of Bro. F. W. and Sister Estelle Newman, of Gallman, Miss., was born Oct. 27, 1897, and died Oct. 2, 1899.

Little Walter was a bright, healthy child, the only son and joy of the home and hope of his parents; but God only lent him to his parents for a short time, then took him home to heaven, that he might draw father and mother to him. It is sad to part with our little lambs, but they will be happier with Jesus.

WINE OF CARDUI

A LITTLE DOES MUCH.

BOONE, IOWA, Dec. 14.
No tongue can tell what I have endured in the past ten years with my monthly sickness. While suffering untold agony, a friend called and recommended Wine of Cardui. I sent for a bottle, and Oh! what relief. After the first dose I began to feel better and have had no pain since.
MRS. GRACE LAMPHERE.

McELREE'S Wine of Cardui

Wine of Cardui not only cures but it acts AT ONCE. Here is a case of ten years' standing, and yet one single dose made the sufferer feel better, and stopped the pain. The Wine goes straight to the seat of the trouble. It acts directly upon the menstrual and genital organs. Its action is not violent, and it does not force a result. It simply gives Nature that little assistance that the sufferer's system lacks. A single disorder in the feminine organs spreads many disorders all over the body, and when the Wine cures the source, all the other ills vanish as a matter of course. A woman can be her own physician and cure herself at home. Local examinations are largely things of the past—the obnoxious custom is no longer necessary. Wine of Cardui is the only perfectly safe and sure vegetable Wine made to-day for the cure of "female troubles".

Oliver Wendell Holmes once said, during the mighty struggle between the States, that the constant cry of the masses was for bread and newspapers. Now, since more than a third of a century has changed the political and financial issues, the great cry in the Southern States is for a pleasant and reliable Chill Tonic. Dicks' Chillifuge complies with this demand. It is as pleasant as orange syrup, and as prompt to cure malaria as the bitter Sulphate of Quinine. If you have a case of Chills or Fever which you can not break, try Chillifuge, and enjoy life once more.

Two Verdicts.

"After a fair and impartial trial you are judged guilty by this court, and you are sentenced to be hung by the neck until you are dead." The solemn tones of the judge, the despairing face of the prisoner, and the painful stillness of the court room, makes it a scene of awful impress. Now turn to a brighter scene at the home circle. A mother radiant with joy over the recovery of a child snatched from the clutches of Malaria. An entire family rejoicing, and praising the merits of Dicks' Chillifuge, and giving their verdict that Chillifuge is without an equal for swiftness to cure.

The "Combination" Bible.

A SUPERB EDITION

of the Holy Scriptures, showing at a glance at the foot of the pages all changes made by the revisers.

New Type. All Proper Names Self-Pronouncing. The Most Valuable Collateral Matter.

There is a steady and increasing demand for first-class Bibles. Everybody is anxious to obtain a copy of the best edition of the Holy Scriptures. Old editions are constantly being replaced by Bibles that are in every way more attractive, and there is practically no limit to the demand.

OUR "COMBINATION" FEATURE.

Hitherto the King James and Revised Versions have been printed in parallel columns, but this makes comparisons of texts tedious and unsatisfactory, and makes the book very unwieldy. We have overcome this difficulty by "combining" the two Versions on the same page; showing at a glance in foot-notes all the Changes Additions and Omissions made by the Revisers.

THE OLD VERSION PRINTED IN FULL.

The King James Version is the basis, and this Version is read straight along from the text, while the Revised Version is read from the text in combination with the foot-notes. Our "Combination" Feature has met with universal approval and is strongly endorsed by all leading Divines and Biblical Scholars.

It is only by a comparison of the two Versions that the greatest benefit can be obtained from reading the Holy Scriptures, and this comparison every reader can easily make by our simple arrangement for showing the changes made by the revisers. This is the greatest triumph of Bible Publishing the World has ever known.

OUR OFFER.

To those unprogressive people who do not read and pay for the NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE we sell this Bible at the publisher's retail price—$4.25. To our subscribers we sell it at the very low rate of $2. The only condition attached to this offer is that the subscriber must pay his subscription one full year in advance, viz.: to November, 1900. We will send it postpaid to any person who will send us three new cash subscribers at the regular rate. For six new cash subscribers at the regular rate we will send two "Combination" Bibles, postpaid.

For fifty cents additional we will send a Bible with index.

For twenty-five cents additional we will have your name engraved in gilt letters on the outside.

Send for circular. Address REV. W. C. BLACK.

P. S.—We can give no commission on renewals in connection with the above offer.

New Machine Offer.

By Far the Best We Have Ever Made.

Always on the watch for something good for our subscribers, we have succeeded in making arrangements whereby we can make a sewing machine offer which is far better than any we have been able hitherto to make. Read the following description and then read our offer:

No. 4 IMPERIAL.

THE IMPERIAL HIGH-ARM SINGER will be found the perfection of mechanism as regards simplicity, durability and adaptability to the wide range of work embraced in the general family needs.

A Handsome, Light-Running, Lock-Stitch, High-Arm Machine that will not fail to please the most fastidious. Embracing all the advantages with all desirable improvements of other first-class sewing machines, so simple in mechanism that the most inexperienced need no assistance in operating it. Book of instructions with every machine. Any child can learn to run it.

Extra Set of Attachments also free with each machine, consisting of the following: One Tucker, One Foot Ruffler, One Set of Plate Hemmers, four different widths up to ½ of an inch, One Binder and One Thread Cutter.

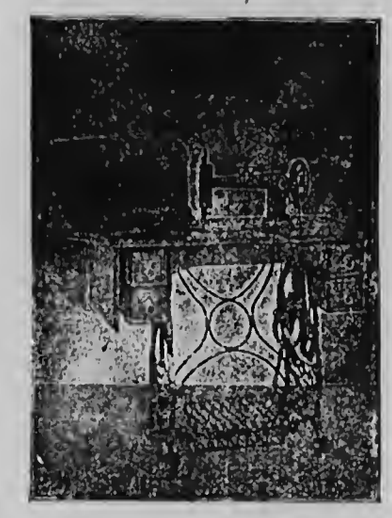
No. 3 Machine, drop leaf table, gothic cover, case of two drawers at one end and center drawer. Dealer's price, $24. Our price, $14.75.

No. 4 Machine, drop leaf table, gothic cover, case of two drawers at each end and center drawer. Dealer's price, $25. Our price, $15.50.

No. 5 Machine, drop leaf table, gothic cover, case of three drawers at each end, making seven drawers in all. Dealer's price, $26. Our price, $16.25.

Furnished Free with every machine are the following named accessories. One Foot Hemmer, One Screw Driver, One Wrench, One Oil Can and Oil, One Gauge Screw, One Extra Check Spring, One Package of Needles, Five Bobbins and One Instruction Book.

No. 4 Columbian



EXCELLENCE OF THE COLUMBIAN.—All wearing parts are of case-hardened steel possessing great durability, and by the turning of a screw all lost motion caused by wear can be taken up. All parts are fitted so accurately that the machines are absolutely noiseless, and as easy running as fine adjustment and best mechanical skill is possible to produce. No expense or time is spared to make them perfect in every respect, as every machine passes a rigid inspection by competent men before leaving the factory.

NICKEL PLATED.—The balance wheel and many of the fine parts are nickel plated with other parts finely enameled and ornamented, giving it a rich appearance.

A Self Setting Needle and Self-Threading Cylinder Shuttle are used in the Columbian High-Arm Sewing Machine. They are so simple that any one can easily operate them in a few minutes' time, as our Instruction Book is fully illustrated, showing how to do all kinds of fancy work with attachments.

Extra Attachments, in velvet-lined case, sent free with each machine: 1 Tucker, 1 Ruffler with shirring plate, 1 Hemmer set (4 widths) and Binder, 1 Braider (Foot and Slide), 1 Thread Cutter.

ADDITIONAL ACCESSORIES.—Each machine is supplied with the following outfit: 1 Hemmer and Feller (one piece), 10 Needles, 6 Bobbins, 1 Wrench, 1 Screw Driver, Oil Can with Oil, Cloth Gauge and Thumb Screw, and a Book of Instructions. The Book of Instructions is profusely illustrated, and answers the purpose of a competent teacher.

No. 3—Drop leaf, Bent cover, case of two drawers at one end and center drawer. Dealer's price, $29. Our price, $17.

No. 4—Drop leaf table, Bent cover, case of two drawers at each end and center drawer. Dealer's price, $31. Our price, $17.75.

No. 5—Drop leaf table, Bent cover, case of three drawers at each end and center drawer, making a seven-drawer machine. Dealer's price, $33. Our price, $18.50.

The chief difference between Numbers 3, 4, and 5 is in the furniture, i. e., in the number of drawers. If you do not want to pay for the extra drawers, you need not do so. We sell these machines under a ten years' guarantee, by which we mean that if any part gives out by reason of any defect therein, the manufacturer will replace the same free of charge. Moreover, we allow the purchaser to test the machine ten days. If at the end of ten days you are not satisfied, you have only to drop us a postal card, and your money will be refunded.

OUR OFFER.

We will send any one of the above-described machines at the prices named, and also send the ADVOCATE free for six months. The only condition attached to this offer is that subscribers who are in arrears must first pay up all arrearages to date. It would be well to avail yourself of this offer at once, as we can not promise that it will last very long. Notice that you take no risk whatever. We do all the risking. Address

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

It is reported that Krueger favors unconditional surrender.

England's Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children examined 28,000 cases last year.

Seven hundred Boers are said to have been killed or wounded in the recent battles in the Transvaal.

Four American officers have been detailed to South Africa to take observations in the Transvaal war.

Eight thousand men are engaged in mining lead and zinc in Missouri. The total output for 1898 was 71,000 tons of lead and 110,000 tons of zinc.

Nearly every citizen in Springville district, Greenup county, Ky., was arrested recently for refusing to work on the roads, as required by the Kentucky road law.

In the International yacht race, sailed on last Friday, the "Columbia" beat the "Shamrock," the English champion. This makes the third successive defeat of the "Shamrock" by the American yacht, and closes the series.

The Boers shelled the camp at Glencoe from the heights, but the British bravely climbed the hills, took the guns and won a great victory. The British lost nearly three hundred killed. The Boer loss believed to be thrice as many. General Symons was seriously wounded while leading his column.

The clergymen of the Methodist, Baptist, Congregational, Presbyterian, Church of Christ and Lutheran denominations of Ann Arbor, Mich., have entered into an agreement not to marry divorced persons, except in cases where the innocent party is granted a decree for scriptural reason.

It is announced from London that Hiram Maxim, the great inventor and manufacturer of guns and other war supplies, has taken out a certificate of naturalization as a British subject. He was born in Maine, but since 1884 has maintained an establishment in London, which now employs 14,000 workmen.

The fight at Elandslaagte, in the Transvaal, was a great British victory, though 150 British fell. Among the dead is Gen. Jan M. H. Kock, of the Boers, who was captured and died of his wounds. General Jonbert's nephew was also captured and reported dead. The Queen expresses sympathy over the casualties.

Another unusual cargo soon to go from New Orleans will be the shipment by the British steamer "Meridian," now at Chalmette, of 70,500 bags of flour, equal to the weight of 4,406 tons. This flour is destined for London, England, and will be the largest cargo of flour which has ever left this port in a single ship. No other cargo will be taken.

The aspect of affairs in Samoa is indeed far from reassuring. There is trouble brewing, and it will come soon if the powers do not come to aid the government and the distracted officials. The three consuls who were left there are finding their position by no means a bed of roses. It is a matter of "report that the feeling between the members of the provisional government is strained."

The war in Africa has afforded New Orleans some little prominence as a shipping point for mules and other supplies destined for the campaign against the Boers in South Africa. Several days ago a British transport left here with a consignment of 750 mules for Cape Town, and on Saturday the large British steamer "Montezuma" cleared with 2,029 head of mules also for Cape Town. These shipments of mules are but the forerunners of other equally as extensive shipments.

Archbishop Chapelle arrived from New Orleans on Oct. 21, and at noon went to the White House, where he had an extended interview with President McKinley in regard to his mission to the Philippines. The archbishop was seen, but he declined to discuss his visit to the White House, except to say that the administration found no fault with his mission as apostolic delegate to Cuba and Puorto Rico. He will return to New Orleans some time next week, and will prepare to leave there for the Philippine Islands, where he goes as apostolic delegate, about the last of November. During his stay in Washington he probably will consult with the Philippine Commission, which meets here the first of next week.

General Frederick Funston, of Kansas, lectured to the student body of Stanford University, in California, on Oct. 20, on the Philippines. He blames the friars as being at the bottom of the insurrection. The general unmercifully attacked the church, not, as he insisted, because it was the Catholic denomination, but for the influence it maintained upon that class of people. "If Congress would drive out the friars," he said, "and confiscate every inch of church property, the bottom would drop out of the insurrection within a week. Some people returning have spoken of the brutality of our soldiers in the Philippines. I say to them that they are unmitigated liars. Our soldiers never touched the wounded enemy, except to drag them out of the fire into the shelter."

A Prominent Minister Writes.

After ten years of great suffering from indigestion, with great nervous prostration, biliousness, disordered kidneys and constipation, I have been cured by Dr. Mozley's Lemon Elixir, and am now a well man. REV. C. C. DAVIS,
Eld. M. E. Church, South,
No. 28 Tatnall St., Atlanta, Ga.

A Prominent Memphian Writes.

DR. H. MOZLEY, Atlanta:—Having been a great sufferer for three years from indigestion, and been treated by many physicians, who failed to give me any relief. Continuing to grow worse my brother advised to try Dr. Mozley's Lemon Elixir, which remedy he had used for several years. I commenced its use, and must say that your Lemon Elixir is the greatest medicine on earth. I have never suffered a day since I commenced using Lemon Elixir.
R. L. ROCCO,
206 Hernando St., Memphis, Tenn.

A Card.

This is to certify that I used Dr. Mozley's Lemon Elixir for neuralgia of the head and eyes with the most marked benefit to my general health. I would gladly have paid $500 for the relief it has given me at a cost of two or three dollars. H. A. BEALL,
Clerk Superior Court Randolph Co., Ga.

Dr. D. M. Bye
Combination Oil Cure Co.
THE ONLY PERMANENT CANCER CURE
LONG DIST. PHONE 1638
LABORATORY 91 N. CAPITAL AVE
INDIANAPOLIS, IND.

PILGRIM HOME was built for God. A religious work will be carried on in it for the salvation of souls and the healing of diseases without remedies, depending alone on Jesus, who healed all who had faith in His name, as in the Apostles' time. Dr. D. M. Bye claims that after twenty years of success as a specialist for cancers and tumors, the Lord led him to the Oil Cure and for the last eight years the Doctor has been curing all manner of malignant diseases by anointing with oils. The remedy is not only mild and safe, but cures internal as well as external cancers and tumors and gives relief from unceasing pain. Many thousands of bad cases of cancers and tumors have been cured by using Dr. Bye's Oil Treatment and many healed by faith alone. The Doctor has received thousands of good letters from persons cured. Hundreds from ministers and Christian patients are printed in books and papers, which if one will read they will plainly see that surely God's blessing is with the Oil Cure. In the large book there are many half-toned photos showing conditions before and after treatment, which is sent FREE, giving particulars and price of Oil. Its just popularity is shown by the fact that at this time over three thousand patients are taking home treatment. Its great success has caused many counterfeiting imitators, therefore be careful. This country is full of frauds. Note this one thing: Of all the great number who have come to Indianapolis for treatment, not one has yet died on the Doctor's hands; no undertaker has yet received one cent. PRAISE THE LORD. The Doctor firmly believes it won't be long when more persons will be healed at Pilgrim Home by faith alone in Jesus than by oils, yet all have not so great faith and must use the Oil Treatment administered with God's blessing for a cure. ATTENTION!

Rev. Geo. H. Lipscomb, deceased, was a member of the Ministerial Relief Association of the North Mississippi Conference. All assessments ($5 from each ministerial member and $1 from each lay member) are now due.

The death-rate in our association has been large this year, but the money sent to the families of our departed brethren has accomplished much good. There are nineteen delinquents on Assessment No. 13, payable to Sister A. J. Jones, and thirty-five on Assessment No. 14, payable to Sister H. P. Gibbs. Can not every delinquent now pay his assessments and maintain the interest of our Brotherhood? Assessment No. 15 is now due. Send money to me, and receipt will be forwarded. J. C. PARK,
Secretary and Treasurer.

INDIAN MISSION.

Received since last report the following amounts: Mrs. V. L. Austin, of Oak Ridge, Miss., $1, and Mrs. S. T. Taylor, of Enterprise, Miss., $15.

Many thanks to the givers, and may God greatly bless them. Let it come now, brethren and sisters, at a lively rate. A. D. MILLER.

Hermanville, Miss., Oct. 22, 1899.

The Review of Missions is an illustrated, sixty-four-page missionary magazine, published monthly by the Board of Missions of the M. E. Church, South. It is the purpose of the editors to keep our readers in touch with the best thought on mission, and to furnish them with the most recent facts and information concerning advanced religious movements at home and abroad. Though reduced from one dollar to fifty cents, this periodical will be conducted on lines similar to those already pursued. We have arranged to illustrate its pages with numerous engravings, and can safely promise a high grade of articles. Address W. R Lambuth, Nashville, Tenn.

Cure for Skin Disorders

People who never know an hour of ease and self-forgetfulness in society because of blemishes in their faces, due to skin disorders, should make the acquaintance of Heiskell's Ointment and Heiskell's Soap. Used together these two remedies make up a common sense treatment for skin diseases which removes pimples, freckles, tetter, eczema and all skin disorders. They are excellent to rub on the face after shaving to keep the skin soft, smooth and free from blemishes and "blackheads." If your druggist does not sell these remedies, you can get a free sample, or buy them in any quantity by writing to the manufacturers, Johnston, Holloway & Co., Philadelphia, Pa.

SPANISH-AMERICAN WAR PANORAMA

is one of the war books which is likely to be in continuous demand. It is a panoramic record of the triumph of Yankee Doodle. The eagle flaps his wings on every page, and "Old Glory" waves around and above every scene. Prominent officers connected with the war are here portrayed, as well as many of the "men behind the guns." Military life is pictured to the eye, from recruiting to guard mount and skirmish line. Nor is the ludicrous omitted. The company cook receives the attention due to his importance; the mess is shown; cavalry scenes are given; the hospital arrangements are depicted; the heroines of the Red Cross service are displayed; street scenes in Havana, Santiago and elsewhere are unrolled, the new citizens or subjects (which are they?) of Uncle Sam appear and disappear as the leaves are turned.

In a word, the gazer visits the new localities and sees the tumultuous new life, without the risk or expense of a sea voyage.

The Album is 5½x8 inches, weighs 12 ounces, printed on finest coated paper.

NEW ORLEANS DISTRICT SUNDAY-SCHOOL CONFERENCE.

The Sunday-school Conference for the New Orleans district was held in Carondelet Street Church, Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday evenings, Oct. 24, 25, and 26. This was the first effort made to hold such a Conference, as is contemplated by the Discipline, in New Orleans, and its success was very gratifying to those having the movement in charge.

The New Orleans District Sunday School Union, composed of workers of all the Methodist schools in New Orleans, has been in existence for over fifty-two years, having been organized in 1847 by the late W. H. Foster, so long and favorably known in our church in this section.

Early in June, last, the presiding Elder, Rev. Dr. S. S. Keener, asked the officers of the Union to co-operate with him in providing for a regular District Sunday-school Conference, and the gathering just held was the result. An instructive, as well as attractive, program was prepared, the subjects and speakers being as follows: "What Is the Sunday-school?"—Rev. W. H. LaPrade, D. D.; "What Is the Sunday-school For?"—Rev. P. L. Fontaine; "The Relation of the Epworth League to the Sunday-school"—Mrs. Alma S. Wynn; "The Unity of the Church to the Sunday-school"—Rev. E. N. Evans; "The Home Department of the Sunday-school"—Mr. Allen F. Godat; "Music in the Sunday-school"—Mr. Walter J. Carre, and "Reaping the Results" Rev. Geo. D. Parker. There was also a free-for-all discussion on the question of, "How Can Our Sunday-Schools Be Made More Attractive and Effective?"

The music at the Conference, under the direction of Mr. T. O. Adams, the leader of Rayne Memorial choir, was exceptionally fine.

The papers and addresses were forceful presentations of the subjects chosen, and were attentively listened to.

Dr. LaPrade, in his address, held that the Sunday-school is not primarily and exclusively a place for little children; that it is not "the nursery of the church" (that time-honored phrase is to the contrary, notwithstanding); that the Sunday-school is the church teaching herself the Word of God."

Mr. Fontaine, in his paper, stated that the Sunday-school exists for the threefold purpose of "teaching its members the Word of God," of getting "its members converted," of keeping its members converted by applying them with Christian work."

Mrs. Wynn, in her paper, brought out the fact that the Epworth League and the Sunday-school are not rivals, but that "both the Sunday-school and the League are missionary societies, and only differ in that the latter affords a larger field for study and work. Both are arms of the same body, streiched out to save the young people before the blight of sin is upon them."

Mr. Evans advanced the view that the Sunday-school is to the church what the public school is to the State." The State feels its need of educated citizens; the church can not do its best work without members enlightened by the study of the Scriptures.

Mr. Godat, in his paper, said that the "ideal of Sunday-school work which meets the approval of the best workers in it is, 'All the Sunday-school in the church, and all the church in the Sunday-school.'" To meet some of the obvious difficulties in the way of such a consummation, the Home Department has been devised. It is, briefly, a class, or classes, composed of those who can not, or will not, attend the sessions of the regular school, but who will pledge themselves to spend a half hour a week in the study of the regular Sunday-school lesson, and to keep a record of their work.

Mr. Carre advocated plenty of singing in the Sunday-school, selecting the hymns beforehand, beginning with the first in the book, and learning a new hymn every Sunday until every one in the book is known. He considered music in the Sunday-school as second only to the work of teaching the Word.

On the topic assigned him, Rev. Geo. Parker stressed the necessity of special efforts and occasions for the ingathering of the souls of the children by having special days known as Decision days. All the work of the farm looks to the harvest; all the work of the Sunday-school should have the same end in view. Decision days should be preceded by much prayer, but also by adequate preparation.

The general discussion brought out many valuable points: the need of consecrated teachers, the necessity for schools progressing, punctuality of teachers and scholars, teachers' meetings, and individual reponsibility of each member of the school.

The matter of fixing a special day, to be observed as Decision Day in all schools throughout the district, was referred to the Executive Committee, with request that they give it earnest consideration. A resolution was also passed embodying a request to the Sunday-school Board of the Annual Conference to call a Sunday-school Conference for the entire State at such time and place as would be thought best.

The meetings were well attended, and there is every reason to believe that such gatherings will be a feature of New Orleans Methodism in the future.

"A DEARTH OF PREACHERS," AND ELSE.

Bro. Honnoll, in your issue of Oct. 19, quoting approvingly from "Gilderoy," in your issue of Oct. 5, says: "The well-educated preachers, as a rule, will not stay in some sections of this Conference, and if they were to go and stay, they would not be largely useful. The margin between them and the people would be too great,'" etc.

After reading Bro. Honnoll's article I re-read "Gilderoy's" with careful interest. In the main, I heartily agree with it, but in the passage quoted above there lurks an error that deserves to be exposed. I beg pardon of Bros. "Gilderoy" and Honnoll for dissenting from their view—if I do, for I may not correctly interpret them.

In closing his article "Gilderoy" says, "In all this talk no one has uttered a word against a better-educated and more highly-cultivated ministry," etc.

Apropos to this, "Layman," in the Richmond Christian Advocate, of Oct. 19, says: "The pew is thinking and reading more than ever before, and a preacher must be a man of ability to have the respect of his hearers. We often tolerate, but feel ashamed of our preacher and blush when there are strangers present." Again: "Every profession, and nearly every trade, demand a higher standard than the ministry of our church. Four years at college should be required before application for entrance into a Conference."

This is a voice from the pew. Without commenting upon the last sentence of the above excerpt, we wish to make this point: It is not less education, but more of the mind of Christ that our preachers need to qualify them to minister to the common people of our rural districts. If it be true that education disqualifies a minister for ministering to the common people, then, I maintain, there is something wrong about our schools. Said a lady to me, with tearful eyes, whose daughter had just graduated from a Methodist college, "When my daughter went to college she was a religious girl, but she has come back to me worldly-minded and irreligious." If our colleges, male and female, are what they ought to be, they will develop the faith and quicken the Christian zeal of our boys and girls who attend them while they unfold the powers of their minds and advance them in their learning. Such education as this will not disqualify a young preacher to preach to the poor and ignorant; on the contrary, it will fit him more completely for such work. In our rural districts there are to be found many educated people. Teachers and professional men are there, merchants and the children of well-to-do farmers, and not infrequently the farmers themselves, whose scholastic training has refined their manners and taste. What can an uneducated ministry do among them? There is where the "margin" becomes "too great." But an educated man, with the mind of Christ in him, can lay his hand more efficiently upon the humble and illiterate classes to minister to them and lift them up, and at the same time he can preach acceptably and successfully to the more cultured of his congregation. There was no hindering margin between Mr. Wesley and the poor, ignorant colliers of England in his day. So I am forced to the conclusion that the trouble is not too much education, but too little religion. We need to stress more than we are doing the necessity of the baptism of the Holy Ghost as a qualification for the Christian ministry. W. B. LEWIS.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From Our Regular Correspondent.)

"The Saloon Must Go" is the most conspicuous motto in the auditorium of Mount Vernon Place M. E. Church, where the fourth annual anti-saloon revival is being held. Rev. A. J. Wheeler, of Maine, is in charge of the meetings, and, although the church is one of the largest in the city, its seating capacity is being taxed every evening. Mr. Wheeler takes the ground that the three things necessary to combat intemperance are education, isolation, and fumigation—a higher moral education to enable the people to fully appreciate the evils of intemperance in its effects upon moral character; isolation, which he interprets to mean prohibition of the liquor traffic, and to fumigate by cleaning away the rubbish of the saloon in politics and society. Mr. and Mrs. C. C. Beveridge, of Nebraska, the well known temperance singers, participate in all the meetings.

State Department officials say they have no official knowledge of any concerted action to be taken by European powers to stop the war in South Africa, and that, consequently, there is no foundation whatever for publications which have been made as to contemplated action by this government.

So seldom is a Washington pulpit occupied by a minister from the "Seceders," that few, even among intelligent church-goers, know by that name the Scotch, or Associate Reformed, Presbyterians, although that is the name by which they are best known in the South, where they are more numerous than in any other section of the United States. Rev. Oliver Johnson, who is pastor of the "Seceder" Church at Leslie, S. C., which was established in 1787 by Scotch-Irish forefathers of many of the present members, occupied the pulpit of the Central Presbyterian Church at both services Sunday, preaching on "Christian Help and Sympathy" in the morning, and in the evening on "Afterwards," the latter being a forceful argument upon the certainty of punishment afterwards for every sin committed. After his morning sermon Mr. Johnson received a practical compliment upon the force and simplicity of his preaching in the shape of an invitation to speak at the afternoon open-air gospel meeting of the Central Union Mission, where force and simplicity are not only appreciated, but absolutely necessary to catch and retain the interest of the average street gathering.

Rev. T. Miyagaeva, of Osaka, Japan, widely known in his own country as a successful missionary, delivered an interesting address on the spread of Christianity in Japan at the Autumn meeting of the Congregational Club, held this week. He said, among other interesting things, that the civilization of Japan was largely due to three causes: First, the Japanese are always satisfied with the conditions assigned them; second, they are obedient to their parents; third, they are gentle and kind-hearted, and devoted to learning.

The presence in Washington, and at the White House, of Archbishop Chappelle, Apostolic Delegate to the Philippines, who, it is announced, will shortly proceed to the Philippines for the purpose of using his influence with the Filipinos to aid in bringing about peace, has aroused much interest, which has been intensified by a letter published over the signature of the archbishop. It has so far been impossible to ascertain the nature of the conference between the archbishop and President McKinley, of which the letter mentioned said: "I see the press of the country said that the object of my visit to the White House was to protest against the looting and desecrating of the churches in the Philippines. This was not the case. As to the looting and desecrating of these churches, I am informed by a person whose word I can not doubt that this looting was not done by our American soldiers, but by the insurgents and the Chinese." The main object of the letter was to reply to the assertion of Gen. Funston that, if the friars were driven out of the island of Luzon and the church property confiscated, the bottom would drop out of the insurrection at once. In his effort to refute that assertion the archbishop made a showing which indicates that his church has no influence whatever with the insurgents. If that be correct, what can the archbishop's visit to the Philippines do towards bringing about peace? According to him, the insurgents are the bitter enemies of his church, having its priests and friars in prison, and favoring the confiscation of all its property. Perhaps he has proven too much.

Col. A. S. Frost, an officer of the regular army, who commanded the South Dakota Regiment which has just returned from the Philippines, had an extended conference with Secretary Root this week, during which he said of two widely-published charges against American soldiers: "The stories of American soldiers looting churches is false. As Gen. McArthur advanced, the principal churches were set on fire by Aguinaldo's men, notably the churches at San Fernando and Malolo, and the looting was done by insurgent stragglers and Chinese. It has been said that inhumanity was shown to Filipino prisoners. On the contrary, the American soldier is the kindest-hearted man in the world. I have seen him share his canteen and give shelter to wounded Filipinos, and the Filipino wounded are sent back to the hospitals on the same trains with our own."

Washington, Oct. 25, 1899.

LETTER FROM CALIFORNIA.

The Pacific Conference was held in Asbury Church, Oakland, beginning Wednesday, Oct. 4, and closing Sunday night, the eighth. Bishop Duncan presided, and Rev. L. C. Renfro was secretary. There was a full attendance of preachers, and the number of visitors was greater than ever before. Perhaps every part of our territory was represented. The preachers, generally, were in good spirits, and the reports were hopeful. Preachers' salaries and all the collections were in advance of last year's reports. However, salaries are considerably lower than formerly. This is the case in churches of every denomination. In the M. E. Church they declined 25 per cent. in ten years. Two or three new churches and as many parsonages were built, and some old debts were paid. Salaries here average a little more than in the Mississippi Conference, but the cost of living is, perhaps, 30 per cent. greater.

A very unpleasant feature of the Conference was the expulsion of two of our number. Revs. W. D. Taylor and S. T. Reeve were among our most successful and popular pastors. They had been led astray by the teachings of one Alex. Dowie, of Chicago, an advocate of many vagaries and enemy of the church, and persisted in disseminating his doctrines and distributing his publications. Their presiding elder and other brethren labored with them in vain, and, as a last resort, they were cut off. The verdict of the committee is generally approved.

We received several transfers, most of whom come highly recommended. As usual, we may expect some of them, ere long, to retransfer East, disappointed and discouraged, while others will become acclimated, and do us good service.

We also lose by transfer some of our best men. H. M. McKnight goes to the Los Angeles Conference to succeed H. C. Christian on the Los Angeles district. Jos. Bule and C. C. Black, both young men, go, the former to Holston and the latter to East Columbia. Jas. Healey, my predecessor, a good man and true, returns to Los Angeles Conference, and is stationed at Lompoc.

Changes were more numerous than usual, though I do not believe the charge that the fact is attributable to Bishop Duncan's mania for making changes.

This scribe leaves Oakland for Salinas. The necessity of economizing in missionary appropriations brought about the change. Rev. P. L. Cobb, of Nashville, a man without family, is to supply Oakland. It is a hard field. All things considered, I regard my year's pastorate there as a decided success. We had 26 accessions, a net gain of 11, and the real financial strength of the church increased fully 33⅓ per cent. Still my successor will face discouragements, and have need of much grit and grace.

I will not use the stereotyped phrase, and say, "Bishop Duncan was the right man, coming at the right time," etc. He did some fine preaching, and held his scepter with a firm hand, but it would be folly to say that he understands the situation better than some of his colleagues who have seen more of us. Bishops, like the rest of us, are men, and gain knowledge as other men do.

Salinas City is a sea-coast town of about four thousand population, and is the county seat of Monterey county. The church here has seen better days, but we hope for their return, and for even greater prosperity than we have hitherto known. In God we trust. W. P. ANDREWS.

Salinas, Cal., Oct. 18, 1899.

FROM CHINA.

MR. EDITOR: I hardly know whether you will believe it or not, nevertheless it is certainly true, that degeneration—heathenism, if you please—may be as truly asserted of the productions of this country as of the people themselves. Not all of them, perhaps, but in the case of the more prominent and indispensable crop plants, as wheat, cotton, etc., it is most evident. These have been cultivated from time immemorial, and having a strong tendency to reversion from having been "bred in and in" so long, they seem to have become confirmed heathen in their character. This has recently been observed by some of the leading Chinese reformers, and there is now a movement on foot to establish a new kind of mission in China by the Chinese themselves, for the purpose of converting the products of this country into something like the results attained in Christian America. In this behalf a few days since a Chinese friend of mine, son of the late minister to England, applied to me to assist him in procuring some cotton seeds from the United States for his projected experimental farm not a great way from Shanghai. He is not a communicant in any church, but he is a great believer in Christianity, particularly in its power to improve things, and it is his idea to establish a series of practical tests with a view to improving the cotton products of his country. China has had the cotton plant for thousands of years, and nearly all her 400 millions of people are clad in garments of that material, but its cultivation is not properly understood, and the product is generally very coarse and short in its fibre, and altogether unfit for the finer qualities of goods. The whole system and its outcome mark the cotton product of the country as degenerate and seriously in need of restoratives. This is to be effected after the manner of Christian missions—by a Christian conversion, or the introduction of Christian seed from America. Who will now say that missions are not making headway? And what is more to the point just now, who among the friends of missions in America will refuse to send me a handful of seeds from the best varieties of cotton known in the South, in behalf of this new departure? The editor, I am sure, will endorse it, for he can not but know that the enterprise of missions, even in China, already has done no little toward the improvements of various field, garden and orchard products, and now that a new era of reform, based on strong conviction among the more intelligent classes, is beginning to express itself in acts and efforts for the betterment of the people's welfare, the missionary can not withhold his help, nor will his constituency and the home-land, I am sure, fail to respond to such a call and opportunity as this, which, though it seem so small and insignificant, may ultimately affect the comfort and well-being of the millions of China, which is certainly a noble Christian object, in which any layman might worthily sympathize.

I now leave the suggestion in your hands, my dear Dr. Black, and should you feel disposed to encourage some of your subscribers in the cotton regions to send me a few seeds, they can easily reach me through the mail in an unsealed paper package, the expense amounting to hardly more than the postage on a single sealed letter. They can address me at Shanghai. Yours obliged, etc.,

YOUNG J. ALLEN.

Shanghai, China, Sept. 26, 1899.

GRAND CANE, LA.

On arriving at Grand Cane, I found everybody talking about the very successful Epworth District Conference that closed the night before. The young lady who had charge of the badges said that about eighty Leaguers had been present. There was great enthusiasm throughout, and a number of excellent papers were read and practical talks made. A district organization was had, and at the head of it was placed a young Grand Cane Epworthian, a man of piety, ability, zeal, and judgment. The paper of Miss Sadie Deming, the city missionary of Texas Avenue Home Mission Society, was highly praised. Her subject, "My Place in Christ's Kingdom," she handled with ability and to the edification of all who heard it. The Home Mission ladies of Bro. Lowrey's church have done well in securing for their work in Shreveport this consecrated young woman, and rich results are confidently expected from her labors. The Grand Cane pastor, the Rev. Jno. Marshall Brown, is greatly beloved by his people, and is winding up his fourth year with credit. He will have a good report for Conference, and be ready to go anywhere, as has been his way ever since he came to us from Alabama. Large congregations came out to the preaching on Saturday and Sunday, and Bro. Bennett, of Keatchie, was expected to take hold on Monday night, and preach twice a day for a week. The pastor and people are anxious and praying for a good meeting, and, the helping brother coming "in the fullness of the blessing of the gospel of Christ," they are apt to have it.

LIFE'S INTERPRETER—CHRIST.

BY LUCY LARCOM.

The secret of life—it is giving;
To minister and to serve.
Love's law binds the man to the angel.
And ruin betalls, if we swerve.
There are breadths of celestial horizons
Overhanging the commonest way;
The clod and the star share the glory,
And to breathe is an ecstasy.

Life dawns on us, wakes us, by glimpses;
In heaven there is opened a door!
That flash lit up vistas eternal;
The dead are the living once more!
To illume the scroll of creation,
One swift, soul-ful vision sufficed;
Every riddle of life worth the reading
Has found its interpreter—Christ.

MINISTERIAL POWER.

BY REV. ELTON WILSON.

The practical application of the gospel to local conditions is very necessary. But in certain quarters it has "gone to seed" in secularism, sensationalism, and superficialism. A star preacher recently announced his subject as follows, "Paul's Double-Barreled Gun." A recent writer tells of a camp meeting where the service consisted of reading the description of the crucifixion from "Ben Hur," followed by the administration of the Lord's Supper. The Institutional Church with gymnasium, smoking-room, billiard and pool attachments, and all this in the name of Christ. It is worse than surpliced operatic choirs on High Steeple avenue; an emasculated form of Christianity, as powerless to save sinners as the appliances of modern club life. All this, with many things just as foolish, done in the name of Christ.

The right use of agencies, means, methods and organizations endorsed by the wisdom and authority of the church for reaching the masses and making the gospel more effective, is acting the part of wisdom. But this so-called progressive way of doing things not based upon right doctrine, right thought and right character, is pernicious. I have no sympathy for the creedless practical. The gospel must come first in all its old-time purity and power. There is no substitute. Institutional Churches, University Settlements, Humanitarianism in all its varied forms, can not take the place of the gospel. It is pre-eminently above all other agencies in the salvation of men. This is the verdict of history. "It is the power of God unto salvation to everyone that believeth."

The power of the gospel does not reside in its intellectual presentation. An intellectual ministry who possess a corresponding degree of spiritual power are a priceless blessing to any church. But when culture is separated from emotion, action, character, and the Holy Spirit, it is dangerous. The so-called 'Higher Criticism" is only radical intellectualism "gone to seed." It is placing rationalism above spiritual power. The spiritual consciousness can not rest upon the narrow foundation of a barren intellectualism. Intellect, nor feeling, nor action, can not be confounded with that supernatural power that builds upon the whole nature of man the structure of spiritual character. The German ministry represents the highest and most acute form of intellectualism. They made the gospel powerless; they destroyed its vitalizing power, and fed the people on intellectual husks.

Schleiermacher, the preacher of Germany, who was more of the embodiment of spiritual power than any of his contemporaries, says: "I found everybody devoted to the intellect, worshiping the intellect, and I saw the bodies of young men dangling from the trees." The spiritual nature had been starved, and there was no comfort and peace in a barren rationalism. This resulted in self-destruction among theological students. Logic, though its links be as strong and massive as great iron cables, can not make an individual a Christian. It will secure an intellectual assent, but what is this? The devils have surrendered an intellectual assent to the great truths of the gospel.

It is said of President Finney that he used to hold special meetings for the lawyers of Rochester, N. Y., and that he never failed to carry their intellectual assent. But here his power ended. The preacher who possesses the greatest power is not of necessity an intellectual giant. The ideal preacher, in this sense, is the man who combines in the unity of his personality the harmonious activity of intellectual, emotional, volitional and spiritual power. This varied activity must find expression through a suitable physical organism. The most marvelous example of personal power in a preacher is found in Whitefield. The secret of his transcendent power can not be explained in the light of intellectualism. He was neither a thinker nor a theologian. He was not great in intellect, but was great in power. "He was a living dynamo on two legs." He thrilled and overpowered men who were vastly his superiors from an intellectual point of view. Such enemies of Christianity as Bolingbroke and Hume marveled at his power. This power characterized the ministry of all those evangelical co-laborers of Wesley, but not in such a marvelous degree as attended the preaching of Whitefield. As a natural basis of his power he possessed an emotional nature of great depth, breadth and strength, and great physical magnetism—an undefinable something that some one has called "presence." Superadded to this natural power, there entered into his personal life a spiritual power. He dwelt long and often in that unseen realm of communion and fellowship with God, where the spiritual forces and activities that move the world are born and nurtured under the life-giving influences of the Holy Spirit.

MEMOIR OF REV. WM. A. DOLLAR.

The announcement of the death of this faithful itinerant preacher in the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, of Aug. 31, last, awoke a thrill of sympathetic sadness in the responsive hearts of numerous brethren, friends, and acquaintances, both among the ministry and laity of the North Mississippi Conference. The promise of "a more extended notice" has been delayed because sufficient data was not in the hands of the writer. Now, having this, and at the request of "loved ones" of the deceased, I offer the following as a faithful tribute in loving service.

Rev. Wm. A. Dollar, son of Lemuel and Margaret A. Dollar, was born in Morgan county, Ala., July 19, 1851, whence he emigrated with his widowed mother to Eudora, DeSoto county, Miss., at the age of sixteen. He was educated in his adopted State, where he was converted in August, 1869, and joined the M. E. Church, South. Three years later he was licensed to preach, and was received on trial in the traveling connection of the North Mississippi Conference at Sardis in November, 1876. He was ordained deacon at the same place and time by Bishop Geo. F. Pierce, and two years later was duly received in full connection. He was ordained elder at Columbus, Miss., in December, 1880, by Bishop Robert Paine.

He received the following appointments, which he filled with great acceptability, viz.: Jonestown circuit, 1877-8; Sunflower circuit, 1879; Jones Bayou circuit, 1880; transferred to White River Conference in 1881; located in 1882; readmitted into the North Mississippi Conference in 1884, and appointed to Attala circuit in 1884-5; New Port circuit, 1886; Ebenezer circuit, 1887-9; Weir circuit, 1890-91; Mathiston circuit, 1892, and Kosciusko circuit, 1893. During the latter part of his active connection his health waned, in consequence of which he embraced the supernumerary relation in 1894, which he retained to his death, Aug. 24, 1899. During this interval of rest he was often active in assisting in his loved employ in revival meetings, and was ably assisting this pastor on Chester charge when stricken with his last illness. His general health was seemingly much improved, and he had repeatedly expressed the intention to take work at the coming Conference at Greenwood.

Above all things, Bro. Dollar loved the Lord, and loved to proclaim the sacred message of his divine love. No uncertain sound ever went forth of his heart. He had a clear-cut, experimental knowledge of the gospel, and spoke from the depths of his own feelings and convictions. Our observation was that he was "moody"—i. e., at times he seemed to have infelicity of subject, which may have been owing to physical fatigue, and would enjoy but little liberty. Again (and much more frequently), he seemed to have full possession of the mind of the Spirit. At such times he was not inferior to any preacher within our acquaintance in the flow of sacred eloquence. He was verily on fire with divine fervor, and succeeded in inspiring his audience with kindred emotions.

His ministry was often sealed by vivid conversions in his congregations. On this subject he often dwelt with much tenderness and humility, and from the fact drew much wholesome comfort to his own soul. His parishioners, who survive him, in his former charges are able to afford abundant testimony to his fidelity to the high calling as an under-shepherd in Israel. His sympathies were deep and spontaneous.

He was happily married on May 18, 1879. To the blissful union were born eight children, four of whom preceded him to the glory world, and four remain, with the devout, sorrow-stricken widow, to mourn their irreparable earthly loss. Into no happier family was this humble scribe ever welcomed than was theirs; nor into a sadder scene was I ever ushered than was their home on the evening of his demise.

Being away from home in a revival meeting, I was not with Bro. Dollar in his last illness, which lasted about ten days. The family sent for me the second time to go to his bedside. When I did quit the meeting to go to him it was too late to see him alive. He had quietly and triumphantly passed away, amid a circle of his weeping family and neighbors, two hours before I reached his bedside.

Other preachers being out of reach, it fell to my sad, but inspiring, duty to attend his funeral obsequies. It was sad to me because it was a personal bereavement, and also because it was the first and only preacher's burial I have witnessed. How deeply I felt the need of other ministerial presence! How deeply must have felt the family the desire of more members of the itinerant brethren!

After the impressive service of our ritual was read the Masonic fraternity took charge of the remains, and imposingly deposited them in South Union Cemetery, on Chester charge, there to be tenderly guarded till the resurrection powers shall call them from their peaceful slumbers. This sacred spot is thus becoming more endeared to the hearts of the ministry, two of whom already have each a precious child buried there.

He lived and died bravely, showing, as well as teaching, men how to be men. And from his lofty joys he smiles back to his loved ones in the sentiment of the faithful poet:

"Farewell, friends! yet not farewell!
Where I am ye, too, shall dwell.
I am gone before your face,
A moment's time, a little space;
When ye come where I have stepped,
Ye will wonder why ye wept;
Ye will know by wisdom taught,
That here is all and there is naught."

REV. B. A. BEESON.

The Rev. Benjamin Abbott Beeson was born near Covington, La., Aug. 16, 1813, and died at his home near Pleasant Grove Church, in Lincoln county, Miss., Oct. 17, 1899. February, 1837, he was married to Miss Hannah Lee, and after her death he was married to Miss Eveline Collins in 1847.

He was a man full of the Holy Ghost and of good works, and the influence of his consecrated life will abide in his home and community. While he was a plain, unpretentious man, everyone had confidence in him as a man and a Christian, and he not only left his own house in order, but had contributed largely to the conversion and the stability of the homes in his community. Nature dealt liberally with him in intellectual endowment and strength of conviction, yet he was never self-assertive nor offensive in the advocacy of his peculiar views. Those who knew him best loved him most, and he is not only mourned as a great loss to his home and to the Methodist Church, but to the community as well.

His religious life was long and constant, flowing with the depth and breadth of the great river, and in sweet peace and gracious triumph he has entered into the holy calm of that "rest that remains to the people of God." J. M. WEEMS.

Correspondence.

VERNON, LA.

MR. EDITOR: Perhaps in some of your many peregrinations you may, "once upon a time," have found yourself at Vernon, La. It is the county seat of Jackson county. It has a court-house, four stores, doctor's office, gin house and jail, with a dotting of houses on the everlasting hills, with a parsonage that commands the view of all the aforesaid structures. "That Parsonage" has a history, but this writer knoweth it not. It stands on a beautiful hill sloping all around with an avenue of oaks down the front to the road. The lawn is carpeted with Bermuda grass, with a few trees dotting the whole. The parsonage is a large old-fashioned house that has been repaired and repaired and needs another repairing. If it could speak, it might tell me something that would be interesting to jot down. As it is, I can only imagine what tales it could tell.

The church was blown down by a cyclone some years since and has not been rebuilt. The town seems to be in statu quo. A lady told the writer that a commercial traveler said it was "the first finished town he had seen, that it did not look like a nail had been driven in it for forty years." He was mistaken; every preacher that ever lived here has driven some nails in this parsonage from the looks of it, and there are places that need more nails. The present heroine of this parsonage said that Bro. Johnson and wife "hung up their clothes on some of those nails and lived in their buggy." The circuit is all around about Vernon, and is bringing in the sheaves quite well this year.

Bro. Crews held Quarterly Conference at New Prospect yesterday. There was a fine attendance and a fine dinner; some of the good things even reached the parsonage and made glad the inmates.

Rev. W. A Clarke and wife have quite a home feeling for the parsonage, having been here two years. But the Conference time is coming, and the ever-changing homes of the "heroines of the parsonage," as Bishop Galloway calls them, may land the little heroine of this one with her two bright children in "some little hut among de bushes" on the other side of the State. Such is the itinerancy.

Among the pleasant homes in Vernon we met Mrs. Lane and her daughters, who are relatives of Rev. John Lane, of noted piety and blessed memory, mentioned in Bro. Jones' "History of Methodism in Mississippi" as a pioneer preacher in connection with Abraham Hewit, and having the whole State as their district. From that little beginning of Methodist doctrine, as they preached it with Holy Ghost fervor, one can but exclaim, behold, "What hath God wrought!"

Louisiana Methodism holds its own and gains a little in its much diversified conditions and geographical situations. So the writer is told.

A railroad through this region would bring about wonderful things. Beautiful for situation are the many hills around Vernon, and some day the great iron horse may plow its way through the hills and dales and bring prosperity and joy to its people. May God bless the work that has been done on Vernon circuit the last two years by the present pastor and continue it to his successor!

FROM BRO. TINNIN.

MR. EDITOR: Please allow me the privilege of replying to Rev. H. W. Featherstun's article of the seventh ultimo. Among many other things he said was the following: (1) That I was the real cause of the disaffection of the people of Butler School-house; (2) the reason why he failed to get a deed to the new church at Whitestown was on account of a bargain that I had made with the owner (Capt. J. J. White). I enclose you statements from the people referred to in his article; also from Capt. White. Fraternally,

Capt. J. J. White, McComb City, Miss.—

MY DEAR SIR: In a communication to the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, of Sept. 7, Rev. H. W. Featherstun alleged as the reason why he failed to get a deed to the new church in Whitestown was on account of a bargain that I had made with you. Please state if we had ever entered such a bargain, or if I ever asked you to enter such a bargain with me, or if I ever insinuated that I wanted this property deeded to any other church previous to my withdrawal from the M. E. Church, South.

Respectfully, J. W. TINNIN.

A PLEA FOR THE MISSIONARY HOUR.

It was some wise man—Mr. Wesley, I think—who apportioned the hours of the day thus: eight for sleep, eight for study, and eight for manual work and recreation, giving the average man sixteen waking-hours in the twenty-four.

We will make our estimate for women on a more liberal basis, and allow ten hours for sleep, thus leaving fourteen hours for the multitudinous cares and duties of mothers and housewives; fourteen hours a day, four hundred and twenty a month, and five thousand and forty waking-hours in one year.

The W. F. M. S. asks the women of the church to devote one hour of the four hundred and twenty, or twelve hours of the five thousand and forty, to the missionary meetings. Does this seem exacting? It is a lamentable fact that only a few who have promised to give even this moiety of time to the society regard the hour as no obligation. If one-tenth of our time belongs to the Lord, how does one hour in four hundred and twenty comparo with the obligation?

"Freely give as ye have received." Let us consider calmly what we have received. We profess the name of Christ, and rejoice in the light of immortality; we have God's promise for grace in every hour of need in this life, and we rejoice in a lively hope of an abundant entrance hereafter into life eternal; we enjoy the peace and security of happy homes under the protection of a Christian government; we are surrounded in health by kind friends and in sickness by the tender ministry of sympathizing, loved ones. The blessings which environ the humblest, poorest, weakest woman in this Christian land are superlative when compared with the wretchedness and hopelessness of heathen women.

Manifold mercies crowd our lives from the cradle to the grave, and all, all are fruits of the blessed gospel which our Savior gave to us, and through us to the race, the greater part of which, alas! have never heard of this gospel. If we love the Savior, who has shed so much bright ness along our pathway, we should remember that it is our duty to take the "tidings of great joy" to those who have never even heard whether there be a Savior.

God gave salvation to the world through faith by grace—"a free gift"—but he willed that the gift should be proclaimed to "the uttermost" by men. Dr. David Gregg says, "God links a man or woman to his purpose as co-worker, and his truth must incarnate itself to succeed."

We know that when the plan of salvation was perfected, he sent the message through his Son—Jesus, the incarnate Christ. Those who received the message were commissioned to take it to others, and these to still others, and thus on and on and on until the ends of the earth should be reached. Women who have been redeemed from the lowest to the highest position by the gospel have a peculiar interest in spreading the good news, and we should eagerly embrace the work which duty makes so plain.

To this end the W. F. M. S. has been systematically formulated, and now presents the opportunity for "work for Christ" at the door of every Christian woman's heart. To study missions in all its needs and aims, the society has set apart one hour out of every four hundred and twenty of our waking existence. Does it seem too much?

We have often felt our sympathies going out to poor Martha, who was bent on serving to the verge of exhaustion; but I fear she was letting the golden opportunity slip by while she imposed unnecessary cares on her woman's strength. The heavenly Guest was present "not to be ministered to, but to minister." His humanity, doubtless, appreciated the need for temporal necessities, and it was not the serving and necessary things for which he reproved Martha, but for the "much serving" and "many things" which absorbed all her time and energy.

It is sometimes wholesome for us to retire from our own service, even for the Master, and let our souls be lost in contemplation of his service for us. Many of us—overzealous Marthas—are so occupied with our own methods of service that we forget the marvelous ministry which we can only learn "at his feet." However much we may feel for overburdened Martha, we must remember that it was the Savior himself who commended Mary's chosen part, and if we will take the lesson home, we will, doubtless, find that there is time for all our domestic duties "as unto the Lord," and still opportunity left for a rest at the feet of the Great Teacher.

In view of our great obligation to the benighted ones who are waiting for the light, and dying while they wait, let us make an effort to honor the Lord by giving this one little hour every month to the missionary meeting. With every member in her place promptly, giving even her presence as a cheerful, free-will offering, there would soon sweep over the church such a revival of missions as would speedily bring all the world to Christ.

The Christian Life.

When God has a great work for anyone to do in the world he usually gives him a peculiar training for it; and that training is just what no earthly friend would choose for him, and sometimes it is so long continued that there seems to us to be but little time left for him to work. We should not have led Moses into Midian to prepare him to guide a nation, and certainly we should not have left him there forty years. But God knew that the life of the humble shepherd, and in the desert, too, would best fit him to lead his people like a flock, and that he needed to be in that school no less than forty years to be the truly meek Moses. . . . He must have long years of quiet, under the shadow of Sinai, for meditation on the character of God before he could meet that God on the top of the mount, and there receive the holy oracles to give to us.—Mary Lyon.

What a vast proportion of our lives is spent in anxious and useless forebodings concerning the future—either our own or that of our dear ones! Present joys, present blessings slip by, and we miss half their sweet flavor, and all for want of faith in him who provides for the tiniest insect in the sunbeam. Oh! when shall we learn the sweet trust in God that our little children teach us every day by their confiding faith in us—we, who are so mutable, so faulty, so irritable, so unjust; and he, who is so watchful, so pitiful, so loving, so forgiving!—Phillips Brooks.

Kind words do not cost much. They never blister the tongue or lips. We never have heard of any mental trouble arising from this quarter. Though they do not cost much, yet they accomplish much. They make other people good-natured. They also produce their own image on men's souls, and a beautiful image it is. We have not yet begun to use kind words in such abundance as they ought to be used.—Pascal.

FROM THE WORK.

COURTLAND CIRCUIT.

Courtland circuit comes ont on top is year. We have had n hard pull, t a strong one, and there has been a ghty upheaval. The dead have come life again and old things have passed ay. A new spirit and a new people. e Holy Spirit has been with us in wer and blessed our labor as to the arts of all. None failed to receive t those who closed their hearts against im." We have had about 150 converons and restorations, have added 112 the churches, with n few more to foiw. Baptized 92 adults and 7 infants. Bros. C. H. Moore and Tom Porter, o local preachers, full of the Holy host and preachers of power, assisted some of the work. Two worthy and ble sons of God.

To our heavenly Father belongs all aise. JNO. R. D. KING.

WESLEY CHAPEL.

This week marks an epoch in the hisry of our little church. Although ly one was added to our membership, e earnest interest manifested by these s and daughters of the piney woods d the tears that rolled down their nest faces showed plainly that their arts were touched to the core, and t God has a harvest of souls here to reaped at the appointed time. Rev. L. McManus came to the assistance of pastor, Bro. J. H. Montgomery, and ve us a five days' service, in which we ld find no fault except the shortness time, the approaching Quarterly Conence at James Chapel interfering. . McManus is an earnest, pathetic acher, in whom the Lord has vested eat power for good to human souls. has impressed us so favorably that would be glad to have him with us rmanently.

Our people are a thirty-day people, o need time to feel their way and ke up their minds; but the writer pictured for them a great gathering nmerical strength among the scenes eternity where all mankind shall harmonize in ecstacies; and we believe that Bro. Mack will come among us again termined to stay until these people saved, this picture will soon be filled in so far as our earthly conduct ncerned. W. E. HICKS.

ROSE HILL, MISS.

am now through with my protracted tings; had some very fine meetings, ers not so good. Our first was at Hill, embracing first Sunday in gust; was assisted here by Rev. Ira Robertson, who did us faithful and cient service. Second week in Aug we are at Hopewell hard at work the salvation of souls. Bro. B. F. is was with us until Monday evenwhen he was called away to his er's sick-bed. We regretted very ch to give up Bro. Lewis, but the d was with us. Its pastor took rge and held the fort until Wednesnight. The third Sunday in Aug we commenced a meeting at Pleas Grove; was assisted at this point Bros. J. W. Harmon, D. D., and B. Lewis, of Chunkey. We had a d victory at Pleasant Grove. Our t meeting was at Missionary, as by Bro. Massy, L. P. Our fourth last protracted meeting was held at iding, fourth Sunday in September through first Sunday in October; was sted by Rev. W. M. Sullivan from first. Our presiding elder, Rev. T. Mallen, came to our assistance Thurs night, and preached us five very sermons to the edification and de of all who attended. He held our Quarterly Conference, Saturday rnoon. Have just closed a two days' ting at Pleasant Grove with fine es.

Received on profession of faith this , 13. Adults baptized, 6; infants tized, 20. Hope to be able to make od report at Conference on finances. ray for us.

DOWNSVILLE CIRCUIT.

We have just closed a very fine meetat Douglass Church on this, the nsville circuit. The membership of church was drawn nearer to God and t up religiously, except some that ld not attend on account of sickness nnd a few others that failed to avail themselves of the benefits of the meeting. There were some persons that had a doubting and halting religion that confessed that the doubts and fears were gone, and that they loved God sincerely and expected from henceforth to obediently keep his commandments. Some of the members say it was one of the best meetings ever at old Douglass. At some services there were numbers shouting the praises of God. Fifteen and twenty young people would get happy and shout and shake the hands of the older members and all would rejoice together. We received a class of ten bright boys and girls into the church. The meeting continued eight days.

Rev. W. D. Bass, of Corinth, Miss., conducted the meeting upon the invitation of the proper authorities. He did the preaching, and did it well. He preaches a plain, straight, true gospel, and it tells for itself. He is loyal to his church and her interest. Crowds waited on his ministry towards the close and manifested an eager interest in the way they listened. Some of the members worked with the pastor about the altar from start to finish. Bro. B. T. Crews, our beloved presiding elder, preached two able sermons.

To God be all the praise.

THOS. J. MARTIN.

LONG BEACH, MISS.

After delays and postponement by quarantine, sickness, etc., we have been able at last to hold our revival meeting at this interesting place. Beginning Sunday A. M., Oct. 1, we closed on the night of the fifteenth. For more than a week no ministerial aid could be had. Most of this time the weather was unfavorable—the nights dark and damp. Some human agencies, such as dancing parties, obstructed. Yet a faithful few encouraged by constant coming and attentive listening. To these is specially due the success of the meeting.

On Tuesday, the tenth, we secured the presence and able assistance of Bro. C. F. Emery, of Edwards. He risked being caught from home; came around by Meridian and Mobile (a distance of more than 300 miles) to avoid breaking through quarantine lines, and reached us safe and happy. Of course, the congregation continued to increase steadily. His well-prepared, finely illustrated and earnestly delivered discourses were appropriate to the occasion. They dealt with vital themes. Repentance, faith and obedience formed the warp into which he wove fine threads of argument and exhortation, illuminated with apt illustration. To say that the congregations were greatly pleased and stirred is putting the truth very mildly. Many came to the altar of a fuller consecration, and many others who were seeking pardon and peace. Weeping penitents and rejoicing believers made the hearts of all to burn within us. Seven adults united with our church, while several promised to join other Protestant denominations. At our last service the house was full. Nearly everyone came forward to express love to God, or gratitude for blessings received during the meeting. "It was good to be there." The singing from our "Young People's Hymnal" was specially well rendered by our own young people and a few from other communions. Moral: Let every Methodist Church and home secure and sing these sweet songs of Zion.

On Sunday morning a delightful "communion" was participated in by all the Christians present. Many devout Episcopalians met with us around the Master's board in truly catholic spirit.

Bay St. Louis, Miss., Oct. 18, 1900.

MANY, LA.

Bro. R. P. Howell's camp meeting on the Zwolle circuit closed last Sunday night, and was a great victory in the salvation of souls. The camp was six miles from Zwolle, at the end of the Allen Lumber Co. tram. The company were kind enough to run their train three and four trips per day, and charged men ten cents per round trip, and women and children went free; and after paying their actual expenses, the balance of the money was turned over to Bro. Howell to defray the expenses of the camp meeting. The income on their train amounted to $67.05. The expenses of the company were very small, as the most of the men who ran the train would not charge for their services. The meeting was held under a large tent, and the people came from every direction. The preaching was done by the pastor, Rev. R. P. Howell, A. W. Hodges, of Marshall, Texas; S. S. Holliday, Martin Hebert, J. F. Patterson, and the writer.

The preaching was done in the power of the Spirit, and God honored the word. We had a hard fight with sin, and a great victory followed. A number of souls were converted and sanctified every day, but the great victory came on the last Saturday and Sunday. Great conviction came on the people, and the altar and aisles were jammed with seekers, and the altar services would last sometimes for more than an hour. Souls would be converted or sanctified, and rise to tell what God had done for them, and others would take their places.

The workers were all among the congregation leading their friends to the altar, and the work moved on in the most earnest and business-like way I ever saw. There were many things that occurred that were remarkable. One old man, 70-odd years old, who had been in the Master's field for years, came forward seeking sanctification. He had been forward several times, and came this time to get through. He was asked to give up his tobacco, but hesitated for quite awhile. He seemed to get no relief; finally he ran his hand down in his pocket and pulled out a long piece of tobacco and handed it to Bro. Howell. He hesitated a little, and down in his pocket he went and out came another piece; then into another pocket and a sack of smoking tobacco came out, then an old pipe, and the old brother hardly got quiet before up he bounded and his walking cane went into the air, and a shout of victory and a scene followed that will not soon be forgotten. So many men were saved—railroad men, mill men. One Irishman who had backslidden said: "The devil overcame him one time, but the next time, by the grace of God, I will be more than a match for the devil." Bro. Barney Cassity, son of Rev. J. B. Cassity, of our Conference, was gloriously reclaimed on the last Sunday evening and preached for us that night, and a great altar service followed.

Last Sunday was the greatest day I ever saw on a camp ground. It was indeed a day of the Son of God on that ground. Bro. Howell is at home in a camp meeting, and knows how to lead the hosts. He stood like a general in the army giving orders, and led on the victory. He asked for one hundred dollars on expenses and his Conference collections, and in a few minutes he had one hundred and twenty-five. He had nineteen accessions to the church, with more to follow. We are sure that one hundred souls were converted, and at least seventy-five sanctified wholly. The work of the Lord is abounding in these parts. J. S. SANDERS.

CARING FOR GOD.

There are many Christians who are eager for the assurance that God cares for them. At times they question whether God really does care for them. They quite incline to think that God has forsaken them. But would it not be very well for us all often to ask ourselves the question: "Do I care for God? Am I daily interested in some of the great things which interest him?" Are not many of us decidedly selfish in this matter? Are we not much more concerned about God's caring for us than we are about our caring for him? We often yearn for the assurance that God does particularly and blessedly care for our good pleasure; let us also show by our faith and love and labor that we care a great deal for the good pleasure of him who has enriched us with priceless blessings.—Northern Christian Advocate.

One of the things for which we ought to be most grateful is that God will not give us what he knows is not best for us, even if we ask for it over and over again. And one prayer that we can always pray in all sincerity and faith is that God will refuse to give us what is not good when we do ask for it.—Sunday-school Times.

Some men have an idea that it is beneath a man's dignity to trouble himself much about his personal appearance. If anything is said upon the subject they snort with disdain, and say they leave vanity to the women.

A man never made a greater mistake. A man should not only be at all times neatly dressed, but also clean and wholesome of body. The man who is so is the man that succeeds. The man who does not care a copper about his dress, whose face is rendered unsightly by pimples, blotches and eruptions, whose complexion is sallow, whose eyes are heavy, whose shoulders are bent and whose carriage is slouchy, does not succeed, either in business or in social life. A man like that should be sentenced to live for thirty days in a room where all the walls were mirrors. He would then get sick of his own unwholesomeness, just as other people do. Such a man should have an honest portrait that did not flatter him always before his eyes. It only costs a trifle for a man to dress well, and it costs still less for him to keep clean, wholesome and healthy in a physical way. When a man's stomach is right and his digestion is right, his blood will be pure and rich and he will be wholesome and healthy physically. Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery makes a man right in every way by making his stomach, liver and digestion right. It gives him a hearty appetite and facilitates the assimilation of the life-giving elements of the food. It drives out all impurities from the blood. It is the great blood-maker and flesh-builder. It does not build flabby flesh or make corpulent people more corpulent. Honest druggists don't advise substitutes.

"I was tired all the time," writes J. Edward Davis, Esq. (care of Geo. F. Lasher), 147 No. 10th St., Philadelphia, Pa. "In the morning I felt as if I had never slept and was too languid to eat. I was troubled with pimples, boils, dizzy head, backache and hollow cheeks. At one time I had twenty-eight boils on my back. I was very despondent and thought nothing would cure me. Then I commenced to take Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. This medicine, together with Dr. Pierce's Pellets, cured me. Folks now say: Hello, Ed! What's become of your pimples?'"

THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 2, 1899.

GUARD THE SABBATH.

It is evident to every student of the times that numerous influences are at work tending to undermine the sanctity and peace of our Christian Sabbath. Sunday trains, Sunday picnics, Sunday newspapers, Sunday markets, and other noticeable forms of Sabbath desecration, indicate plainly enough how rapidly we are drifting toward the abolition of the Sabbath as a day of rest and worship. It is a deplorable fact that in multitudes of instances professing Christians, instead of setting a wholesome example in matters of Sabbath observance, conform on the Sabbath day to the customs and practices of the godless and unbelieving. Instead of endeavoring to mould sentiment in the right direction, they drift with the tide of worldly influences. The truth is, nothing is of more vital importance to the welfare of the church and the perpetuity of Christianity than this matter of the proper observance of the Sabbath. The destruction of the Sabbath means the closing of our churches and Sunday-schools, the silencing of the pulpit, the rapid destruction of public morals, and the decay of religion. Some of the communities in this country where the Sabbath is hardly respected at all are experiencing the sad state of affairs above portrayed. It is high time for Christian people everywhere to awake to the significance of the inroads being made upon our day of worship, and to bestir themselves in behalf of a reformation.

In most of our States we have excellent Sabbath laws, but, alas! in not a few of our cities they are "more honored in the breach than in the observance." Owing to the repeated agitation of the Sunday question and to strong pressure brought to bear by the churches upon the police and public officials, marked improvement in Sabbath observance over former years is noticeable, however, in some of the great centers of population.

While some other forms of Sabbath desecration are more prevalent, we think it advisable to call attention to the shameful abuse by many druggists of a special Sabbath privilege granted by the law and by public opinion. Druggists everywhere are permitted, no matter how strict the Sabbath law, to sell medicines on Sunday, or anything else necessary for the sick. But it has come to pass that, with rare exceptions, almost anything a drug store contains, whether it be notions, cigars, jewelry, or confections, can be bought on the Sabbath day. Not only so, but instead of keeping open a few hours for the accommodation merely for those seeking medicine for the sick, drug stores are frequently kept open all day long for the benefit of the well no less than the afflicted. In consequence, the average drug clerk has no Sunday, and rarely has an opportunity to attend church. If it be not a violation of law and of Christian ethics for apothecary shops to sell other things than medicines on the Sabbath day, why should it be thought wrong for other shops to do so? Without doubt, the public conscience needs arousing and enlightening upon this point. Why should a church member excuse himself for purchasing some unnecessary article at a drug store on Sunday when he would condemn the opening of a dry goods or grocery store? While financial considerations have a great deal to do with the policy thus pursued by many druggists, the public must share a large part of the blame. As long as custom sanctions such violation of the Sabbath, we may expect the proprietors of such stores to continue the same course. We are not only too lax in our views regarding buying and selling on Sunday, but the trouble is that the average church member seems to have no conscience at all when it comes to the Sunday purchase of newspapers, cigars, soda water, confections, fruit, and other needless articles.

If it be right to buy a newspaper or a cigar on the Sabbath, why should it not be right to buy a coat or a pair of shoes, in case one desires them?

The teaching of the New Testament plainly is that only "works of mercy and necessity" are to be done on the Sabbath. Hence, anything that does not come under this category is a violation of its spirit and purpose, and is, therefore, not to be countenanced. If Christians will but measure every Sabbath practice and custom by the standard Christ has given, they will soon see that it excludes all business and buying except that of an absolutely necessary character.

Returning again to the drug store, we express it as our conviction that, in general, every such place could be closed on the Sabbath during the hours of worship with little or no inconvenience to the public. On account of their being open on the Sabbath, pharmacies often prove a temptation to loungers and amusement hunters.

The bare mention of the need of reform as regards Sabbath observance causes some to speak warmly and sarcastically on "Puritanism" and "old-fogyism." Unless Christians of every denomination stand more firm in opposition to Sabbath desecration, the Continental Sabbath, with all its train of evils, will soon darken our land and bring ruin to our civilization. While Sunday trains may not stop all at once because we cease to ride in them, and Sunday newspapers may still be issued though we cease to buy them, we will, by such action, maintain our own integrity and also help to set in motion currents of influence that will widen and deepen as the years go by. The fact that the godless and worldly desecrate God's holy day is no reason why professing Christians should do so. Wrong practices are never righted by being conformed to.

Time was when people scorned the idea that slavery would ever be abolished, and so it has been with other evils that now are things of the past. Though at present some forms of Sabbath desecration seem too strongly intrenched ever to be driven out, yet, whenever the Christian world becomes thoroughly aroused to the enormity of this evil and resolves upon a reformation, it is as sure to come as that slavery and the gladiatorial combats are now no more.

FROM BISHOP GALLOWAY.

MR. EDITOR: I have just returned from Flora, whither I had gone on a special train with Dr. Haralson, to visit those sick with yellow fever. It will be gratifying to the brethren of the Mississippi Conference to know that our pastor there, Rev. J. G. Cammack, is improving, and will doubtless soon be well again. One of his neighbors, Mrs. Goodloe, has died, and I had the sad duty of seeing that she had Christian burial, and speaking words of brotherly sympathy and religious comfort to the broken-hearted husband. Bro. Cammack's family have all been sick, but are now convalescent. Two noble young ladies from Madison Station, and a faithful brother there, all praise is due for going so promptly to the afflicted ones in Flora. Fortunately but few cases have appeared, but there were enough to depopulate the village and the regions round about. At such a time the appearance of a brave friend is better than the vision of an angel.

Conditions here in Jackson have not been so serious as last year. The cases have been few, the number of citizens to "go North" has been smaller, and the business has been less interrupted. The work at Millsaps College has gone right on, all communication with the city having been promptly and properly cut off. Cold weather has now come, and all anxiety will, in a few days, be only an unpleasant memory.

In view of conditions here and the appearance of the fever at Flora, I felt constrained to cancel some important engagements in Georgia and remain with my people. And then Savannah was afraid of me, unless I was thoroughly fumigated, disinfected and otherwise purified. But my honored colleague, Bishop Candler, shall have at another time double service, if he needs it.

Truly and fraternally,

CHAS. B. GALLOWAY.

WORK THAT WILL TELL.

The following associated press dispatch reports the inauguration of a movement that will make itself felt:

"New York, Oct. 27.—Miss Helen Miller Gould has given $6,000 to the League for Social Service, to be used in a crusade against Mormonism. The League has issued pamphlets in pursuance of Miss Gould's directions, aimed directly at Mormonism and Brigham H. Roberts as congressman, and will distribute them by millions. The pamphlets and blank petitions will be sent to fifty thousand clergymen, and to hundreds of clubs and societies. These, together with a varied assortment of other printed matter, are printed to enlist the cooperation and financial support of people of all classes throughout the country. The clergymen will be asked to preach on the subject of Mormon practices, and also to take up collections for use in the crusade against them."

A NEW BOOK.

THE SON OF MAN: STUDIES IN HIS LIFE AND TEACHINGS. By Gross Alexander, S. T. D., professor of New Testament Exegesis in Vanderbilt University. With an introduction by John J. Tigert, D. D., LL.D., Book Editor M. E. Church, South. Nashville, Tenn.; Dallas, Texas: Publishing House M. E. Church, South; Barbee & Smith, agents. 1899. 380 pages. Price, $1.

The above-named work is not a life of Christ, or an exhaustive treatise on his teachings, but—to quote from the preface—a study "of some of the more important phases of his life and teachings." It deals with large themes—the very ones concerning which a philosophic mind desires light. The author shows no disposition to shun difficulties, or dodge issues, because of their profundity. It is a work of vast erudition. While there is nowhere anything like an ostentatious display of learning, the author's intimate acquaintance with the best theological literature of the world is apparent throughout. Moreover, the work shows much independent thinking. No doctrine is accepted simply on the dictum of a great name, or because it is hoary with age. The tone of the work is pre-eminently praiseworthy. Its pages are nowhere marred by a spirit of censoriousness. In every line the author writes like the high-toned, sweet-spirited Christian gentleman that he is. The work is a model as to style. In those prime qualities of the rhetorician—simplicity and clearness—it commands the highest admiration. In every sentence the author makes his thought as clear as a sunbeam. Its precision and conciseness are equally noteworthy. The author always uses exactly the right word to convey his meaning. We do not remember to have noticed a single redundant word or phrase in the whole book. Its diction is elegant. The author seems to have all the resources of the English tongue at his command.

Without endorsing every position the author assumes, we most heartily commend the work to our preachers and our reading, thinking laymen as one that is worthy of careful study.

A MEMORIAL SERVICE.

We had a profitable and impressive memorial service for Rev. G. H. Lipscomb, here, on last Wednesday night. After an appropriate song service and prayer by Rev. J. A. Bowen, Bro. Bachman presented a brief sketch of his ministerial life. The Sunday-school sat in its own room facing the auditorium. Bro. W. R. Witty, the superintendent, told of Bro. Lipscomb's faithful and interested labors in and for the Sunday-school. He spoke in a frank and manly way of a difference that had arisen between Bro. Lipscomb and himself, but expressed his joy at having all misunderstandings removed before Bro. Lipscomb went away. Miss Lee Grider then read a beautiful paper as a representative of the Sunday-school. Prof. S. Ritchey had been selected to represent the church, which he did well in a most excellent paper. Opportunity was then given for all to speak who would. The writer, Rev. Cobb, of the Presbyterian Church; Bro. Shipman, Bro. Bingham, of Carrollton; Sister Shipman, Bro. Munger, Bro. George, of Carrollton, and Bro. Reagan bore testimony to his excellence in the order named. Bro. F. O. Reagan represented the Official Board in a suitable paper. Rev. H. T. Cunningham, of Carrollton, spoke to the point of his Conference standing. Bro. Bowen told of his early life in Columbus, and brought special messages to this church from his dying bed, he having visited Bro. Lipscomb in Birmingham.

We closed with general good feeling, singing, "We'll never say goodbye in heaven." R. I. ALLEN.

Winona, Miss., Oct. 27, 1800.

MILLSAPS COLLEGE.

It will be gratifying to the friends of Millsaps College to know that our work is progressing most satisfactorily. The yellow fever in Jackson has caused no interruption whatever in our work, and students who have stayed away on this account should come on at once. The weather conditions now prevailing remove all apprehensions of any further spread of the disease.

LITERARY NOTES.

BY W. F. B.

Brig.-Gen. Charles King, late Captain U. S. A., returning from the Philippines, where his unexampled conrage received for him the brevet of Brigadier-General of the Volunteers, is the subject of a very interesting sketch in Ainslee's, for November. Mrs. Stanford, of California, and the University—built by the Stanfords in memory of their son—is another contribution of remarkable value, illustrated with some rare family portraits. Other contributions are: Through the Pygmy Forest of Africa; Coru is King, by Albert B. Lloyd; The Story of the Fast Express.

In the November Ladies' Home Journal the Rev. Charles M. Sheldon emphasizes the teachings of his famous book, In His Steps, asking and answering the question, Is Christianity Practical in Worldly Affairs? Sir Henry Irving writes on The Study of Shakespeare in Small Communities, Ian Maclaren on The Mutineer in the Church, and Franklin Fyles on How a Play Is Written. The Anecdotal Side of Robert E. Lee and How the Next Census Will Be Taken are interesting features. Those Stately Homes of Old Virginia and The New American Girls (Porto Rican) are the interesting pictorial features. Every phase of home life and home work are considered in the November Journal.

The Real Problems of Democracy is the subject of the leading article in Appletons' Popular Science Monthly, for November. Under the title, An English University, Mr. Herbert Stoteshury describes Cambridge. He gives an interesting account of its history and present methods. Prof. William Keith Brooks, of Johns Hopkins, reviews in a very able way Dr. Wallace's recent work, entitled The Wonderful Century. The principles of Wireless Telegraphy are explained and illustrated, in as untechnical a manner as the nature of the subject admits, by Prof. John Trowbridge, of the Jefferson Physical Laboratory, Harvard University. The topics of the Editor's Table are, Home Burdens and Specialization.

In the November Scribner's President Hadley, of Yale College, one of the best-known authorities on the subject in the United States, writes an article on The Formation and Control of Trusts. He gives a clear statement of the motives and conditions that lead to their organization, and points out with reassuring emphasis some of the causes that are already tending toward their limitation as mere speculative enterprises. He believes that the question of State ownership or control will become less and less acute as a political issue. The concluding instalment of the Stevenson Letters deal with his life in Samoa, one of the most romantic and busy periods of his career. The Man on Horseback, by William Allen White, is one of this writer's strongest and most vivid pictures of life and politics in a growing Western city.

St. Nicholas, for November, is a number of unusually varied interest. The frontispiece by Jay Hambidge illustrates a true story by Ian Maclaren of the rescue of a horse by one of his father's farmhands, at the expense of the gallant rescuer's own life. Our Miniature Navy, consisting of models of the twenty-three best ships of the American navy, is accurately described by Whitman Osgood and George P. Conn. General Tom Thumb is the seventh in the series of Historic Dwarfs whose stories Mary Shears Roberts has retold. The Monkeys of Amber introduces the young American reader to a very ancient city in India, which for nearly two centuries has been given over to monks and monkeys. Short stories, verses and pictures abound in this number.

Frank Leslie's Popular Monthly, for November, contains Stephen Crane's new story, West Pointer and Volunteer. Among the Boers is one of the most interesting magazine articles yet published upon this timely topic. Its copious illustrations include views in Johannesburg, and a full-length portrait, from life, of Oom Paul Kruger, the grand old man of the Transvaal. Clifton Johnson, the well-known artist author, contributes a profusely and beautifully illustrated article upon The Old Folks at Home in New England, which is full of tender character-study. The marvelous story of the November meteors is told by H. P. Powell Rees, with the aid of illustrative diagrams by the author. The Hon. Lyman J. Gage, Secretary of the Treasury, continues his admirable review of the Finances of Our Wars, including the Civil War, and the late Spanish-American conflict.

The November number of the Self-Culture Magazine is unusually attractive. The student of current events will welcome the paper entitled, The Transvaal—Boer versus Briton, with its review of the warlike situation in Africa and its accompanying map; also the discussion of Have We a Duty to the Philippines? The university man and the educator will take a lively interest in the article on Yale University, with its superb illustrations. An Architect's Plaint may set some to wondering why the names of the designers of our finest buildings are almost unknown to those who daily view their magnificent productions. A charming historical paper is that entitled, Greenwich: Its Kings, Queens, and Heroes, and interesting articles on American history are found in Civilizing Indians, and Chickamanga and Chattanooga. The editorial pages cover, as usual, some of the leading topics of the current history of the world.

TWO SUGGESTIVE TYPES.

Rev. S. B. Osborn, lately our pastor in Spearville, Kan., withdrew some weeks ago from our ministry and membership to ally himself with the faith-healing craze of the so-called "Doctor" Dowie, of Chicago. He has returned to Spearville, where he has been supported by our church for three years, to organize a body of faith-healers. Mr. Osborn has been for two years using his opportunities as a Methodist pastor to circulate among his people tracts and papers furnished from the Dowie headquarters in Chicago. This he has done to the neglect and disadvantage of our own denominational literature.

We call attention in connection with this case to another somewhat similar, which ought to evoke some serious reflection, if not some radical action. Rev. N. L. Hoopingarner, who for six years, or more, has been an evangelist, trusted by many pastors and successful in some fields, has within the past year or two set up as a magnetic healer. He has been until a month ago a supernumerary member of the Nebraska Conference, and at the recent session he was allowed to locate, without apparently any question being raised against him. So he retains a place in our denomination as an ordained local elder, and yet poses before the public, and advertises in various city dailies, as an expert in magnetic healing, offering, moreover, to teach that "science" for ten dollars! Those charged with the denominational oversight of this man should not allow him to carry on his delusions and perpetrate his follies in the guise of a Methodist local preacher. Methodism is a pretty broad church and it manages to hold a great variety of characters, but we ought to draw the line at "faith doctors" and "magnetic healers."—Central Advocate.

ATTENTION, MISSISSIPPI LEAGUERS!

Since the organization of the Mississippi State League the plan of collecting a yearly assessment of five cents per member, from each Leagner, for defraying the current expenses of the State work, has been followed. For several years the collecting of this fund was deferred till during the session of the State Conferences; consequently the Leagnes not represented in these meetings were not called on for their pro rata share. Last year, however, by order of the State Conference, a communication, urging the prompt payment of this assessment, was sent from this office to each League president, two months before the State Conference. Only seventy-two Leagnes responded to this call, and in consequence thereof the treasurer only has in hand now funds sufficient to meet the expense of publication of the Minutes. Money is needed for the distribution of these Minutes over the State. Plans which have recently been put on foot for the promotion of our "Holston Mission Plan," have required money.

The vice-presidents are now formulating plans also for the systematizing of the State work, under their separate departments, which will require a great deal of printing and postage.

In consideration of these claims, our worthy president has ordered a call from this office for dues to be remitted at this time, in order that the progress of the work may not be hindered because of a lack of funds. The payment of your dues now will pay you up to the time of the next State Conference, to be held at Vicksburg, some time next Spring or Summer. My directory shows 157 Leagues in the State, and we believe that each Leagne in the State has the interest of the cause too much at heart to withhold needed help. Besides the fair and equitable way is for each Leagne to pay its share. This assesment only calls for a small sum from each Leagne—too small, we believe, to be crowded out by other claims.

The Starkville Senior Leagne is the only Leagne up to date, having already paid on this assessment. The Starkville Leagners are wide awake, and promptly respond to all calls made upon them; besides they have an all-around, up-to-date Leagner for a pastor. He is a product (?) of the Tupelo Leagne, No 406, and that Leagne does no half-way work. See! The Columbus district was the leading district in the State last year in our missionary work, and gives promise of taking the lead again this year. I know of no other district in which the Central Committee on Missions has already been appointed, and cheering news comes from Miss Anne Scales, district secretary. She and her presiding elder are going to push our "Holston Mission Plan." Bring up the State assessment in full now, Miss Anne.

Rev. R. H. B. Gladney writes encouragingly from the Durant district, and we believe he will bring the work to the front in his district also. I urge the district secretaries to push this State assessment in their districts. I know that many other claims are upon them at this time, but this is a small matter, so give it prompt attention. The State officers must have an expense fund. Receipts will be issued for every cent received. Remit to D. G. Patton, Jackson, Miss.

EDUCATIONAL.

Dr. Cooper informs me that there are twenty-five preachers and the sons of preachers attending Centenary during the present session, and no doubt Mansfield has her full quota of preachers' children enrolled; therefore, suffer and heed this exhortation Let every pastor press the educational collection and have it in full for the ensuing Annual Conference. The following works which reported nothing for education last year we hope will not fail this. In the New Orleans district let Tchoupitoulas, Plaquemine, Covington, if possible, bring up something. In the Baton Rouge district can not Live Oak, Ponchatoula, St. Helena, Clinton bring up something, so there will be an improvement. In the Opelousas district we notice the following: New Iberia, Jeanerette, Lake Charles, Grand Cheniere, Lake Arthur, and French Mission. Surely some of these appointments never had a chance to give. The cause was not certainly ignored in toto by these. In the Alexandria district we find these neglecting this collection: Bunkie and Big Cane, Melville, Spring Creek, Dry Creek, Montgomery, Natchitoches, Jena and Jonesville, Washington, Olla. This district unfortunately leads in missionary territory, hence many of these circuits are hard to get anything out of; but some of these were not pressed on this cause. In the Shreveport district Mooringsport, Grand Cane, Robeline, Red River, Benton, and Many. Let these works have a fair chance to give to this cause. The Arcadia district had only two works which reported nothing for this cause—Gibbsland and Gannaville. That fine meeting at Gannaville will, of course, insure all the collections there this year. Talulah, Floyd, DeSiard, Bonita were wholly wanting in this cause last year. Bonita has had a good meeting this year and will show up all right, of course. What about the other three from the Monroe district? It is sad to see how far short our districts have fallen on this very important cause.

	Assessed	Paid
New Orleans District	$290 00	$203 15
Opelousas District	227 40	84 60
Baton Rouge District	284 90	90 70
Alexandria District	197 00	18 60
Shreveport District	241 30	114 65
Arcadia District	219 90	104 38
Delhi District	107 00	57 75

This was falling below the previous year. Can not these figures be changed at our coming session? While we are pressing the cause for the Twentieth Century fund, let us not neglect this regular collection to meet the calls for this year.

The New Orleans district observed the Educational Day, and on that day Algiers led all by getting more than her per capita pledged: Algiers, $216; Louisiana Avenue, $180 08; Rayne Memorial, $200; Carondelet, $200; Tchoupitoulas, $35; Burgundy Street, $26; Dryades Street, $35; Parker Memorial, $35

Several of the charges did not take the pledges, and several of the above have only partially reported. There is every indication that this district will respond generously and exceed the per capita amount which is put as the lowest tide-mark that any should reach in our thank-offering. This is only the beginning of pressing the cause in the district. While we have not many rich in our church in this State, yet we have enough who could amply endow our colleges and fit them in some measure to compete with the State Institutions, and the very multiplication of these makes our responsibility greater and the call for us to educate our own children more imperative. It is hoped that all our pastors who failed to collect their educational claim last year will make an earnest and honest effort to do so this year. Let this stir up your pure minds by way of remembrance. S. S. KEENER,

Chairman Board Education, La. An. Conf.

Notice.

To the Preachers of the Mississippi and North Mississippi Conferences:

In behalf of the Board of Directors of "The Mississippi Orphans' Home," I hereby urge you to remind the membership of your several charges of the importance of remembering "Our Home" on the approaching Thanksgiving Day. We are now nearing a very critical period in our history, and we ask for your prayers as well as material aid.

PIANOS AND ORGANS BY MAIL.

The immense advantage in purchasing from us by the mail system is the guaranteed selection on the part of the oldest and largest music house South.

Selling over one thousand pianos and organs each year, and buying goods in enormous quantities, enables us to give those dealing direct the benefit of the closest possible prices on high-grade pianos and organs.

Dealing direct with the customer by mail enables us to eliminate all such items as agents' commission, hotel bills, etc., and to give our customers prices that many factories do not equal to their wholesale trade. Each piano or organ selected by us goes from our warerooms with a guarantee that if it is not as recommended, it can be returned at our expense. Any customer in the South can obtain our lowest net price by mail, and in case of purchase, the selection and instrument will be absolutely guaranteed, and from five to seven years' trial allowed to test same.

Easy payments will be accepted, and old pianos or organs will be received as part payments.

Having been in business in New Orleans half a century buying and selling all grades of pianos, we are in a position to judge of the merits and demerits of the different makes, and to know their adaptability to our trying climate. We give our customers the advantage of that experience.

TEST FOR YOURSELF

The Wonderful Merits of Swamp-Root, the Great Kidney and Bladder Remedy.

BY SPECIAL ARRANGEMENT, EVERY READER OF THE "CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE," TO PROVE FOR THEMSELVES THE WONDERFUL CURATIVE PROPERTIES OF THE FAMOUS NEW DISCOVERY SWAMP-ROOT, MAY HAVE A SAMPLE BOTTLE SENT ABSOLUTELY FREE BY MAIL.

It used to be considered that only urinary troubles were to be traced to the kidneys, but now modern science proves that nearly all constitutional diseases have their beginning in the disorder of these useful organs.

What more natural?

The kidneys filter and purify the blood.

Your other organs may need care, but your kidneys most, because they do most.

If you are sick, begin doctoring your kidneys, because as soon as they are well they will help all the other organs to health.

The immediate symptoms and first proofs of weak kidneys are pain or dull ache in the back, rheumatism, dizziness, headaches, nervousness, heart trouble, pain in the limbs, bloating, sallow complexion, puffy or dark circles under the eyes, bladder irritation, suppression of urine, obliged to pass water often day and night, worn-out, tired feeling, lack of ambition.

If your water, when allowed to remain undisturbed in a glass or bottle for twenty-four hours, forms a sediment or settling, or has a cloudy appearance, it is evidence that your kidneys and bladder need immediate attention.

Swamp-Root is the great medical triumph of the 19th century; discovered after years of untiring effort and research by the eminent kidney and bladder specialist, Dr. Kilmer.

It is pleasant to take, and can be purchased at most drug stores or medicine dealers in fifty-cent or one-dollar bottles.

Make a note of the name, SWAMP-ROOT, Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, and remember it is prepared only by Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y.

The famous new discovery, Swamp-Root, has been tested in so many ways, in hospital work, in private practice, among the helpless too poor to purchase relief, and has proved so successful in every case that a special arrangement has been made by which all readers of the NEW ORLEANS "CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE," who have not already tried it, may have a sample bottle sent absolutely free by mail. Also a book telling more about Swamp-Root and containing some of the thousands upon thousands of testimonial letters received from men and women who owe their good health, in fact their very lives, to the wonderful curative properties of Swamp-Root.

The great kidney remedy, Swamp-Root, is so remarkably successful that our readers are advised to write for a free sample bottle, and to kindly mention the NEW ORLEANS "CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE" when sending your address to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y.

WHEN I WAS A BOY.

BY EUGENE FIELD.

Up in the attic where I slept
When I was a boy, a little boy!
In through the lattice the moonlight crept,
Bringing a tide of dreams that swept
Over a low, red trundle-bed,
Bathing the tangled curly head,
While the moonbeams played at hide and seek
With the dimples on the sun-browned cheek—
When I was a little boy!

And, oh! the dreams—the dreams I dreamed!
When I was a boy, a little boy!
For the grace that through the lattice streamed
Over my folded eyelids seemed
To have the gift of prophecy,
And to bring the glimpses of time to be
When manhood's clarion seemed to call—
Oh! that was the sweetest dream of all,
When I was a little boy!

I'd like to sleep where I used to sleep,
When I was a boy, a little boy!
For in at the lattice the moon would peep,
Bringing her tide of dreams to sweep
The crosses and griefs of the years away
From the heart that is weary and faint to-day;
And those dreams should give me back again
A peace I have never known since then—
When I was a boy, a little boy!

A HAPPY HOME.

1. The first condition of a happy home is a reverent, devout, loving recognition of God. He is its architect. An ideal home without a family altar is inconceivable. Family life should centre about the Bible, be sweetened by daily song, be hallowed by joyous, reverent prayer. Oh, the sweetness, the sunshine, the melody, the unity of such a home! Its love is the outcome of divine love. Only thus can natural affection be ennobled, sanctified, and made abiding.

2. Unselfishness. Christian love forbids thoughtlessness and disregard of others. Courtesy and ceaseless kindness must habitually control speech and action. "Be kindly affectioned one toward another" is the counsel of Scripture. The spirit that beautifies and blesses the home is gentle, patient, forbearing, thoughtful, dutiful, affectionate.

3. Culture must be added to grace. Grace itself demands it. Books, music, pictures, a high grade of periodical literature, and all that refines, ennobles and educates must be coveted, and, as resources permit, secured. Much of the world's money is squandered on outside pleasure that brings no profit, but rather, by creating a spirit of restlessness, disorganizes the home, which is the only permanent source of virtue and joy. The encroachments of modern society and public amusements are a portentous menace to the well-being of mankind.

4. Pleasure. It is a tremendous impeachment of family life and of stability of character when a household can find no satisfying amusements within the bounds of its own circle. Parents must play with their children, provide them games. Children well trained find more delight in the companionship of parents, brothers and sisters in sport than in that of the outside world. A family circle, happy in itself, listening to reading about a table well loaded with good literature, enjoying or uniting in music and song, full of glee over some wholesome game, rich enough in character and life to have resources in itself, and not dependent for diversion and amusement upon the questionable and superficial pleasures ministered by those not seeking our highest good—such a home is a joy to childhood, an inspiration to manhood, a boon or a blessed memory to old age.—New York Observer.

THE MEANING OF MANNERS.

There are many people who are not hypocrites in any other direction, but who never live up to their manners. They are habitually polite, cordial, obliging and sympathetic to everyone that they meet. But, practically, they have not the virtues of which these manners should be but the outward and visible sign. They have been taught, so to speak, to hang out the sign, and keep it in good order, with its letters bright and its legend clear, and there their idea of behavior ends. Not that they are vicious, or unkind—but simply that the high manners have no high living behind them, and are but a mask, beneath which we suspect, dimly, a very different face from the unvarying one that we see smiling upon us.

The sincere soul will never strive after a manner that is not the simple, outward expression of the inner man. We have no right to a fine manner unless we have the fine nature to which it belongs, any more than a beggar has the right to steal an embroidered cloak to cover his shabby rags. And the worst of it is that the delicate beauty of the cloak is inevitably smirched and degraded by the beggar's touch. What right has a fussy, egotistical person to a cordial, sympathetic manner? That belongs only to the warm, generous heart that it should express. What part has a selfish soul in obliging words and polite interest? None at all. And it is because of this appropriation, by unworthy persons, of the manners that do not belong to them, that good manners are so often discredited in the eyes of those who have been deceived by their false owners; while, on the other hand, sincerity often takes refuge, most unwisely, in a brusqueness that is not really native to it. The real truth lies between these mistakes. Let us use just as much of high manners as we have attained to in our hearts, not resting, year after year, until we attain more, and yet more, of beautiful outward expression, yet always guarding against the assumption of more than we have truly conquered and possessed. So the manners and the nature will grow together, each reacting upon, and developing the other, until the gracious beauty of the one will be but the transparent glass through which the fine harmony of the other is manifest; and so we shall know, and show, the true meaning of manners.—The Interior.

DEWEY'S REBUKE.

A writer in the New York Sun tells some pleasing stories about Admiral Dewey that illustrate his high sense of manliness and will endear him to the "popular heart." On one occasion, says this authority, an admiral whose name is not given was cursing on shipboard in a most offensive way, when Dewey, then a lieutenant, walked up, saluted, and said: "Admiral ——, I will not allow you or any man living to address me in the language you are using." This naturally astonished the other officers within hearing, who expected that Dewey, when he was sent for by the admiral a little later, would "catch it." But all the admiral said was: "I wanted to say to you that I was not addressing you in my remarks a few minutes ago. That is all, sir." It is pleasant to feel that our admiral is not only a hero, but a gentleman.—New York Advocate.

TRUE AND FALSE CULTURE.

Anything which draws the housekeeper from a healthful, loving, faithful interest in her home affairs must be unworthy of her pursuit. Let a woman join a study club, if she finds that it will be helpful to her; but if she finds that this will force her to neglect things which would tell upon the home comfort, there are books which will furnish what she needs for the purpose of mental cultivation, and perhaps her husband could, after he has rested of an evening, join the study, and so the two would have the pleasure of a joint interest in a subject. But let the woman who chooses the reading course beware of taking up a work because it has become the fashion. Her own intellectual need should be consulted. She must learn to select for herself; to see with her own eyes, and to decide through her own judgment. Her home must be an expression of her own taste, and must prove the fact of her economy of time and strength and money. She must not feel herself superior to the most careful planning, nor reject the most trifling means toward accomplishing success in home management; indeed, she should be proud of an ability to make a nickel go as far as possible, and so oil the machinery of service that it seems to run itself.—Woman's Home Companion.

THE DEBT OF HONOR.

Every son, when he goes away from home, carries with him the honor of the home to which he belongs, and he may either enhance or dissipate it. If he does well, his success is doubled, for it is not only an ornament to himself, but a crown of honor to his parents. There is nothing in this world more touching than the pride of a father or mother in a son's success. Many a student, in the rivalries of academic life, is thinking about this more than anything else, and on the day when he is being applauded by hundreds he is thinking chiefly of hearts far away that are glorying in his honor. In the battles of life in a city like this there are multitudes doing their best, living laborious days, shaking off the tempter, and keeping straight in the middle of the narrow way, for the sake of those far off whose hearts will be cheered by their well-doing, and would be broken by their ill-doing. I do not think there is a sight more touching—certainly there is not one that touches me more—than when a youth, who has been away in another city or in a foreign land, and bears in his face and demeanor tokens of his well-doing, comes back some Sabbath to the church in which his boyhood has been spent, and sits again side by side with the pond hearts that love him. Where is there a disappointment so keen, or a disgrace so poignant, as he inflicts who comes not back because he dare not, having in the foreign land or the distant city soiled his good name, and rolled the honor of his home in the dust?—James Stalker, D. D.

Mr. Ruskin tells us that the first lesson he learned was to be obedient.

"One evening," he says, "when I was yet in my nurse's arms, I wanted to touch the tea-urn, which was boiling merrily. It was an early taste for bronzes, I suppose; but I was resolute about it. My mother bade me keep my fingers back; I insisted on putting them forward. My nurse would have taken me away from the urn, but my mother said, 'Let him touch it, nurse.' So I touched it—and that was my first lesson in the meaning of the word liberty. It was the first piece of liberty I got, and the last which for some time I asked for."—Exchange.

I, the undersigned, take pleasure in making known my thanks to Messrs. Finlay, Dicks & Co., Ltd., manufacturers of Chillifuge, for having completely cured my daughter, with one bottle, of malarial fever of long standing. The pleasant taste made it most acceptable to the patient. Believing that I do a favor to suffering humanity, I give this for publication.

MARSHALL—Mrs. AMANDA PENMELIA MARSHALL, daughter of William and Eliza Black, was born near Gallman, Miss., Aug. 21 1847, and died at her home at Fernwood, Miss., Oct. 10, 1899. She was married in 1869 to Dr. C. C. Marshall, with whom she lived happily until his death in 1883. She joined the M. E. Church, South, in girlhood, and was ever afterward a consistent member thereof. She leaves five children, three of whom have reached maturity. She was buried at Hazlehurst by the side of her husband. She had many excellent traits of character. She was always candid and straightforward. Duplicity and dissimulation were abhorrent to her. She had a keen sense of justice, and was always governed by it in her dealings with others. She was affable and vivacious. In the home circle she was gentle and loving, thus endearing herself to parents, brothers, sisters, husband, and children. She was a kind neighbor and a true friend. She died the death of the righteous. She was conscious to the last. Among her last words were these, "I am so happy." What a heritage for her children! May they so live as to meet her again in that "sun-bright clime, undimmed by sorrow, unhurt by time!"

FULTON—On the twelfth of September, 1899, the home of Mr. and Mrs. Andrew Fulton was saddened by the death of their little son, FRANK. The Lord, in his goodness and mercy, called him from his earthly home, where he had spent only seven Summers, to his heavenly home, there to rest with all the happy children.

Little Frank was a bright, cheerful, and obedient child. His bright face and smiles will be missed by all his playmates, and especially in the family, where he was the light of home. To his fond father, mother, and little sister, this is a severe trial, and dark indeed it would be were it not for hope of a future and a trust in our heavenly Father. May he give them strength to bear this trial in submission to his will, and lead them to that home where they will meet to part no more!

"Go to thy rest, fair child;
Go to thy dreamless bed,
Before thy heart could learn
In waywardness to stray;
Before thy feet could turn
The dark and downward way.
Rise to thy home of rest
In yon celestial sphere," and we will meet you there.

WALDEN—WM. ADOLPHUS WALDEN, son of W. W. and M. E. Walden, was born in Lawrence county, Miss., March 20, 1881, and died Oct. 2, 1899. He was attacked with swamp fever late Friday afternoon, and died about 8 a. m. Monday morning following. Our young brother was a member of the church and a working member of the Epworth League. He was to have led the League prayer meeting on Sunday afternoon. He was ready for the change. He spoke of his preparation while sick, and told the loved ones good-by while he was yet rational. He was of an amiable disposition, of good mental endowments and high aspirations. He received affectionate and wholesome religious training, and was always a good and dutiful son. A large congregation attended the funeral services. We rarely see such an interest manifested, as he was held in such high esteem by all who knew him. The parents, two brothers and four sisters are sad, but we commend them to God's grace, which is able to sustain them.

MURPHY—JESSY MURPHY was born Dec. 23 1827, in the State of Louisiana, and died Oct. 1, 1899, at his home in Bienville, La.

"Uncle Jessy," as he was called, joined the Methodist Church when young, and lived an exemplary life. He served in the Confederate war, and was one who sustained a Christian character through all the environments that surrened a soldier life. He has filled nearly all of the offices in the church of which he was a member with distinguished honor; and when age and disease came on it found him at his post. We have never been associated with a more congenial spirit. He was tranquil; death had no terror for him, but he surveyed it with joy and met it with composure. A few minutes before the fatal end Bro. Cooper, who stood by him, asked him if he knew that he was dying. He replied, "Not dead, but sleeping." We laid him to rest in the Providence Graveyard with the distinguished dead, on Oct. 2. May God sustain his aged wife and children in their sad bereavement!

BELL—JANIE BIRD, infant daughter of Mr. E. T. and Mrs. Beulah Bell, died at Gums, Miss., Sept. 20, 1899, after a few hours' illness.

The destroyer seized her in the midst of playthings and in childhood's innocent glee, and took her by the short process and fatal way of congestion. As she thus suddenly departed for her bright, heavenly, eternal home, she left one of earth's homes permanently smitten, beclouded, desolate. The Christian's faith, however, enables them to say, "The Lord gave, and the Lord hath taken away; blessed be the name of the Lord." But the lips quiver and the voice trembles with grief's burden as they say it. By faith they seize God's gracious promises and see their child glorified, but the line of vision must pass through showers of tears from dense clouds of sorrow. Once she knelt by her mother's side in the evening devotions to God; now she praises him standing always before the throne. May God bless, comfort, and save the whole family in heaven!

BEN P. JACO, P. C.

HENINGTON—The subject of this sketch, Bro. DISNEY HENINGTON, was born in Jefferson county, Texas, Feb. 7, 1872. He came to Louisiana in 1887. He was married Nov. 27, 1890, to Miss Emma Sarver, of Vermilion parish, La. He united with the M. E. Church, South, shortly afterwards. He was born again in 1892. He departed this life at his home in Vermilion parish, La., July 1, 1899.

Truly a good man has gone to rest and to join the loved ones above. In Bro. Henington the mother has lost a devoted son, the wife a doting husband, the relatives a warm friend and loving brother, the church a faithful member, the community a light indeed. To the sorrowing wife and mother we would say: Look to the sweet-by-and-by beyond, for your husband and son is over there with the blood-washed throng, there waiting and watching for you on the golden shore. Meet him there.

DUFFEY—Sister AMANDA DUFFEY was born Oct. 21 1823; was converted and joined the M. E. Church, South, at or near the age of thirty. She never was married, but she had the raising of some children who were left without a mother in infancy, and the work she did in raising those children reflects great credit and honor to her name. She was quiet in her manner of living, gentle in speech, and so kind. All that knew her loved her for her many Christian graces and her modesty. She had a home with Bro. Robert Sulover, who, being raised by her, feels like he had just lost his mother.

On Wednesday, Sept. 13, 1899, she passed from this to a better land. She died like she lived—a good, quiet, consecrated lady.

Weep not for her, dear ones, but let's all pray to join her some sweet day in the heaven of rest.

LUTHER A. MCKROWN.

BRASHER—On the night of Aug. 5, 1899, God visited the home of Bro. J. W. Brasher, near Brasher's Chapel, Clarke county, and took from his side a loving and devoted wife, Mrs. ANNETT BRASHER, aged sixty-five years, who, for many years, walked with him in life's way, sharing his sorrows as well as his joys.

In early life Sister Brasher joined the Methodist Church, and spent some forty years therein. God blessed the home with eight children, all of whom are still living to mourn the loss of a true, noble mother. May God comfort the aged husband in this deep trial, and finally bring him and his children to the better and brighter world to which the wife and mother has gone!

Her pastor,

W. J. FERGUSON.

ROBINETT—Resolutions of sympathizing regards to our friends by committee representing the W. H. M. Society in district convention and Collinston W. H. M. Society:

Whereas, It has pleased God, in his all-wise providence, to take from this life the beloved husband of our sister, Mrs. Sophia Robinett; therefore, be it

Resolved, We, the members of our Collinston Auxiliary and Delhi District Convention, being deprived of the presence of Mrs. Robinett, her little daughter, and her sister, Mrs. McCormick, and feeling the need thereof in our convention, do, with sorrowing hearts in the unity, commit the following expressions of deep sympathy: We must, in resignation, bow to the will of our dear Lord, who is too wise to err, too merciful to inflict a wound that heaven can not heal. While our sincere sympathies pierce the dark cloud of bereavement that envelops you, we earnestly pray that grace and fortitude may be given in this trying hour of need, and we plead with God to temper the winds to the shorn lambs, to be a husband to the widow and a father to the fatherless. May they ever abide in his love, and be useful workers in the vineyard of the Lord, and when life's work is ended, meet the beloved departed in the happy "beyond!" Oh, blessed Lord,

"Be thou their strength, be thou their way;
Protect them thro' life's short day;
In all their acts may wisdom guide,
And help them, Savior, near thy side."

Catarrh Can Not Be Cured

with LOCAL APPLICATIONS, as they can not reach the seat of the disease. Catarrh is a blood or constitutional disease, and in order to cure it, you must take internal remedies. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, and acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces. Hall's Catarrh Cure is not a quack medicine. It was prescribed by one of the best physicians in this country for years, and is a regular prescription. It is composed of the best tonics known, combined with the best blood purifiers, acting directly on the mucous surfaces. The perfect combination of the two ingredients is what produces such wonderful results in curing Catarrh. Send for testimonials, free.

WINE OF CARDUI

A SURE MEDICINE.

HANOSOM, VA., Dec. 31.

I have been suffering from female weakness for four years, and have taken many medicines, but Wine of Cardui and Black-Draught have done more for me than anything else.

MRS. CAROLINE EVANS.

McELREE'S Wine of Cardui

It is a mistake to take any and every kind of medicine when you are sick. There is danger in it. Most of the so-called cures for "female weakness" do nothing more than deaden the pain temporarily, and when the effect wears away the patient is weaker and sicker than before. It is never wise to take chances. You have only one life, and that is dear and precious. If you have any pain, ache, disorder or weakness in the feminine organs, nothing will help you like Wine of Cardui. It helps do away with morning sickness during the early stages of pregnancy, and modifies the pains of childbirth; recovery is rapid and future health is assured. The Wine is purely vegetable, being made of herbs whose medicinal properties act directly upon the organs of womanhood. It is a long-tried remedy, and has many years of success behind it. It is sure. Why take a chance medicine when you can get a sure medicine?

The "Combination" Bible.

A SUPERB EDITION

of the Holy Scriptures, showing at a glance at the foot of the pages all changes made by the revisers.

New Type. All Proper Names Self-Pronouncing The Most Valuable Collateral Matter.

There is a steady and increasing demand for first-class Bibles. Everybody is anxious to obtain a copy of the best edition of the Holy Scriptures. Old editions are constantly being replaced by Bibles that are in every way more attractive, and there is practically no limit to the demand.

OUR "COMBINATION" FEATURE.

Hitherto the King James and Revised Versions have been printed in parallel columns, but this makes comparisons of texts tedious and unsatisfactory, and makes the book very unwieldy. We have overcome this difficulty by "combining" the two Versions on the same page, showing at a glance in foot-notes all the Changes Additions and Omissions made by the Revisers.

THE OLD VERSION PRINTED IN FULL.

The King James Version is the basis, and this Version is read straight along from the text, while the Revised Version is read from the text in combination with the foot-notes. Our "Combination" Feature has met with universal approval and is strongly endorsed by all leading Divines and Biblical Scholars.

It is only by a comparison of the two Versions that the greatest benefit can be obtained from reading the Holy Scriptures, and this comparison every reader can easily make by our simple arrangement for showing the changes made by the revisers. This is the greatest triumph of Bible Publishing the World has ever known.

OUR OFFER.

To those unprogressive people who do not read and pay for the NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE we sell this Bible at the publisher's retail price—$4.25. To our subscribers we sell it at the very low rate of $2. The only condition attached to this offer is that the subscriber must pay his subscription one full year in advance, viz.: to November, 1900. We will send it postpaid to any person who will send us three new cash subscribers at the regular rate. For six new cash subscribers at the regular rate we will send two "Combination" Bibles, postpaid.

For fifty cents additional we will send a Bible with index.

For twenty-five cents additional we will have your name engraved in gilt letters on the outside.

Send for circular. Address REV. W. C. BLACK.

P. S.—We can give no commission on renewals in connection with the above offer.

New Machine Offer.

By Far the Best We Have Ever Made.

Always on the watch for something good for our subscribers, we have succeeded in making arrangements whereby we can make a sewing machine offer which is far better than any we have been able hitherto to make. Read the following description and then read our offer:

No. 4 IMPERIAL.

THE IMPERIAL HIGH-ARM SINGER will be found the perfection of mechanism as regards simplicity, durability and adaptability to the wide range of work embraced in the general family needs.

A Handsome, Light-Running, Lock-Stitch, High-Arm Machine that will not fail to please the most fastidious. Embracing all the advantages with all desirable improvements of other first-class sewing machines, so simple in mechanism that the most inexperienced need no assistance in operating it. Book of instructions with every machine. Any child can learn to run it.

Extra Set of Attachments also free with each machine consisting of the following: One Tucker, One Foot Ruffler, One Set of Plate Hemmers, four different widths up to ½ of an inch, One Binder and One Thread Cutter.

No. 3 Machine, drop leaf table, gothic cover, case of two drawers at one end and center drawer. Dealer's price, $24. Our price, $14.75.

No. 4 Machine, drop leaf table, gothic cover, case of two drawers at each end and center drawer. Dealer's price, $25. Our price, $15.50.

No. 5 Machine, drop leaf table, gothic cover, case of three drawers at each end, making seven drawers in all. Dealer's price, $26. Our price, $16.25.

Furnished Free with every machine are the following named accessories: One Foot Hemmer One Screw Driver, One Wrench, One Oil Can and Oil, One Gauge Screw, One Extra Check Spring, One Package of Needles, Five Bobbins and One Instruction Book.

No. 4 Columbian

EXCELLENCE OF THE COLUMBIAN.—All wearing parts are of case-hardened steel possessing great durability, and by the turning of a screw all lost motion caused by wear can be taken up. All parts are fitted so accurately that the machines are absolutely noiseless, and as easy running as fine adjustment and best mechanical skill is possible to produce. No expense or time is spared to make them perfect in every respect, as every machine passes a rigid inspection by competent men before leaving the factory.

NICKEL PLATED.—The balance wheel and many of the fine parts are nickel plated, with other parts finely enameled and ornamented, giving it a rich appearance.

A Self-Setting Needle and Self-Threading Cylinder Shuttle are used in the Columbian High-Arm Sewing Machine. They are so simple that any one can easily operate them in a few minutes' time, as our Instruction Book is fully illustrated, showing how to do all kinds of fancy work with attachments.

Extra Attachments, in velvet-lined case, sent free with each machine: 1 Tucker, 1 Ruffler with shirring plate, 1 Hemmer set (4 widths) and Binder, 1 Braider (Foot and Slide), 1 Thread Cutter.

ADDITIONAL ACCESSORIES.—Each machine is supplied with the following outfit: 1 Hemmer and Feller (one piece), 10 Needles, 6 Bobbins, 1 Wrench, 1 Screw Driver, Oil Can with Oil, Cloth Gauge and Thumb Screw, and a Book of Instructions. The Book of Instructions is profusely illustrated, and answers the purpose of a competent teacher.

No. 3—Drop leaf, Bent cover, case of two drawers at one end and center drawer. Dealer's price, $29. Our price, $17.

No. 4—Drop leaf table, Bent cover, case of two drawers at each end and center drawer. Dealer's price, $31. Our price, $17.75.

No. 5—Drop leaf table, Bent cover, case of three drawers at each end and center drawer, making a seven-drawer machine. Dealer's price, $33. Our price, $18.50.

The chief difference between Numbers 3, 4, and 5 is in the furniture, i. e., in the number of drawers. If you do not want to pay for the extra drawers, you need not do so. We sell these machines under a ten years' guarantee, by which we mean that if any part gives out by reason of any defect therein, the manufacturer will replace the same free of charge. Moreover, we allow the purchaser to test the machine ten days. If at the end of ten days you are not satisfied, you have only to drop us a postal card, and your money will be refunded.

OUR OFFER.

We will send any one of the above-described machines at the prices named, and also send the ADVOCATE free for six months. The only condition attached to this offer is that subscribers who are in arrears must first pay up all arrearages to date. It would be well to avail yourself of this offer at once, as we can not promise that it will last very long. Notice that you take no risk whatever. We do all the risking. Address

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

Admiral Dewey took possession of his new home in Washington, on Monday.

Germany has announced that she will remain neutral in the British-Boer war.

The Boers are said to have repulsed a British bayonet attack near Mafeking.

Negotiations for a new treaty with Spain are soon to be opened at Madrid.

Frequent conflicts are reported between Chinese and Fillipinos in Manila.

The English government is about to mobilize a fleet of twenty-nine cruisers.

The United States man-of-war "Nashville" has reached Gibraltar, en route to Manila.

Last Sunday the Boers made a formal demand for the surrender of Mafeking, but met with a refusal.

A hurricane swept over Santiago de Cuba, Sunday, wrecking twelve houses and damaging many others.

The British and Boers had another slight brush Friday near Elansgaate, at which point the Boers still are.

Several brushes were had with the Fillipinos near Lahan, in which their leader, Major Salvador, was killed.

The Spanish court of inquiry has exonerated Gen. Toral and other officers of not properly defending Santiago.

Shipments of pig iron from Alabama and Tennessee this year show an increase of 202,774 tons over last year.

The battleships "Indiana" and "Texas" are to be put out of commission for want of crews to man them.

Americans in London are raising a fund to send a hospital ship to Africa for the use of the wounded soldiers there.

The Phillippine Commission held its first meeting at the Arlington Hotel, in Washington, on Monday, with four members present.

It is reported at Manila that Gov. Leary has ordered the expulsion of the friars from the Island of Guam for inciting the natives to revolt.

The British medical officer at Glencoe has wired a message of thanks to Pretoria for the extreme kindness shown by the Boers to the British wounded.

The thirty-fourth anniversary of Rev. Dr. Percival's pastorate at the Free Church of the Annunciation, this city, was appropriately observed last Sunday.

It is reported from Hamburg and Metz that the British are engaging German under officers for service in South Africa, offering 20 pounds sterling per month.

Since the sale of alcoholic liquors in France has been unrestricted, the number of drinking places has increased, until now there is one saloon for eighty-five inhabitants.

The ferryboat "Chicago" was cut in two by the Savannah Line steamship "City of Augusta" on the New York side of North river. Several lives are believed to have been lost.

Alabama has a history commission, appointed by legislative authority, whose mission it is to ascertain and report to the governor all accessible materials, without as well as within the State's border, for a history of the State.

The announcement is made on high diplomatic authority that the principal continental powers have intimated to Great Britain that in case the war in Africa results favorably to the British they will consider that they have a right to a voice in the ensuing peace settlement, inasmuch as they have important commercial and financial interests in the Transvaal and the Orange Free State, in which many subjects of each power reside.

General Fitzhugh Lee, in an interview, said that the people of Cuba are steadily improving under the protectorate of the United States, and are slowly, but surely, rebuilding their war-wasted homes and repairing their crippled fortunes. Life and property are secure in Cuba, owing largely, he said, to the salutary restraint exercised by American military authority. He thinks the time not ripe yet, however, for a purely Cuban government.

The United States has demanded from the governments of Russia, Germany and France assurances that in their division of China into zones of political domination or spheres of political influence, the trade rights of citizens of this country shall be fully respected. These demands are pretty sure to be acceded to. As soon as the necessary correspondence can be passed between Washington and the three European capitals, it is not doubted that the desired assurances will be given by the governments named.

The South African war has now been in progress nearly three weeks and so far the British arms have been consistently crowned with momentary successes, though at a cost which verifies President Kruger's prediction that the conflict would stagger humanity. But, though victory has fallen to Great Britain whenever and wherever the issues were of paramount importance, General White's position to-day is scarcely more reassuring than at the outbreak of the war.

Studies of Bible Truths.

The greatest book of the year is the product of the pen of our beloved senior Bishop, and bears the above title. If the "encouragement and help" of Dr. Tigert brought these pages to the light, as the author claims, we owe our Book Editor a debt of gratitude that can not be liquidated by a formal vote of thanks.

Metaphysically, the book is broad, comprehending the philosophies of the various schools from that of Leibnitz, who wrote his "De Principio Individui" when he was seventeen years of age, and whose philosophical system was the light of the seventeenth century, to that of Spencer, who has established his system of speculative philosophy within the last quarter of a century. In a single sentence the author discloses the foundation upon which the fallacies of atheism, materialism, pantheism and positivism are builded, and at the same time sits in judgment upon their false deductions.

Theologically, the book is clear—oftentimes strikingly lucid. Through the calcium light of his splendid intellect many of the "deep things of God" have become as surface truths to the reader.

In construction and style the book is a true expression of the logical strength and great speech of the author.

However, spirituality is, perhaps, the strongest point in the book. Reverent, scriptural, devotional, dealing with the sublimest things of the grace of God, surely no one can read it without thinking more of God and man. Let every true student read this great book. The Bishop has at last given his best thought as a heritage to the church.

A Reading Course.

No doubt but there are many people who would like to take up a Course of Reading for self-improvement if they only knew of one of an approved plan. Fine things are said about the Bay View Reading Circle work, which is just beginning its seventh year, and enrolls nearly 8,000 people. Its strong points seem to be its excellent adaptation to busy people, as well as the thorough system and multitude of helps. Churches and young people's societies and literary clubs will do well to look up the Bay View work. J. M. Hall, Flint, Mich., is the person to address for information.

Notice.

To the Preachers of the Mississippi Conference:

BRETHREN: It will greatly facilitate the labors of the Board of Church Extension if you will remit me your moneys before Dec. 10. Check on New Orleans, La., Jackson and Vicksburg, Miss., or money order or express order on Vicksburg, sent to me will be proper remittance. This method of paying is much more preferable. The old way is laborious and full of confusion.

Respectfully yours,

Phœnix, Miss., Oct. 24, 1899.

Oliver Wendell Holmes once said, during the mighty struggle between the States, that the constant cry of the masses was for bread and newspapers. Now, since more than a third of a century has changed the political and financial issues, the great cry in the Southern States is for a pleasant and reliable Chill Tonic. Dicks' Chillifuge complies with this demand. It is as pleasant as orange syrup, and as prompt to cure malaria as the bitter Sulphate of Quinine. If you have a case of Chills or Fever which you can not break, try Chillifuge, and enjoy life once more.

Church Notice.

The class for admission on trial into the North Mississippi Conference is called to meet the committee in Greenwood, Monday night, at 8 o'clock, Nov. 27, prepared for written examination.

Two Verdicts.

"After a fair and impartial trial you are judged guilty by this court, and you are sentenced to be hung by the neck until you are dead." The solemn tones of the judge, the despairing face of the prisoner, and the painful stillness of the court-room, makes it a scene of awful impress. Now turn to a brighter scene at the home circle. A mother radiant with joy over the recovery of a child snatched from the clutches of Malaria. An entire family rejoicing, and praising the merits of Dicks' Chillifuge, and giving their verdict that Chillifuge is without an equal for swiftness to cure.

Prefatory notes by Rev. John A. Broadus, D. D., LL.D.

Cheapest and Best Commentary. Best cloth binding—good type.

Doddredge: He is, perhaps, the only commentator so large that deserves to be entirely and attentively read through.

Bickersteth: No subsequent commentary has rendered it less valuable or less disirable in every Christian library.

H. O. MORRHEAD, P. E.

PILGRIM HOME was built for God. A religious work will be carried on in it for the salvation of souls and the healing of diseases without remedies, depending alone on Jesus, who healed all who had faith in His name, as in the Apostles' time. Dr. D. M. Bye claims that after twenty years of success as a specialist for cancers and tumors, the Lord led him to the Oil Cure and for the last eight years the Doctor has been curing all manner of malignant diseases by anointing with oils. The remedy is not only mild and safe, but cures internal as well as external cancers and tumors and gives relief from unceasing pain. Many thousands of bad cases of cancers and tumors have been cured by using Dr. Bye's Oil Treatment and many healed by faith alone. The Doctor has received thousands of good letters from persons cured. Hundreds from ministers and Christian patients are printed in books and papers, which if one will read they will plainly see that surely God's blessing is with the Oil Cure. In the large book there are many half-toned photos showing conditions before and after treatment, which is sent FREE, giving particulars and price of Oil. Its just popularity is shown by the fact that at this time over three thousand patients are taking home treatment. Its great success has caused many counterfeiting imitators, therefore be careful. This country is full of frauds. Note this one thing: Of all the great number who have come to Indianapolis for treatment, not one has yet died on the Doctor's hands; no undertaker has yet received one cent. PRAISE THE LORD. The Doctor firmly believes it won't be long when more persons will be healed at Pilgrim Home by faith alone in Jesus than by oils, yet all have not so great faith and must use the Oil Treatment administered with God's blessing for a cure. Add. Dr. D. M. Bye, Lock Box 25, Indianapolis, Ind.

SPANISH-AMERICAN WAR PANORAMA

is one of the war books which is likely to be in continuous demand. It is a panoramic record of the triumph of Yankee Doodle. The eagle flaps his wings on every page, and "Old Glory" waves around and above every scene. Prominent officers connected with the war are here portrayed, as well as many of the "men behind the guns." Military life is pictured to the eye, from recruiting to guard mount and skirmish line. Nor is the ludicrous omitted. The company cook receives the attention due to his importance; the mess is shown; cavalry scenes are given; the hospital arrangements are depicted; the heroines of the Red Cross service are displayed; street scenes in Havana, Santiago and elsewhere are unrolled, the new citizens or subjects (which are they?) of Uncle Sam appear and disappear as the leaves are turned.

In a word, the gazer visits the new localities and sees the tumultuous new life, without the risk or expense of a sea voyage.

The Album is 5½x8 inches, weighs 12 ounces, printed on finest coated paper.

Sent FREE to any address in the United States, Canada, or Mexico, for 12 cents in stamps or coin, to cover postage and packing. Copy may be seen at any ticket office of the Big Four Route.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From Our Regular Correspondent.)

Archbishop Chappalle left Washington for New Orleans this week, and, before going, announced that he would leave the latter city for the Philippines about December first. This seems to indicate a doubt of the efficacy of his influence in bringing about peace, or, at any rate, the intention to give the American army an opportunity to secure peace before his arrival, as he can not get to Manila before late in January, if he doesn't start until the date named by him, and War Department officials are confident that the insurrection will be over very soon after the opening of the dry season. It may be that Mgr. Chappelle delayed his visit to the Philippines because President McKinley declined to bargain for the influence of his church; but that is, of course, a mere conjecture.

Prof. Alexis Everett Frye, who has been selected by Gen. Brooke, with the approval of the Secretary of War, to be Director of the Public Schools of Havana, is widely known in the United States as an educator, not only through his series of school geographies, which are said to be used by more than two million children, but through his individual work as an educator in Boston, Chicago, and Colorado. He has had practical experience in teaching in every grade in our public schools, is a graduate of the Chicago Normal School and of Harvard University, and a member of the Massachusetts bar. Those who know him say that no better man could have been chosen for the important work of organizing a public school system for Havana.

Rev. Asaph J. Wheeler, the Maine temperance evangelist, concluded the fourth annual anti-saloon revival this week. The meetings were all well attended, and their good effect will, doubtless, be felt in increased zeal on the part of the anti-saloon workers. One of Mr. Wheeler's last addresses was on, "When the Saloon Will Go." In it he strongly emphasized his desire that it should first be broken up in Washington. He said: "When it goes here, the effect will be felt in every hamlet and city on the Western plains, as well as in the wilds of Maine. The saloon strikes at every man and woman that comes under its influence. The churches often excuse themselves from reform work against the saloons, saying that the evil does not affect them. The foundation truth of Christianity is acknowledgment of the fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man. The church will always stand in the first rank of every movement for good, and when it lays aside ecclesiasticism and goes into the world to work for the good of humanity, mankind will have more faith in Christianity."

Dr. T. Chalmers Easton, pastor of the Eastern Presbyterian Church, preached a sermon on the Boer-English war in South Africa that has caused much talk. He took the side of the Boers all the way through, and even went further by declaring that this government ought to take their side.

One of the most unique services ever held in a Washington church was that at Mount Pleasant Congregational Church, Sunday, when six native Hawaiian ministers, who came to this country to attend the recent Council of Congregational Churches, held in Boston, occupied seats upon the platform with the pastor and participated in the services. With one exception, Rev. C. P. Emerson, who was born in Hawaii of American parents, the Hawaiian ministers spoke in their native tongue, which was interpreted by Mr. Emerson. Rev. J. Kauhane, one of the ministers, in addition to his pastoral work, was for thirty-four years a member of the Hawaiian Legislature, and was a chief in the native line of rulers; and another, Rev. E. S. Timotec, who is pastor of the largest native church in Honolulu, was once chaplain of the Hawaiian Legislature.

The United States Supreme Court handed down a decision this week which is especially important to Indians who own property, and which reverses the position taken by the Department of the Interior—that the estate of a dead Indian chief should be administered in accordance with the laws and customs of the white man in the State or Territory in which he lived. The opinion was written by Mr. Justice Gray, who held that the eldest son of an Indian chief was entitled by all the laws, customs and usages of the American Indians to come into possession of the property and title of his father. The case was to settle the title to a small tract of land in Minnesota.

Secretary Wilson would like to establish regular experimental stations of the Department of Agriculture in Porto Rico, but he can not do so without the express authorization of Congress. That he hopes to get. But in the meantime he has sent two distinguished botanists—Messrs. O. F. Cook and G. N. Collins—to Porto Rico, with instructions to investigate thoroughly and report upon the agricultural conditions they find there, and make suggestions for improvements in the agricultural methods followed by the Porto Ricans.

Washington, Nov. 1, 1899.

LETTER FROM "GILDEROY."

When one is half sick and a little blue, how delightful it is to have your presiding elder and another preacher come in to spend the day! Sickness is gone and the blues gone in a jiffy. This "heartens" a fellow up mightily. It is a tonic to both body and soul.

My presiding elder, Rev. T. Y. Ramsey, is a gentleman, every inch of him. He is as gentle as a woman. I doubt if he ever did a rough thing or said a rough word in all his life. He is a man of gentle speech and of clean lips. What a rich vocabulary he has, and what a fine conversationalist he is! On this visit he was somewhat of a one-idead man. He had Conference on the brain. Most presiding elders are in this condition at this season of the year. The care of all the churches is on him. He was full of talk, but mainly along one line.

Bro. Parrott came, too. He looks serious and sad, but he is a cheerful, pleasant man. He deceives his looks. He has done more hard work for the least pay of any preacher in all this country. Parrott is a good listener. He does not talk much—a good fault. Most people talk too much.

"The mistress of the manse" got up a pretty good dinner. She always does for the presiding elder along towards Conference time. She had but one rose, a fine one, the last rose of Summer, and she pinned that on the presiding elder's coat. My! my! how artful women are! Parrott and I had to take such as we could get. Neither of us care for flowers—not on our lapels. Bro. Ramsey is a flowery man. Anyway, we had a large lot of good fun, specially at the table. Of all times in the world, let me be cheerful at the table. Bro. Ramsey was offered a second cup of coffee, an extra plate of tomatoes, and a second chance at the dessert. He was the preferred creditor, or visitor. The great body of our talk was about the collections, the preachers, the Conference, the appointments, and the like of that. We made some appointments, some presiding elders and some changes in the shape and size of some of the districts. We did a large amount of Conference work. We talked over the schools and the educational work generally. We agreed to agree on some things at Conference. Bro. Parrott is an outsider, a local preacher supplying a work, but we took him into our cabinet, and let him have his say. All of this was a matter of nothing that did not amount to a row of pins, but it was interesting to us and to the family. We discussed some good books, exchanged views on some passages of Scripture, elaborated some doctrines, and exchanged a few sermons. Now and then we had some bits of religious experience along the deeper and higher lines. We needed that, or I did, for it had been cotton, corn and trade for so long. I was hungry to see some man who had some talk of God and of spiritual things.

When my presiding elder started to the train I took his valise, but he objected to a man of my age carrying his baggage for him. However, I carried it. Most preachers do the same for their presiding elders when Conference is only a month off. The brethren are polite and deferential to them, as they ought to be. They are all good men, and they fill a great office in the church of God. The Savior says, As I have carried your baggage, ye ought also to carry one another's baggage. The disciples were the Savior's guests at that notable footwashing, and he set the world an example of Christian hospitality. Bro. Ramsey was my guest, and I owed him all the courtesies of polite, civilized life. I hardly think it best to publish the appointments we made just now. The Bishop may not ratify what we did when he comes, but it was well done as far as we went, you may be sure of that. Somehow we did not fix our own appointments. This was from sheer modesty and a disposition not to be selfish. My wife and daughter insisted on us to name our own appointments, but Bro. Ramsey would not name mine, and, of course, I would not name his. However, if we pass muster, Bishop Candler will attend to our cases when he comes along. We had a good, glad day, and I would not be surprised if there were not many just such days among the preachers in North Mississippi between now and the twenty-ninth of November. These things will occur along in the Fall of the year. It indicates an interest in the work and in what is to be next year. It may be that some of us will talk more than we pray over the work of the church and over the appointments for next year. It might be well to talk less and to pray more. Christ is the head of the church, and to him we ought to go. He is the captain of this host. GILDEROY.

Oct. 28, 1899.

VICKSBURG DISTRICT.

This district comprises the counties of Warren, Sharkey, Issaquena, Claiborne, and parts of Hinds, Yazoo, Madison, with one church in Copiah. There are in it fifteen pastoral charges, with as many preachers diligently engaged upon them. In the number of pastoral charges it ranks with Natchez, these two having the fewest, while it has a smaller area than any, and in the number of members it is the least of all. This latter fact comes from the smallness of the white population in the greater part of the district. In all other particulars it ranks, according to the last Minutes, with the best. The course of the church within the district during the year has not been phenomenal, but marked by faithful labor, zeal, sincere attachment, and steady progress.

Crawford Street, Vicksburg, has nearly completed a grand church, which will not only prove highly creditable to the congregation, but also a noble ornament to the city. This has long been needed, and now we may expect our cause to move forward greatly in Vicksburg. This church has enjoyed for the past three years the superior ministrations of A. F. Watkins. When he preaches it is a clean furrow from end to end. He excels also in pastoral care, and is a man of affairs as well as of golden speech.

W. W. Cammack, at South Vicksburg, is always faithful and diligent. Not only in his own pulpit, but elsewhere, his sermons are appreciated and enjoyed. Success, and the best results here, imperatively demand that we should have a church in another locality; that it should be removed from under the hill and lifted up into greater conspicuity.

L. S. Jones, in Port Gibson, ministers to large congregations, who hear him well pleased. All the affairs of the church are in good condition, and the desire of the pastor is to lead his people to higher things. It may be said that in intelligence and substantial character no church, according to number, surpasses this.

For three years J. N. Ware has served Rocky Springs circuit, doing an amount of labor almost incalculable. Faithful, zealous, and efficient, no part of the work is omitted by him. He is forcible in the setting forth of the truth, and always he is the unflinching advocate of the right.

A. D. Miller completes four years on Hermanville circuit. During this period a large debt on the comfortable parsonage has been paid, and all the interests of the church have been advanced. The length of his stay has but increased the attachment of his people for him. He is, too, an able defender of the doctrines of the church, and his heart is aflame with love for all men.

G. A. Guice, on Utica circuit, grows in the esteem of his people and of everybody. Strong, physically and mentally, he is equal to all requirements, and his labor is not expended in vain. His hearers speak in high terms of his preaching. It is pleasant at Utica to observe the cordial relations existing between the several churches there, and this comes in a large measure from the catholic and deeply religious spirit exhibited by Bro. Guice.

W. W. Hurst finishes four years' service on South Warren circuit. He has the faculty of pleasing in the social circle, and in the pulpit he is able and helpful. No wonder his people are deeply attached to him. Bro. Hurst has improved the parsonage of South Warren circuit, so that it has become a most pleasant and attractive home.

H. L. Norton employs on Warren circuit a great deal of ability and energy. He is deeply devoted to his work, while his people have in him the highest confidence, and think themselves fortunate in having his service. He gives his hearers well-prepared sermons, and the work prospers under his control.

Edwards is under the pastorate of C. F. Emery. With a mind cultured and broadened by extensive study and large information, there are few men as well equipped for the work of the ministry as Bro. Emery. He has had the special pleasure of building a beautiful church this year. Recent events show that he has found his way to the hearts of his people. The Sunday-school at Edwards has had the remarkable history that for more than fifty years it has been under the wise and loving administration of one superintendent, Capt. R. H. Smith.

Bolton has a preacher who is one of the finest students and most learned men of our Conference. Bro. L. Carley preaches strong sermons, which come from an intimate acquaintance with the Scriptures in the original, and from much other learning. His blameless life, great discretion, and excellent ability, ensure him the high regard of all who know him.

Flora circuit will lose J. G. Cammack after the present year, much to the regret of all. His four years of service there have been marked by improvement in all the interests of the church. He has the fine faculty of attracting friends to himself, while his congregations constantly listen to his preaching with great pleasure.

The people of Satartia circuit believe that they have in the person of C. C. Evans one of the best preachers in the Conference. He has grown in their esteem throughout the three years, and in ability in ministering the Word. Such a man deserves and commands the regard of all. As a useful example and, perhaps, an incentive to others, I mention that in the town of Satartia there is an organization denominated "The Orphans' Home Helpers," which was originated by five little girls, the oldest not more than fourteen years of age. Their names are Effie Evans, Lena Parker, Camille Kling, Irene Kling, and Fannie Woolbert. They have forwarded to the Home the present year more than twenty dollars. I would mention also that this circuit has long had the service as steward of Major J. R Bell, who never misses a Quarterly Conference, has a report to make, and is full of love for the church. Emphatically, he is the preacher's friend.

F. M. Keen has as his admirers Anguilla circuit and the outside, and this because he is genial among the people and eloquent in the pulpit. Among the things accomplished this year is the building of a pretty church on Sunflower river.

H. W. Van Hook is at Rolling Fork—an important charge in the great Delta. He will report improvement. He preaches to the edification and pleasure of his fine congregations, and all departments of church work are well brought up. The Sunday-school and Epworth League flourish, the prayer meetings are well attended, and the young people are enlisted in church work.

By reason of the four years' limit Meyersville circuit can not retain its pastor, W. T. Griffin, beyond the present year. No man is more beloved by all the people than is Bro. Griffin. It is crown enough for any man that he stands so high in the esteem and affection of all. Young, strong, brave, capable, and of a loving disposition, he has already accomplished much, and is destined for yet greater things in the church. I am glad to add that a stay of four years in the Delta has not impaired the health of himself or his family.

Rev. G. W. Alexander, formerly of the Holston Conference, afterward of the Mississippi, now a local preacher, still lives in the district, near Phenix, in Yazoo county, bearing gracefully the weight of years, preaching when he is able, and his life a benediction to all the churches.

About many other things I would like to write, but this must suffice for the present. E. H. MOUNGER.

CHURCH MUSIC.

MR. EDITOR: Why do some of our preachers prefer the use of Sunday-school song books at our regular church services to our Methodist hymn book? For what was our hymn book designed or intended? What subject or sentiment is there that is not expressed—and beautifully expressed—in them? And what occasion could arise where there can not be found something entirely suited to it?

Sunday-school songs are good enough in their way, and are adapted to the uses for which they were intended; but for regular wear, and for good old genuine music, give us Uxbridge and Geneva, and Silver Street and Coronation! None of your little two-steps for me.

If the saints in heaven are cognizant of the things of earth, surely there is ever and anon a passing grimace upon the faces of John and Charles Wesley as they hear the words of their solemn hymns gyrated and chopped and contorted almost past recognition by some of our modern choirs. If they were of my mind on the subject, they would ask for a leave of absence, to come down and resent it.

If it is spirited airs they want, what better than Antioch, "Joy to the world—the Lord has come!" or, "Hark! the herald angels sing," or Laban, or Lenox? What's the matter with "Blow ye the trumpet, blow," and "The year of jubilee," anyhow? If it is something majestic, try "Thee we adore, eternal Name!" to "Manoah" or "Geer." For something sweet and peaceful take "Rest," or Dennis, or Naomi. For penitential airs there's Vaughn and Avon and Martin, "Jesus, lover of my soul;" for backsliders there's Ortonville, "O for a closer walk with God!" and, "Where is the blessedness I knew?" etc. If it's a "doleful sound" you're wanting, "China" is just the thing. If you're "plunged in a gulf of dark despair," sing 155.

There's positively no limit. Such scope and versatility, I think, is to be found nowhere else, and no Sunday-school song book, or set of revival songs, can ever hope to revive like the grand old hymns of the Wesleys, and Watts and Heber, Doddridge and Cowper and Summers. Let us make a joyful noise unto the Lord, but nursery songs and ditties, mixed in with the most catchy of the secular songs set to sacred words and sung to the praise of God, are not likely to impress the listener or the singer with the solemnity that should pervade the service and the house of the Lord.

I know a set of young people who utilized as a two-step an air that they had heard at a revival meeting, which was set to the sacred words, "There is a fountain filled with blood."

Give us, if you please, the time-honored and soul-stirring hymns of the Wesleys set to the old tunes, with the spirit and fire of those men of God still burning between the lines. The memory of them, as sung by our sainted fathers and mothers, is an incentive to follow in their steps, so that, when we shall have "crossed the sea of life" and "reached the heavenly shore," we'll meet to sing diviner strains of love and joy unknown to earth and mortals.

FINALLY?

Rev. B. P. Jaco, Pleasant Grove, has "talked Twentieth Century Thank-offering in public and in private, trying to prepare the people to make a real thank-offering and one of proper proportions." The collection will be taken at an opportune time.

Rev. J. H. Rogers, Ellzey, has "been distributing literature all the year. Have commenced to present the cause, and will continue till all my congregations have been reached."

Rev. O. L. Savage has "observed the day at Coffeeville, and has committees canvassing each church."

Rev. R. M. Evans, Ackerman, will devote November to this interest.

Rev. F. A. Whitson, New Albany, has "secured twenty dollars, and will try to get more."

Rev. R. E. Duke, Waterford, has "secured twenty-one and 50-100 dollars, and three churches yet to report."

Rev. Thos. Cameron, Batesville, has secured twenty-two and 75-100 dollars. Has distributed thank-offering cards, and is expecting other contributions.

Rev. P. D. Hardin, Shiloh circuit, has secured forty-four and 50-100 dollars, and expects more. "The movement seems to be in favor with my people."

Rev. B. W. Lewis, Chunky, has secured forty-six and 75-100 dollars, and "will continue the work."

Rev. H. D. Howell, Wesley Chapel, Natchez, has secured fifty and 70-100 dollars, and "will thoroughly canvass the entire membership."

Rev. J. C. Park, Main Street, Water Valley, has secured sixty-six dollars, and this amount "will be substantially increased."

Rev. J. C. Lowe has sent the treasurer seventy dollars from Pickens.

Rev. D. W. Babb, Louisville, has "secured seventy-five and 10-100 dollars, and will get more before Conference."

Thank you, brethren, one and all. To all the preachers: Let all outstanding subscriptions be converted into cash, so that we can begin the new year with a clean balance-sheet, and complete the work before the opening of the new century.

THE MINISTRY OF PRINT.

BY REV. D. M. PRATT.

Before me lies the printed page,
With story rich and wisdom sage;
With earnest eye I look again,
And see not words, but living men.

Transfigured fair in stately guise,
Bright spirits clad in flesh arise;
The mystic print in lifeless form,
Pulses with life blood, vital warm.

Oh vision wondrous! words are souls
Unveiling self on written scrolls.
I read, and in communion sweet
Earth's wisest, purest, noblest, meet.

They think, and on the winged page
Waft truth to every land and age.
They speak, and millions far away
Can with them talk and praise and pray.

They write, and as the mirror gives
The face that in its brightness lives,
So mirrored in the glowing word
Are souls illumined by their Lord.

Oh, mystic miracle, and blest,
That can from finite boundaries wrest
Imprisoned hearts, and set them free
To help and bless humanity.

Speed on thy way, thou winged sheet,
Incarnate spirits through thee greet,
With messages of love and truth,
Advancing age and ardent youth.

Speed on! Thy ministry imparts
Counsel and joy to waiting hearts;
Thy wealth of life, thy treasured thought,
With good to countless souls are fraught.

MINISTERIAL POWER.

BY REV. ELTON WILSON.

(Concluded.)

There is a spiritnal power that touches the human consciousness that can not be translated into the vehicles of human expression. There is a chamber of the soul, beneath the realm of conscious thought activities, where there are reserve forces, and where dwells the inexpressible in the human personality; what shall we call it but power. This is the temple of the Holy Ghost. This power can be brought into the light of consciousness, and thence translated into action. This can only be done by complying with spiritnal conditions. These conditions are prayer, meditation, faith, sincerity, and receptivity of spirit. The materialist would say such a hypothesis is as mystical and shadowy as moonlight phantoms. This shadowy gospel of spiritnal realities is a hundredfold more acceptable than what Carlyle fitly terms the "gospel of dirt." Darwin, the father of this "gospel of dirt," said on one occasion, "Sometimes I am overwhelmed with a sense of the presence of a personal God, and then it seems to go away." Who will dare say that the Holy Spirit did not knock at the door of this man's soul, though his spiritnal nature had atrophied in the grasp of an intellectnal materialism?

Much modern preaching has lost the power out of it; it has lost sight of the eternal world of spiritnal influences that ought to touch man's conscious life. Carlyle calls man "the missionary of unseen powers."

This can be truly said of the preacher, for he must draw his supreme power from that unseen realm of spiritnal realities. Take away the supernatnral power out of the minister's personal life, and out of his message, and he becomes as powerless to meet human needs as the representatives of the ethical systems of Confucius and Buddha.

The primary source of power does not reside in the externals of life. I mean spiritnal power. If such had been the case, Christianity would have perished nineteen centuries ago. Ecclesiastical machinery, material wealth, numerical strength, an intellectnal ministry and a gorgeous ritualism are secondary sources of power. They are instrumental agencies. The supernatnral must ever remain the supreme agency and power. I am convinced that we know as much about these spiritnal entities as we do about the material entities that environ us. The spiritnal is the power that transforms, renews, enlightens and lifts us into a region of ideals, above the transient and fading phantoms of sense. Here throb the pulsations of the eternal Spirit. The conservation of spiritnal power is just as real as the conservation of physical energy. The preacher sometimes feels that his efforts are all in vain. But not so. The spiritnal energy of every sermon, every prayer, every truth, every holy life, every kind word, every benevolent deed, and everything that carries with it a spiritual power, is conserved by the Holy Spirit for the outworking of the purpose of God in Christ. Immediate results are not a final test of ministerial power or success. Appearances are not always real. The tempest, the fiery flame, the earthquake are not always vehicles of spiritual power.

There is a slow, silent, moving current, invisible, eternal, yet more powerful than all Cæsar's imperial legions, stronger than the kingly march of Grecian philosophers, more conquering than all the martial hosts that have ever armed for battle, or fought the fight of death; more irresistible than all the power of thrones, or the sweeping march of earth's victorious heroes; firmer than all the combined power of nations. It leaps vastly higher than the rising forces of human history. It sweeps onward with the majesty and awe of an all-conquering power. It is the hand of the Holy Spirit upon the church, upon the ministry, upon the events of human history. He gathers up his spiritnal jewels out of the dust and decay of earthly history.

With the conserving hand of God concentrating the spiritnal power of the ages through Christ, what have we to do with results, for there is nothing lost, nothing in vain, nothing shall go unrewarded that bears the elements of spiritnal power. Across the flight of ages, on the shore of the Tiber, in the lonely wilds of Britain, amid the dangers of the New World, from the ranks of the heralds of the cross, there has gone forth the silent, yet all-conquering power of the gospel.

DEARTH OF PREACHERS.

MR EDITOR: "Gilderoy," in issue of Oct. 12, and J. W. Honnoll, in issue of Oct. 19, both of whom are ministers, strike the key-note about the dearth of preachers and souls led to accept Christ for salvation by the church in rural districts now compared with former years. The policy of the church that a preacher should be fairly well educated, or should not be recognized as much of a preacher, is wrong. All should be judged by their fruits. As a layman, I wish to concur with above ministers in their view of said question. We should have educated preachers, but should not discourage loyal, effective, uneducated ministers. I believe it is true that highly-educated ministers can not influence the uneducated masses, religiously, as well as ministers that are more nearly on a par with them in mental culture. Men with horse sense filled with the Holy Ghost make effective preachers for average rural districts. It is admitted that the Savior shed his blood for the ignorant, and they are as precious to him as the educated. It is also a further admitted fact that the high and leading positions in all the professions and callings are filled largely by men raised, or partly raised, in the country; hence the two great reasons why the church should do everything possible for the salvation of all immortal souls in the country as well as in towns and cities. I believe it is generally realized that the church is not coming up to its duty and privilege in leading souls to Christ for salvation, especially in country districts. The great question is a remedy. I suggest that all loyal, effective local preachers be admitted in full connection, and enjoy all privileges of the Annual Conference except the aid provided for worn-out itinerants and their families; also allow said rural local preachers to organize and build up their congregations, and retain pastorate of same an unlimited time at the discretion of the officials of, or the congregation and presiding elder, all to be regulated by laws made by the General Conference. One item largely in favor, in my judgment, of effective, Holy-Ghost, loyal, uneducated ministers is, they depend more on the Holy Spirit and less on their learning; whereas educated ministers seem to depend too much on their learning, and too little on the Holy Spirit, in leading souls to Christ.

Yours for more effective work in the Master's vineyard,

A LAYMAN.

OUR STANDARDS.

MR. EDITOR: The question was asked in the ADVOCATE recently, "What are our standard works on theology?" and as it has not been answered, I venture to give my answer, regardless of consequences. Funk and Wagnall's Dictionary defines "standard" thus: "Having the authority or accuracy of a standard; serving as a gauge, test, guide, or model; hence of a very high or excellent kind or type; as standard scales, a standard book. In 1120 King Henry of England ordered that the ell, the ancient yard, should be the exact length of his arm. That was the standard, or guide, in measurement."

John Wesley was instrumental, in the Lord's hands, in establishing Methodism. He wrote our General Rules, and has been a standard authority on theology all the time. I find in our Discipline, in prescribing the course of study for undergraduates in the first year: Wesley's Doctrinal Standards, Sermons I-XXVI, inclusive. No one can dispute that I have found something that is standard, if our Discipline is authority. In addition to this, the other different works on theology, prescribed by our Bishops for undergraduates at different times, are in harmony with Wesley's Sermons, and are, for this reason, standards. If these works are not in harmony with Wesley's Sermons, the Bishops are in fault for prescribing them. When I was first examined on the Conference course of study, a quarter of a century ago, I was told by a committee of old Methodist preachers that Wesley's Sermons, Watson's Institutes, and Ralston's Elements of Divinity, were our standard works on theology, and that I must pass on them, or not advance. One member of my class was kept in the course eight years. I am aware that some of our prominent ministers contend that we have no standards; yet, let a man preach or write something which they do not endorse, and they are about the first to charge him with heresy. Campbellites do the same thing. I was reared a semi-Calvinist, and it took the whole four years' Conference course to get rid of it, but it is all gone, and I am a Methodist, an old-time Methodist, and have little enough sense to accept fully the teachings of our standard works on theology.

DEARTH OF PREACHERS.

REV. J. W. Honnoll, in the NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE, of Oct. 19, refers to an article by "Gilderoy," in the ADVOCATE, of Oct. 12, in which he writes under the caption, "A Dearth of Preachers," a strong and forceful paper. Bro. Honnoll says that "Gilderoy" struck oil, and so he did. Bro. Honnoll thinks that some good and true men have been discouraged, and so they have. But, to our mind, there is one other thing that might be added to the list of reasons for this dearth, and that is the law which compels our young preachers to go to the District Conference for a license to preach. Before this law was made the North Mississippi Conference was well supplied with preachers; but some one will say that they have transferred. There have been no more transfers since the law was made than before. Before the law was made there were large classes each year for admission into Conference. They have grown smaller each year since.

The young men who live in the circuits are, as a rule, the men who are called into our ministry. Our District Conference meets at a very busy time with them. They are engaged in their farm work, and can not go just then, and before another District Conference comes they grow cold and get out of the notion. If they could be licensed in the Quarterly Conference, they would go to the Quarterly Conference and get a license, and would go into the work during the revival work, and would get a recommendation at the fourth Quarterly Conference for admission. I believe the Lord has used a good revival meeting often to impress upon a young man his call to the ministry. They get some inspiration and start in the work, and grow stronger in the faith, and make good, useful men. Our District Conference usually comes before the revival work does in the circuits; so our young men are not worked up and ready to enter into the work. All preachers know that it is hard for a young man to get the consent of his mind to enter the ministry, and that the most and forceful circumstances must be brought to bear.

SHREVEPORT DISTRICT EPWORTH LEAGUE CONFERENCE.

The Shreveport District Epworth League Conference met at Grand Cane, La., Oct. 18 to 20. The attendance of preachers was small, and a number of the Epworth Leagues were without representatives, but those who were on hand were glad that they had come, and did what they could to insure the success of the meeting. There was not a pessimist in the crowd.

The host, Rev. J. M. Brown, and his thoughtful and hospitable people had made liberal preparations for our comfort and pleasure, and their many kindnesses were heartily appreciated.

Our district "big guns," Drs. Sawyer and Bolling, were not able to be with us; the former on account of the press of the fourth quarter's business, the latter on account of sickness. Mrs. T. S. Sligh, of Mansfield Female College, was to have addressed us on "The Young People of the Church," but the young ladies of her school kept her at home; so we missed that also.

Among the addresses, those of Miss Sadie Deming on "My Place in Christ's Kingdom," Rev. P. O. Lowrey on "The League as a Personal Worker," Mrs. J. P. Ratcliff on "The Bible in the League, and How to Study It," Miss Katie Lear on "The Practical Young Christian in the Home," and that of Rev. C. D. Atkinson on "Young People and the Providential Movements of the Age," are deserving of special mention.

A recitation by Mrs. Dale, of Grand Cane, and one by Master Robert Spell were bright and pleasant features, and the music by the Grand Cane and Stonewall Epworth League choirs was like a golden thread pervading all the services.

New officers were elected to serve for one year. A constitution was adopted, and a resolution was passed calling the attention of Dr. DuBose to the Epworth League work in Louisiana, and inviting him to a personal survey of the field.

Ketchie was selected as the place for the next meeting.

I think I am in bounds when I state that this was one of the most pleasant and profitable League Conferences that has ever been held in the bounds of the State.

Our Week of Prayer and Self-Denial has come and gone. What has it done for us as a society? Have its opportunities of loving service and self-sacrifice left us richer in the possession of treasure, "where moth and rust doth not corrupt"? Have we denied ourselves, that others may be blessed? Have we brought our offerings into the Lord's treasury, and counted it a privilege to do so? Have we prayed for the destitute in body and soul, and then contributed to their needs? If so, we have the promised blessing, "Prove me now herewith, saith the Lord of hosts, if I will not open you the windows of heaven and pour you out a blessing that there shall not be room enough to receive it." But if we have neglected this blessed privilege of service, if we have failed to bring our gifts and offer our sacrifice of praise and thanksgiving, we should examine our hearts by the light of God's word. "For we must all stand before the judgment seat of Christ," and "God is not mocked: whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap."

As the dues of our society are devoted to the work of aiding and building parsonages, we must depend largely upon the offerings made by our auxiliaries during the annual Week of Prayer (Oct. 9-15), and the Educational Endowment Fund to maintain our schools and missions. These institutions afford Christian training and practical instruction to a large class of young people who would otherwise be deprived of these privileges. We have established schools for the Cubans at Tampa and Key West, and for the Chinese and Japanese on the Pacific coast; also mission homes at Dallas, San Antonio, and other cities. These institutions are needing help to sustain and educate the rapidly-increasing numbers asking for admission. They must suffer loss unless our women rally to their support.

Miss Helm, in October number of Our Homes, says, "The need of the Home Mission Society has never been greater than now for the best work and largest offerings of its members and friends."

We have 21,170 members. What could not be accomplished for the coming of Christ's kingdom if each one of these should "come up to the help of the Lord against the mighty!" Let each auxiliary in every district enroll their pastor's name on the Educational Endowment Fund. By the payment of $5 your pastor becomes a patron, and his name thus honored is sent to the Conference treasurer with the money. This fund is a sum of money of which the interest only is used in the support of the schools of the society. Suppose each one of the 11,000 preachers in our Southern Methodism was made a patron of this fund, do you not see what a great uplift this principal of $55,000 would be just now to our educational institutions?

On this threshold of a new century, when, as never before, the great heart of Christendom is moved, as by a common impulse, to advance the kingdom of God by a Twentieth Century Thank-offering, let us, as Home Mission workers, not be "found wanting." Let us bring our gifts of service, sacrifice, and love. Let us give

"All for Jesus, all for Jesus;
All my being's ransomed powers.
All my thoughts and all my doings,
All my days and all my hours."

The Master came "not to be ministered unto, but to minister." He said, "If any man will come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross and follow me." Let us, each one, ask the question, "What would Jesus do?" and as his nail-pierced hand beckons us to follow, let us obey, even though it "costs something" so to do. Like the little band of "volunteers" "in his steps," we may be called to "endure hardships" and sacrifice ease and self, but love, the source of service and sacrifice, fills the heart, and we go forth "bearing the precious seed," and shall, doubtless, come again with rejoicing, bringing our "sheaves" with us.

The following letter from our Foreign and Home Secretary demands the attention and consideration of every member of our Louisiana W. F. M. S. The watchword of every auxiliary should be, "To the rescue! to the rescue!" The battle waxes strong; our standard-bearers are sorely pressed. We must rally to their relief, or see the banner of our Prince of Peace lowered before the powers of darkness. Let us give the mite asked of us in this crisis cheerfully, gladly, speedily, even as we would be relieved in our own hour of need by the friends of our own flesh and blood.

MRS. T. P. FULLILOVE.

Shreveport, La.

Nashville, Tenn., Oct. 20, 1899.

DEAR SISTER: From time to time I send you items of information touching our work in foreign lands. As you know, our missions prosper, and the prosperity for which we thank God increases our responsibility, calling, as it does, year after year, for larger resources. More has to go into our treasury, as more must go out. To-day our treasury is empty, without enough to meet the present quarter's appropriations. As soon as this fact was known here, the officers of the several auxiliaries met for prayer and guidance. Much prayer went up to God that he would give wisdom to meet such a disaster. Pledges of larger offerings were made, and the request that I should inform the Board that they would unite with us to meet successfully the crisis that now confronts us. Five thousand dollars are needed at once to meet what is lacking of the October appropriations.

I believe this appeal will not be in vain; that you will do your part towards securing and forwarding this amount to the treasurer. Of this needed $5,000, $3,000 are for China; China, now so sorely depressed in the loss of one of the sweetest spirits, one of the most promising missionaries ever sent to foreign shores. Pray as you work; pray in particular for those women who are withholding from God that which he has called for—the money, the time, the work which belongs to him. Pray that the Holy Spirit would so touch their hearts that they not only will awake from their indifference, but will awake to know the joy of service. At once please supply your part of the $5,000 now so necessary. May I suggest that your Conference secretary fix upon the small sum of $25, and divide the sum proportionately among your district secretaries, who, in turn, will divide among their auxiliaries as they shall consider the ability and willingness of each? Will you not at once send to the district secretaries a copy of this appeal, and urge them to send the same to each auxiliary corresponding secretary, who shall be instructed to put the same into the hands of the auxiliary presidents, who will read it to their societies at the next regular meetings, or at a called meeting, and have a copy also in the church papers? Let our Week of Prayer be full of praise, because we have put the $5,000 into the treasury now. Many fervent prayers go up to God as this appeal goes out. May our God speak to each woman of our church in the still, small voice that is more effective than any words of man, and may abundant blessings crowd upon you!

Sincerely, S. C. TRUEHEART.

A GREAT HINDRANCE.

The desire of appearing to be useful, rather than of being so, is a dreadful hindrance to real usefulness. Making present visible results the measure of value for one's labor leads to superficial habits of thought and action. Sham and show hinder excellence and reality. Setting up pretense and parade in place of truth and honesty destroys the earnestness and sincerity of nature, corrupts the simplicity of our motives, and makes us vacillating and time-serving rather than single-hearted and true. The man whose aim is to seem rather than to be is self-exiled from the noblest field of human activity, which lies always in the strong, deep, still under-current of influences which, unheeded by the thoughtless multitude, act slowly, silently, but irresistibly and effectually. He is not permitted to do a thing in the best way, unless this way should happen to be that which will secure to him present honor. He will not hold on the even tenor of his way, through good report and evil report, but he must be a sort of public weather-cock, shifting with every popular excitement, and ever on the outlook to win the applause or escape the blame of men. Such men love the praise of men more than the praise of God, and their empty hearts and hollow lives collapse before the pressure of temptation or adversity, as a hollow tree goes down before a hurricane. If we would be strong, we must be honest, faithful, and true to ourselves, our conscience, and our God. —Selected.

MAKING OUR CHOICE.

It is easy to make a choice between two things when one of them is obviously a great deal more attractive than the other. It is not so easy when the difference is less apparent. Even a child will choose gladly to leave his play when his mother asks him to go with her to see a sight he has been longing to see. A treasure-seeker has no unwillingness to pass by bits of lead ore when he knows that gold is in abundance a little farther on. A lesser pleasure has no temptation to one who is proffered greater pleasures, and sees them just ahead. So all the way along in life's path. We choose what we like best, all things considered. Our preferences decide the choice, which, of course, carries with it its inevitable consequences. God or self is taken, because we prefer the one or the other. In making this choice we accept all that it involves. Hence no man will be finally lost unless he prefers hell to heaven. He goes to the place of his own choice.—Sunday-School Times.

GETTING ACQUAINTED FOR JESUS' SAKE.

One of the first steps toward helping people spiritually is becoming acquainted with them. Just as a man needing a certain line of goods naturally turns first to the brand which he has seen oftenest advertised, so people in need of spiritual counsel will think first of their Christian acquaintances whose attitude is most open to inviting them.

We may not see at a moment how a nod, a smile, a pleasant greeting, or a few moments' chat with those who would otherwise be strangers, can help Christ's cause; but these repeated expressions of good-will are so many advertisements of the source whence spiritual help may be obtained, and the time is sure to come, sooner or later, when the cultivation of acquaintance will prove a means of leading to Christ.—Sunday-School Times.

To Piano Buyers

An interesting book—free

Buying a piano is an important matter; it reaches over so many years. It is a confusing thing besides, especially if the buyer's means are limited; for one cannot afford to pay an extravagant price, or what is worse, get a cheaply made piano.

It is not easy, as a rule, to find a perfectly satisfactory, sweet-toned, finely made piano at a satisfactory price.

Good pianos, as a rule, cost so much that people of moderate means can scarcely afford them.

Low-priced pianos, as a rule, are very cheaply-made. They do not satisfy the critical musician. Some of them sound all right for a while and then the tone loses its beauty. (Sounding board flattens—likely.)

As a rule people don't stop to think about these things in advance. They buy what seems to be a bargain—and do their thinking as the years go by.

It is better to become intelligent on the subject first, and then use ones own common sense, as one does in other important matters.

We have just printed a little book called "A Satisfactory Piano at a Satisfactory Price." It's worth while to read it no matter what make of piano you buy. It explains a number of points about piano making which you ought to know:—for instance the sounding board; and how it comes that some pianos sing out with such sweet, sympathetic, beautiful tone, and seem to get better and better as the years go by—while others soon sound so flat and thumpy—so dead. It's important to know about this before you buy.

Write us a letter or a postal, tell us where you read this, and we will send the little book free.

FROM THE WORK.

Rev. H. Armstrong: "On last Sunday night, Oct. 22, I closed a precious meeting at Cotton Valley Church. It was continued one week. About mid-week A. R. Hodges, a young lay preacher, came to my assistance. He is good help. There were 10 professions of conversion, and 9 professions of sanctification. The convictions were very powerful, and the conversions very bright. New converts would take the floor and hunt up their friends. This is a country church, but a Sunday-school and a prayer meeting are held there on each Sunday morning. Men, women, boys and girls lead the prayer meeting in turn."

J. A. Lewis: "At a meeting of the fourth Quarterly Conference of the Montpelier circuit, Aberdeen district, North Mississippi Conference, a resolution was adopted asking me to report the results of Friendship Sunday-school for the thirty-four years I have been superintendent, and that this report be published in the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE. I can not report definitely on all points. I feel safe in saying that ninety-five per cent. of the children that have belonged to this Sunday-school have been converted and joined the church, and this number reaches several hundred. Our school is ever green. We hardly ever allow any circumstance to keep our school from meeting. I feel safe in saying we have met sixteen hundred times in thirty-four years. As the outgrowth of our school, we have eight preachers, sixteen teachers, besides many honorable men and women in other callings. In 1896 this writer visited a Sunday-school in Texas. The superintendent and all the teachers but one had once been members of my Sunday-school. One of the most noted features of this Sunday-school is, that not a single man or boy that belonged to it has ever been arrested for violating the law of the country; and, strange as it may seem, not a single boy has been raised in this community, who refused to attend Sunday-school, who has escaped arrest for crime. We have no new or strange methods here. This is the result of constant, faithful work. It takes twelve months to do a year's work; it takes all our lives to do life's work. Much of this good work has been done in the home as well as in the Sunday-school."

PINE GROVE CIRCUIT.

On Wednesday, Oct. 4, we began a meeting at Cooper Chapel which resulted in a glorious revival. On the last day of the meeting (which was on Sunday) there was at least 40 out of a membership of 50 that testified to the saving power of the gospel. Six were added to the church on profession of faith, and three children baptized. Rev. M. Ferrell, L. E., of Smithdale, Miss., did the preaching. Leaving Bro. Ferrell to close the meeting there, I went to Killian's Chapel, where I met Bro. J. M. Alford, who assisted me there until the following Friday. Bro. Alford did good and faithful service. His preaching was accompanied by the power of the Holy Ghost. Christians rejoiced, and sinners trembled. My old "standby," Bro. M. Ferrell, continued with me until Sunday night. One accession to the church on profession of faith, and several backsliders reclaimed, and the church greatly revived, was the result of this meeting. On Tuesday following we began at Pine Grove and continued until Sunday following. Our intention was to go from here to Pipkin's Chapel; but on account of small-pox prevailing in the neighborhood, the meeting was postponed. I expect to begin at Independence next Sunday night (D. V.).

Eternity alone can reveal the good accomplished in these meetings. May God bless these two brethren that were so faithful in assisting me in these meetings!

This is my third year with these dear people, and it has been the best in every respect, and I want to say to any of my brethren of the Louisiana Conference that if you are read out for Pine Grove circuit next Conference, don't tremble, for you will find a kind and good people to serve. F. N. SWEENEY, P. C.

VANCLEAVE CHARGE.

We have been in the midst of revival meetings for the past four (4) months, and closed out with our camp meeting, which resulted in the salvation of many souls.

We had no one to help us but the faithful local preachers of this work Notwithstanding this, we had good services at every meeting.

We found this work considerably on the background, spiritually, but we have every reason to believe that the work, spiritually, is a great deal better than when we took charge.

We have received about 20 members up to date. We have had between 50 and 60 conversions during the year, and a great many reclaimed.

The people of Vancleave are a good, kind, hospitable people; they love for their pastor to come and see them, and sing and pray for them; and in token of their appreciation, they are giving the preacher a good congregation to preach to, and they are paying up their assessments better than for several years.

We have succeeded in sending the beloved editor of our Conference organ 14 new subscribers for the ADVOCATE. Some of the brethren are paying up their arrearages, which of course pleases the editor. We have sent off during the year about 15 subscriptions for the "Review of Missions." We have sold one-half dozen Testaments and Psalms; sold four dozen hymns books etc. So you see the humble servant of "Vancleave charge" has not been asleep, but hard at work for the "Master's cause." We have had the best Quarterly Conferences on this work during this Conference year that I was ever in.

The Lord was with us in great power. We have had a full attendance at every Quarterly Conference and good congregations. The people all love Bro. Simmons, and all say he's the man for the place.

We have succeeded in liquidating a debt of $60 on the parsonage, and raising our assessment of $50 for the district parsonage, and will just about pay all the assessment for the preacher in charge, and the Conference in full.

By the help of the Lord, we hope not to be very far behind in our assessments when Conference meets.

I think our camp meeting deserves to be mentioned in this report to the ADVOCATE.

Our "camp meeting" only ran for three days; but I don't think I ever saw a greater demonstration of the Spirit than was manifested during those three days.

It was a time of refreshing from the presence of the Lord. The preaching for the first few services was done by the local preachers. Then Bros. Simmons, the presiding elder, and Lewis, of Ocean Springs, came in to help us; then Bro. Huff, from the Whittington circuit, came in with some of his co laborers. And ere the meeting had closed we had a grand feast from the presence of the Lord. We had 45 conversions, and a goodly number reclaimed. Praise the Lord for free salvation to fallen men. Well, I will say that by the time I start to Conference I will have traveled 1,650 miles in just going to my appointments, besides the number of miles I traveled in my pastoral work.

May the Lord bless the editor of the ADVOCATE for furnishing us with such a good paper!

ACKERMAN, MISS.

We are in sight of the end of our fourth year on this interesting charge. Whether we have succeeded, or not, God shall be our judge. We have had our seasons of rejoicing and our months of affliction. Cold waves from the northeast have forced their way into the chambers of our souls, only to be driven out and onward by the stronger currents of love from the heights of faith. We are richer in grace, stronger in faith and better qualified for the work before us than ever before.

Twelve months ago the scene was all too dark. We did not then know that God was rubbing in a heavy background against which to throw beams of love-light, which should reveal the outlines of a special providence. God is an artist, and, as such, we love him. He has enabled us to deliver hundreds of sermons and to receive scores of souls into the church. He suffered a shaft to drop from the skies which shattered our beautiful church at McCool, only to open wider the hearts of the people that we might discover the streams of their liberality. It is all over now; more beautiful than before, and no one hurt.

Our church in Ackerman gone down only to be repaired at once in a way never to need it again until the present building yields to a structure which shall be in touch with one of the most rapidly-growing towns in the State.

Our church at Salem now has a new cover and new pews.

At Weir's we have painted the interior; a new bell also, largely the fruitage of Messrs. Irving and Torbert, has been purchased. Noble laymen these! I could name a score of worthies whom any man would miss unless replaced by the salt of the earth. With our own hands we have painted the preacher's home, and it now stands a thing of beauty as compared with its former self. We are soon to take our leave of every care connected with this charge, and we sincerely desire to see every interest prosper in the hands of our successor. May God guide the hand that directs the appointments!

With love unstinted we remain in the some grand army, only tented in a slightly changed position. We go to our new field with new zeal.

R. M. EVANS, P. C.

HINDRANCES.

I wish to make mention of a few things that are hindering the preachers of Corinth district in regard to the collections ordered by the Conference; and if any of our preachers can tell us how to remove this cause, I stand for one ready to do my part to get it out of the way.

First, I wish to say that in the bounds of my circuit there are several anti-missionary, non-progressive Campbellite Churches that strike a death-blow at every move we make along these lines. They would make the people believe that the Methodist Church is nothing less than a great banking system, with her thousands in vault, just taxing her people to death. They do not hesitate to preach this from the pulpit.

The second thing I will mention is: in the bounds of my circuit there are several Hard-Shell Churches that try to stamp out the very thought of missions, education and church extension. They have preached long (so-called) sermons against these moves. These sermons have been copied, sent to the editors of our counties, published, sent out and read by the people in general. Many of our people believe this stuff to be true. Free-Will Baptist preachers telling the people that to pay a preacher a salary is to almost sin against the Holy Ghost.

Now, when the Methodist circuit rider starts out in the face of all this incorrigible, redoubtable, contemptible, unpardonable, hell-damnable doctrines to get up his finances, he has a task that would worry the patience of Job. Talk about weak preachers, strong preachers, gentle and small preachers, it would take a Joshua that could pull down the wall of Jericho, or an Elijah that could pray down fire from heaven, or a David that could crush the skull of a giant, to get all this stuff out of the minds of the people of this country. These are some of the causes that are in our way in this country. We are making some progress along those lines, and can only pray God to send the day when our people will redeem that pledge made at the sacred altar when they promised God to support all the institutions of the church.

Marietta, Miss., Oct. 26, 1899.

The best of women may be the worst of sufferers. Disease is no respecter of persons. The regular periodical suffering of many women is calculated as aggregating ten years of the thirty between fifteen and forty-five. Such a tax of pain and time is utterly unnecessary.

In all cases the sufferings of women due to irregularity and like causes may be alleviated, and in most cases they may be completely cured by the use of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. This wonderful medicine is not a cure-all, but a specific remedy for diseases affecting the delicate womanly organs. It cures, completely, irregularity, ulceration, inflammation and female weakness and gives the enfeebled organs health and vigor.

Mrs. W. J. Kidder, of Hill Dale Farm, (Enosburg Center), Enosburg, Vt., writes: "I cheerfully send you the following testimonial of the great relief your kindly advice and medicines brought me. During the past year I found I was with child and in rapidly failing health. I suffered dreadfully from bloating and urinary difficulty. I was growing perceptibly weaker each day and suffered much sharp pain at times. I felt that something must be done. I sought your advice and received a prompt reply. I followed your directions and took twelve bottles of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, and also followed your instructions. I began to improve immediately, my health became excellent, and I could do all my own work (we live on a good sized farm). I walked and rode all I could, and enjoyed it. I had a short, easy confinement and have a healthy baby boy."

GENTLENESS.

Gentleness has so subtle a charm, so genial a presence, so winsome a manner, that everywhere she is esteemed, honored, and sought after. She is alike welcome in the palaces of the great and in the homes of the lowly, and she gladdens every circle that she enters. At her approach doors are unbarred, hard hearts are softened, pride and stubbornness melt away, and fierceness and strife give place to quietness and peace. She is a fairy endowed with a magical power to render society pleasant, home attractive and joyous, and character lovely. Whatever be the sphere in which she is accorded a place—whether it be that of prince or peasant, warrior or priest, maid or mistress—she adorns and ennobles it. Wealth and splendor can not atone for her absence; neither can fame or honor bestow the joy and blessing that attend her footsteps. She has a magic key with which she unlocks the gates of prejudice, as well as a marvelous wand with which she brushes away difficulties and dangers, as if they were chaff. Where she is not, discord is sure to take up her abode.

History tells us that the strongest and most courageous have usually been the tenderest and most chivalrous. "Sir Walter Raleigh," says one, "was every inch a man, a brave soldier, a brilliant courtier, and yet a mirror of courtesy. No one would accuse Philip Sidney of having been deficient in manliness, yet his fine manners were proverbial." King Robert Bruce was "brave as a lion, yet as tender-hearted as a woman." Well has it been said that "St. Peter's is none the less strong and solid because of its elegant columns and the magnificent sweep of its arches, its carved and fretted marbles of matchless hues." Likewise character is none the less robust or noble because of gentleness of manner and kindness of bearing.

It is not always the most gifted or the most favored who succeed best. The chances are largely in favor of him who, though of mediocre ability, is noted for courtesy and obligingness. An agreeable manner is scarcely less advantageous to its possessor than would be the gift of Aladdin's fabled lamp. Says O. S. Marden with no little truth: "The good-mannered can do without riches, for they have passports everywhere. All doors fly open to them, and they enter without money and without price. They are as welcome in every household as the sunshine. They disarm jealousy and envy, for they bear good-will to everybody. Bees will not sting a man smeared with honey." It was Richter who said that "men, like beetles, go farthest when they are smoothest." Mirabeau, though one of the most unattractive men in France, having, as some one declared, "the face of a tiger pitted by small-pox," yet possessed such charm of manners as to be almost irresistible. What avails so effectually as gentleness to soothe the pathway and ease the jolts of life, to lighten the burden of care, to soothe sorrow, and drive away anger and hatred? How delightful is the company of the sweet-spirited and gentle! How gracious is their influence! Yet how rarely we meet with those whose words are uniformly free from sharpness and censoriousness, whose conduct is devoid of roughness and gruffness! A friend of Dickens, the novelist, said of him that "when he entered a room, it was like the sudden kindling of a big fire, by which everyone was warmed." What a [illegible] minister is not more common, especially among professing Christians.

While in Christian work courage in rebuking sin and in standing against the corruption of the times is highly necessary, there is urgent and general need also of that sweetness of temper and kindness of conduct that are the fruit as well as the proof of love.

If, when reviled, we revile again; if, under annoyances and disappointments, we fret and fume; if our tones are often harsh and petulant, then indeed there is a sad lack of the beauteous grace of gentleness that was so distinguishing a characteristic of the life of our Lord. A Christian may be honest and upright, and even zealous in church work, but unless he exhibits sweetness of temper and suavity of manner, his piety will not make a deep impression upon others. The "sons of thunder" had to be transformed into the apostles of love before they could become eminently useful. The make-or-mar method rarely fails to stir up opposition and enmity. Gentleness never makes any man unmanly or any woman unwomanly. Many, for lack of it, however, are un-Christly.

While a great deal of irritability and moroseness is undoubtedly due to ill-health, bad digestion, or overwork, surliness and sourness of spirit are more often due to lack of grace than to anything else. Unless religion causes the professing Christian to be "good to live with," as some one quaintly puts it, it may well be doubted whether there has been a change of heart. A good case of religion invariably sweetens the disposition, softens the emotions, and renders its possessor obliging and agreeable.

Prof. Drummond has startlingly said: "No form of vice—not worldliness, not greed of gold, not drunkenness itself—does more to unchristianize society than evil temper. For embittering life, for breaking up communities, for destroying the most sacred relationships, for devastating homes, for withering up men and women, for taking away the bloom of childhood—in short, for gratuitous, misery-producing power, this influence stands alone. The peculiarity of ill-temper is, that it is the vice of the virtuous. It is often the one blot on an otherwise noble character."

The believer who is conscious of a deficiency in this direction should do his utmost, through prayer and watchfulness, to cultivate sweetness, both of temper and manner, for in so doing he will not only draw nearer to Christ himself, but will also be able to draw others to his Lord. While gentleness is not an unfailing indication of a pure heart, or a noble character, yet, on the other hand, true Christian character can not be built without it. The disciple who lacks it to large degree shows that he has but little of the spirit of Christ, who, as one of our English poets has beautifully said, was "the first true gentleman that ever breathed." A life from which there is continually breathed out an aroma of love and gentleness is one of the most glorious fruits of Christianity.

LITERARY NOTES.

BY W. F. B.

In the American Illustrated Methodist Magazine, for November, the seventh chapter of the series of Famous Hymn Writers, which treats of John Greenleaf Whittier, is the opening article. The Lay Preachers of Early Methodism is the subject of the ninth chapter of The Illustrated History of Methodism, which will appear in the November number of the Magazine. Few chapters in church history are more thrilling than those that deal with the heroic service of Wesley's lay-preachers. It was through the labors of men like John Cennick, Thomas Olivers, John Haime, Thomas Walsh, and others, in a large measure, that Methodism spread so rapidly throughout England and Ireland. The chapter is well written and beautifully illustrated, and is one of the most interesting of the series. A Veteran Missionary is the subject of an article on the life and work of Young John Allen in China. The leading facts and illustrations were furnished by Young J. Allen himself, and correctly portray the great labors and well-deserved progress of the Christian missions in the Orient. Mr. Allen is a man of great resource, having a very forceful literary style as well as a strong personality and striking appearance, and the varied experience he has had in his forty-five years of missionary work make an exceedingly interesting article.

In the Woman's Home Companion, for November, the opening article, When Queen Victoria Saved America from War, brings to light interesting facts about an almost forgotten international episode. Waldon Fawcett discusses the industrial importance of sewing-schools, showing by photographs of exhibits what is being accomplished in the larger cities. The Japanese writer, Onoto Watanna, writes of that charming, but misunderstood type of Japanese society, The Geisha Girl. Lilian Bell comments on European honesty when telling of a shopping experience in Naples.

In the American Monthly Review of Reviews the special features are the editor's comment on the war in South Africa, Mr. Stead's character sketch of Cecil Rhodes, President Schurman's address on The Problem of Territorial Expansion, a paper by Mr. Alfred F. Potts, of Indianapolis, on A Successful Substitute for Municipal Ownership; a description of A Model Suburban Village (East Cleveland, Ohio), by Mr. C. E. Bolton, and The Toledo Manual Training-school (illustrated), by President J. H. Barrows, of Oberlin College.

The Forum, for November, contains a number of articles of interest. Among the thirteen articles of vital interest may be found: How Shall Puerto Rico be Governed? by Hon. H. K Carroll, Special U. S. Commissioner to Puerto Rico. Hon. J. L M. Curry, former U. S. Minister to Spain, gives many pungent points on Spain, Living or Dying? The Finnish Question is discussed in a masterly way by Prof. Rudolf Eucken, of the University of Jena, the leading spirit of the Finnish movement in Germany. Jacob Schoenhof shows, by historical facts, What the World Owes to France. Civil Service by Special Training, by Hoffman Atkinson, sheds new light upon an important subject.

NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE NOTES.

The preachers are busily engaged in rounding up for Conference. The prospect is for fairly good financial reports from most of the charges, and not a few will report spiritual growth.

"The Epworth League Reading Course" for the year, beginning with this month, is ready. The books are timely and good, adapted to young and old. They are worthy a place in any home, whether it is connected with the League or not. They are capital reading for the Winter season, for both parents and children. But specially should every League possess one, or more, sets. The four books cost, at regular rates, $4 75, but the special price is only $2 50 per set, postpaid. Reader, send me your order right away.

The "report form" provided by our Sunday-school Board for obtaining needed information of our Sunday-school work has been mailed to each pastor in the Conference. If anyone has failed to receive his copy, let him write me at once for it. Brother pastor, read each item carefully, take pains to fill each blank as accurately as possible, and hand it to J. B. Streater on the first day of the Conference, as directed in the footnote. By each and all doing this, the Sunday-school Board will, for once, be enabled to get the true status of the work in every part of the field, learn what remains to be done, and intelligently devise plans for its accomplishment. Arrangements are being made to hold the Sunday-school anniversary on Thursday night of the Conference session. Let all concerned do their part to make it a grand success.

FROM BRO. SHEPPARD.

MR. EDITOR: I am glad to say that I am on foot again after a siege of malarial fever and sciatic rheumatism. Our daughter, Mrs. Woodard, whose death at any hour for seventy-six days would have been no surprise to any who knew her condition, I am glad to say is now convalescent, and her full recovery confidently expected.

No people on earth could have been more kind, considerate, and sympathetic than the Mansfield people have been toward us in our affliction, and this does not apply alone to the Methodist people. God bless them. I love them more as I learn them better. My charge has not suffered from my absence and illness, as I have been ably assisted by Bro. J. M. Brown, pastor of Grand Cane circuit, and also by Bro. C. D. Atkinson, who has been with me two months. The latter has just closed a very successful meeting at the only church I have out of Mansfield.

I think our report will be full in every particular, notwithstanding the short crop. About $2 per member has been subscribed on the Twentieth Century Thank-offering, with more to follow.

Fraternally,

J. L. P. SHEPPARD.

Mansfield, La., Nov. 1, 1899.

IN TOUCH WITH HIS TIME.

Some preachers possess in large degree a quality which has a primary bearing on their success: they are in touch with their age. They know its needs, its sins, its temptations, its dangers, its tendencies, its intellectual and financial and moral movements. Hence they serve aptly as prophets of the time, bringing into play upon the questions of the hour lessons from the divine Word, and the counsels which result from long and penetrating brooding upon divine and human things.

Men of this sort in the pulpit are sure to catch the ear and reach the conscience of the people. There is a timeliness, a modern tone, a freshness of utterance about their messages which make an instant and a deep impression. The sermons which they preach could not possibly have been wrought out or preached in any other age; their substance, their style, their vocabulary, their allusions, their subtle flavor, their illustrations, all betoken that they belong to this period of the world's history, rather than to some other era.

Once in a while a man strives to come into touch with his age by secularizing his pulpit, by giving before his sermons preludes on current events, by taking political or semi-political themes for his evening discourses. Usually his efforts are vain. He succeeds in turning his pulpit into a stage for dramatic display, or into an oratorical platform; and that is as far as his enterprise will carry him.

There are still others who never show by their sermons that they live in the nineteenth century. Their homilies would have been just as apt a thousand years ago as they are today. They have a flavor of antiquity about them, and are really relics of another time. A young man who preaches such discourses has no future in the pulpit, unless in some way he can be awakened, quickened, and intellectually born again. He must be brought to study his own century, by contact with its great books and with its leading minds; he must know how to use the secular and religious press, and through its products scan the horizon of the times; he must learn how to judge his fellow-men, and how to discern their unspoken needs. He must become like the children of Issachar, mentioned by an Old Testament chronicler, who "had understanding of the times to know what Israel ought to do."

One of the ways in which a thoroughly alive pastor, in sympathy with his age, will keep in touch with his people, is by means of his sermon-illustrations. These, in an apt preacher, will reveal his modern sympathies better than any catchy themes, or sermon preludes. He will not go out of his way to lug in allusion to current events, but he will nevertheless be on the alert for incidents, developments, books, current sayings, and other events of the hour which may suit his purpose. What he says may not be much concerning these matters, but the little that he does use will serve to drive home a great truth, to vivify his message, to arrest attention, and to attract men and women whose temptations are secular to consider their spiritual needs. He will not feel called on to preach about the Peace Congress, the Dreyfus trial, the new call for volunteers, the President's Message, the Woman's International Council, or the Irrigation Congress; he will not take David Harum, or Richard Carvel, or any other recent novel as his theme; and yet his allusions, his incidental illustrations, his arguments, his pleadings, all will suggest that he knows what is going on about him, and is a servant of his own generation. A French proverb says, "The age makes the man." This may not be literally and exactly true, but it certainly helps to make the man, and no minister can be well-made unless he cultivates sympathy with the toils, the fears, the perils, the discoveries and inventions, and, in brief, the varied needs of the age in the midst of which his lot has been cast.—Central Advocate.

THAT SHRIEK OF PETULANCE.

"Scolding preachers are as powerless as nagging women. Nothing can atone for lack of kindness in spirit and courteous deference in manner. When one's voice rises to a shriek of petulance, it is a betrayal of conscious weakness." So says Frank Crane. He is right. We never knew of a case where a preacher did any good by scolding, in the pulpit or out of it. The worst of all times to scold is at the close of a pastorate. To accompany a resignation by a bitter and sarcastic statement of the causes which led to it—whether true or not—is to destroy one's influence in that community.—Chicago Standard.

The little band of religious enthusiasts who went recently from Missouri to Palestine, expecting there to witness the second coming of Christ, are in a bad way. The pilgrimage was the result of a tract written by Mrs. Ida Dickinson, called "The City of the Great King." It convinced some farmers in Belham township, Mo., and others in Michigan that if they went to Jerusalem, they could see Christ come again in all his glory, and that the faithful would be "caught up to him." The pilgrims were headed by Mrs. Dickinson and her husband. They sold all their possessions and started for Palestine a little less than a year ago. A letter has just been received from them. The pilgrims are crowded into one small house. They are penniless and ill, but they are still hopeful that the Lord will come and they are waiting.—Times-Democrat.

If I do what I may in earnest, I need not mourn if I work no great work on this earth. To help the growth of a thought that struggles toward the light; to brush with gentle hand the earth-stain from the white of one snow-drop—such is my ambition—George MacDonald.

When asked, "What's a layman?" a pastor replied: "One who lays things upon his pastor which he himself ought to do."—Religious Herald.

The following note from Rev. C. W. Scott will be read with painful interest throughout the Mississippi Conference. Let fervent prayer be made that our dear brother may be speedily restored to health.

Rev. B. S. Rayner is quite sick at his parsonage-home at Fayette. For several weeks his health has been in a precarious condition—all the while under medical advice. On Sunday he traveled nine miles to visit a sick member and fill an appointment. A large congregation met him, but he was able to stand in the pulpit sufficiently long only to say that sudden illness prevented his preaching, when he retired immediately to Bro. McCaa's home, near the church, attended by Dr. J. J. Robertson. He was able to be moved home yesterday. We bespeak the prayers of the church in behalf of this faithful itinerant.

Philip Werlein, head of the great music house that bears his name, died at his home in this city on the sixth. His standing in business circles was first-class. He was a lifelong Methodist, and ardently devoted to the church. He was a consecrated Christian, who exemplified in his daily life, both in sickness and in health, the principles of our holy religion. He was a liberal contributor, not only to the institutions of the church, but to benevolent enterprises of all sorts. Suffering humanity never appealed to him in vain. In a quiet, unostentatious way he was constantly giving for the relief of the poor. He passed away in the full triumph of the Christian faith. He was a brother of Dr. S. H. Werlein, of the Southwest Missouri Conference.

EPWORTH LEAGUE DEPARTMENT.

"ALL FOR CHRIST."

LOUISIANA.

REV. THOMAS B. CLIFFORD, Jackson, La., EDITOR.

During the session of the Holston Conference, recently held in Bine field, W. Va, Rev. J S. W. Neel, in giving in his report, said, "I do not see how I ever got along without Epworth Leagues to help me."

We doubt not but that many preachers in other parts of our con nection have the same mind as Bro. Neel. What the League has done in Holston it can do in many other Conferences.

Herewith we print report from the Mission Rooms concerning the League work for missions in the bounds of the "Holston," as it recently appeared in the columns of the Nashville Advocate:

THE VICTORY OF THE LEAGUES IN HOLSTON.

About fifteen months ago the Holston League Conference undertook to wipe out the deficits on the home and foreign missionary assessments. The following is the record made: $10,000 was the assessment for for eign and $7,000 for home missions; $4,632 of the foreign, and $3 600 of the home assessment, was paid the previous year, leaving a deficit on the one of $5,368, and on the other of $3,400—a total deficit on both of $8,767. At the Annual Conference, one year ago, after the plan had been in operation two months, $1,080 was reported as increase on foreign and $622 on home missions—a total of $1,702. At the session of the Annual Conference, just held at Binefield, W. Va., an increase over last year of $2,796 on foreign and $1,601.54 on home missions—a total of $4,397.54—was reported. Adding to this the increase, $1,702, of the previous year, we have as a grand total of the increase in fourteen months, $5,862.67. The entire deficit of $8,767, reported two years ago, has been wiped out except $2,905, and that is to go this year. Of the two assessments ($17,000), $14 095 was paid this year. Two districts, Chattanooga and Wytheville, paid in full, and the former $500 over.

To show the increase in another way per capita: Payment in 1897 was 15 cents for home and foreign missions, 18 cents in 1898, and 25 cents in 1899. In 1897, 48 per cent. of the $17,000 was paid; in 1898, 58 per cent. was paid, and in 1899, 83 per cent. was paid.

It is gratifying to know that instead of taking from the other benevolent collections, a large increase was made aggregating nearly $1 200. It was hoped that the entire deficit would pass with the closing of the Conference year, and faithful work was done to this end. The Central Committee having the matter in charge have already begun the work of the new year with renewed vigor. Rev. P. L. Cobb was appointed Conference Missionary Secretary, without salary, and $300 was appropriated for his expenses.

MISSISSIPPI.

REV. HENRY G. HAWKINS, Madison, Miss., ASSOCIATE EDITOR.

We note with pleasure that Rev. M. M. Black, of Gloster, has already secured $97.50 on the 20th Century Fund. We remember, too, that in the early part of the year he had The New Century Education sent to many of his members. He has a committee of young ladies at work furnishing literature, collecting, and obtaining more subscriptions. All the churches will respond and do something towards this cause, if it be properly presented.

Mr. P E Williams, of Lumberton, who spent some of the days of his boyhood in the Pearl River community of Madison county, has sent a contribution to the committee that is raising funds for the erection of a monument at Pearl River Church to the memory of Dr. J. W. Lambuth.

Bishop O. P. Fitzgerald, who is to preside over the next Mississippi Conference, has sent a circular letter to the pastors asking their immediate and earnest co-operation in raising the "Twentieth Century Fund."

Michael Moses, a Syrian and Greek Catholic native of the Lebanon country, contributed a dollar to the Twentieth Century Fund at Madison. He is a peddler, and recently moved to Meridian.

At Drake's Chapel, on the Fannin circuit, a good League with 14 members was recently organized. H. C. Brown is pastor.

Miss Vio Thompson, the State secretary, has requested the district secretaries to send the associate editor monthly notes from their fields. We trust that the request will be heeded.

Rev. J. A Bowen, of Columbus, is a busy and successful pastor. Three good Sunday-schools, 3 Leagues, 4 prayer meetings, 600 church members, besides 150 Methodist girls in the college keep one preacher quite busy. There have been 150 accessions this year to the church, and Joe Ramsey is there now conducting a revival.

There are now 3 Epworth Leagues in Columbus. Two of these have been organized during the last two months. The East Columbus Senior League has 26 members. They take 10 copies of the Era, and are supplied with necessary facilities for the present. They meet once a week in the home of Rev. A. P. Leech, one of our superannuated preachers. He is the president, and "up to date," too. The Junior League was organized last week with about 40 members. They promise much for the future. The Senior League at the church is doing good work in all 3 departments. They take 30 Eras. Have just purchased the new Reading Course and some other good books. They stand ready to assist the pastor in the work assigned them. After furnishing some good material to the other two Leagues, they now have at least 100 members. During the year no less than 100 young people have "taken some part" in the League work

If your League meets and there has been a failure to prepare a program, you could probably not do better than to have the members take up the hymn book and for a half hour study one of the Articles of Religion. Indeed, for a weekly study Leaguers would find the Articles of Religion a subject interesting, profitable, and inexhaustible.

The circulation of the Era has grown at a rapid rate during the past twelve months, nearly twelve thousand new subscriptions having been secured in that time.

There has been issued from the Publishing House a nice leaflet descriptive of the Epworth Era. From it we clip the following:

WHAT IT STANDS FOR—ACROSTIC.

Earnest Living. Jude iii.
Purity of Life. I. Tim. iii, 9.
Wisdom Above Gold. Prov. xvi, 16.
Opportunities Improved. Gal. vi, 10.
Rejection of Evil. Rom. xii, 9.
Thanksgiving Always. Eph. v, 20.
Heathen Salvation. Matt. xxviii, 19.

Enduring Charity. I. Cor. xiii, 7.
Righteousness. Job xxvii, 6.
An Abiding Faith. Mark xi, 22.

Notice.

To the Epworth Leagues and Sunday-schools of the Mississippi Conference--

MY DEAR YOUNG FRIENDS: May I appeal to you in the interest of the great cause of missions? Only six weeks remain until the meeting of our Conference; yet you may do very much to help your pastor bring up his collections in full. With the Leagues and Sunday-schools fully interested in this cause, no pastor should report a deficit in this matter.

The Nashville Advocate, of Oct. 26, contains an interesting and inspiring account of the work done in the Holston Conference under the young people; also an article from Bishop Candler on the needs of the work in Cuba makes special appeal to our generosity. These, with a letter from Bishop Hendrix in the November number of the Review of Missions, would make excellent material for our pastors in their appeals for missions. T. B HOLLOMAN, Pres. Miss. Bd.

PAINT TALKS, XXII.

THE REAL PAINT ARGUMENT.

In some recent paint advertisements doubtless many readers have run across the argument that since sand does not improve sugar, zinc, barytes, etc., can not serve any good purpose in paint The argument is ingenious, but entirely misleading, since the first proposition has no possible relation to the statement deduced from it. Quite as reasonably might one assert that sand has no place in sugar, nails are useless in wood, lime in mortar, juice in oranges, or fillings in teeth; whereas the fact is that while sugar is not improved, but ruined by the addition of sand, nails are useful when wood is to be joined to wood, oranges would be very poor fruit without juice, mortar would not hold without lime and decayed teeth are saved by filling.

But all such argument proves nothing as regards paint. The only sure test of the value of any paint, or any component of paint, is the test of service. Now the test of service—the experience of centuries—has shown that pure white lead makes a very poor and very expensive paint, in that it perishes very rapidly, requiring constant renewal, that it becomes porous and absorbent of moisture even before it really begins to powder off, and that it is very subject to attack by atmosphere and other influences.

On the other hand experience shows that zinc white and the so-called inert pigments (barytes, gypsum, etc.) are not subject to deterioration.

Of the pigments just mentioned, zinc white is the only one which is, properly speaking, a paint pigment—the others serve merely to dilute the lead and thus retard its deterioration. Zinc white, however, not only dilutes, but protects the lead, and it is a fact universally recognized among paint manufacturers that no durable white or light tint can be made without zinc white.

Every village in the land possesses practical illustrations of this truism; on the one hand, houses painted with pure lead, lustreless, discolored and in a short time, paintless; on the other hand, houses painted with good combination based on zinc white, on which lustre, color and material are good long after lead and the poorer ready mixed emulsion paints have outlived both beauty and usefulness

The paint user, after all, is the one most interested in good paint. It will be money in his pocket to remember that pure oil and zinc white are its essentials. One beautiful durable job of painting is worth, as an argument, a thousand "sand and sugar" perversions. STANTON DUBLAY.

PIANOS AND ORGANS BY MAIL.

The immense advantage in purchasing from us by the mail system is the guaranteed selection on the part of the oldest and largest music house South.

Selling over one thousand pianos and organs each year, and buying goods in enormous quantities, enables us to give those dealing direct the benefit of the closest possible prices on high-grade pianos and organs.

Dealing direct with the customer by mail enables us to eliminate all such items as agents' commission, hotel bills, etc., and to give our customers prices that many factories do not equal to their wholesale trade. Each piano or organ selected by us goes from our warerooms with a guarantee that if it is not as recommended, it can be returned at our expense. Any customer in the South can obtain our lowest net price by mail, and in case of purchase, the selection and instrument will be absolutely guaranteed, and from five to seven years' trial allowed to test same.

Easy payments will be accepted, and old pianos or organs will be received as part payments.

Having been in business in New Orleans half a century buying and selling all grades of pianos, we are in a position to judge of the merits and demerits of the different makes, and to know their adaptability to our trying climate. We give our customers the advantage of that experience.

When on my day of life the night is falling,
And in the winds from nnsunned spaces blown,
I hear far voices out of darkness calling
My feet to paths nnknown.

Thou who hast made my home of life so pleasant,
Leave not its tenant when its walls decay;
O love divine, O helper ever present,
Be thou my strength and stay.

Be near me when all else is from me drifting,
Earth, sky, home's pictures, days of shade and shine,
And kindly faces to mine own uplifting
The love which answers mine.

I have but thee, O Father! Let thy spirit
Be with me to comfort and nphold;
No gate of pearl, no branch of palm, I merit,
Nor street of shining gold.

Suffice it if—my good and ill nnreckoned,
And both forgiven throngh thy abounding grace—
I find myself by hands familiar beckoned
Unto my fitting place—

Some humble door among thy many mansions,
Some sheltering shade where sin and striving cease,
And flows forever, through heaven's green expansions,
The river of thy peace.

There, from the music round about me stealing,
I shall would learn the new and holy song,
And find, at last, beneath thy tree of healing,
The life for which I long.

GETTING READY TO ENJOY.

Miss Muloch has well said in one of her books: "Nobody will see his own blessings, or open his heart to enjoy them, till the golden hour has gone by forever, and he finds out too late all that he might have had and made and done."

How true this is!

Oh, the waste of life, the precious years lost getting ready to enjoy! Oh, the delnsion of always pntting the time of enjoyment in the fnture, forever deferring good things until the tissnes have hardened and the nerves have lost their power to carry agreeable sensations! How many people there are who mnrder their capacity for enjoyment and make slaves of themselves in trying to hoard up that which they might have enjoyed in their yonnger days, and which will be but a mockery to them late in life!

Of what use are books and pictures and statues to him who has robbed his intellect of all that deepens and enhances life's valne? There is no greater self-deception than that which impels one to give the best part of himself and the best years of his life for something which he hopes to enjoy when the fires of yonth have departed, and there is nothing left bnt the embers and ashes of age.

The great secret of happiness is to learn to enjoy as we go along. Every day should be a holiday in the highest sense of the word. No matter how busy we are, something should be brought into every day's experience which will enlarge, broaden and deepen the mind. Every day should add a new layer of beauty and joy to life before it gives place to the morrow. It was not intended that one part of life shonld be filled with joy and the remainder be left barren.

It doesn't pay to look forward to enjoyment. A recent writer says: "I would as soon chase bntterflies for a living or bottle moonshine for a cloudy night. The only way to be happy is to take the drops of happiness as God gives them to us every day of our lives. The boy must learn to be happy while he is plodding over his lessons, the apprentice while he is learning his trade, the merchant while he is making his fortune, or they will be snre to miss their enjoyment when they have gained what they have sighed for."

How easily a busy man delndes himself with the idea that he will enjoy to-morrow or next year! His wife nrges him to go abroad or to travel over his own conntry, but he declares he can afford neither the time nor the money, "just yet." He is always getting ready to live in the future. He wants to postpone everything. Books, study, travel? "Too bnsy for such things now," is his constant excuse. To his wife's pleadings he answers: "We can't afford to send the boy or the girl to college this year; perhaps we may be able to next year. Wait until we are a little better off." He thinks he needs every dollar to support or extend his bnsiness this year. Next year he can afford to be generous, and he will travel or send the children to college. So he drifts from year to year, letting slip thousands of opportunities for enjoyment and doing good. In the meantime his nerves are hardening and his sensibilities becoming dulled by hard work and age. Years later he takes his wife to Europe, but his mind has been cramped and dwarfed so long in the business rut that he has lost the capacity for enjoyment. He has never developed his æsthetic nature; he can not enjoy works of art; he has never seen enongh of natnre to be able to appreciate its beauties. In fact, he has known nothing bnt business, bnsiness, bnsiness! He is disappointed with his trip to Enrope. He does not realize that he has destroyed the higher qualities of his nature, and that his finer sensibilities have become blunted by neglect and hard work nntil there is very little left for him to enjoy ontside of his old rontine. Thonsands of men retire from business nnder similar circumstances. Bnt, alas! there is nothing for them to retire to. The only enjoyment left for these automatons is to go on doing the same thing they have been doing all their lives.

It is very important, while planning for the future, to beware how we slight the now of life. This is the only time of which we are sure. We shonld nse it, not "with a prodigal's waste or a miser's stint," but with a wise determination to make every day yield something to the sum of onr happiness and highest welfare.—Success.

ONLY AN IDEA.

It was an English blacksmith, Newcomen, with no opportunities, who, in the seventeenth century, conceived the idea of moving a piston by the elastic force of steam; but his engine consnmed thirty ponnds of coal in prodncing one horse power. The perfection of the modern engine is largely due to James Watt, a poor, nneducated Scottish boy, who at fifteen, walked the streets of London in a vain search for work. A professor in the Glasgow University gave him the nse of a room to work in, and, while waiting for jobs, he experimented with old vials for steam reservoirs and hollow canes for pipes, for he could not bear to waste a moment. He improved Newcomen's engine by cntting off the steam after the piston had completed a quarter or third of its stroke, and letting the steam already in the chamber expand and drive the piston the remaining distance. This saved nearly three-fourths of the steam. Watt snffered from pinching poverty and hardships which would have disheartened ordinary men; but he was terribly in earnest, and his brave wife, Margaret, begged him not to mind her inconvenience, nor be disconraged. "If the engine will not work," she wrote him while strnggling in London, "something else will. Never despair."

"I had gone to take a walk," said Watt, "on a fine Sabbath afternoon, and had passed the old washing-honse, thinking upon the engine at the time, when the idea came into my head that, as steam is an elastic body, it wonld rush into a vacnnm, and if a communication were made between the cylinder and an exhansted vessel, it would rnsh into it, and might there be condensed withont cooling the cylinder." The idea was simple, bnt in it lay the germ of the first steam engine of mnch practical valne. Sir James Mackintosh places this poor Scottish boy who began with only an idea "at the head of all inventors, in all ages and all nations."—Success.

EXTRAVAGANCE.

Some persons have no notion of the value of money, or what a thing costs. They want it, and will have it. Nor are they content with a moderate priced article; they must have the very best. So they dress in the costliest of silks, wear the most precions of jewels, provide the most sumptnous of fares, travel in the most expensive of equipages, and live in the finest of style, going to the very verge of their means, and even beyond their ability, in the vain hope that somehow the purse will hold out and be refilled in dne season. They have no just conception of what economy means, never look ahead, live merely in and for the present gratification, and take little account of the day of settlement. They pile up acconnts, and when pay time arrives they feel the pressure, bnt somehow tide over the difficnlty, and think that they will do better in the futnre; yet the days and months and years roll by and no improvement appears, and at last the threatened collapse occnrs, when the splendid farniture, magnificent mansion and extensive possessions are sold at a sacrifice and pass into other hands. Spend-thrifts soon consnme a colossal fortune. Many, left their thousands, are in a few years penniless. Nnmbers who have become snddenly rich in specnlation have in a short period been reduced to want. "What comes easy goes easy" has become a truism. Extravagance speedily pulls down the vast accumnlations.

Wastefulness is a sin. To spend foolishly or needlessly has no Bible sanction. God gives abnndance, bnt he requires its right use and proper preservation. He commits his good things to ns in trnst. He regards what we have as loaned, not owned. He calls us his stewards, not proprietors. He holds ns responsible for onr possessions and acqnisitions. He who sqnanders his revenues commits a gross offense and has a terrible acconnt to render. Large snbstances wasted are a terrible thing for which to answer at heaven's bar. Riches are not intended to minister to extravagance, or to be lavished on self, withont regard to a hereafter, but are a gift to be divinely employed and accounted for.—Presbyterian.

DON'T WORRY.

The faces of the women one passes in the street form a cnrious and, too often, a saddening story. One woman purses np her lips, another screws her eyes into unnatnralness, while a third will wrinkle up her forehead and eyebrows nntil she looks absolntely ngly. The trick is an nnconscions one, bnt it is none the less a trick and a bad one. There is no reason why a woman should look forbidding and bad-tempered jnst because she is annoyed abont something. Deep-seated trouble has a way of writing itself npon the face, whether we will or not. Sickness, too, has its own handwriting, and will not be concealed by art. But the frown caused by snperficial tronbles should not be entertained by the face for an instant. We shonld strive to look as pleasant as possible for the sake of others. A corresponding cheerfulness of temperament will inevitably result, and always to the sweetening of onr natnre.

We can not afford to go abont with gloomy faces. To depress others is not for ns; onr work is to cheer, to raise up, to comfort; but we shall never do this unless we cultivate a pleasant demeanor, and the cheerful temper inseparable from it. This brings us to that question of worry. Can we pnt it more strongly than to say that it is a duty to put care, worry, fretfulness behind one? The habit must be learned, or we shall not "grow straight in the strength of our spirit and live out our life as the light," as Swinbnrne so well puts it. "It's difficnlt to do that," says some one. We all know that it is very hard; bnt women are not afraid of difficulties. The more difficnlt the right thing is to do, the greater reason for doing it. All we need is to make the first effort; strength will be born which will increase at each subseqnent attempt, and we shall conquer in the end. Salvation for women lies in this—not to be overcome by tronbles, bnt to overcome them.—The Family Doctor.

GRAVES—JESSIE MATTHEWS was the daughter of the late J. P. Matthews, of Hazlehurst, Miss., and was born June 30, 1867. She was married to Mr. W. S. Gravee, of Wesson, Miss., April 7, 1894. Soon after she moved to West Lake, La., where she died of malarial fever, Sept. 29, 1899. Her remains were brought to Hazlehurst, and there buried at the home of her mother. She leaves a bright, beautiful little boy two years old.

In childhood she was a beautiful, bright, winsome little girl, the idol of the home, a source of pleasure to all who knew her. When thirteen or fourteen years old she went to Meridian, Miss., to enter the E. M. F. College as a student. There committed to my special care, and as one of her teachers, I learned to know and love her. She had then all the artlessness and simplicity of her early childhood. Of a sweet, gentle, confiding disposition, affectionate and warm in her attachments, willing and ready to sacrifice for the good of others, she soon became a favorite with her teachers and schoolmates. Intellectually bright, she could easily and readily master the tasks assigned her as a pupil. While fond of the company and associations of friends, she had ambition to stand well in her classes, and always did so. Thus she won the esteem and approbation of her teachers, and bound to her the loving hearts of many young friends. Thus she grew up to be a bright, beautiful, cultured woman. The child of a Christian home, of the Sunday-school and church, she received the impress and inspiration of a Christian faith, and had the elements and virtues of a Christian character. One marked characteristic of her life, in childhood and womanhood, was a deep, warm, abiding affection for her mother, to whom her heart always turned, in joy and sadness, at home and away. R. J. JONES.

Jackson, Miss.

BROWN—Died near Lnoknow, Rankin County, Saturday morning, Oct. 7, 1899, Mrs. NANNIE BROWN, wife of R. D. Brown, of Jackson, Miss.

Mrs. Brown was the daughter of Col. W. K. Easterling, of Fannin, Miss., and was born Dec. 20, 1850. Her parents were Presbyterians, and she grew up in that communion. In young womanhood, however, she joined the Methodist Church, and lived a consistent member to the end. She was married to R. D. Brown in 1872. He and one of two daughters survive her.

Mrs. Brown's health has not been good for some time, and her constitution could not withstand the fever. She was nursed as carefully as possible by her family, but to no avail. After a brief, but severe, illness she died, and by loving hands was laid to rest under the forest trees near the place of her death, but far from her Jackson home.

She was a devoted wife and mother. Her life was given up to her home. Those who knew her best loved her most tenderly, and the light seems to have gone out of that home which she made so happy. Her every thought and action seemed for the good of those she loved. She will be long and tenderly mourned, and his remembrance of her gentle and unselfish life will be an abiding influence in the bereaved household. In her departure to be with Christ our church here loses one of its most consistent members, and our community one of its purest lives. R. W. BAILEY.

Jackson, Miss.

ALLISON—JOEL SAMUEL ALLISON, of Rolls county, Mo., but more recently of Handsboro, Miss., died in St. Louis, Oct. 10, 1899, aged forty-six years three months and eighteen days.

The deceased had been in ill-health for about one year, and had retired from business, hoping, by a change and rest and medical attention, to regain his health; but all that kind friends and relatives and the best of medical skill could do was unavailing. The man of strong mind and body and remarkable energy soon gave way. "The race was not to the swift, nor the battle to the strong."

Bro. Allison was highly esteemed by a host of friends in Rolls county, his boyhood home, but his loss will be felt very keenly in Handsboro, Harrison county, Miss., where he had lived the past twelve years, and where positions of trust and honor had been conferred upon him. Twice elected to the office of Superintendent of Public Instruction, he had developed a strong educational policy, and had much improved and strengthened the school system. As a member of the Handsboro Methodist Church, steward and Sunday-school superintendent, he was looked to as a leader, and prominent in all her work.

His remains were brought to his boyhood home for interment. After service in the [illegible] to rest in Lick Creek Cemetery, near Perry, Rolls county, Mo. The funeral services were conducted by his father's pastor and the writer.

CHARLES O. RANSFORD.

MYERS—Mrs. LULA NICHOLSON MYERS (nee Brown) was born in Lavacca county, Texas, July 18, 1865, and died at Pelahatchie, Miss., Oct. 10 1899. She came to Mississippi when about seventeen years old. She was married to Daniel T. Myers, June 16, 1885. They made their home in Louisiana, where they lived happily together until Oct. 4, 1898, when death invaded the home and carried away the fond husband and father. She, with the three sweet children, returned to Mississippi, but the season of mourning was short. One year and six days of widowhood, then the happy reunion.

For twenty years she was a devoted member of the Methodist Church. Her Christian life was consistent to the end. Patient, kind, sweet-spirited, she was beloved by all. Hers was a beautiful life. No wonder the end was so triumphant. Those who witnessed her going will never forget that heavenly scene. She gave directions concerning her funeral, told the loved ones good-by, asking them to meet her in heaven, and sweetly "fell on sleep." The children she committed to her sister, Mrs. Mattie Crook, wife of Bro. W. S. Crook, Sr. They could not have been left in better hands. P. D. HARDIN.

Texas Advocate please copy.

SIBLEY—Mrs. ALETHA BELLE SIBLEY (nee Mangum) was born in Smith county, Miss., Oct. 23 1870. She became a member of the M. E. Church, South, at Caney Creek Church, Trenton charge, Mississippi Conference, when but a child, and lived a faithful Christian till the Lord took her to himself on the night of Aug. 16, 1899. For several months before her death she endured the providences of God with patient suffering and sore bereavement, having buried her youngest child only a few weeks before her death.

She was married to Bro. R. A. Sibley, Jr., now of the Mississippi Conference, when quite a young woman. Now he is bereft of a loving companion; their three children a tender mother's love and care. How sad and lonely they must be without her! But, thank God! "earth has no sorrow that God can not heal." How sad to say farewell! How sweet to know 'tis not forever, but in the morning we shall meet again and know as we are known! They, loved ones, don't look at the lifeless form that lies asleep, but at the loved one up yonder with beckoning hands, calling, "Loved ones, come home." The Lord bless and save the bereaved ones. J. T. ABNEY.

Boxie, Miss.

FANT—Little JOE VAN, son of S. A. and Mrs. Lula G. Fant, was born June 26, 1838, and died of typhoid fever at Johnston's Station, Aug. 10, 1899.

Joe Van was a child of remarkably amiable disposition. Manly for his years, he was at the same time gentle, docile, and obedient. Unpretentious, he had, nevertheless, the faculty of entwining himself into the affections of those who came to know him. Let us bow our heads and humble our hearts in the presence of Him that doeth all things well. It must be that some divine end was accomplished in this providence of God. Since "all things work together for good to them that love the Lord," surely some good was intended for those who are made to sorrow.

Tender hands laid the body beside the dust of an infant sister who preceded her brother only a few brief months to the "home beyond." We left the grave with heavy hearts, but with the confident hope that we shall again meet the departed. To the bereaved parents earth-ties are becoming fewer and heaven-ties greater. God keeps adding to the heavenly attractions. What an inducement to lay up our treasures in heaven!

J. A. MOORE.

WHITE—Little HUGH BINE WHITE, seven years six months and nineteen days old, departed this life Sept. 24. Gone to try the realities of an unknown world to us. It was always his delight to go to the Sabbath-school; always knew his lessons; was considered the brightest boy of his age in the literary school. He was very obedient to parents and those over him. He never forgot the early training of his mother, who was taken from him two years ago. He would not go to bed without saying his prayers, and would repeat at least one verse of Scripture after grace every morning. He is now with Jesus.

WINE OF CARDUI

Woman Knows Woman.

ZURICH, KAN., Jan. 31.

I used Wine of Cardui for nervousness and weakness in the womb. After taking one bottle I was well again. I am a midwife and always recommend Wine of Cardui to my lady friends during pregnancy and after birth as a tonic. Every lady who takes it finds that it does even more than is claimed for it.

MRS. V. M. BOISVERT.

McELREE'S Wine of Cardui

Nobody knows woman like woman. Men go to medical colleges, study books and listen to lectures. They learn indirectly of the diseases of women, but they are men and can never fully understand the ailments, the sufferings, the agonies of mothers, wives and sisters. A woman knows. Mrs. Boisvert knows. She has passed through the trials and tribulations of her sex. She has been near by when her sisters suffered. She has seen them relieved and cured with Wine of Cardui. Is it any wonder she recommends it? Is it any wonder that thousands of other women recommend it. They know. They have actual experience to prompt them. They spread the tidings from mouth to mouth, telling how Wine of Cardui helps young girls, helps the weak of all ages, helps and cures all womanly ills.

Two Verdicts.

"After a fair and impartial trial you are judged guilty by this court, and you are sentenced to be hung by the neck until you are dead." The solemn tones of the judge, the despairing face of the prisoner, and the painful stillness of the court-room, makes it a scene of awful impress. Now turn to a brighter scene at the home circle. A mother radiant with joy over the recovery of a child snatched from the clutches of Malaria. An entire family rejoicing, and praising the merits of Dicks' Chillifuge, and giving their verdict that Chillifuge is without an equal for swiftness to cure.

Oliver Wendell Holmes once said, during the mighty struggle between the States, that the constant cry of the masses was for bread and newspapers. Now, since more than a third of a century has changed the political and financial issues, the great cry in the Southern States is for a pleasant and reliable Chill Tonic. Dicks' Chillifuge complies with this demand. It is as pleasant as orange syrup, and as prompt to cure malaria as the bitter Sulphate of Quinine. If you have a case of Chills or Fever which you can not break, try Chillifuge, and enjoy life once more.

The "Combination" Bible.

A SUPERB EDITION

of the Holy Scriptures, showing at a glance at the foot of the pages all changes made by the revisers.

New Type. All Proper Names Self-Pronouncing. The Most Valuable Collateral Matter.

There is a steady and increasing demand for first-class Bibles. Everybody is anxious to obtain a copy of the best edition of the Holy Scriptures. Old editions are constantly being replaced by Bibles that are in every way more attractive, and there is practically no limit to the demand.

OUR "COMBINATION" FEATURE.

Hitherto the King James and Revised Versions have been printed in parallel columns, but this makes comparisons of texts tedious and unsatisfactory, and makes the book very unwieldy. We have overcome this difficulty by "combining" the two Versions on the same page, showing at a glance in foot-notes all the Changes Additions and Omissions made by the Revisers.

THE OLD VERSION PRINTED IN FULL.

The King James Version is the basis, and this Version is read straight along from the text, while the Revised Version is read from the text in combination with the foot-notes. Our "Combination" Feature has met with universal approval and is strongly endorsed by all leading Divines and Biblical Scholars.

It is only by a comparison of the two Versions that the greatest benefit can be obtained from reading the Holy Scriptures, and this comparison every reader can easily make by our simple arrangement for showing the changes made by the revisers. This is the greatest triumph of Bible Publishing the World has ever known.

OUR OFFER.

To those unprogressive people who do not read and pay for the NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE we sell this Bible at the publisher's retail price—$4.25. To our subscribers we sell it at the very low rate of $2. The only condition attached to this offer is that the subscriber must pay his subscription one full year in advance, viz.: to November, 1900. We will send it postpaid to any person who will send us three new cash subscribers at the regular rate. For six new cash subscribers at the regular rate we will send two "Combination" Bibles, postpaid.

For fifty cents additional we will send a Bible with index.

For twenty-five cents additional we will have your name engraved in gilt letters on the outside.

Send for circular. Address REV. W. C. BLACK.

P. S.—We can give no commission on renewals in connection with the above offer.

New Machine Offer.

No. 4 IMPERIAL.

THE IMPERIAL HIGH-ARM SINGER will be found the perfection of mechanism as regards simplicity, durability and adaptability to the wide range of work embraced in the general family needs.

A Handsome, Light-Running, Lock-Stitch, High-Arm Machine that will not fail to please the most fastidious. Embracing all the advantages with all desirable improvements of other first-class sewing machines, so simple in mechanism that the most inexperienced need no assistance in operating it. Book of instructions with every machine. Any child can learn to run it.

Extra Set of Attachments also free with each machine, consisting of the following: One Tucker, One Foot Ruffler, One Set of Plate Hemmers, four different widths up to ½ of an inch, One Binder and One Thread Cutter.

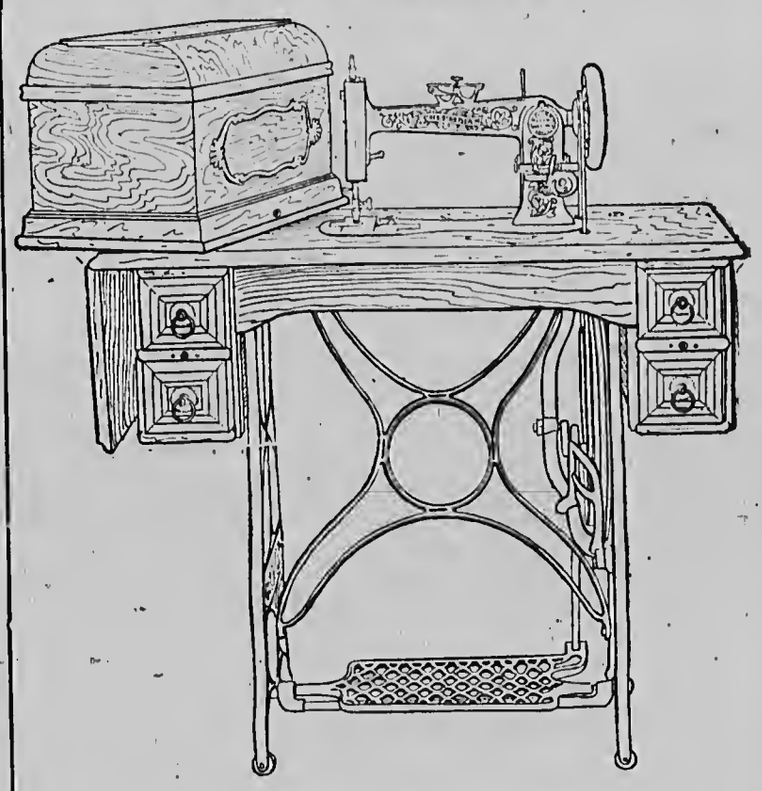
No. 3 Machine, drop leaf table, gothic cover, case of two drawers at one end and center drawer. Dealer's price, $24. Our price, $14.75.

No. 4 Machine, drop leaf table, gothic cover, case of two drawers at each end and center drawer. Dealer's price, $25. Our price, $15.50.

No. 5 Machine, drop leaf table, gothic cover, case of three drawers at each end, making seven drawers in all. Dealer's price, $26. Our price, $16.25.

Furnished Free with every machine are the following named accessories: One Foot Hemmer One Screw Driver, One Wrench, One Oil Can and Oil, One Gauge Screw, One Extra Check Spring, One Package of Needles, Five Bobbins and One Instruction Book.

No. 4 Columbian.



EXCELLENCE OF THE COLUMBIAN.—All wearing parts are of case-hardened steel possessing great durability, and by the turning of a screw all lost motion caused by wear can be taken up. All parts are fitted so accurately that the machines are absolutely noiseless, and as easy running as fine adjustment and best mechanical skill is possible to produce. No expense or time is spared to make them perfect in every respect, as every machine passes a rigid inspection by competent men before leaving the factory.

NICKEL PLATED.—The balance wheel and many of the fine parts are nickel-plated, with other parts finely enameled and ornamented, giving it a rich appearance.

A Self-Setting Needle and Self-Threading Cylinder Shuttle are used in the Columbian High-Arm Sewing Machine. They are so simple that any one can easily operate them in a few minutes' time, as our Instruction Book is fully illustrated, showing how to do all kinds of fancy work with attachments.

Extra Attachments, in velvet-lined case, sent free with each machine: 1 Tucker, 1 Ruffler with shirring plate, 1 Hemmer set (4 widths) and Binder, 1 Braider (Foot and Slide), 1 Thread Cutter.

ADDITIONAL ACCESSORIES.—Each machine is supplied with the following outfit: 1 Hemmer and Feller (one piece), 10 Needles, 6 Bobbins, 1 Wrench, 1 Screw Driver, Oil Can with Oil, Cloth Gauge and Thumb Screw, and a Book of Instructions. The Book of Instructions is profusely illustrated, and answers the purpose of a competent teacher.

No. 3—Drop leaf, Bent cover, case of two drawers at one end and center drawer. Dealer's price, $29. Our price, $17.

No. 4—Drop leaf table, Bent cover, case of two drawers at each end and center drawer. Dealer's price, $31. Our price, $17.75.

No. 5—Drop leaf table, Bent cover, case of three drawers at each end and center drawer, making a seven-drawer machine. Dealer's price, $33. Our price, $18.50.

The chief difference between Numbers 3, 4, and 5 is in the furniture—i. e., the number of drawers. If you do not want to pay for the extra drawers, you need not do so. We sell these machines under a ten years' guarantee, by which we mean that if any part gives out by reason of any defect therein, the manufacturer will replace the same free of charge. Moreover, we allow the purchaser to test the machine ten days. If at the end of ten days you are not satisfied, you have only to drop us a postal card, and your money will be refunded.

OUR OFFER.

We will send any one of the above-described machines at the prices named, and also send the ADVOCATE free for six months. The only condition attached to this offer is that subscribers who are in arrears must first pay up all arrearages to date. It would be well to avail yourself of this offer at once, as we can not promise that it will last very long. Notice that you take no risk whatever. We do all the risking. Address

THE GUARDIAN OF CHILDREN.

Slow circling upon outstretched wing
The fierce, rapacious bird of prey
Glides near that small sweet, tender thing
Those cruel claws would snatch away.

O, how that mother's heart must leap
To drive this peril of the air
Away from that soft nest of sleep
With all her love and longing there.

But see the staunch defender rise
With bristling mane and head erect,
No power can snatch that precious prize,
While he stands ready to protect.

Sleep on sweet babe, your mother's breast
Once more shall press you close and warm,
No evil bird shall e'er molest
While this brave guardian scents the harm.

To protect her little ones is among the strongest instincts of a mother's heart, and through all the thousands cares and worries of a busy woman's life there arises ever and anon the thought "O, if I could do more for my baby!"

But mothers are too often weighed down and weakened with their own daily burdens to do any more than struggle almost hopelessly against the physical and mental evils that beset themselves, with no strength left to care for others. Women with large families find that the very ordeal of bringing children into the world, and nursing and rearing them to boyhood and girlhood, is so great a draft upon the mother's strength that she herself becomes the natural object of care and protection.

It is a glorious boon to the women of this generation that the wonderful supportive tonic, originated by Dr. Pierce, of Buffalo, N.Y., is capable of sustaining them through the ordeal of frequent motherhood and bringing them out of it with unimpaired womanly strength and energy.

Motherhood is not only the grandest of woman's possibilities, but is the natural fulfillment of her physical being and when prepared for with proper observance of nature's laws and attended by reasonable care should be free from the mental depression, excessive pain and subsequent prostration so commonly experienced. Thousands of women have found that the use of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription during the expectant time and over the nursing period imparts precisely the local strength and constitutional reinforcement needed to carry them over this critical juncture cheerfully, safely, almost painlessly.

It affords direct organic endurance and constitutional nerve-force. It gives recuperative power; it promotes the secretion of abundant healthy nourishment for the child during the nursing period. It is in the best sense the guardian of childhood for it not only enables the mother to take up the work of life again with vigor and enjoyment but through her it imbues the little one with the rugged natural strength which is a constant protection against the physical evils with which childhood is constantly assailed.

What Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription does for mothers and their children is well exemplified in the experience of Mrs. H. M. Hansrote, of Magnolia, Morgan Co., W. Va. In a recent letter to Dr. Pierce she writes:

"I commenced to take Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription something over two years ago, and am glad to testify that it is a God-send to womankind. The three children who were born before I began to take your medicine did not live long; they were very delicate, but those born since (three in all) are very hearty, and that convinces me that your medicine is just what it is said to be and a great deal more. I could tell enough to fill a book about the way I suffered and the way your medicine acted. Indeed, every woman on the globe ought to know about your medicine."

Another lady, Mrs. Elizabeth Hull, of 27 Merrick St., Pawtucket, R. I., writes: "I have had fifteen babies, and always had a bad time. Sometimes I have had to have two doctors. I began taking your 'Favorite Prescription' last July and in September I gave birth to two little girls and I never had such an easy time. I had no doctor and did not suffer half as long as before. My twins when born weighed ten pounds each. They are fine girls, now four months old."

Dr. Pierce's Common Sense Medical Adviser tells you how to treat almost every known form of disease at home and just what to do in case of emergency. There is no trouble in understanding it. It contains 1008 pages and more than 700 illustrations. A paper-covered copy will be sent free for 21 one-cent stamps, by the World's Dispensary Medical Association, Buffalo, N. Y. If a French cloth binding is wanted, send ten cents more, thirty-one stamps in all.

HOLMAN BIBLE FOR $1.

From now until the first of December we will sell the Holman Self-Pronouncing Bible in Minion type on conditions named below for $1. This Bible, besides the self-pronouncing feature, has all the Oxford Helps. It is bound in the same style as our Bourgeois Bible. It is the best Bible for the money ever sold in this section. The condition attached to this offer is that you must pay your subscription one full year in advance, viz.: to November, 1900. For only 25 cents you can have your name engraved in letters of gold on the outside. Address

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

Opinion in Berlin inclines strongly in favor of a commercial treaty with the United States.

It is reported that the United States will work in harmony with England to maintain the "open door in China."

British defeats in Natal are causing bitter criticism of Gen. White and the Marquis of Lansdowne in England.

W. C. Coleman, the richest American negro, has started a large cotton mill at Concord, N. C., which has 5000 spindles.

The insurgent army of Gen. Durand of Peru has met with a decisive defeat, which will probably bring the revolution to an end.

The three powers interested in Samoa are said to have decided to dissolve the tripartite agreement and partition the islands.

In the city election, on Tuesday, Nov. 7, the Regular Democrats won by a majority of over 6,000, Capdevielle being elected for mayor.

Gen. Wheaton with a brigade has been sent to Dagupan to advance on the Filipinos from the north, while Lawton and MacArthur attack from the south.

Rev. Dr. Henry S. Stimson, of Manhattan Congregational Church, New York, at a gathering of churchmen, raised a missionary collection of $56,000 in fifty-six minutes.

Some 300 men who enlisted in Chicago in Mississippi regiments are instituting claims against that State, under an old and forgotten law, granting a bounty of $60 to every soldier not a resident of the State enlisting in its regiments.

Miss Helen Gould has already given $6000 to the League for Social Service, to be used in the crusade against Mormonism. Much of this has been spent in the publishing and distribution of pamphlets concerning the question.

This year of 1899, now in its last weeks of duration, promises to be notable politically for its independent political movements against the old parties. The most interesting, outside of our own, are the political canvasses in Ohio and Kentucky.

At Bacolod, in the Island of Negros, the first autonomous government of the Filipinos was established on Nov. 6. General Smith, governor of the Island of Negros, administered the oath of office to the judge of the supreme court, who in turn swore in the governor, three judges, twelve councilmen, the auditor and the secretary of the interior. The natives of the entire island attended the ceremony.

Although news has continued scarce as to the progress of events in South Africa, such reports as have been received throw considerable light upon recent happenings. There is now every reason to believe that Ladysmith, although surrounded, has not fallen, and the British military authorities believe that the garrison there will be able to hold out until relieved, as the camp is well stocked with all classes of supplies. The railroad leading south to Pietermaritzburg has been cut, but the besieguered British have apparently been successful in sending information to the outside world by means of carrier pigeons.

The opening of bids at Washington a few days ago for the construction of the six protected cruisers of about 3200 tons displacement, authorized by the last Congress, brought out proposals from ten firms, none of which, with the single exception of the Union Iron Works of San Francisco, have been heretofore prominently identified in the construction of large vessels for the navy. The bids of all these firms were well within the limits fixed by Congress, and as many as four of them offered alternative designs of their own, providing for much greater speed, as well as larger displacement than that called for by the department's designs.

Although but meager details have reached the outside world as to the progress of events in Natal, where General Sir George White, the British commander, with his eight or nine thousand troops, is holding out against fully thirty thousand Boers, there is every reason to believe that important events are transpiring. The British Government has officially announced that the British forces have evacuated Colenso and have retired further south, probably to Estcourt. This means that the important bridge across the Tugela river and the railroad to Ladysmith, north of that river, are in the hands of the Boers, and, consequently, that Ladysmith has been cut off and isolated.

The extent to which the government is constructing and operating cable and telegraph lines, as a result of recent territorial acquisition and control, is brought out in the report of General Greely, chief signal officer. This shows that the telegraph system of Cuba formerly owned and operated by Spain has been taken over and developed by the signal corps, and that at the close of the fiscal year 2500 miles of line were in operation, of which 600 miles were absolutely new lines, and the remainder largely reconstructed. General Greely recommends the laying of a deep sea cable between Puerto Rico and Cuba, which will cost about $600,000. By this means all communication between Puerto Rico and the United States would pass over strictly American lines.

BROWN—WHITTLE.—At the residence of the bride's father, Aug. 9, 1899, by Rev. L. F. Alford, Mr. W. F. Brown to Miss Nannie V. Whittle, all of Kemper county, Miss.

McLAURIN—CUMMINS.—At the residence of the bride's father, Aug. 16, 1899, by Rev. L. F. Alford, Mr. Robt. H. McLaurin to Miss Lillian Cummins, all of Kemper county, Miss.

MULLER—DARSAM.—In Borgnndy Street Methodist Church, New Orleans, Nov. 2, 1899, by Rev. Thomas B. Clifford, Mr. Charles H. Muller, of the Muller Furniture and Mfg. Co., to Miss Louisa Helena Darsam, all of New Orleans.

PILGRIM HOME was built for God. A religious work will be carried on in it for the salvation of souls and the healing of diseases without remedies, depending alone on Jesus, who healed all who had faith in His name, as in the Apostles' time. Dr. D. M. Bye claims that after twenty years of success as a specialist for cancers and tumors, the Lord led him to the Oil Cure and for the last eight years the Doctor has been curing all manner of malignant diseases by anointing with oils. The remedy is not only mild and safe, but cures internal as well as external cancers and tumors and gives relief from unceasing pain. Many thousands of bad cases of cancers and tumors have been cured by using Dr. Bye's Oil Treatment and many healed by faith alone. The Doctor has received thousands of good letters from persons cured. Hundreds from ministers and Christian patients are printed in books and papers, which if one will read they will plainly see that surely God's blessing is with the Oil Cure. In the large book there are many half-toned photos showing conditions before and after treatment, which is sent FREE, giving particulars and price of Oil. Its just popularity is shown by the fact that at this time over three thousand patients are taking home treatment. Its great success has caused many counterfeiting imitators, therefore be careful. The country is full of frauds. Note this one thing: Of all the great number who have come to Indianapolis for treatment, not one has yet died on the Doctor's hands; no undertaker has yet received one cent. PRAISE THE LORD. The Doctor firmly believes it won't be long when more persons will be healed at Pilgrim Home by faith alone in Jesus than by oils, yet all have not so great faith and must use the Oil Treatment administered with God's blessing for a cure. Add. Dr. D. M. Bye, Lock Box 25, Indianapolis, Ind.

SPANISH-AMERICAN WAR PANORAMA
is one of the war books which is likely to be in continuous demand. It is a panoramic record of the triumph of Yankee Doodle. The eagle flaps his wings on every page, and "Old Glory" waves around and above every scene. Prominent officers connected with the war are here portrayed, as well as many of the "men behind the guns." Military life is pictured to the eye, from recruiting to guard mount and skirmish line. Nor is the ludicrous omitted. The company cook receives the attention due to his importance; the mess is shown; cavalry scenes are given; the hospital arrangements are depicted; the heroines of the Red Cross service are displayed; street scenes in Havana, Santiago and elsewhere are unrolled, the new citizens or subjects (which are they?) of Uncle Sam appear and disappear as the leaves are turned.

In a word, the gazer visits the new localities and sees the tumultuous new life, without the risk or expense of a sea voyage.

The Album is 5½x8 inches, weighs 12 ounces, printed on finest coated paper.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From Our Regular Correspondent.)

Count Cassini, Russian Ambassador to the United States, who has just returned from a visit to Russia, delighted the friends of peace by saying in the most positive terms that a sensational story, cabled from London this week, that Russia and Japan were on the verge of war over Korea. Speaking of the matter, he said: "This is a renewed effort to stir up trouble. If anyone would know of the imminence of such an affair, I would know. I have recently been talking with our minister in Korea, Mr. Pavloff, who was charge d'affaires at Pekin while I was minister there, and he will be here in a few days, en route to Korea. The conditions in Korea do not warrant any reports of friction between Russia and Japan. We have entered into a formal agreement concerning our undertakings in Korea, and this is working with entire satisfaction." Count Cassini said of another matter which has aroused much interest in this country—the report that Russia, either alone or in concert with other European nations, contemplated interference to stop the war in South Africa: "Of course, all Europe is watching this conflict with profound interest and concern. But from the interest of observers, and there is no suggestion or thought of intervention or move of any kind from outside quarters. The loss of life which is occurring is particularly regrettable, and it is to the interest of all that peace should be speedily restored."

Ex-Gov. Hoyt, who is chairman of the National Committee to promote the establishment of the University of the United States, is in Washington. When asked whether the resolutions adopted by the committee of the National Educational Association for a government-controlled university would effect the work of his committee, Gov. Hoyt replied: "The action of the committee of fifteen will not affect the general plans of the national university committee. The latter, composed as it is of hundreds of college and university presidents, to say nothing of the great number of other scholars, scientists and statesmen, and re-enforced more and more by well-organized and active allies in all the States, will continue its efforts until the University of the United States in some suitable form is established."

Those who know Rear-Admiral W. S. Schley do not need to be informed of his great respect for religion, and the strong belief that all men are improved by attending religious services. They know that he has often made selections from the Bible to his men, when he happened to have command of a ship which had no chaplain on board, but he recently used language to a party of Washington friends which might, with propriety to all concerned, be printed and hung up in the ward-room of every ship in our navy as a guide to the younger officers in the service. He said: "I always make a rule to attend some form of church service every Sunday, no matter where I may be, whether at home, in foreign parts, or on shipboard. As a naval officer of a moral country, I believe it to be a bounden and official duty to inculcate good morals in the men under my command, and to let everyone know, foreigners especially, that the country I represent is one of a people universally acknowledging allegiance to the great God." If these commendable principles were followed by all of our army and navy officers, the Christian element of the country would not have been shocked on Monday morning to read in the newspaper dispatches from Havana that United States army and navy officers had been jockeys in the Sunday horse-races held in that city, and that the American general in command of that city was the owner of one of the horses in those races. The Cubans have no respect for the sanctity of the Christian Sabbath, because they have never been taught to have any; but it is entirely different with our officers. There are few, if any, of them who were not reared in families and communities which believed in keeping the Sabbath free from secular amusements. We can not expect to make the Cubans better by accepting their vices and introducing new ones to them.

Dr. J. J. Muir, pastor of the E Street Baptist Church, voiced the thoughts of many conscientious pastors when he said in an anniversary sermon: "Pastoral success comprehends more than is generally described as pulpit success. A pastor is more than a preacher. It is true that his work relates especially to this important phase of ministerial life, and the pulpit is the place where his influence must be felt. There he is to wield the scepter as God's representative in word-doctrine. To be a successful preacher in these days of many isms and sensations is a consummation to be wished. It is not an easy thing to preach acceptably, even under the most favorable circumstances, but it is especially difficult where itching ears are multiplying, and novelty is more eagerly sought after by the multitude than a knowledge of eternal verities. The strain upon a minister in his exalted service comes when he fails to be appreciated by an age which desires to be pleased rather than profoundly affected toward God."

GRENADA COLLEGE.

MR. EDITOR: So many kind inquiries have been made as to the reawakening of the North Mississippi Conference school, that it will probably be not uninteresting to your readers to hear from one who counts herself happy to again become a member of its faculty. I think I can now appreciate the feelings of the great Napoleon (with apologies, of course, to his shades for mentioning his name in this connection) when, on his return from Elba, the band of the Old Guard played, "Where had one better be than in the bosom of his family?" To me, after a nearly ten years' absence, all Grenada—and, indeed, all Mississippi—seems like one great family. The best friends of the college would not have hoped for a finer opening, or better prospects, than have fallen to the lot of the school. With the delay of opening the canvass for pupils, and all the drawbacks attending the close competition and miserably "reduced rates" of neighboring schools, there were some who feared that the present scholastic year might not be crowned with the success which the school deserves.

All such fears, however, have proven groundless. With only two regular workers in the field—President McIntosh and his competent lady principal, Mrs. M. I. Hoskins—both confining themselves strictly to the Conference territory, the outcome has been such as to make one wonder what it might have been under normal conditions. One of the many Conference ministers who have visited the school since the opening said, on viewing the large number of girls collected in the chapel, "Somebody has been praying for our school." No one who knows our president and his consecrated wife will doubt for a moment that they prayed as they worked, and that the present happy state of affairs is largely due to the "old-time religion," which is good enough for schools as well as individuals. Certainly it is inculcated here from chapel to dormitory, and the effects are so plain that "he who runs may read." After two months of hard work the curriculum has been raised by the addition of Greek and Anglo-Saxon, and the substitution of the text-books on logic and psychology, used at Vanderbilt University, for the older works formerly used; so that hard work is necessary. Not a single breach of discipline, nor a single case of serious illness, has been reported. The girls—and this applies especially to the large number of girls from the Delta—under a regimen which includes plenty of good food, pure air, and physical exercise, are fast developing into that condition so strenuously insisted upon by model educators, "A sound mind in a sound body." Recently a young teacher said, with tears in her eyes, "I have found out that education without health amounts to nothing," and I wished then that every girl in our broad land could have heard the statement as she made it.

After such a long absence from the schools of Mississippi, in church schools the entire time, but under varying conditions, there are two features of the work here that strike me as being decidedly unique. One is, that all of the pupils, and, with one exception, the teachers, are home products, the products mainly of North Mississippi Methodism. The school has reached a point in its history where it is entirely independent of any other territory.

The large percentage of preachers' daughters among the students and in the faculty is extremely noticeable, and emphasizes the fact that the Conference school is paying back with interest that body under whose fostering care it has reached its present proportions. I make no invidious distinction when I say that the work of the young teachers—most of them daughters of ministers of the North Mississippi Conference—is above par, creditable alike to themselves and to the school. It would be hard to estimate the good that is being done to the daughters of ministers who are members of the student body. One instance alone will suffice to show the attitude of the president on that question.

There is no name on the college roster that is more respected, that is spoken more gently and tenderly by teachers and pupils, than that of our sweet-faced, low-voiced Mary Koon, the daughter of a deceased minister of this Conference, the eldest of several children, all of whom had found kindly shelter and treatment in the Methodist Orphans' Home at Water Valley. As a consecrated Christian, a diligent student, and as secretary of the "May McIntosh Missionary Society," she is loved and respected by all, and the time is not far distant when, through the medium of this school, she will be capable of supporting herself and those left, in the providence of God, to her care.

The second point that impresses me is the peculiar fitness of this quiet old town on the Yalabusha as a location for a girls' school. After years of teaching in university towns I have become convinced of one fact, viz.: that no matter how lovable, gentle, and easily entreated the average university student may be, he is not studious of the quietude and peace of mind, of the presidents and teachers of schools of the opposite sex, and his interest in the students of those institutions is sometimes so intense as to become painful to others. For this reason when Dr. Barker, at that time president of Martin College, had a bill formulated to repress the inclination of young men in Tennessee who felt too much interest in schools for young ladies, the rush of school principals to encourage and endorse the bill carried it without delay through that august body, the Tennessee Legislature, and what is familiarly known as the "Johnnie Bill" became a law.

Now, in Grenada we need no "Johnnie Bill." The "Johnnies" are either not here, or they are indifferent to the welfare of the school, and legislation for their benefit would be superfluous. Surrounded by a people who are heartily in sympathy with the college, and whose traditions are all of a past when the standard of womanhood was at its highest, "far from the madding crowd's ignoble strife," we keep the even tenor of our way.

The college is nearing its semi centennial, and the two literary societies hope, in June next, to celebrate that event with fitting exercise. I trust that when its hundredth anniversary shall have been reached the old college will still be found polishing its daughters "after the similitude of a palace."

LETTER FROM "GILDEROY."

This scribe never uttered a word or wrote a line in his life against a better educated ministry. In the ADVOCATE, of Oct. 5, I was reporting the talk current among the preachers and leading laymen when the dearth of preachers in our North Mississippi territory was up for consideration. The sentiment attributed to me was expressed by others, not by me.

No sane man, who has suffered from a limited education as I have, could possibly wish to see any other preacher maimed for life as I have been. My life-long embarrassment and limitations have made me an enthusiastic advocate for the education and thorough equipment of young men called of God to preach the gospel. It is a joy to me that I have helped several young men, poor boys and sons of widows, to get a good course of training in college. At least one of these, now prominent in the work of the church, was almost wholly dependent on the help I gave him. I had but little money of my own to spare, but I could always get it for him. It is also a joy to me that I have stopped a number of young men after they were recommended for admission on trial, and prevailed on them to qualify themselves for the work. I am glad, too, that I persuaded two or three young men, after they had traveled a year or two, to stop and go to school. No man need say that "Gilderoy" is opposed to an educated ministry. More: no young man shall come under my influence without being urged, pressed and, if need be, helped to fit himself for this greatest of all works.

Till this day it fills me brimful to sit under the ministry of thoroughly equipped men; men who can instruct me and edify me in the doctrine and Word of God. I see how easily, clearly and powerfully they can do what I can not do at all, at all. They are trained men, and I am not.

I shall never get over a consciousness of my lack of education and my limitations, specially in towns and among our better educated people. It looks like folly for me to try to instruct people who know more in a minute than I ever knew in all my life. The school children, boys and girls, can point out my mistakes and blunders in grammar, pronunciation, in rhetoric, in logic, in history, in geography, and in almost everything else. These things mar my preaching, and greatly limit the effect and power of it. The only saving clause in my case is that, from childhood I have been a diligent student of theology, and, in some sort, I understand the doctrines of our church and of God's Holy Word. This store of information might be useful to others if I were master of the means and medium of communication. As it is, it is largely useless plunder. Words are the signs of ideas, and they are the vehicles of communication, and he who knows how best to frame words into sentences can best communicate his thoughts to others. Many a good man is crippled at this point.

A trained hand will do better work, and more of it, than a raw hand—an unpracticed hand. This is true of the mind. It needs to be cultivated and trained to work. The best trained mind will do the most and the best work. When I hear a trained mind preach and expound the Word of God, I am filled with wonder and amazement at the order of it, the simplicity of it, and at the ease with which I get hold of it and retain it. It is so natural, orderly, and easy, it looks like anybody might do it. Sometimes I try it, but I lack the mind-craft to do that kind of work. It is not so much a question of gifts as of training. An orderly, systematic sermon is easier to preach, and is more readily remembered, and results in more permanent good, than an incoherent exhortation, however warm it may be. The zeal of the exhorter warms me up for the time, but the systematic, orderly, coherent utterance of the thinker abides with me for a life-time. It is meat for half a century. This is the kind of work I long to be fitted for; work that abides and grows through long, long years. The lack of training and thorough equipment limits my ministry in the range of it, and in the power and influence of it. I have to be sent where the people have grace enough to endure a poorly qualified man. The Bishop and his advisers know all this, and they have to consider it when fixing my appointment, and, then, they always give me better charges than I am qualified to fill.

In this I have related largely my own experience, for the reason that men are much alike in this life, and experiences are about the same.

GILDEROY.

"A DEARTH OF PREACHERS, AND ELSE."

In the last issue of the ADVOCATE my friend, Bro. W. B. Lewis, has a sensible and well-seasoned article on the above-named subject. I agree that "Gilderoy" and Bro. Honnoll have seen and suggested some of the causes of this dearth, and yet I most heartily endorse the leading idea in W. B. Lewis' article, to-wit: that education should make a preacher more efficient in his effort to reach the unlettered than he would be without it. "Not less education, but more religion," is our need. Bro. Lewis strikes the key-note when he says that true education will fit a preacher more completely to work among the poor and the ignorant. We must insist on this point, because it involves the very heart of Christian education. It means to make a man strong, that he may go down among his weak, struggling brethren, and with God's help re-enforcing his own mental and moral powers, be able to lead them up to higher and better things. If he does not know the higher and better things himself, he can never lead others to know them.

Again: Bro. Lewis suggests that there are some educated people in the rural districts, and hence the necessity is greater to send educated preachers there than ever before. This is true. The school teacher and the newspaper are abroad in the land, and the preacher who is not equipped, and has no mind to equip himself, can not hope to succeed. The point is well taken that there was no hindering margin between Mr. Wesley and the poor, ignorant colliers of England.

Mr. Editor, permit me to write, in all plainness and candor, just a few words about this matter. In the first place:

1. Too much stress has been placed upon the material, to the neglect of the spiritual, in religion. We estimate a preacher largely by the salary he receives, and the charge by the salary it pays. If a brother is sent to a charge this year that pays him less than he received last year, the rumor goes the round of the Conference that this brother is "losing ground in his Conference." And the charge is estimated in the same way. How many preachers estimate a pastoral charge by any other standard than the salary it pays? How many estimate it by the opportunity it furnishes to work for the Master? Let no one imagine that I believe that our preachers are mercenary, but I do believe that what I here write is too painfully true. Is it not a fact that we estimate a man's work by the material returns he makes rather than by the number of genuine conversions he has had? Why not more conversions? Such a question brings the saddest of reflections. In the next place:

2. Too many of our best educated young preachers feel that it is belittling to their dignity to go to a poor charge. What is the purpose of education? To remove a man from the masses? Rather to enable him to help the masses. If the source of our moral supply is in the country, then we need to send our strongest men there to save our boys and girls, and make the rural districts the source of power in the world. But there is a dearth of preachers; and what has caused it, and how may the trouble be remedied? I would modestly suggest that we need to confess our sins before Almighty God, acknowledge our need, and wrestle with God for the old-time power.

T. W. LEWIS.

NOTES FROM THE HIGHWAYS.

MR. EDITOR: My opportunity to redeem my promise of "occasional notes from the field" has been good indeed for the past fortnight had I been permitted to enter the field. Our physicians having reported no new cases of fever for ten days, I decided it was duty to quit my quarters in Jackson and resume my labors among the brethren, but such was not to be the result. I found the presiding elder was not near so popular or indispensable as he had vainly imagined.

Eschewing all railroad facilities, we hitched up the admiral and launched forth, resolved to depend on the cotton pens and persimmon trees for bed and board, and while we found both in greatest sufficiency, we also found some ready to take us in. With some to have been in Jackson at all was enough. I never owned a pistol in my life, and I am certain that a half dozen buckled to my belt would not do more execution with some as the mere suggestion that my pockets were full of crawling, squirming microbes. At one point I was thought to have a gripful of these mysterious little creatures. While in my person all was satisfactory, and nothing to be feared from my suit, my satchel had not been fumigated, though never near a germ, and, therefore, I must seek other quarters. Remembering the teaching of my parents not to intrude where not wanted, I bade goodby and turned to other quarters. Before setting forth again I tried the virtue of sulphur fumes on all my wardrobe, and the grip, too; so now, when questioned, I have only to reply, "Everything has been fumigated but the admiral," and that is my passport. With a comfortable bed among the country folks, my buggy for library, and George Dewey for good company, I pass the day's "travelings in the bounds of the district" according to Discipline.

Well, at last I am at work again. Have held two Quarterly Conferences on the fourth round, and have three a week until Conference convenes; so these notes must stop for lack of time.

At all points on the district reports are cheering. Vaughan's circuit has met all claims for preachers, and has five weeks of grace. This young circuit is rejoicing in her record for this, her first year.

We hope for full reports from every charge. With cotton booming in price, there is but one reason for the pastors not to be paid in full on all our circuits—indifference on the part of the people.

Brother, if your steward neglects you, don't you neglect your pastor; pay what you owe.

"SEARCH THE SCRIPTURES."

Acknowledged as the Bible is by the civilized world to be the best of all books, the gift of God to man, the chart of human life, the fountain of light and hope, and the source of all that is noblest in our civilization, does it not seem surprising that this wonderful volume should be neglected by any who have knowledge of its nature and supreme importance? Yet, strange to say, multitudes who accept the Bible as an inspired volume, and profess to follow its teachings, are almost as little acquainted with its contents as if it were a sealed book or printed in an unknown tongue. As long as any disciple is neglectful in this matter, he is certain to remain but a "babe in Christ," weak in faith, and an easy prey to temptation. Our love for God's Word, or our lack of it, is an almost unfailing index to our spiritual state. Unless we daily partake of "the bread of life," how is it possible for us to grow in the knowledge and love of God? Unless we learn how to use the "sword of the Spirit," how can we expect to put the tempter to flight? Mr. Moody asserts that he never saw a useful Christian who was not a student of the Bible. John R. Mott, the distinguished Y. M. C. A. worker, rightly says: "To have the power of God we must have the spirit of God. The Bible is the channel through which the Spirit comes into the life. We do not find Spirit-filled men apart from deep, devotional Bible students."

There are comparatively few Christians who know even the names of the books of the Bible, while many are so unfamiliar with its contents that they will search in the Old Testament for an oft-quoted passage from the New.

The Christian should, by all means, take time every day for prayer and Bible study. The best time for this is shortly after rising, before one enters upon the main work of the day, while the mind is fresh and calm, and the body is unjaded. Some Christians, however, prefer the quiet of the evening, when the world is shut out and the cares of the day are banished. John Quincy Adams, President of the United States, made it a practice to study the Bible each morning, and in his journal is recorded this significant observation with reference thereto, "It seems to me the most suitable manner of beginning the day." It is stated that the famous English general, Sir Henry Havelock, "always spent the first two hours of each day alone with God." If the encampment was struck at 6 A. M., he would rise at four. While not many, perhaps, could devote this much time to purely spiritual matters, there are scarcely any who could not spare from fifteen minutes to half an hour for prayer and Bible study. How often do professing Christians, on rising, hurry through a form of prayer, eat their breakfast in haste, and rush off to their work without so much as looking at God's Word. The same neglect of duty is repeated when the day's work is done, and thus days—sometimes weeks—pass without the reading of a line of Scripture. Even church members claim that they have not time for Bible study. They ought to take time for it. "Where there's a will there's a way." People of all classes find time to read newspapers and magazines. Some give whole hours to novel reading and to idle gossip, and yet plead lack of time as an excuse for their neglect of the Bible. If, as Christians, we mean to be spiritual, some portion of each day must be set apart for this exercise, and faithfully used. Some neglect this duty altogether simply because they find it impossible, on account of pressing duties and cares, to adopt fully the plans and suggestions of others as regards Bible study. Even the busiest, however, have occasional moments that can be utilized in Bible reading, and when such opportunities, though scant, are diligently improved, the benefit to the spiritual life is incalculable. To read the Bible even for five minutes a day is infinitely better than not to read it at all.

Furthermore, the Bible should be read systematically. Haphazard reading is not half so profitable as persevering attention to some special book or subject selected for consideration. If we go to the Bible, not looking for anything in particular, having no definite aim in view, our reading is almost certain to be unsatisfactory. Whatever be the book or passage selected, we should learn what we can, both from the Word and from out side sources, about the author, when he lived, under what circumstances he wrote, what were his characteristics, and what was the purpose of his writing. One book at a time thus studied will yield a rich return in quickened interest and in intelligent love for what God has revealed. Another excellent plan is to devote several days, or longer, to a special topic, as, for instance, prayer, faith, repentance, conversion, the doctrine of the Spirit, temptation, love, backsliding, etc. Such investigation leads to comparison of Scripture with Scripture, and often throws a flood of light upon truths that before were obscure and uninteresting.

Our reading also should be thoughtful and earnest. There is unquestionably a great deal of perfunctory and spiritless handling of the Scriptures, as well as no little superstition with respect thereto. Some let their eyes run hastily and listlessly over a chapter or two every day without remembering a word that is read or receiving any light upon life's duties. They seem to think that there is some kind of magical efficacy in the mere contact of the eyes with the sacred Book. Mr. Moody says of himself: "I used at one time to read so many chapters a day, and, if I did not, I thought I was getting cold and backsliding; but, mind you, if a man had asked me two hours afterward what I had read, I could not have told him." He says, "It is a good deal better to take a single chapter and spend a month on it than to go on reading the Bible at random for a month." The rapid reading of a book or of several chapters at one sitting is frequently quite helpful, as it gives a connected view of the whole and brings out more clearly the teaching of the context.

Every reader should possess a reference Bible, and diligent use should be made of the marginal references, which are often of wonderful value in enforcing some truth or unlocking its meaning. It is greatly helpful to use a good concordance, which may be had in a separate volume, at moderate cost, or under the same cover in the splendid editions of the Teachers' Bibles now so easily obtained.

The reader, as he proceeds, should mark the striking passages, and make a note of difficulties and of allusions, names, etc., upon which more light is desired. The importance of memorizing each day some beautiful, soul-nourishing passage of Scripture can hardly be overestimated. Perseverance in this practice will ere long convert the mind into a veritable storehouse of Scripture truth, a well-furnished armory from which the soldier of the cross may draw weapons of defense in emergency and times of temptation.

The Bible student should endeavor constantly also to put into immediate practice the truths learned. In fact, true wisdom consists in reducing theory to practice, in converting precept into example. Obedience is one of the surest roads to fuller knowledge. "If any man will do his will," says the Master, "he shall know of the doctrine."

Above all, the Bible student should pray for the aid and illumination of the Holy Spirit, who is declared to be the "Spirit of truth." No one can so well explain the meaning of his words as he who wrote them, even as Tennyson could best explain some of his deeper references in "In Memoriam."

LITERARY NOTES.

BY W. F. B.

The November number of the Critic is very interesting and attractive. Among many interesting things is a ballad, by Dora S. Shorter, entitled Earl Roderick's Bride. Joseph B. Gilder describes Historic New York, and Various Aspects of W. D. Howells are given by Cornelia Atwood Pratt, Gerald S. Lee and Waldon Fawcett. The usual instructive literary notes by the editors add to the interest of this magazine.

A poem by Kipling on the Transvaal crisis is the first item to attract attention in the November number of McClure's Magazine. An article by Dr. Frederick A. Cook, the one American who was a member of the recent Belgian Antarctic expedition, tells the story of his Experiences as one of the only party of men who have ever passed a Winter in the vicinity of the South Pole. A paper by the Hon. George S. Boutwell tells, for the first time, the story of his own share, as the then Secretary of the Treasury, in the great Black Friday panic, in September, 1869, when by Secretary Boutwell's own official action Jay Gould and James Fisk were defeated in a high-handed endeavor to make a "corner" in gold. There are other papers of interest.

In the November Century there is a hitherto unpublished poem by the late James Russell Lowell (Verses Written in a Copy of Shakespeare), which, with its introduction, fills two pages; the true and terrible story of the adventures of a boat-load of castaways on the Pacific is told by Mark Twain; Gov. Roosevelt writes with characteristic forcefulness of Military Preparedness and Unpreparedness; a poem, The Golden Crown Sparrow of Alaska, by John Burroughs, is the mellow fruit of a recent travel trip to northern latitudes; and a humorously gruesome piece of realistic fiction by Dr. Weir Mitchell turns for us the first leaves of The Autobiography of a Quack. Captain Slocum continues his single-handed cruise around the world, taking the "Spray" this month to Robinson Crusoe's Island and Stevenson's Samoa.

MILLSAPS COLLEGE.

It will be gratifying to the friends of Millsaps College to know that our work is progressing most satisfactorily. The yellow fever in Jackson has caused no interruption whatever in our work, and students who have stayed away on this account should come on at once. Members of the faculty will give special attention to those who have been kept away by quarantine restrictions, that they may make up the time lost.

The classification of students will be the same as if they had been present at the opening of the session, provided they are here by the fifteenth of November.

This applies to both old and new students. W. B. MURRAH, President.

Millsaps College, Nov. 2, 1899.

WHAT ABOUT JOHN WESLEY AND PAUL?

In your issue, of Nov. 9, a writer, signing himself "Layman," says: "I believe it is true that highly-educated ministers can not influence the uneducated masses, religiously, as well as ministers that are more nearly on a par with them in mental culture."

How about John Wesley? As a scholar, none of his contemporaries excelled him. Has any uneducated man surpassed him in reaching the masses? How about Charles Wesley, John Fletcher, and George Whitefield—all educated men?

By the way, when one said to Mr. Wesley, "God does not use education to save the world," the great man replied, "Nor does he use ignorance."

Wasn't Paul a fairly good preacher for the masses? I have been told he was also well educated.

All parties to the pending discussion will do well if they observe the following points.

1. Do the records of the Conference show that the educated men fall in the country churches, and that the uneducated men succeed? Who are the "gum-logs?" Will somebody who knows tell us? We want no man's guesses. There is "gum" in this point.

2. Are all country people ignorant and all town folks educated? As I hear them talk, the country people are calling for educated preachers now, and calling loudly, too. It seems to me they have as much right to educated preachers as town folks have. But maybe I don't know.

I know I want to hear good preaching. I wish the man who preaches to me had John Wesley's education. I believe I could understand him, and I think I would like him.

COUNTRYMAN.

MERELY TOOK OFF HIS MASK.

B. Fay Mills was in Oakland, Cal., recently, and The Inquirer, of that city, published a two-column interview with him, which more than justifies all that we said about him for several years before his apparent somersault. He accepted leadership in revival efforts under the auspices of evangelical churches, receiving from them large compensations and unestimated gifts, not a dollar of which he could have received if he had not concealed—as he now confesses that he did—his disbelief in most of the doctrines of which his presence and leadership implied acceptance.

Seven years ago he held evangelical meetings in Oakland, and he now boldly says that while there he was concealing his disbelief in "eternal punishment, the atonement, and the inspiration of the Scriptures." He says that before he was twenty-five years old he repudiated "the expiatory atonement." Before he was thirty he had changed his opinions about salvation, and had "ceased to believe in salvation only by Christ."

By his own shameless confession he was a humbug the greater part of his time while he was acting as an evangelist, and there is no reason to believe that he is otherwise now. The state of mind that would enable a man to practice such deceit after he had ceased to believe the doctrines most precious to those with whom he labored, is, in view of the largesses people lavish upon the popular evangelist, quite compatible with his postponing his change so long, because he could not afford to cut himself loose from the sources of his revenue. A man who changes his fundamental beliefs at once, avows it, and takes the consequences, is to be respected; but one who, having changed, conceals it for fear or lucre, is to be despised.

It is understood in Boston that Mr. Mills disappointed those who expected anything permanently effective or promotive of the so-called liberal faith. The fact that he had changed his attitude drew a concourse for a little while. But his intellect and acquirements are so far inferior to those of most Unitarian ministers, that he could not permanently attract persons competent to appreciate them.—New York Advocate.

INFIDELITY IS WITHOUT FORM AND VOID.

A few days ago a man who had for twenty-five years proclaimed himself an infidel took sick and died. When his will was probated it was discovered that he had left all of his fortune, excepting $4,000, to religious and charitable organizations. The whole of it amounted to $150,000, and not one dollar was donated to any infidel club, or to any infidel cause. As to why he chose these religious institutions and made them his beneficiaries, the will contained not one word. But the silence speaks more eloquently than words. There was no other disposition to make of his means. The only organizations whose work is strictly charitable and humane are religious organizations. Infidelity does not build up institutions of this kind. It is destructive and not constructive. It tears down instead of building up the benevolence of the community. It has no asylums, no houses of refuge, no sheltering arms, no retreat for the desolate and the oppressed. When you want to find things of this character you have to go to the church, and there they abound. So when this man, who had a kindly heart, wanted his fortune to do good after he was gone, he went to the institutions of the church to find a medium through which to make it effective. Therefore, let the church squander no time and opportunity in meeting infidelity with sermons and arguments, but go right ahead in caring for the poor, soothing the afflicted, lifting up the fallen, providing for the outcast and the unfortunate, and in these works there is an argument in defense of the divine claims of Christianity that no infidel will attack. Holy living and works of benevolence make up the invulnerable bulwarks of the gospel. When infidelity assaults us let us be able to point to some life that is irreproachable, and some place of shelter and comfort for the helpless and the unfortunate. There is no answer to logic like this. It scatters to the four winds the pretenses of skeptics and scoffers. A life like that of Jesus Christ will close forever the open mouth of blatant infidelity.—Texas Advocate.

A FRUITFUL PLAN.

A work of great promise in the Epworth League has been undertaken by Mr. Willis W. Cooper, a layman of intelligence, enterprise and heroic devotion, in the interest of foreign missions. At the head of what is designated as the Student Missionary Campaign, with headquarters at 57 Washington street, Chicago, he has organized a plan for training our young people to study and appreciate the status, the history, the methods and the outlook of the gospel scheme of world-wide evangelization. The hope and aim are cherished of interesting every chapter in Methodism in this sort of work, and with that end in view literature of an inspiring sort has been provided, reading courses have been outlined, suggestions intended to help pastors and League officers have been devised, and simple and definite plans for practical work have been laid down. These are so flexible that they may be easily adjusted to the needs of a small and struggling chapter on the frontier, or to the situation of the largest local League in Methodism. The possibilities of this work are incalculable. If our young people in large numbers can be brought to see the grandeur of the foreign missionary enterprise, to realize the obligations made incumbent on the church by the deplorable condition of the pagan world and the Master's great commission, to appreciate some of the heroic careers which have been evolved in mission fields, to engage in constant prayer for the coming of God's kingdom upon earth, and to undertake, loyally and zealously, to do something worth while in the direction of furthering the work which our missionaries and Missionary Society are carrying on—no mortal mind can estimate the far-reaching results that will follow. We urge our pastors to look into this work, and our League chapters everywhere to include it in their plans for the current Winter.—Western Advocate.

DIVORCE BY COLLUSION.

The rapidly increasing number of divorces in the United States has excited widespread comment, and various remedies have been suggested. One of the most shameless methods of obtaining divorce is by collusion between the parties. If they agree to dissolve the marriage contract, the laws of most States permit them to do so by resorting to certain legal subterfuges which tend to bring all law into disrepute and convert the marriage relation into what is very like a veiled concubinage. Mr. Justice Beekman, of New York, proposes a law to prevent this disgraceful prostitution of this most sacred tie. He would have a court attorney whose special business should be to investigate uncontested matrimonial cases, bringing out all the facts, and, in cases of collusion, presenting proof that the plaintiff is not entitled to judgment. This is something of a departure in American jurisprudence, but Great Britain has an officer whose duties correspond very largely with those which Justice Beekman proposes for the court attorney, and there is no reason why his suggestion should not become a law, not only in New York, but in every other State of the Union.—Zion's Herald.

FOLLOWING IN THE WAY OF SODOM.

New York city is the paradise of prize-fighters, gamblers, rum sellers, lewd fellows of the baser sort, and the houses which they frequent. That was predicted if Tammany returned to power has been fulfilled and more. Human nature is the same in every age and clime, and David in the twelfth psalm describes perfectly the situation to-day in the city of New York, "The wicked walk on every side, when the vilest men are exalted." We would not affirm that all the members of the Tammany Society, and all whom it puts forward to be elected, are the vilest of the sons of men, but that those who are not are in a pitiful and comparatively powerless minority.—New York Advocate.

SUPPOSE.

"Suppose some reader of this paper should allow his grocer to wait two years, three years, four years, for payment. This would be an extraordinary procedure." It would indeed, and the only reason why it does not occur is that the grocer is too good a business man to allow it. Only religious newspapers permit such negligence, and we have stopped our part of it.—Religious Herald.

We invite the attention of members of the Mississippi Conference to the official report of Bro. McCafferty, Missionary Secretary, on the seventh page.

Rev. A. J. Nettestius writes: "We have had a good revival at Rose. About 75 professed conversion, most of them members of the church. The president and members of the faculty of the State Industrial Institute used their influence for the meeting, and a number of the students were converted, and the moral tone of the school, which was already good, was improved. Rev. H. Singleton, Jr., did most of the preaching and the Lord honored his word with the power of the Holy Ghost to the highest commendation. We have had 20 accessions since our first Quarterly Conference, and will have 10 or 15 more."

Rev. W. L. Anderson, Clarksdale, Miss., writes: "It may be interesting to many brethren to learn that one of our local preachers, Rev. J. A. McCafferty, who is a Junior in Millsaps College, and one of our brightest and best young men, was elected by the State Legislature on last Tuesday, leading his ticket by about 1,000 votes above any other candidate. Bro. McCafferty's friends solicited him to become a candidate because they said, this might be the door to public service he could render the church, and they desired to show him the highest mark of respect and confidence before he joined the itinerant ranks. This is well. The honor will be worn modestly, but nobly and righteously borne."

Under date of Nov. 9, Rev. A. J. Bowen writes: "We are in the second week of a good revival. The interest that is leading the meeting is the 'power with God and with men' that presents the Word of God with great clearness and force. Our people are being blessed by the ministry of Bro. Joe Ramsey, of Viola, Miss. The revival in the church is deep and decided. Many backsliders have been reclaimed, and several precious sinners have been converted at the altar. We expect still greater results. Rev. W. O. Sadler, of Corinth, Miss., is ably assisting Bro. Ramsey. We gratefully acknowledge the valuable aid rendered by Revs. A. Leech and Eugene Johnson. The good people stand by us and help. Everything will be reported 'in full' at Conference."

EPWORTH LEAGUE DEPARTMENT.

"ALL FOR CHRIST."

REV. THOMAS B. CLIFFORD, Jackson, La., EDITOR.

Of the fifty members of the Burgundy Street (New Orleans) Epworth League, forty-eight attended the League devotional services Sunday evening, Nov. 5.

The following letter was recently received from Rev. J. H. Smith, district secretary, Sardis district, North Mississippi Conference:

I have, as secretary of the Sardis district, lately visited six pastoral charges in the interest of Epworth Leagues. Started six new Leagues, and revived one old League. The League interest is growing here. My own League prospers well. Pray for us.

From the Nashville Advocate we clip the following anent the successful work done by the Tennessee Leaguers. Let the young people in Mississippi read and regard:

"At the last session of the Tennessee Annual League Conference which met at Murfreesboro, the Holston Plan was adopted, and a sinking fund of about $700 was subscribed by the various chapters represented.

"Faithful work has been done during the year by presiding elders, pastors, and Leaguers.

"At the recent session of the Tennessee Annual Conference it was found that the collection for home missions had increased $828 over last year. The increase in the foreign collection, notwithstanding a falling off of $1,000 a year for ten years previous, or $10,000 in ten years, was $1,694; a total increase in the two collections of $2,522.

"The Conference Board of Missions commended very highly the work of the Leagues, and requested them to continue the plans inaugurated last year. The total increase on missions for the past year in the Holston and Tennessee Conferences is $6,919. The total increase since the inauguration of the Holston Plan, fourteen months ago, is $8 621.

"The Western North Carolina Conference, the Leagues of which adopted the Holston Plan at the last session of their Conference, will meet Nov. 22, and we hope a large increase will be reported."

W. H. M. S.

The Woman's Home Mission Society of the North Mississippi Conference met at Maben, Oct. 28-30, 1899. The attendance was small, on account of the yellow fever scare at that time. If the number was not large, the society was composed of the elect women of our church in this Conference. It was an inspiration to see their devotion to the Master's cause. Could their work be better known, surely their list of helpers would largely increase.

The opening sermon was preached by Rev. N. G. Augustus. It was full of inspiring thoughts and delivered with great force. The business was transacted in good form, and it was my pleasure to hear some very excellent short speeches. The treasurer's report showed that something more than a thousand dollars had been raised during the past year, half of which goes to the General Board, and a portion of the other half was appropriated to the needy parsonages of our own Conference.

This society has as wide a field as any; its work begins at Jerusalem and proposes to outrun the swift-footed itinerant as he tramps to the uttermost parts of the earth, with his Master's message for the fallen sons of men. Yes, these women would be glad to have a home ready for every preacher. A sharp heart-cry from the homeless itinerant sends its plea to the well-fed and comfortably housed people everywhere for help to build a home, a place for rest.

The untutored sinner can be found without going very far, who needs not only the instruction of the circuit rider, but that more detailed instruction that can come only from the consecrated school teacher. It will require the preacher 100 years to accomplish alone the same work that preacher and teacher together might do in one-fourth the time.

The needs are so great in this section as to attract the attention of our sister, the M. E. Church.

Perhaps some of our preachers do not know that between the Enpora and Cumberland circuits there is a large church school fostered by the M. E Church, and a circuit supplied by a preacher of the same church. Bennett Academy is not a high-sounding name, but it is doing good work. The school is 8 miles north of Maben, and was founded in 1885. The attendance has reached 125 this year, the tuition is $1 per month for all grades, board from $3.75 to $5 per month. The Home Mission Society of the M. E. Church makes an annual appropriation to help pay their first-class teachers Recently [illegible] to construct additional buildings, and, of course, the school will be well equipped to teach our boys and girls. The preacher has six churches in his circuit, and his Conference thinks enough of these people to make an annual appropriation for his support. The teachers and preachers are in the "backwoods," where they are needed.

We can not but admit it is the Lord's work, but the question is, Who ought to do the work?

R. H. B. GLADNEY.

Enpora, Nov. 10, 1899.

THE NEED OF THE HOUR—UNITY OF ACTION!

To the Preachers of North Mississippi Conference—

DEAR BRETHREN: Let's have a determined and uniform effort against the seating of Brigham H. Roberts. If the Mississippi and Louisiana Conferences will join in unanimous co-operation in this matter, it will be still better. The Fifty-sixth Congress will soon be in session. What is done must be done at once. Let each preacher head a petition and secure all his country officers and Official Board, and as many others as practicable, before Conference. Hand them to me at Conference, and I will convey them to our Mississippi Congressmen.

The following has been suggested at my request by a member of Congress from our State as a suitable heading:

"To the Congress of the United States:

"We, the undersigned ministers and members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and members of the North Mississippi Conference of said church, respectfully protest against the seating of Brigham H. Roberts, elected as a member of the House of Representatives of the Fifty-sixth Congress from the State of Utah, on the ground that he is a polygamist."

Brethren, please gratify me by conforming to this request.

Respectfully yours,

W. L. ANDERSON.

THE VERY BEST.

The very best premium offer we have ever made is our sewing machine offer in this week's issue. Be sure to read it.

As the world grows older it grows wiser and more practical. The days of eloquence and flowery speech have been displaced by sound reasoning, and robust, if homely, argument. We, as advertisers, appreciate this, and, therefore, present the merits of Dicks' Chillifuge, briefly and forcibly:

It Will Cure Chills.
It Is Pleasant to Take.
It Makes Rich Blood.
It Makes Life Worth Living.

INDIAN MISSION.

MR. EDITOR: Allow me to report the following received this week for the Indian Mission, to-wit:

Dr. J. R Kitrell, Myrick, Miss $5 00
A Friend 50

Many thanks, and an earnest prayer for the givers. God bless all that have helped in this good work, and all the people. We have up to date received for the mission, $50. We wanted $75, or, if we could get it, $100. Who will help now? Please send to me, or hand to your pastor to be handed to me at Conference.

Yours for the salvation of all men,

A. D. MILLER.

The Saving of Money by the use of Royal Baking Powder is considerable. Royal is economical, because it possesses more leavening power and goes further.

Royal saves also because it always makes fine, light, sweet food; never wastes good flour; butter and eggs.

More important still is the saving in health. Royal Baking Powder adds antidyspeptic qualities to the food.

There is no baking powder so economical in practical use, no matter how little others may cost, as the Royal Imitation baking powders almost invariably contain alum. Alum makes the food unwholesome.

PIANOS AND ORGANS BY MAIL.

The immense advantage in purchasing from us by the mail system is the guaranteed selection on the part of the oldest and largest music house South.

Selling over one thousand pianos and organs each year, and buying goods in enormous quantities, enables us to give those dealing direct the benefit of the closest possible prices on high-grade pianos and organs.

Dealing direct with the customer by mail enables us to eliminate all such items as agents' commission, hotel bills, etc., and to give our customers prices that many factories do not equal to their wholesale trade. Each piano or organ selected by us goes from our warerooms with a guarantee that if it is not as recommended, it can be returned at our expense. Any customer in the South can obtain our lowest net price by mail, and in case of purchase, the selection and instrument will be absolutely guaranteed, and from five to seven years' trial allowed to test same.

Easy payments will be accepted, and old pianos or organs will be received as part payments.

Having been in business in New Orleans half a century buying and selling all grades of pianos, we are in a position to judge of the merits and demerits of the different makes, and to know their adaptability to our trying climate. We give our customers the advantage of that experience.

Do You Get Up With a Lame Back?

Do You Have Rheumatism?
Are You Sleepless, Irritable, All Run Down?
Kidney Trouble Makes You Miserable.

SWAMP-ROOT IS THE GREAT REMEDY FOR KIDNEY, BLADDER AND URIC ACID TROUBLES. TO PROVE FOR YOURSELF ITS WONDERFUL CURATIVE PROPERTIES, YOU MAY HAVE A BOTTLE SENT FREE BY MAIL.

You are in no danger of being sick if you keep your kidneys well.

They filter your blood and keep it pure and free from disease-breeding germs.

Your other organs may need care, but your kidneys most, because they do most.

If you are sick, begin with your kidneys, because as soon as they are well they will help all the other organs to health.

The treatment of some diseases may be delayed without danger, not so with kidney disease.

Swamp-Root is the great medical triumph of the nineteenth century; discovered after years of untiring effort and research by the eminent kidney and bladder specialist, Dr. Kilmer, and has truly wonderful healing action on the kidneys and bladder.

It will be found by both men and women just what is needed in all cases of kidney and bladder disorders, lame back, dull pain or ache in the back, gravel, catarrh of the bladder, rheumatism, sciatica, neuralgia, uric acid troubles and Bright's disease, which is the worst form of neglected kidney trouble.

If your water when allowed to remain undisturbed in a glass or bottle for twenty-four hours, forms a sediment or settling or has a cloudy appearance, it is evidence that your kidneys and bladder need immediate attention.

Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root corrects inability to hold water and promptly overcomes that unpleasant necessity of being compelled to go often during the day and to get up many times during the night.

This prompt, mild and wonderful remedy is easy to get at the drug stores, in fifty-cent or one-dollar bottles. Make a note of the name, SWAMP-ROOT, Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, and remember that it is prepared only by Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y.

Swamp-Root has been tested in so many ways, in hospital work, in private practice, among the helpless too poor to purchase relief, and has proved so successful in every case that a special arrangement has been made by which all readers of the "CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE," who have not already tried it, may have a sample bottle sent absolutely free by mail. Also a book telling more about Swamp-Root and containing some of the thousands upon thousands of testimonial letters received from men and women who owe their good health, in fact their very lives to the wonderful curative properties of Swamp-Root.

The great kidney remedy Swamp-Root is so remarkably successful that our readers are advised to write for a free sample bottle, and to kindly mention the NEW ORLEANS "CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE" when sending your address to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y.

AFTER THE THREESCORE YEARS AND TEN.

They are waiting near the valley
Where the misty vapor lies,
Shutting out the heavenly visions
That are hid from mortal eyes.

But the star of hope is gleaming
With a light forevermore,
And their tears have made the rainbow
Spanning bright the valley o'er.

Through the strength and love of Jesus,
Which have brought them on their way,
Lighting up the dark recesses
Where the cloudy shadows lay—

They have come in joy and gladness
To the border-land of home,
Waiting now the joyful summons:
"Blessed of my Father, come!"

For the portals are flung open,
And the ready mansion waits
To receive the weary spirit
Through the blessed pearly gates.

There to rest from all their labors
In the quiet peace above,
Joyful, singing with the angels
Songs of God's redeeming love.

BELIEVE IN YOURSELF.

One of the greatest elements in success is a firm faith in one's own ability to succeed. To contemplate failure, to think of oneself as unlucky and destined not to succeed, is to court failure. One can accomplish little without confidence, and to lose faith in oneself is infinitely worse than loss of capital, loss of position, or even loss of health; for an invalid or a person without capital may succeed, at least to some extent; but, when confidence is gone, all is gone. As a rule, the man who has a firm, unyielding belief in his ability to succeed will reach the goal of his ambition, no matter what obstacles he may encounter. We are all familiar with the people who are constantly depreciating themselves, decrying their hard luck, and complaining that fate is against them. How can a man expect to succeed when he has lost faith in his own powers? A hypnotist can so deprive his subject of confidence in his strength that he can not rise from his chair, even if he be an athlete. People who go through life bemoaning their luck and thinking that success is for others, but not for them, must expect failure, for self-confidence is the very foundation of all accomplishment.

A child should be taught by parents, teachers, and friends, to expect success, to believe that he is born to succeed, as the acorn is destined to become an oak. It should grow up in the firm belief that it will succeed. Teachers often lessen their pupils' faith in themselves by telling them they are going to fail in their recitations or examinations, instead of inspiring them with hope and confidence of success.

Parents often, unconsciously, or ignorantly, weaken instead of strengthening the self-confidence of the child. Every child should be reared from the cradle in the firm belief that it is made in the image of the Creator, and with God-like attributes; that it was intended for success, not for failure; for happiness, not unhappiness; for harmony, not discord.

If we would succeed, we must expect success, and not create an unfavorable atmosphere and environment by constant distrust of ourselves and expressions of doubt. The fear of failure, and constant contemplation of its possibilities, has kept many a noble soul from succeeding. Believe firmly that if you do not find a way, you can make one, and you will triumph.—Success.

"ABUSED" PEOPLE.

Of all disagreeable people to live with, the "abused" man or woman is the most trying, and the lot of one doomed to such association is anything but enviable. Always on the alert for slights or neglects; so very sensitive as to imagine the condemnation of any act or circumstance an indirect thrust at themselves; crushed if their friends presume to look through other spectacles than theirs, and jealous if their full confidence is not in all instances bestowed, although they think nothing of betraying that confidence.

Sadly enough, this trait is sometimes fostered in the most unexpected places, even in the Christian home, where selfishness and distrust should find no resting-place. There is a certain mother who thus makes her home almost unendurable for herself and family. Although there is no doubt of her love for her children, yet, possessing and indulging this unhappy disposition, and demanding the respect and confidence of which she has never shown herself worthy, she blights her home by unceasing laments over imagined slights. The remarks of the members of her family are so frequently twisted into a different meaning from that intended, that they almost fear to express an opinion on any subject, lest it in some way conflict with mother's views, and prove the usual source of "abuse"; and thus their lives are to a great extent dwarfed, as well as made wretched.

When these complaints are poured out to friends and neighbors, and the children, rather than betray mother's shortcoming, silently bear the blame; for they have enough respect for her to shield her, and it is only by observation that the truth is known. Perhaps her love and excellence in other characteristics explain their respect, in spite of the evil influence of her training in this particular, which would seem enough to ruin the disposition of any child.—Housekeeper

READ THE BIBLE SLOWLY.

Slow reading is essential for the mastery of books. The Rev. F. W. Robertson says: "I never knew but one or two fast readers, and readers of many books, whose knowledge was worth anything. I read hard, or not at all, never skimming, never turning aside to merely inviting books; and Plato, Aristotle, Thucydides, Sterne and Jonathan Edwards have passed like the iron atoms of the blood into my mental constitution."

Harriet Martineau says herself: "I am the slowest of readers—sometimes a page an hour." But, then, what she read she made her own. We must read slowly, with deep thought, earnest prayer and the help of the Holy Spirit, in order to get the treasures of divine truth which are incorporated even in the shortest and seemingly simplest sentences of the Word of God.

We must put away even good books which stand in the way of reading the best book of all—God's Book. A college professor used to startle his class by saying, "Young gentlemen, do not waste your time over good books." Of course, the boys would ask, "How can there be such a waste?" But deeper thought would show them that if anyone gives time even to good books at the cost of neglecting the best, there is deplorable waste.—Gateways to the Bible.

GRUMBLERS AND THEIR WAYS.

Take the people who are always grumbling, writes Rev. H. P. Snyder, and finding fault, and they throw away the precious pearls of life—the gems that are most beautiful and valuable. They trample the sweet-blooming flowers about them under foot, and shade the present with dark clouds of the past. They are never satisfied—all the time finding fault about something. The weather is not as it should be—either too wet or too dry. The wind is always in the wrong direction. The sun is too hot. The wheat crop is a failure. The next-door neighbor does not mow his lawn. The hired man does not do as he should. Jane is the most careless girl that ever lived. The children have done some little things over which they make a terrible noise. The wife has not done as she should, and so there is a continuous clatter. Their horses are not as good as other people's. They work harder and do less than their neighbors. They have seen more trouble than all the people from the days of Adam to the present time. The real trouble is with the grumbler. If there is a class of people to be pitied, it is this class! It seems to have become chronic with so many, and is so sure to prove fatal when a person is attacked by this terrible disease, that the situation is really becoming alarming.—Christian Herald.

HOW MISS WILLARD SAVED A LOST GIRL.

Wherever Miss Willard went in her wonderful ministry of life she dispensed the blessings of tenderest sympathy and Christ-like love. Only heaven's book of remembrance can reveal the full record. A specimen incident is the following, related by a friend, who says: "One day Miss Willard wanted to visit the Harrison Street Police Station. She took a great interest in all women, especially those unfortunate creatures who have fallen without the pale of the virtuous, and she endeavored to help them all she could. So she went to see the crowds locked up in the station. Among the prisoners was a poor girl who had been arrested for being drunk. She had been up several times before that. We stopped and talked to her awhile, and the sweet and gentle way in which Miss Willard pleaded with the girl had a wonderful effect upon her. The prisoner was moved to tears, and doubtless they were tears of repentance. But she had no handkerchief with which to wipe them from her eyes. Miss Willard drew from her pocket her own handkerchief, handed it to the woman arrested as a common drunk, and said, 'There, keep that.' That kind act saved her. She reformed and has lived a different life from that day to this. She is now doing an excellent work in saving others, and realizes what she owes Miss Willard."—The Evangelical.

THE HAPPIEST TIME OF LIFE.

I had as happy a childhood as falls to the lot of most children; and many a time it has been said to me by those who were visiting at my father's house, this is the happiest time in life for you. I did not believe it then, I did not believe it as I grew older, and I know now that it was not true. That happiest time in your life is to come hereafter. If you try to do that which is right and useful to others, that which is honorable to yourself, and that which is for the glory and praise of your God, every year of your life will be happier than that which went before it. So do not feel that you are entering an oppressive, grinding, hateful world. Life on earth grows better and sweeter as one goes on in it, and what you are to do is to try to make a success of that life—each one of you.—Rev. R. S. Storrs.

FALLER—FRANCIS BAILEY FALLER died Oct. 4, 1899, at the home of his mother in Algiers, La. He was born Feb. 28, 1870. His death is a peculiarly sad affliction to a widowed mother and four loving sisters. His friends and dear ones, however, rejoice even out of bleeding hearts, because of his Christian character and the consequent knowledge which they have of his abode in the presence of God. In his daily business employment he was faithful and industrious; in his home life he found his highest earthly joy, preferring its associations to any other, and for the church he possessed an abiding love. He had a conscience that was very sensitive as to matters of right and wrong. He manifested great faith in prayer, and was very fond of hearing sung the melodies of Zion. He joined the church about nine years ago under the pastorate of Bro. Johns, and the testimony of all who knew him attests that he led a faithful life during the intervening years. Not many months before his death he experienced a clearer knowledge of his acceptance with God, and whenever questioned answered, without hesitation, that all was well. He displayed heroic fortitude during his protracted illness, never complaining or betraying impatience in any way. The writer has never seen any person look into the face of death with greater composure. He had an undimmed consciousness to the last, and left many joyous testimonies for the consolation and encouragement of those who remain on earth.

ROBERT H. WYNN.

MOORE—Mrs. MALISSA GREEN MOORE (nee Sayle) was born Jan. 31, 1872, and was married to B. Carson Moore, of Oakland, Miss., Oct. 11, 1893. She was the mother of four children. The first died in infancy, and the youngest, an infant, has, since her death, joined the mother in the spirit world. Little David Carson and Emily Jane still live to the companionship of the grief-stricken father and relatives.

Sister Moore was a favorite among her many friends and relatives. Beautiful in person and lovely in character, she moved among her associates as an angel of mercy, and bound her friends to her with cords of love not easily broken. She was no ordinary woman. Naturally possessed with a strong mind, and having enjoyed the advantages of an education, she was prepared for great usefulness. She also had the courage of her convictions. See was not afraid to do right under any circumstances. She was sick only a few days, and was not conscious from the first, and did not leave any dying testimony, but for several years she had lived a consistent Christian life, which shone brightest in her home, and in the presence of her husband and children.

On Oct. 5, 1899, her pure spirit left us for its eternal home. The once lovely home seems so dark and sad without her, but God knows best, and we will not complain, but will follow on until at last we will find her again, and will part from her no more. God bless and sustain the bereaved ones. W. W. WILLIAMS.

Oakland, Miss.

WINE OF CARDUI

Woman's Crowning Virtue.

BELTON, Mo., July 27.

For years I suffered terrible pains every month and my doctor told me I could not be cured except by an operation. I felt I could not submit to that and was so despondent I had given up all hopes of a cure. My husband insisted on my trying Wine of Cardui and at last thank God I did try it. Last month I did not have a pain, and did all my work, which I had not done in seven years.

MRS. MINNIE LITTLE.

McELREE'S Wine of Cardui

Modesty is the crowning virtue of American women. It is the trait that all mankind admires. A modest woman is the most pleasing of all created things. Because of this becoming virtue thousands of women prefer to suffer untold miseries rather than confide their troubles to a physician, and to even think of submitting to an examination is revolting. They can't get their own consent to an operation. Wine of Cardui permits sensitive women to retain their modesty. With it they can cure "female troubles" in the quiet of their own rooms. If special treatment is required they can write to the Advisory Department of the Chattanooga Medicine Co., and their letters will be promptly answered by women trained in the cure of womanly weaknesses and irregularities. There should be no hesitation. Delayed treatment means a chronic condition. The longer postponed the harder to cure.

The "Combination" Bible.

A SUPERB EDITION

of the Holy Scriptures, showing at a glance at the foot of the pages all changes made by the revisers.

New Type. All Proper Names Self-Pronouncing. The Most Valuable Collateral Matter.

There is a steady and increasing demand for first-class Bibles. Everybody is anxious to obtain a copy of the best edition of the Holy Scriptures. Old editions are constantly being replaced by Bibles that are in every way more attractive, and there is practically no limit to the demand.

OUR "COMBINATION" FEATURE.

Hitherto the King James and Revised Versions have been printed in parallel columns, but this makes comparisons of texts tedious and unsatisfactory, and makes the book very unwieldy. We have overcome this difficulty by "combining" the two Versions on the same page, showing at a glance in foot-notes all the Changes Additions and Omissions made by the Revisers.

THE OLD VERSION PRINTED IN FULL.

The King James Version is the basis, and this Version is read straight along from the text, while the Revised Version is read from the text in combination with the foot-notes. Our "Combination" Feature has met with universal approval and is strongly endorsed by all leading Divines and Biblical Scholars.

It is only by a comparison of the two Versions that the greatest benefit can be obtained from reading the Holy Scriptures, and this comparison every reader can easily make by our simple arrangement for showing the changes made by the revisers. This is the greatest triumph of Bible Publishing the World has ever known.

OUR OFFER.

To those unprogressive people who do not read and pay for the NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE we sell this Bible at the publisher's retail price—$4.25. To our subscribers we sell it at the very low rate of $2. The only condition attached to this offer is that the subscriber must pay his subscription one full year in advance, viz.: to November, 1900. We will send it postpaid to any person who will send us three new cash subscribers at the regular rate. For six new cash subscribers at the regular rate we will send two "Combination" Bibles, postpaid.

For fifty cents additional we will send a Bible with index.

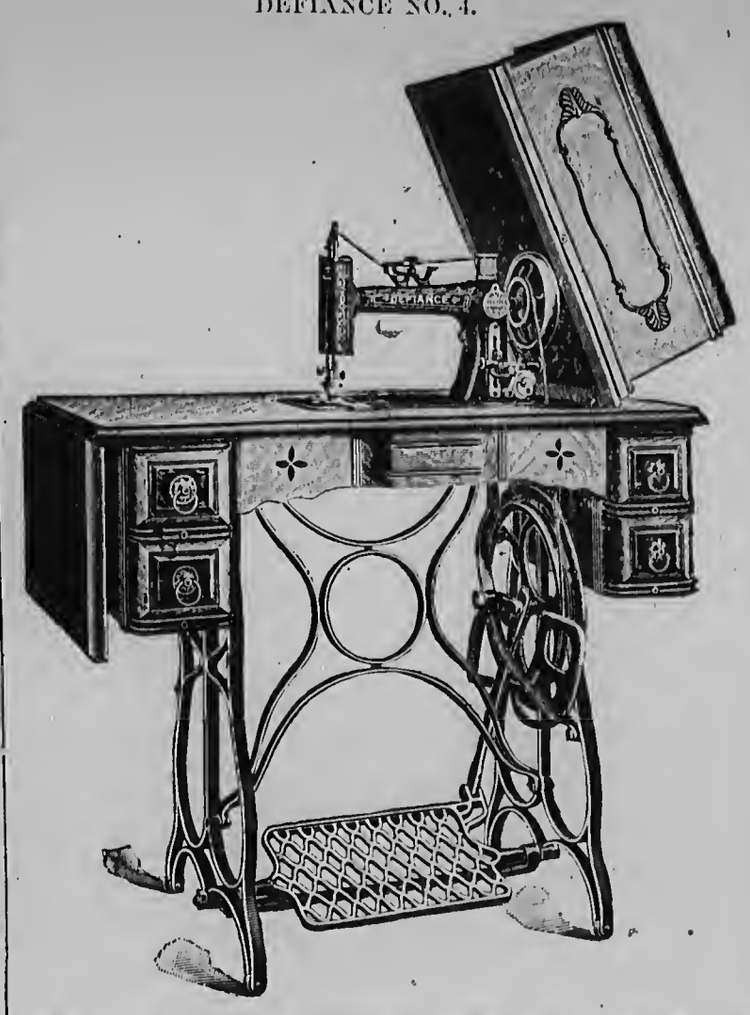
For twenty-five cents additional we will have your name engraved in gilt letters on the outside.

Send for circular. Address REV. W. C. BLACK.

P. S.—We can give no commission on renewals in connection with the above offer.

New Machine Offer.

DEFIANCE NO. 4.



The Defiance Machine is the perfection of simplicity, durability, speed, strength and ease of operation.

Construction. It is constructed of the best material in use, every bearing, without an exception being of steel or case-hardened.

The Mechanical Devices of this machine are a combination of tried mechanical principles. In detail it differs materially from other machines. Its simplicity is at once apparent, and its great durability is admitted by the best mechanical experts.

The Arm is large and roomy, 8x6¼ inches in the clear.

No Vibration. This machine does not vibrate. Its motion is easy and quiet.

Lock Stitch. It is a lock-stitch shuttle machine.

Speedy, Light, Quiet. It is as speedy, light and quiet-running as any shuttle machine manufactured.

Double Feed—Positive Four-Motion. The double feed possesses advantages over all others. Its very shape and form obviates all the disadvantages arising from double feeds as they have heretofore been constructed, and combines in this machine all the advantages of both the single and double feed, doing away with the objections to either of them.

The operation of the feed mechanism is positive, giving an accurate four-motion movement to the feed without the use of springs.

The Needle Bar. This machine has a self-lubricating needle-bar, which is always kept clean, well-oiled, and the oil can not drop on the work and soil it.

The Needle is absolutely self-setting. No screwdriver is required in setting, a winged thumb nut being used instead.

The machine is self-threading. Put in the bobbin, draw the thread towards you, through the slot and, it is done.

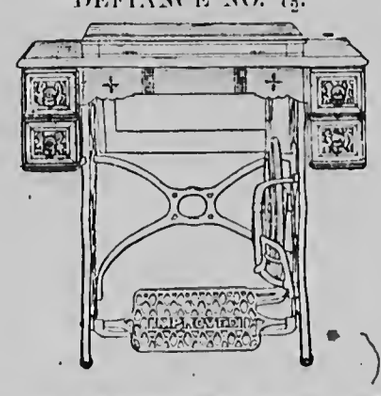
The Loose Pulley for winding the bobbins without running the machine is so constructed as to admit of an instantaneous stoppage and starting of the machine without stopping the treadle movement—a valuable improvement peculiar to this machine.

Automatic Bobbin Winder. The bobbin winder operates automatically, winding the thread on the bobbin regularly and as evenly as the thread on a spool. Can be operated without running the machine.

Extra Attachments, in velvet-lined case, sent free with each machine; 1 Tucker, 1 Ruffler with shirring plate, 1 Hemmer set (4 widths) and Binder, 1 Braider (Foot and Slide), 1 Thread Cutter.

Additional Accessories. Each machine is supplied with the following outfit: 1 Hemmer and Feller (one piece), 10 Needles, 8 Bobbins, 1 Wrench, 1 Screwdriver, Oil Can filled with oil, Cloth Guage and Thumb-screw, and a Book of Instructions. The Book of Instructions is profusely illustrated and answers the purpose of a competent teacher.

DEFIANCE NO. 7½.



This cut shows our new and popular style, the No. 7½ Defiance Drop Cabinet, perfectly protecting the machine from dust, and making a convenient and ornamental stand. When machine is ready for use the head is in same position as on ordinary style; when through using, it requires only the turning over of the leaf of table, and the sewing machine head drops into the case or cabinet between the drawers, completely out of sight, forming a handsome table with highly polished top.

No. 3 Machine, drop leaf table, bent cover, case of one drawer at each end and center drawer. Dealer's price, $32. Our price, $18.

No. 4 Machine, drop leaf table, bent cover, case of two drawers at each end and center drawer. Dealer's price, $34. Our price, $19.

No. 5 Machine, drop leaf table, bent cover, case of three drawers at each end and center drawer, making seven drawers in all. Dealer's price, $36. Our price, $20.

No. 7½ Machine, Drop head cabinet, case of two drawers at each end and center drawer. Dealer's price, $38. Our price, $23.

All the woodwork is of the best quality, either Light Antique or Golden Oak Finish. For Walnut Woodwork add $2 to above list prices.

The chief difference between Numbers 3, 4, and 5 is in the furniture—i. e., the number of drawers. If you do not want to pay for the extra drawers, you need not do so. We sell these machines under a ten years' guarantee, by which we mean that if any part gives out by reason of any defect therein, the manufacturer will replace the same free of charge. Moreover, we allow the purchaser to test the machine ten days. If at the end of ten days you are not satisfied, you have only to drop us a postal card, and your money will be refunded.

OUR OFFER.

We will send any one of the above-described machines at the prices named, and also send the ADVOCATE free for six months. The only condition attached to this offer is that subscribers who are in arrears must first pay up all arrearages to date. It would be well to avail yourself of this offer at once, as we can not promise that it will last very long. Notice that you take no risk whatever. We do all the risking. Address

Oliver Wendell Holmes once said, dnring the mighty strnggle between the States, that the constant cry of the masses was for bread and newspapers. Now, since more than a third of a centnry has changed the political and financial issnes, the great cry in the Southern States is for a pleasant and reliable Chill Tonic. Dicks' Chillifnge complies with this demand. It is as pleasant as orange syrup, and as prompt to cnre malaria as the bitter Snlphate of Qninine. If you have a case of Chills or Fever which yon can not hreak, try Chillifuge, and enjoy life once more.

● PILGRIM HOME was built for God. A religious work will be carried on in it for the salvation of souls and the healing of diseases without remedies, depending alone on Jesus, who healed all who had faith in His name, as in the Apostles' time. Dr. D. M. Bye claims that after twenty years of success as a specialist for cancers and tumors, the Lord led him to the Oil Cure and for the last eight years the Doctor has been curing all manner of malignant diseases by anointing with oils. The remedy is not only mild and safe, hut cures internal as well as external cancers and tumors and gives relief from unceasing pain. Many thousands of bad cases of cancers and tumors have been cured hy using Dr. Bye's Oil Treatment and many healed by faith alone. The Doctor has received thousands of good letters from persons cured. Hundreds from ministers and Christian patients are printed in books and papers, which if one will read they will plainly see that surely God's blessing is with the Oil Cure. In the large book there are many half-toned photos showing conditions before and after treatment, which is sent FREE, giving particulars and price of Oil. Its just popularity is shown hy the fact that at this time over three thousand patients are taking home treatment. Its great success has caused many counterfeiting imitators, therefore be careful. This country is full of frauds. Note this one thing: Of all the great number who have come to Indianapolis for treatment, not one has yet died on the Doctor's hands; no undertaker has yet received one cent. PRAISE THE LORD. The Doctor firmly believes it won't be long when more persons will be healed at Pilgrim Home by faith alone in Jesus than by oils, yet all have not so great faith and must use the Oil Treatment administered with God's blessing for a cure. A Food That Is "All Food"

The value of cereals has been fully admitted, and as the habit of eating cereals has grown upon the American people, a greater discrimination is shown in selecting the most healthful and nutritious. Analysis shows that in Barley Crystals, prepared as a health food by Farwell & Rhines, Watertown, N. Y., practically the whole hulk is nutriment, there being 99.1 per cent of the most valuable flesh, blood, brain, nerve and bone-building substance. It is made of the heart of barley, entirely free from bran or hulls. Their latest and unique product is Gluten Grits, a breakfast and dessert cereal prepared for that large class of people who have to be careful in the use of starchy foods. These provide strong food for healthy persons while for invalids, old people and young children they are invaluable. Farwell & Rhines are also makers of the noted "Gluten Flour," "Special Diabetic Flour," and "K C. Whole Wheat Flour." Their goods have come to be known as the "Criss Cross Cereals," the criss cross lines on the face of each package being a part of their trade mark.

Two Verdicts.

"After a fair and impartial trial you are jndged gnilty hy this conrt, and you are sentenced to be hnng by the neck nntil yon are dead." The solemn tones of the judge, the despairing face of the prisoner, and the painful stillness of the court-room, makes it a scene of awful impress. Now turn to a brighter scene at the home circle. A mother radiant with joy over the recovery of a child snatched from the cintches of Malaria. An entire family rejoicing, and praising the merits of Dicks' Chillifnge, and giving their verdict that Chillifnge is without an eqnal for swiftness to cnre.

SPANISH-AMERICAN WAR PANORAMA

is one of the war books which is likely to be in continuous demand. It is a panoramic record of the triumph of Yankee Doodle. The eagle flaps his wings on every page, and "Old Glory" waves around and above every scene. Prominent officers connected with the war are here portrayed, as well as many of the "men behind the guns." Military life is pictured to the eye, from recruiting to guard mount and skirmish line. Nor is the ludicrous omitted. The company cook receives the attention due to his importance; the mess is shown; cavalry scenes are given; the hospital arrangements are depicted; the heroines of the Red Cross service are displayed; street scenes in Havana, Santiago and elsewhere are unrolled, the new citizens or subjects (which are they?) of Uncle Sam appear and disappear as the leaves are turned.

In a word, the gazer visits the new localities and sees the tumultuous new life, without the risk or expense of a sea voyage.

The Album is 5½x8 inches, weighs 12 ounces, printed on finest coated paper.

WHY DO WE WAIT?

Why do we wait till ears are deaf
Before we speak our kindly word,
And only utter loving praise
When not a whisper can be heard?

Why do we wait till hands are laid,
Close folded, pulseless, ere we place
Within them roses sweet and rare,
And lilies in their flawless grace?

Why do we wait till eyes are sealed
To light and love in death's deep trance—
Dear, wistful eyes—before we bend
Above them with impassioned glance?

Oh, let us heed the living friend
Who walks with us life's common ways,
Watching our eyes for look of love,
And hungering for a word of praise!

Among the social attentions the members of the committee be a special reception held in r honor by President McKinley he White House.

t the semi-annual meeting of the *tern Conf*erence of the Maryland od of the Lutheran Chnrch, held Washington this week, resolutions ongratnlation to Dr. J. G. Bntler, is about to celebrate the golden versary of his pastorate of the er Memorial Chnrch; to Dr. el Domer, who has completed twenty-fifth year of his pastorate he St. Paul's English Lutheran rch, and to Dr. F. Ph. Henning-en, who has been pastor for the length of time of St. Stephen's rch, in Baltimore, were adopted. esident McKinley and Mr. Jns Brewer, of the United States Sn-e Conrt, have accepted invita-to address the fonrth biennial ention of the Brotherhood of ew and Philip, which opens in timore this week—the former on y, "All Men Should Go to Some rch," and the latter on "Why Men Do Not Go to Church."

. J. L. Hurlbut, of New York, was a member of the American mittee which acted jointly with English committee in preparing ternational Sunday-school les-and tracts now in nse, was the cipal speaker at the annual con-ion of the Sunday-school Associ-of the District of Columbia, h embraces all the white evan-l churches and Friends, held week. Dr. Hurlbut, whose expe-e has been wide, said: "Most ches are now conscious of the that they are not progressing as fast as formerly. They do have revivals like their fathers The methods which once ght about results do not now results, and we, therefore, have et many things to consider. No strnment of the Christian re-n is so well calculated by its to advance the cause of Christ e Sunday-school. If there is ons thing it ought to do, it ought n souls. It has a firm hold on eople, and can reach the people other institution of Christian-our time can. One-sixth of our n's people is engaged in the of the Word of God in the y-school every Sunday. It is he depressed sixth of popula-nor even the loftiest, but repre-every class of society. There department of Christian effort so many workers, and where there is so much effort and sacrifice. The child that makes the best kind of Christian is the one that grows up in Christ and receives the benefit of its influence while young. The Sunday-school deals with individnals in the golden prime of childhood. The Sunday-school has the best opportunity to win souls. If, however, there is only Bible geography and history tanght, the work of the Sunday-school falls far short of its mark. I do not believe in introdncing into the Sunday-school the old-fashioned revival methods, although I have sanctioned them in the past, and do so to-day in the case of older persons. It will do no good to tell harrowing and pathetic stories in Sunday-school. Have calm and carefnl meetings that will set the scholars to thinking. It is not wise to work np the emotions of the young. Work np their intelligence."

Dr. Wallace Radcliffe painted this beantifnl life-motto in a sermon on "The Christian's Dnty:" "The sweetest thing on earth is truth. It is the noblest, the most powerful and enduring. The Son of God was himself truth. It is trnth that carries in itself the definition of God and the hope of the cross. For the redemption of man it is all-important that he should know truth, for a man's belief is a man's life, and life needs trnth. It is onr dnty to bring every hnman soul trnth. God has enjoined upon his disciples this dnty. Not only ministers and other specially endowed ones, but everyone of us is to be a candle-stick from which the light shines. If the church throngh all ages had thns realized its dnty, there would have been no schism, heresy, or division."

The annnal report of the United States Commissioner of Edncation gives the total school enrollment of the United States for 1898 at 16,687,643, an increase of nearly half a million over the preceding year, and says of edncation in our new possessions: "It is all-important that in the reorganization of the schools in Spanish conntries we do not attempt too mnch in the way of introdncing the English langnage. All the daily lessons should be given in Spanish, save in the reading of elementary English. If the other lessons be tanght in English, it will be just ground for the snspicion that the United States pnrposes to enforce the nse of the English langnage in these territories." From opinions already expressed of these assertions, they are likely to be opposed by those who believe that the English language should predominate in all public schools under the American flag.

ONCE MORE.

Besides doing a fine year's work on Mt. Pleasant circuit, repairing and painting the parsonage and churches, Rev. D. L. Cogdell has given much attention to the Twentieth Centnry Thank-offering. If in the end the report does not measure up, all who are acquainted with Bro. Cogdell will know it is not his fault.

Rev. B. F. Lewis has made most elaborate plans and advertised extensively for the day at Brandon. His wise plans, culminating in "preaching all day and dinner on the ground," will snrely bring large success.

Bro. Jno. R. Tillery sent to Bishop Candler his personal snbscription for twenty dollars. (Will Bro. Tillery send me his postoffice address? For fear this might escape his notice, I hope some brother will give me his address.)

In addition to subscribing at various points in his district, Rev. J. W. Dorman sends his personal subscription for twenty-five dollars, and says: "The work goes on over the district. I think another year will bring this country out all right."

Rev. L. F. Alford, DeKalb, has secnred five and 50-100, and will get more by Conference.

Rev. H. G. Hawkins has sent an additional amonnt from Madison—sixteen and 50-100 dollars cash.

Rev. W. L. Graves has forwarded from Tnnica twenty-five and 50-100 dollars, and his personal subscription for ten dollars.

Rev. Geo. H. Thompson, Benton, has secured thirty-three and 95-100 dollars, and the "Epworth League is still pnshing the matter."

Rev. Jas. G. Galloway secured forty-five and 5-100 dollars at Hickory. "More to follow."

Rev. R. D. Norsworthy, Natchez, has secnred sixty dollars. Committees will call on every member of the chnrch, and give each one the privilege of contributing.

Rev. J. B. Mitchell has secnred one hnndred and twenty-six dollars at West Point.

I have seen no wiser plans, nor more powerfnl and moving appeal, than those used by Rev. J. H. Shumaker, Inka. Ninety of his people have given one hnndred and seventy-five dollars. He expects Inka to donble that amount. "Committee has been appointed, and will see every member as soon as possible."

Reports should have been received from many preachers who have not sent them. I hope they have done ever better than those who have reported, and the reason they have not reported is, that they were so busy doing large things for the thank-offering that no time was left for them to tell about it.

Bro. J. W. Dyess sent one and 75-100 dollars from the Snnday-school at Buckatunna, and Bro. W. L. Thomason five and 90-100 dollars from Pontotoc. J. R. BINGHAM.

TO THE NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

DEAR BROTHER: Conference is near at hand, and the great featnre of this coming together of "the leaders in Israel" will, no donbt, be the Twentieth Centnry Thank-offering. We, of the North Mississippi Conference, have been called upon to contribute one dollar per member to this great movement, which is all well and good, and we pray Him, to whom we wonld make this offering, that it may call forth a spiritnal revival among us of great power. Bnt believing that the greatest good will come of this movement by inducing each member of the church to pay his or her own dollar, we depreoate the giving of the $45,000 in comparatively large snms by the few. But further believing that, as the Lord hath prospered, so should each one give of his substance, we wish to enlist your hearty co-operation and influence in the support of a much-needed enterprise—that of endowing a girls' college in North Mississippi, to take and maintain the high grade now held by Millsaps College among our boys. This is not a luxury, but a crying need. Look about you and see how easy it is for our boys to obtain a first-class education, and at what a woeful disadvantage our girls are placed. But for the noble struggle of a few unendowed schools, that are not colleges, the girls of our State would be entirely dependant upon the public schools for what education they might offer.

Believing also that the future hope of Church and State is in the cultured and educated mother, at the beginning of the twentieth century we should build wisely, lest we be left stranded in another generation. We, therefore, propose an additional thank-offering of $100,000 for the specific purpose of endowing a girls' college (to be located where it seems best to the Conference), this to be the offering of the well-to-do of our church and its friends, and to be raised as follows: Let the presiding elders be the general agents for the work, and let the amount be raised in $100 subscriptions (or more), to be paid in four equal payments in four years. Surely in the bounds of this Conference one thousand names could be obtained for such a useful enterprise.

As this is an enterprise for women, certainly our women will make it a woman's movement in the best sense, and scores of our women, who have means of their own, would, no doubt, be glad to contribute to this cause.

Think over this plan, and come up to Conference determined to make the North Mississippi Conference the banner Conference in this great movement for Christian education.

Fraternally,

EDUCATED MINISTERS.

MR. EDITOR: You are now running a discnssion through the colnmns of the ADVOCATE than which no qnestion is, or can be, more important to Methodism in Louisiana, or elsewhere. The church should nse education for all it is worth to the church. No one is opposed to an educated ministry when viewed in its right relation to the church. It is a very different thing, however, when ednoation is made the condition of success.

No man can pass an approved examination in the four years' curriculum of the M. E. Church, South, and not be, in a very large sense, an educated man.

It has always been the boast of our church that it is a poor man's church. Our ministers come in large part from that class of our people—almost, if not quite universally. They are not college men—never can be. Any sentiment which shuts the ministerial doors upon our uneducated men shuts out our ministerial supply. We receive men "on trial" in our traveling connection, and with a right heart and life the "course of study" is the basis of his continuance "on trial." If he get throngh with that, he is all right, and is sufficiently educated for all ordinary demands upon the itinerant preacher. The difficulty, as I see it, is in requiring an education before we begin to educate for the ministry. Our demands or requirements, in order to "admission on trial," are constantly growing more and more exacting, and our ministerial recruits correspondingly less and less. The local preacher is practically a thing of the past, except as to a few disgruntled itinerants who have gone into the local ranks in order to shake off restraints.

Many of our most thoroughly educated ministers are men who never matriculated in a college; men who went into the ministry backed up by nothing more, in a literary way, than by a common-school course in the rudiments of an education. They were men of brains and hearts, and became learned in ecclesiastical literature.

There are some things to be said on this side of the question which may seem invidious, but is not so intended. I mention one of them as a fact observed by many in these late years: The young men coming into our Conferences from college are not the men who are building churches and parsonages, and bringing scores and hundreds into the church. A close comparison on this line will be a revelation to some people. It is not necessarily so, but so it is. In some instances their scholarship commend them to places which their want of experience disqualifies them to work. In other instances there is too much reliance on scholastic attainments, and too much twaddle about "when I was at college."

I have had a good deal of experience as a presiding elder, and those consecrated, brainy fellows from the farms have been the men of success. They go to Conference knowing their lessons, and report "facts and figures which tell," and at the end of four years are capable of defending the church and the Bible, with all its truths, against any assaults.

It is a great advantage to have had a collegiate training before starting out on this long chase of four years' duration for an education. Still, for the church to insist that all beginners must have this advantage is to strike a death-blow to the doctrine of "the divine call to the ministry." If God really calls, there will be enough spirit of consecration, self-denial and cross-bearing to prepare for the successful prosecution of that call. The need of the ministry is consecration. The ministry of to-day, though far advanced in learning over the ministry of our Methodist forefathers, is imbecile in comparison.

If any of those presiding elders who advocate an educated ministry in preference to educated ministers have four or five brainy, consecrated young men from the prayerful farm homes and the "old-field school," I hope they will turn them over to Bishop Galloway for service in my little field. An active brain over a consecrated heart will soon educate itself. Give such a chance.

LETTER FROM "GILDEROY."

The Savior would have been a good preacher for the hill people in any section of North Mississippi. He would have preached and talked to the people about sin and salvation, repentance, faith, regeneration, and holy living—things they most need to know. His illustrations would have been drawn from planting cotton and corn, and from grinding corn and ginning cotton; from the fields, flowers and birds common to this country. His parables would have been founded upon and expressed in the terms of Republican institutions. Of all things else, he meant to express truth in terms that were understood. The parable of the prodigal son would have been appropriate here, for we have prodigal sons all over this country. The leaven, the tares and the wheat, the mustard seed, the lost coin, the lost sheep and the marriage feast we know something of.

I doubt if the Savior would ever refer to Darwin, Huxley and Tyndall at all. Few of our country people ever heard of these men—only when their names have been called in the pulpit. As for their views, scientific or religious, our country people know little and care less. I doubt if the Savior would have alluded to the great poets, painters, artists, warriors and musicians of the world. If he had done so, much of his talk would have been lost on the people over wide areas of our territory. Doubtless he would have spent most of his time and expended most of his labor among the common people in the rural sections. In his day and in his own country he was not as popular nor as largely useful in town as among the country folk. It was true then, as now, that the town people went often to hear him in the country. The trip and the novelty of congregations and preaching in the woods, or down by the seaside, brought great crowds from the towns and the regions round about. In this way some of them were convicted of sin and led to salvation.

The subject of sin—sin as an act or a principle—is always and everywhere suitable for the pulpit. It is a common and universal disease of man. Men are the subjects of sin, original, and they are guilty of sin, actual. Long arguments on original sin are not necessary. They are often lost on the country people. The people are conscious of the fact that there is something in them that is averse to God and that leads them away from holiness. They know that they have sinned and come short of the glory of God. The great work of the preacher is to awaken in the people a desire to flee from the wrath to come and to be saved from sin. The Holy Ghost precedes, accompanies and follows the Word of God, written, read, or expounded. The Spirit opens the way for the Word, and not the Word for the Spirit.

The Savior would preach genuine repentance for sin, godly sorrow—a sorrow so great that it would lead men to quit sin, to fly from it as from hell itself. In the tenderest tones of love he would preach the free and full forgiveness of sin on the single and simple condition of genuine faith in himself—in the merit of his atoning blood. This would release the sinner from the guilt of sin. He would preach and urge the absolute necessity of regeneration to free the sinner from the reigning power and dominion of sin. Spiritual life and power would be restored to the ruined and enslaved human soul. The will of man, in bondage to sin and Satan, would be set free, and the sinner would be a free-born son of God.

The Master would urge the new converts to holy living, to purity of purpose, of thought and of action in all the relations of life. He would discourage and rebuke all shams in religion, all pretensions, and the disposition to spiritual pride—to the profession and claim on the part of anyone of superior holiness or virtue. Humility becomes a sinner saved by grace. All of this the Master would do in gentleness and love. Denunciatory words and tone were not common to our Lord. He exposed sin, but was tender towards the sinner.

This was the matter and manner of the Master while he was here—when walking the circuit of Judea, of Galilee, and in one or two missionary trips through Samaria. He went about doing good—good to the bodies and souls of men. At no time and in no place did he seek his own personal preferment, or personal ease and comfort. He laid himself out for the good of men, and at the last went to Gethsemane, and to the cross, and to death and the grave, to save them. We need more men of this spirit in North Mississippi now.

THE CHAPLAINCY OF OUR ARMY.

The force of religious teachers in our army is altogether inadequate to the magnitude of the work to be done. In an army of a hundred thousand men, scattered all over the world, we have only thirty-four chaplains. This results largely from the fact that Congress, in authorizing an increase of the army, made no provisions for additional chaplains.

This was probably the result of inattention, but it is an oversight which needs to be corrected. There is nothing which needs to be more sacredly guarded than the moral and religious interests of our soldiers. With the hosts of black-legs, lewd women, and rum-sellers following in the wake of our armies, and hovering about our posts and camp-fires, there is no class of our people subject to such fierce temptations as our soldier boys.

All the pernicious and damning influences of the world, the flesh, and the devil, are incarnated in the evil men and scarlet women who are attracted, as by satanic magic, from the very ends of the earth to any large army in the field.

The most effective way to stem this tide of over-mastering temptation is to supply the army with a full quota of efficient chaplains. A great government can not be true to itself and neglect a matter so important. And a great Christian community can not afford to do less than to earnestly and persistently urge the government to do its dnty till this matter is set right. Our Conferences, our papers, and our pulpits, asking the co-operation of all other Christian bodies, should take this important subject in hand, and rest not till our army is fully equipped with earnest and efficient religious teachers.

W. S. HARRISON.

NONE BUT JESUS.

Shall I trust my soul's salvation
To a fellow creature's care?
Can a priest, a saint, or angel,
Save me in my dark despair?
None but Jesus, none but Jesus,
Hears a contrite sinner's prayer.

Is there aught of praise or merit
Due to works my hands have done?
Can a life of tears and penance
For a single sin atone?
None but Jesus, none but Jesus,
He must save, and he alone.

Correspondence.

A TRIP FROM OREGON TO CALIFORNIA.

It has been a long time since any correspondent has written for the columns of the ADVOCATE relative to the progress of Southern Methodism on this coast, the cause of Christ generally, together with a brief reference to the material development of the Pacific coast, and a partial description of the beautiful scenery that may be seen and appreciated by one going from Oregon to California over the Southern Pacific railroad.

It is presumed that few of the readers of the ADVOCATE have ever had the privilege of a trip similar to the one recently enjoyed by your correspondent when he bade final adieu to appreciated friends in Oregon and boarded the train at Ashland, Ore., destined for California, of which State so much has been said and written. A few miles south of Ashland the Siskiyou Mountains, which seemingly extend as a kind of boundary line between Oregon and California, are reached, and in crossing them ample opportunity is afforded either the tourist, the pleasure-seeker, or even the ubiquitous Methodist preacher for beholding some of the most enchanting and beautiful scenery in the world. Two engines are usually required to draw the trains across the mountains, the road wending its way here and there, frequently taking sudden turns that almost take away one's breath as he looks through the car windows and sees on either side nature's handiwork manifested in deep gorges and canyons whose depths almost defy the power and accuracy of the human eye to fathom. The building of that part of the S. P. R. R. which crosses the Siskiyou Mountains was certainly one of the most remarkable engineering feats of this century. At one place in the mountains the road forms a perfect loop, much resembling the shape of a horseshoe, and it is due to this fact that it has been appropriately termed "The Horseshoe Loop." We were about three hours or more in crossing the Siskiyous, the train all the while going up-grade at a fairly good rate, sometimes crossing trestles hundreds of feet in height, while everything below, even the largest trees, appeared to be quite insignificant indeed. In many places along our route there would appear on either side of the road the most frightful chasms in whose abysses there seemed to be reguant eternal darkness, while the least mistake upon the part of the trainmen would have hurled the train and its living freight over the precipices into eternity. On every side were to be seen the gigantic works of nature; tier after tier of mountains, some higher than others, arose in rapid succession, while far away could be seen some towering peaks enveloped with snow—the sun shining upon them created a scene of transcendent beauty. After a while the mountains are crossed, they recede from our view as onward we go, and soon we are within the bounds of California. All around, as far as the eye can reach, are to be seen fertile stretches of country, with a gorgeous landscape flecked here and there with beautiful residences, thriving country towns, and thousands of horses and cattle grazing peacefully, as our train sped by. Soon our eyes were greeted with an excellent view of Shasta, covered with eternal snow, towering 14,440 feet above the level of the sea. As the shadows of evening began to lengthen, and the sun was about to go to rest, we were so fortunate to behold a spectacle, the grandeur of which can never be erased from our memory. The sun was slowly setting, his parting rays clothed Mt. Shasta with a great flood of effulgent glory, causing the whiteness of the snow to reflect with indescribable glory. For once Shasta resembled a huge lump of burnished gold, and I at once thought of that beautiful city of gold, where the sorrows of this world are unknown, and whose builder and Maker is God.

Between one and two o'clock Friday morning, Oct. 27, we stepped off the train at Chico, Cal., and, getting a few hours' rest at a hotel, we were fortunate in meeting with Rev. Joseph Emery, D. D, presiding elder of the Colusa district. Chico is a beautiful place, abounding with many elegant residences, lovely parks, and numerous orange groves. In company with Rev. Dr. Joseph Emery this scribe had the great pleasure of going through the grounds belonging to Gen. John Bidwell, who in 1892 was the candidate of the Prohibition party for the presidency. Gen. Bidwell owns 40,000 acres of land, all of which is in a high state of cultivation. His orchards are very extensive, and extend for miles and miles. The grounds surrounding the Bidwell mansion are both beautiful and well kept, and are open to visitors at all times. I noticed many trees of a semi-tropical nature. Here were orange trees loaded with golden fruit; there I observed magnolia and palm trees, and many other varieties that I had not seen before.

In coming to California one of our long-cherished dreams found realization. We are very pleasantly situated at Gridley, a beautiful town of about 1,200 inhabitants, on the S. P. R R, 160 miles from San Francisco, and 70 miles from Sacramento, the capital of the State. Our initial services in Gridley were held the fifth Sunday in October. Large and attentive audiences greeted us at both services. Our beautiful church in Gridley is literally surrounded by a veritable orange grove. By the way, this is the land for oranges, as is amply evidenced by the fact that within a few miles of this place there is an orange grove of 700 acres. That is considered to be a small one, too. Think of that.

We are indeed glad to learn through the columns of the ADVOCATE of the good work that is being done by the brethren of the Mississippi Conference in the interests of the educational movement and the cause of Christ. C. W. HUFF.

THE ELEMENT OF IMAGINATION IN THE EXERCISE OF FAITH.

By faith we are justified and renewed in the likeness and image of God. This faith is seeing. "I will lift up my eyes unto the hills from whence cometh my help." "I saw one bleeding on the tree." But how much imagination is there in this seeing? This is difficult to determine. Christ becomes the object of faith. "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ." Though we have not seen him, yet we picture him in the imagination as a real being, having a body, a face with certain features, eyes with color, a mouth with a certain model. The imagination looks upon the cross, the hands and feet nailed to it, the wound in the side, and the blood trickling down from all the wounds. But how near does this sight come to the real? We have no photograph, no painting giving us the exact appearance of Christ. This imaginative view is guided by descriptions and likenesses which have come under our consideration and observation. It is certain that these are defective, and if our imagination follows them, the image of Christ formed in the mind must invariably be imperfect. These are but the conceptions of the artist for which he has no authority from the Scriptures. I have seen but two distinct likenesses, and all other artists follow these. Must our ideas of the person of Christ necessarily be true? If so, they must break away from the pictures held up before us, and another and a distinct one must be formed.

But is it necessary that the image of Christ seen by us should be absolutely perfect in order to salvation? If so, with our imperfect constitution, which can never form a perfect image, how can we be saved? If our mental nature will not allow us to form a correct image, can anything be substituted for it which will be acceptable to God, and with regard to which he will extend to us the hand of divine mercy? What is our experience in the case, and does it throw any light upon this important subject?

The soul seeking Christ, and to know him as a personal Savior, tries to rise to the cross. It creates a likeness he supposes to be that of the dying Son of God, and, like the tendrils of the vine entwining themselves around the giant oak, so his affections embrace and cling to the person whom his imagination has formed. Whether true or false, he is saved. What the imagination fails in is supplied by a good intention. Whilst the soul has done its best to be correct in its action, and whilst it does not come up to the perfect idea of the Christ of God, yet a good, a sincere intention to accept Christ and to be saved thereby, is a blessed substitute for a failure in all the operations of the imagination. If God did not accept this offering, there would be no hope for the wretched sinner. If the definition of imagination, as given in mental philosophy, be correct, we can not be far wrong in the views which we have advanced. With some degree of satisfaction we commit this subject to the fate which awaits it. J. F. SCURLOCK.

A MEASURE OF LOVE.

What a consolation to those who have not much of this world's goods if, when we cast our mite into the Lord's treasury, it can be said of us as it was of the widow, "She hath cast more in than all they which have cast into the treasury." If we have not worldly wealth to give, even the mite, given willingly and gladly, is more acceptable to God than all the gold of Ophir. Some may not have even the mite, but all have the wealth of a loving heart to give. If we truly love the Savior, our love should not be measured; it should be deep and lasting as eternity; it should be the Alpha and Omega of our lives. A kind word or look may seem to be a little thing, but the good it may do the all-seeing eye of God alone sees, and he who reads all hearts will accept our love. A drop of water is very small, but the great ocean is made up of little drops of water; so nothing, though it may be insignificant, if done in his name, will be lost in the ocean of eternity. May we "Count that day lost

Whose low-descending sun
Views from our hand
No worthy action done."

NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE W. F. M. S.

Sardis district sends us greeting through its secretary, Mrs. B. U. Friend. We love to be greeted in this way with notes of progress.

"The Sardis district is a flourishing one; most of the auxiliaries are good. Many true-souled, earnest women are at work for the Master. The Juveniles are coming to the front in this district, too. One juvenile society, 'The Buds of Promise,' of Sardis has raised all their pledge money, and have besides five dollars for some special, and are diligently at work. They attend well. One adult auxiliary at McGehee's Chapel (a country church) is of earnest, wide-awake members. They are supporting a Bible woman. This district is a field of good ground, which we hope soon to have all tilled and yielding a harvest for the Master's glory."

Now, dear sisters, I pray you give earnest heed to a most important matter. You have, doubtless, received the letter of your Conference secretary with that of Mrs. Trueheart. (This last was given in full by the Louisiana Conference editor last week.) These explain the situation; yet I crave your indulgence for 'a word of exhortation." Mrs. Trueheart tells us that, "To-day our treasury is empty, without enough to meet the present quarter's appropriations."

This statement would sound along our lines like a wail of despair did we not know the loyalty of our forces. Our missionary workers are true women, tireless women, God-trusting women; hence, while we deplore this distressing state of our finances, and repeat to ourselves the expression of our Sister McIntosh, 'None of us ever thought that we would see the day when our treasury would be empty," we can still, through this cloud of regret, catch the gleaming of the star of hope, which brightness comes to us from one thought, "Our missions prosper, and the prosperity for which we thank God increases our responsibility, calling, as it does, year after year, for larger resources."

Sisters, let not one in all our ranks lift a despondent voice, a note of discouragement, but, drawing a lesson from our daily surroundings, apply it to this grander work for our God in the uplifting of millions for whose salvation the Christian world is responsible.

We set a tiny plant, a vine, mayhap, or twig of fruit tree. Do we expect or desire that it shall remain as it is, barely living? Nay; we nourish, we care for it, we bestow thought and means for its proper development, that it may thrive and bring forth for our pleasure or our profit the very best results. So of everything that man undertakes—necessary expense gladly given in order to accomplish the end.

Try this plant that, by the help of God, we have set in various foreign fields, by the same process of reasoning. At first 'twas small, 'twas feeble. We did not wish it to remain a tender, infant plant. Its first budding gave us pleasure. It grew in height, in breadth, till eyes and hearts of workers at home are gladdened by its glorious proportions. We would not have it otherwise. As year by year new growth is added, more money is needed to supply nourishment for our beloved plant.

Now, our last dollar has been applied, and an empty treasury confronts us. But, sisters, listen: "Our missions prosper; souls are being born of God; thousands are seeking to know of Jesus. With this fact before us, we kneel at the feet of our Father, whose riches are boundless, and, by faith, we look into his beneficent face, asking for courage to meet this crisis. We can not, we must not, we will not see the work of our Lord languish for lack of the amount needed to carry it forward."

With such determination and such trust in every loyal heart, the $200 asked of the North Mississippi Conference W. F. M. S can easily be an assured fact, and as each Conference society falls into line with its quota for this need, the empty treasury will soon be a shadow of the past.

TO WEAR NEXT THE HEART.

The Bible is the conquering book. It has already dominated English literature, so that almost the whole of its text, from Genesis to Revelation, might, if all copies of the Bible were suddenly lost from the world, be restored in piecemeal fragments gathered out of the books in which the Book has been quoted. Then, besides, there are the Bible thoughts that have indirectly, we might almost say insidiously, permeated the literature of Europe and America. More than that, the Bible has been industriously for years securing its own translation into hundreds of tongues and dialects of the globe. The Koran does not take pains to translate itself, and, indeed, refuses to be translated; but in contradistinction with such apathy of false faiths the Bible courts transcription into foreign tongues, loses nothing in the process, but thereby gains for itself the homage of multitudes who, on reading it for the first time, cry, "This is the book we long have sought, that finds us out in the deepest recesses of our being, and satisfies the profoundest cravings of our souls!" The Bible is the comforting book. There is no volume like it for consolation. It is the only sure and steady staff for pilgrim spirits to lean upon, and the only book that is quotable at the bedside of the sick. It is a book to wear next the heart in life, and upon which to pillow the head in death. No other so-called "scriptures" of the world say the things that the Bible says, or supply the hopes that its promises afford. The Bible is not simply a book, it is the Book. It is the best book of any kind that we have. We can not do without it, either here or hereafter.—New York Observer.

RELIGION A JOY.

The religion of Christ is not a dismal thing. There is nothing that so lessens life's burdens and fears. It offers infinite peace and comfort and hope. It finds the sorrowful and dries their tears. It whispers truest consolations into the ears of the suffering. It teaches men glad endurance and inspires them with cheerful courage. Do you know the blessedness of being right with God? You can not unless you have been to Christ's cross. Do you experience the rapture of Christian service? It is impossible unless you are busy in his vineyard. Seek to gladden and strengthen the early years of the children, do your best to relieve some one's heavy burden, help some poor fellow to a better life, and you shall discover the most rare and exquisite gladness; you shall learn what the very joy of heaven is like. It is very significant that in St. Paul's list of the fruits of the Spirit, while the first place is given to love, joy stands second. When a man has been forgiven and restored, he finds the only perfect and abiding joy that can be found on earth. Brought up out of the horrible pit, out of the miry clay, his feet set upon the rock, his goings established, he learns the new glad song of praise unto God.—Rev. G. E. Young.

CHARITY IN JUDGING CHARACTER.

Hasty judgment of the actions of others is dangerous and often unjust. We measure too much by some superficial appearance and condemn hastily, when, if we but knew and understood the motives and reasons, we would warmly approve. We sometimes say of some one: "That pain, sorrow or loss has not deeply affected him." But we do not know. It is like the death of a few of the soldiers in front of a regiment. The broken ranks close up again into the solid phalanx and the loss is not apparent. There may be no disorganization, no surrender, no craving for pity, no display of despair. It is like the calm, dazzling play of the waves warmed by the morning's sun after a night of storm and disaster; there is no sign of the wreck, the tide has carried the debris away far out on the ocean; the treacherous water has swallowed all signs and tokens of the night's awful work. We see only the fairness of the morning, not the suffering of the night. Let us be charitable in our judgment and condemn not when we do not know.—William George Jordan.

GIVEN FREELY.

The best things of life have to be given freely, not from a sense of duty. You never can measure out friendship; you never can tell how much a man ought to do for his country; you never can tell what he should do for God. There is always that overflow, that abundance, which is chiefly valuable for us, and is valuable to God as it comes as the free-will offering of our hearts. You say of a certain person that he is just, implying you don't quite like him. You say of another person that he is generous, meaning that you do like him. It is because of that which he does beyond what he is obliged to do.

If there is any life where this applies with the utmost force, it is to the religious life. Your piety must make the cup overflow. If you do exactly your duty, and nothing else, your life is no comfort to you and little help to anyone else. You want something of joyousness and freedom in it, and then it tells.—Alexander McKenzie.

SOMETHING WRONG.

If every time you get into some little trouble you get the pouts and wish you were dead, you may rest assured there is something sadly wrong in your experience. Trials are essential to a state of probation, and if you are not willing, by the grace of God, to endure the trials essential as a disciplinary preparation for heaven, then you are sadly out of harmony with the divine will. Paul once, for a little while, thought it would be better to depart and be with Jesus. He was sorely tried, but this desire for his heavenly home was not brought about by trials, temptations, and persecutions. In the place of being discouraged by the severe trials and persecutions which he was called to endure, he boldly proclaimed that he "gloried in tribulations." Through the abundant grace of God we may all be like Paul. The thought of Paul being with Jesus was glorious, but, if possible, it was still more glorious to have from his pen the utterance, "I glory in tribulation."—Christian Standard.

Let us not climb the high wall till we get to it, or fight the battle till it opens, or shed tears over sorrows that may never come, or lose the joys and blessings that we have, by the sinful fear that God will take them away from us. We need all our strength and all the grace God gives us for to-day's burdens and to-day's battle. To-morrow belongs to our heavenly Father; I would not know its secrets if I could. It is far better to know whom we trust and that he is able to keep all we commit to him until the last great day.—L. Cuyler, D. D.

Many a Christian destroys his peace and usefulness because he is not willing to do little things. He wants to speak and pray well, eloquently, edifying, or not at all. Because he can not do some great thing he won't do anything. He must be in the highest seat or nowhere. No one is fit to do great things, unless he is willing to do little things. He must be faithful in the least, he will never be useful in the greatest. If all were willing to add a little to the interest of a meeting, Sabbath-school, or to the strength and influence of the church, there would not be so many praying to be excused. Happy is the man who is willing to do a little, the servant of all, a door-keeper, bell ringer, fire builder, lamp-lighter, anything that will serve Christ in the house of God.—Selected.

Christ is ever passing by. He may come again—he does continually come again—but he is ever moving, and the blessing we would get from him at any time we must get as he passes. All the days seem alike as they come to us, but each day comes with its own opportunities, its own calls of duty, its own privileges, holding out hands offering us radiant gifts. The day passes and never comes again. Other days as bright may come, but that day never comes a second time. If we do not take just then the gift it offers, we shall never have another chance to get them, and shall always be poorer for what we have missed. We need to be alert to take quickly from each day the blessing it brings.—J. R. Miller, D. D.

O God, who makest cheerfulness the companion of strength, but sendest to leave us in time of weakness; we humbly beseech thee that if, for our unworthiness or in thy sovereign wisdom, thou sendest tribulation yet, for thy mercy's sake, deny us not the comfort of patience. Thou wilt not lay more upon us than thou wilt enable us to bear; but, since the fretfulness of our spirits is more hurtful than the heaviness of our burden, grant us that inner calmness which comes when we feel thee with us, and give us grace to own that thou doest all things well. Amen.—R. Crompton Jones.

To read the Bible with profit one must acquire an appetite for it. But in order to acquire an appetite for it one must read it. We have heard of a few people waking up some fine morning with an appetite for the Book which they never had before, but, as a rule, we do not come at an appetite of any sort in that way. Reading the Bible daily will not always give one an appetite for it, but one who does not read his Bible daily will soon lose all taste for it.—Bible Reader.

Not from physical evil, not from pain; Christ does not exempt his own from such kind of evil. Nay, we hesitate to call pain and sorrow evil when we remember what bright characters they have made. . . . But the evil from which Christ's sanctification separates the soul is the worst of evils, properly speaking, the only evil—sin, revolt from God, disloyalty to conscience, tyranny of the passions, strife of our self-will in conflict with the loving will of God.—F. W. Robertson.

And still he is coming to us asking, requiring of us this grace of hospitality, not only in the case of every one who asks of us a cup of cold water and whom our Lord himself will personate at the last day and say, "I was a stranger and ye took me in;" but also in regard to the claims upon our heart's reception which he only in his own person makes.—Marcus Dods, D. D.

He who never looks up to a living God, to a heavenly presence, loses the power of perceiving that presence, and the universe slowly turns into a dead machine, clashing and grinding without purpose or end.—J. F. Clarke.

The prayer of Agur was double—a wise one: "Give me neither poverty nor riches;" but few ever use the prayer so long as any chance to get rich is left.—Methodist Herald.

FROM THE WORK.

FOREST CIRCUIT.

I was appointed to the Forest circuit at the last Annual Conference, and we reached the parsonage here one week after we left Hattiesburg. On getting acquainted with the people, we found many of them to be loyal Methodists. There are some excellent people on this charge—men and women who are willing to make sacrifices for their Lord; while, on the other hand, there are a great many who do nothing and are very little concerned about the prosperity of the church.

We have four appointments, three houses of worship, and one of the best parsonages in the Conference. I have received 14 members on profession of faith and 14 by certificate. We have held four protracted meetings.

At Homewood I was assisted by Rev. B. Robertson, who did us efficient work, and preached to the delight and edification of the people. Rev. P. D. Gardin was with us at Pulaski, and labored faithfully and effectively. He did some telling preaching and left with the good wishes and prayers of the people. The pastors of the Congregational Methodist and Cumberland Presbyterian Churches and I held a union meeting at Harperville. We had large congregations, the Lord was with us, and all felt that good was accomplished. Our last meeting was here in Forest, beginning Thursday night before the third Sunday in October with a strong sermon by Bro. Melleu, our presiding elder. Rev. M. L. Burton, manager of the Mississippi Orphanage at Water Valley, came to us next morning and did the balance of the preaching. Bro. Burton is a strong preacher, and he delighted the people of Forest with his pointed, forcible, and earnest sermons. We did not have what you might call a revival, but I am sure the meeting will result in good. Rev. T. J. O'Neal and Bro. Meiers were both with us through most of the meeting and greatly helped in the work by way of song and prayer.

I can not say that the Forest circuit has made any decided advancement this year, but the work has moved steadily along as well as could be expected, I guess. The number of additions on profession of faith have been more than twice what they were last year, and up to this time the charge has paid $29.95 more on the Conference collections than was paid last year. We have repaired the church here in Forest at an expense of $43. We have raised $46.50 for the Orphan's Home, and about $70 for other purposes. Have raised in cash $ for Twentieth Century Educational Fund, and $10.20 on Children's Day. We are trying to bring the collections up in full. I think the pastor's salary will be paid out.

D. SCARBOROUGH, P. C.

HOMER.

In retrospecting this, the first year of my pastorate here at Homer, I feel it to be one of the most pleasant of my ministerial life, while in some respects one of the busiest. The people have grown on us, and as they have rallied to us in the work of the Master our hearts have grown warm towards each other. The various departments of work have increased in interest and usefulness, and a wonderful spiritual uplift has been realized by very many.

Collections all in hand above assessments, save for ministerial support, and the stewards speak hopefully of the final outcome at this point. We have just re-covered our church in Homer; will put other repairs on later, and we are in a fair way to adjust our parsonage matters. Just closed a meeting of two weeks here, at which the pastor did all the preaching, but by no means all the work. Many of the services were baptized with the spirit of conviction, and love and joy. All who put something into the meeting got a great deal out of it; others, of course, for reasons of their own, who did not, failed.

My! my!! what a storm struck the parsonage pantry Saturday evening in the shape of a delivery wagon, loaded with good things, eatables of almost every description, and a sealed note containing "cash," and these words, "Please accept provisions and money as a love token from your many friends in Homer." And then you may know, Mr. Editor, there went up from grateful hearts the voice of thanksgiving to the Giver of all good.

And now we are nearing the end. Conference is almost here and we must go up to Jerusalem.

May the good Lord bless the people of Homer circuit, giving them the best here, and hereafter eternal life!

W. F. HENDERSON.

PLEASANT GROVE.

We came here by appointment the last week of July, and were quite surprised to find six churches in the charge composed of more than five hundred members. These six churches are scattered over four counties, viz.: Lawrence, Lincoln, Pike, and Marion. It was in the bounds of this charge that the Rev. Elijah Steele, of sacred memory, spent his boyhood days. Here Rev. B. A. Beeson, a faithful local preacher, labored many, many years, preaching all over this circuit in the churches, schoolhouses and homes of the people, sowing seed which is yielding an abundant harvest. Here Rev. L. J. Jones labored four years with tireless energy, making deep foot-prints in the sand, leading heavenward.

We have held revival meetings at three of our churches, with beneficial results to our people. Family prayer is neglected by many of our people, but we are hoping for better things in the future. While we have some few things to discourage us, we have many things to encourage us. Those farmers that have used diligence in cultivating their crops have had many "sheaves" to gather. Not only that; the Lord has sent us excellent weather in which to harvest these abundant crops. Our finances are sadly in arrears.

RURAL HILL CIRCUIT.

Shortly after Christmas I was appointed to this work by my presiding elder, Bro. Joseph S. Oakley. As the parsonage at Rural Hill had been destroyed by fire a short time before I was appointed to the work, and my children going to school in Koscinsko, I remained and traveled the work from here—a distance of thirty miles. All the people of the circuit right from the start received me very kindly, and I have moved on with my work and the people very smoothly. I have four churches and five appointments.

By the help of the Lord, I have been able to fill all of my appointments. I have held four protracted meetings and preached two to three times every Sabbath. In the Spring and Summer my people had measles all over the circuit. This prevented me from holding my Children's Day only at two places. I have talked, both publicly and privately, the importance of Sunday-schools, prayer meetings, and urged my people to pray with their families and read our church papers and literature.

My circuit has a membership of about three hundred. Twenty-two have been added to the church this year and eleven infants baptized. The assessment is thirty-five dollars for the presiding elder and three hundred dollars for the preacher in charge. They have paid up to date about two hundred dollars. They all say that the assessment is light and ought to be paid, and I am satisfied it would be if the proper efforts are put forth.

Bro. Angustus held two of my Quarterly Conferences, and Bro. Gordon one. We all enjoyed the preaching and ruling of these brethren very much. I held a week's meeting at each one of my churches, and the membership generally was greatly revived. Some took up public prayer and some erected family altars. The following brethren assisted me in my meetings: Bros. D. W. Bubb at Plattsburg, W. A. Dollar (deceased) at Rural Hill, V. C. Curtis at Center Ridge, and Robert A. Whitmire at White Hall. All these brethren did faithful work and were very acceptable to my people. May the Lord continue to use them as instruments for the saving of many precious souls!

Brethren, let us preach Christ and him crucified, and be examples to our people and work for the ADVOCATE.

JOSEPH W. HALL.

MADISON, MISS.

On Monday, Nov. 6, at Pocahontas, the fourth Quarterly Conference for the Madison circuit was held. It was the first Quarterly Conference that our presiding elder, Rev. T. B. Holloman, had been permitted to hold since the last days of September, being prevented by the fears at the stations and on the circuits concerning anyone who had been about Jackson in the recent days or weeks. There has been no fever this season within the bounds of the Madison circuit. But the experiences of last year caused apprehensions which to some extent hindered the operations of the church. But the Quarterly Conference reports showed that, financially, we are almost assured of being able to answer at Vicksburg concerning all the assessments "paid in full." Only one church of the charge gives us any uneasiness as to this matter. There have been received during the year 25 members, 8 being on profession of faith. There have departed from among us 20 by death and certificate, so that the net gain is only 5. Two of our very best men have left us during the year—B. W. Henry, of Pocahontas, by answering the call of the death angel, and C. L. Ray, of Pearl River Church, by removal to Canton. But we trust that the four Epworth Leagues of the charge will prove a recruiting agency that will more than counterbalance any possible losses.

Our Sunday-school workers look forward with pleasure to the coming hither of the Sunday-school Conference next March. Three of our Sunday-schools have observed the Missionary Rally Day, and it has proved an inspiration, besides realizing sums that will be no inconsiderable help in enabling the pastor to report the Conference collections "paid in full."

The people of this circuit compare well with others in thrift and intelligence, and the love shown to the ministry, both pastor and presiding elder, by our membership and also by non-members, is very encouraging. If there were a good parsonage-building here, Madison Station would be almost an ideal home for a preacher's family.

H. G. HAWKINS, P. C.

MINDEN, LA.

The Conference year will close in good shape for Minden station. The church is in better condition than the present incumbent of the pastorate found it. Thirty-four have been added to the church in the year, and there will be a net increase of twenty-seven. The testimony of all is, that congregations are better than for years past. Those upon whom the church leans for spiritual as well as financial support are in hearty accord with the pastor. Almost unanimous!

The Conference collections will be paid in full, and the stewards will not let the salary fall behind. The Woman's Missionary Society has increased its membership.

Holding meetings for other brethren, and the necessity for close study, have prevented my fullest efficiency in the pastorate. I am not at all anxious to exchange with any brother in the Louisiana Conference.

He joineth Himself as by an accident to men on the ways of life, and afterwards maketh as though He would go farther. When they constrain Him to abide, it does not matter whether the soul be as a palace or a cottage; He will enter, and the tenant will become a saint.—Ian Maclaren.

A form of disease may become so common that it is regarded as a necessary condition. In some of the valleys of Switzerland goitre, or thick neck, afflicts every inhabitant. A party of American tourists entering one of these valleys was followed by a body of jeering children who cried, "See, these people have no goitres," as if to be without a goitre was a physical deficiency.

Similarly, the prevalence of irregular periods among young women, and the commonness of debilitating drains among married women have created the mischievous idea that these are the natural conditions of womanhood.

In normal health the periods should be regular and painless and there should be neither drains nor pains for the married woman. To regain that normal condition of health is possible to every woman who will make a trial of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. It regulates the periods, dries up the drains, and cures ulceration and inflammation.

Sick women can consult Dr. R. V. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y., by letter without charge. Every letter is held as strictly private and sacredly confidential.

"I had falling of internal organs and had to go to bed once a month; had irregular monthly periods which would sometimes last ten or twelve days," writes Mrs. Alice L. Holmes, of Coolspring Street, Uniontown, Pa. "Had also indigestion so bad that I could not eat anything hardly. Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription and 'Golden Medical Discovery' cured me. I took three bottles of the 'Favorite Prescription' and one of the 'Golden Medical Discovery.'"

A CORRUPTING STREAM.

One of the most prolific sonrces of corruption in this day of boasted progress is the extensive stream of filthy and abominable literatnre that issnes from the press. While more good books and periodicals are being printed than ever before, there is no end to the nnmber of books and papers of a totally opposite character. The whole conntry is being delnged with them, and nnless the Christian public becomes more thoronghly aroused to the importanco of checking the progress of this dangerous cnrrent, the morals of our yonth are going to snffer woefnl deterioration.

Says the editor of the Central Christian Advocate: "The recent shocking mnrder of a yonth in Chicago by two yonng fellows, his former school-mates, followed by their almost immediate arrest, has hronght ont the fact that vile reading matter and degrading pictnres had mnch to do with prompting the deed. The ideals which these yonng degenorates fed npon were gross, blood-thirsty, and debasing, and these ideals were created and snstained in largo measnre by the cheap and nasty stnff which they read. This is only one instance ont of many that might be cited in which sensational stories of the worst sort have led to a career of crime. The harm done by vile reading matter stands next, we believe, in extent to that arising from the liqnor traffic, and yet so insidiously is it wronght that it frequently eludes the notice of the pulpit."

Crimes either snggested or caused by vile literatnre are of snch frequency that Christian men and women can not afford to be indifferent to the existence and continnance of snch a sonrce of evil. The late Bishop John P. Newman some time ago gave the following testimony regarding New York City: "Take the criminal classes of our city, especially those between the ages of seven and twenty, and yon will find that the majority of them have been nnder the influence of impure literatnre. Ont of 3,813 inmates of onr Honses of Refnge, between the ages of sixteen and seventeen, nearly all who could read were readers of dime novels. What is trne of New York City in this regard is trne of nearly every other city and section of the Union."

The natnre of onr reading often has as mnch to do with shaping onr thonghts and acts as has the character of our associates. What we read helps no little to determine what we shall become as well as what we are. Says one writer, "Between an anthor and a carefnl reader there is an intimacy established even closer than is possible in the interconrse of life, and hence evil books poison the springs of thonght and feeling mnch more thoronghly than an evil acqnaintanceship could do." Onr thonghts are largely colored by what we read. Hence, if onr intellectnal food be trashy or impnre, how can we hope for the mind and heart to escape contamination? The injnry wronght by reading a single bad book is often irreparable. Unless the reader is well established in good principles and habits (and such, of conrse, can not be true of children and young people) the mind and conscience are certain to be defiled in some degree by the perusal of bad literatnre. Some wonld give well-nigh their all if they could only obliterate from the tablets of memory the obscene pictnres and iniqnitous snggestions left there by the reading of a foul book or paper. Associating in thonght with the wicked is the next step to associating and hobnobbing with them in act. The young who become familiarized with vice and profligacy through their reading soon have their moral sensibilities binnted, and not infrequently come to mistake deviltry and dissoluteness for smartness and conrage. Yonth will become acqnainted with wickedness soon enongh in real life without having it forced npon their attention throngh the medinm of vicious literature.

This is a reading age, bnt so mnch the worse for the rising generation nnless a proper censorship is exercised over their reading. That the young are capable of judging what is safe and wholesome reading is by no means to be supposed; yet boys and girls are often permitted to read anything they happen to fancy, or that is recommended by some friend, who, it may be, has a depraved taste. Maidens sometimes pore for hours over some novel or story, the chief characters in which are bnt painted villains, and the plot of which tnrns npon infidelity to marriage vows. Shonld the characters depicted therein appear in actnal life and seek admission to the homes of the daughters and sons who are so fascinated by snch fiction, they wonld be promptly kicked ont of doors.

Many a novel that is attractively written and widely circulated embodies a sneer at virtue or a sly attack npon the Christian religion, and is really far more pernicious than some other books that are recognized as positively corrupting.

Boys and young men are often led into impurity and profligacy by the snggestions and banefnl stimnlns of certain indecent pnblications that, alas! are easily obtainable. On account of the fact that impure literatnre is sometimes clandestinely sent to college students, some college presidents adopt the precantion of examining every book, paper or letter that their pupils receive. Novels and story papers of the "blood-and-thnnder" kind are extremely tempting to most boys, and yet none are more dangerous.

One of the best ways of counteracting the evil mentioned is to pnt into the hands of the young an ample supply of the pnre and charming literature which is now so abnndant and cheap. We mnst seek to crowd out the bad and worthless by circulating the good.

AT CENTENARY.

By invitation of the president, we gave a lectnre in the chapel of Centenary College on Thnrsday night, the sixteenth. This was onr first trip to Centenary for several years. Great have been the changes since our last visit. The campns has nndergone a transformation, so that it is now "a thing of beanty." The exterior of the centre building has been renovated. Extensive repairs and improvements have been made in the interior. Among many other improvements, the spacions and elegant chapel has been so reconstrncted as to make a change in its aconstic properties that is almost marvelous. Formerly its aconstics were decidedly bad, so that only a man of stentorian vocal powers could be well heard. Now, it seems to us to be almost a model anditorinm.

Through the enterprise of Dr. Cooper and the Board of Trnstees two neat, well-constrncted residences have been erected on the campus, one of which is occnpied by the president, the other by Prof. Carter. Abont 140 pupils are now in attendance, and many others are expected soon. The personelle of the student body is for the most part good. The college has a well-eqnipped, energetic and efficient facnlty, and every department of the institntion is working in a satisfactory manner. The boarding department, condncted on the co-operative plan, fnrnishes good board at a price within the reach of boys of moderate means. We congratnlate Lonisiana Methodism npon having snch an institntion within its bonnds.

Dnring onr stay in Jackson we enjoyed the cordial hospitalities of Dr. Cooper and his interesting family. We had the pleasnre of meeting the varions members of the facnlty. We also met Rev. F. S. Parker, Rev. R. W. Tncker and Rev. R. W. Vanghan, of the Lonisiana Conference. Bro. Parker is in high favor with the Centenary folks and with his flock in general, and is doing excellent work. Bro. Tncker is jnst closing a term of four years on the Baton Rouge district. His services in this important office seem to have given such general satisfaction that he would doubtless remain a while longer bnt for the law. Bro. Vaughan is taking boarders for the college and also taking a college conrse. Rev. M. M. Black, of the Mississippi Conference, took a peep at Centenary simultaneously with our visit. En route home we chanced to travel with Rev. H. W. Rickey on his way to the city to visit his mother, who was then quite ill, but who, we are pleased to learn, is now on the road to recovery. Bro. Rickey is in the midst of a decidedly prosperous pastorate at Clinton.

A BISHOP ENDORSED.

Bishop Nelson, of the Protestant Episcopal Chnrch, preached a sermon at Atlanta last Snnday in opposition to prohibition. He declares that prohibition increases intemperance. Every saloon keeper, brewer and distiller in the land will shout, "That's so," and yet they spend money by tens of thousands to defeat prohibition in any and every State in which the question is agitated. It would be bnsiness-like to contribnte to the treasnry of the prohis and help them to get a prohibitory law in every State, as this wonld greatly help their business. Bnt, then, they are like the good Bishop; they don't want to see the nation get on a big drnnk, and so they fight prohibition in the interest of the temperance cause. Bah!

NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE NOTES.

Presiding elders and pastors are bnsy as bees ronnding np and preparing for Conference. The indications are that fairly good reports, financial and spiritnal, will be made.

Bro. Bowen writes from Columbns thns: "The revival was a great success for all departments of church work. There were 17 accessions and a great many conversions in the chnrch. All things are coming np well for Conference."

Rev. R. A. Tncker, Prairie circnit, writes: "I will have a first-class report from my charge at Conference." So do many othere say of their works.

That is a wise provision of the law whereby anthority is given for the calling of special sessions of the Qnarterly Conference. A fifth session can frequently be held to great advantage in charges where the fourth has to be held two or three months before the close of the Conference year. Bro. Shipman is testing the ntility of the plan of a "fifth ronnd," and so far reports gratifying results. A regnlar session of the Conference, held by the presiding elder, proves more snccessfnl, financially, than simply a "fifth steward's meeting."

Bro. Browning, assisted by Bro. McIntosh, recently held a meeting in Itta Bena, which resulted in 24 accessions to the chnrch—12 of them on profession of faith—the organization of an Epworth League with 30 members, and a general revival in the church.

This writer recently gave two weeks' service in the Delta, at Minter City, Itta Bena, Clarksdale, Dnblin, Tntwiler, Webb and Greenwood. The pastors—Leech, Browning, Mnrrah, Bass, and Mitchell—gave him cordial co-operation, which enabled him to do effective work. A good library was ordered for Cherry Hill Sunday-school, and one projected for Webb, and many books furnished to homes and individnals, as well as song books to chnrches.

The ADVOCATE is snpplying its readers with good pabnlum for the mental and spiritual man. The editorials, selected matter and contributions are mostly interesting, pertinent, and profitable. The discussion on "The Dearth of Preachere" is snggestive and interesting. The brethren are venting some wise and timely thonghts, that it is hoped will awake the dormant conscience of the chnrch, and provoke greater concern and more earnest prayers for more laborers who shall be trnly consecrated and thoroughly eqnipped for the work. The article, in the issue of Nov. 9, on "Church Music," deserves to be read and re-read by every preacher and church member who recognizes the song service as a part of divine worship, and who wonld maintain it in all pnrity and effectiveness. We hope the writer will give us more on the same snbject, and—if he or she has no serious objection—over the trne name.

The people of Greenwood are ready and waiting for the Conference. They are anticipating the occasion with great delight, and sincerely desire that each preacher come to them "in the fnllness of the blessing of the gospel of Christ." Let ns go in his name, and manifest the power of the Holy Ghost npon ns in all we say and do; then shall we have the presence of the Master, approving our work, blessing our sonls, and making ns a blessing nnto others. So may it be.

Preachers and others going to Conference via I. C. R. R. will note that they will arrive at Winona from the north at 2 A. M. and at 1:30 P. M., and from the sonth at 4 A. M. and at 4 P. M. The trains leave Winona on the Sonthern for Greenwood at 7:45 A. M. and 7 P. M. The rnn is about one hour and fifteen minntes. Any preachers or lay delegates who will have to stop over in Winona will be met and provided with entertainment if they will notify Rev. R. I. Allen, or myself, when they will be here.

G. W. BACHMAN.

THE TEXAS BAPTIST STATE CONVENTION.

This body met in this city last Friday and held their sessions in the anditorium at the Fair Grounds. They claimed to have some 3,000 delegates present, bnt when they balloted on the seating of Dr. Hayden, which vote called out the fnll strength of both parties in the fight, there were cast abont 1,730 votes. Bnt there were at least 3,000 or 4,000 members of the chnrch present during the voting. It was a memorable gathering. No political gathering ever excited the interests of the commnnity in a manner similar to this Baptist Convocation. Dr. Hayden has contended all along that if the convention wonld meet in North Texas, that his followers wonld be in the majority. So when a few months ago it was appointed to meet in Dallas, the clans began to work all over the State. When they concentrated their opposing forces here last week, it was like the coming together of two belligerent armies. Everybody expected something to happen. Excitement was at fever heat. Grave preachers were in an ugly hnmor, and men and women were talking with great emphasis. Snch was the jam that entrance to the building could only be had by ticket. We looked over the snrging throng with their brows knit and wondered what Christ was thinking of the spirit dominating the hearts of these his followers. The whole conconrse seemed ready for an explosion. The preliminaries moved off slowly, and there were frequent symptoms of an ontbreak. Finally the Committee on Credentials was appointed, and then everybody knew that things wonld snbside nntil that committee bronght in its report. This was not done nntil Satnrday night, and then the sparks began to fly. Of conrse, there was a motion to discard Dr. Hayden. After some noisy skirmishing it was decided by a vote to give him thirty minntes in which to show cause why he shonld not be ejected. He monnted a table and made the most sensational speech ever heard in a religions assembly in Texas. Snch was its character that no responsible newspaper can pnblish it for fear of the libel laws of the State. A layman replied to him, and the vote was taken, and he was refnsed a seat—abont 1,100 to 500 in ronnd nnmbers. He picked np his hat and left the auditorium, and the convention drew a long breath. Bnt the bad feeling between the factions is more intense than ever before. What Dr. Hayden's next move will be we do not know, but he announced himself in the fight to remain.—Texas Advocate.

A $2,800,000 SERMON.

It is reliably reported that Dr. Gnnsaulns, in the six years of his pastorate at Plymouth Chnrch, Chicago, collected more than $6,000,000 for institntions which he aided or fonnded. One Snnday he convincingly declared the things that shonld be done for the boys and girls of this generation. At the conclnsion of the disconrse, Mr. Philip D. Armonr stepped np to the preacher, when some snch conversation as this ensued:

"Do yon believe in those ideas yon jnst now nttered?" said Mr. Armour.

"I certainly do," replied the pastor.

"And you would carry them into execution if yon had the means?"

"Most assnredly."

"Well then," said Mr. Armour, "if yon will give me five years of yonr time, I'll give yon the money."

Snch was the origin of the Armour Institnte, of which Dr. Gunsaulns is president, where twelve hnndred young men and women are taught the industrial arts. To that establishment Mr. Armour has given $2,800,000, and the discourse which secured the gift will go down in history as the $2,800,000 sermon.

Do we preach to onr rich men the gospel of giving as taught by Jesns Christ? How mnch had he to say abont the rich and their money, and to the rich about their money! It is one of the major categories of his gospel. How he exposed the dangers and magnified the nses of money! We wrong the souls and thwart the nsefulness of onr rich men when we fail to preach the gospel of money in its fullness. The raising of the Twentieth Centnry Fnnd will do more than endow onr colleges, great and necessary as that work is, if it loads to a nniversal proclamation of Jesns Christ's own full gospel on the subject of money. No preacher can fulfill his commission who has not mastered that gospel. Let a clear bugle blast ring from every pnlpit in onr church. Deal faithfully with the sonls of the rich, and snbject them to all the tests of the gospel.—Southern Methodist Review.

"IN HIS STEPS."

The immense sale of "In His Steps" in England is doubtless dne largely to the fact that twenty English firms were pnshing the book at one time. An English pnblication says that "in four months its circnlation has far snrpassed the total circnlation of all of Mrs. Henry Wood's novels in forty years. 'East Lynne,' which has had a larger circnlation than any other English copyright novel, has only reached 480,000 copies, and it is said that the total nnmber sold of William Black's novels is not more than 300,000. 'Three Men in a Boat,' a remarkably popnlar book, reached 160 000; 'Beside the Bonnie Briar Bnsh,' 90,000; 'A Prisoner of Zenda,' 70,000, and 'The Christian,' the most popnlar book of 1897, sold to the extent of 123,000 in that year. Bnt 'In His Steps' has reached a sale of 3 000,000 copies." Three of Mr. Sheldon's books, pnblished in England at a penny, ran through an aggregate edition of 900,000 in three weeks.—Pnblishers' Weekly.

A PASTOR'S HEART.

Here is Bishop Wilberforce's advice to a clergyman who wished the Bishop to tell him why he had failed, and how he was to succeed: 'Show the people that yon have a pastor's heart, and I do not think they will be long in giving yon the natnral retnrn—their snpport. I can not tell you how earnestly I long for such a change in yonr ministry, in its fnndamental character. I see not the love of sonl, I see not faith in your Master's presence in it. Yonr ministry looks to me like the stinted nnwilling service of that fearful character—the mere professional priest. God knows if this is so. I speak of the aspect which ontwardly yonr ministry wears. My advice, for which yon ask, is pray! pray for more thorough conversion of the heart—pray for ministerial zeal—pray for love to Christ. Pray for the outponring of the Spirit on yonr own sonl, and on your ministry, and then live in yonr parish, live for yonr parish; work in it only as a man can work who has come to his work from intercession for his people."—Southern Churchman.

NOTES.

Rev. and Mrs. J. M. Morse are spending a week in the city, the gnests of Rev. V. D. Skipper.

The Union Thanksgiving Service in this city will be held at Dryades Street. The sermon will be preached by Rev. V. D. Skipper.

Rev. S. B. Beall, of the Louisiana Conference, has been transferred to the West Texas Conference, and stationed at one of the chnrches in San Antonio.

We learn that the Epworth League at Wesson, Miss., some time since assnmed the task of raising all the Annual Conference assessments, and that they have succeeded in collecting the entire amount. A pointer.

Rev. H. C. Brown, of the Mississippi Conference, is closing a pro perons year on the Fannin circuit.

Owing to the illness of Bisho Fitzgerald, Bishop Candler preside at the recent session of the Memphi Conference.

The Morse-Skipper meeting Wesson was a great success. Im mense crowds were in attendanc Nineteen have been added to th chnrch, with more to follow. Ther were many conversions.

Rev. G. D. Parker has just close a very snccessfnl meeting at Carroll ton. Quite a number professed con version, and there were several ac cessions to the chnrch. Most of th preaching was done by Prof. Carte

Rev. J. S. Sanders, writing fro Ft. Jessup, La., says: "We are no in one of the greatest revivals thi country ever saw. It has broke out in the school here, and scores ar crowding the altar, and getting con verted and sanctified. The peopl pack the chnrch, and numbers stan that can not get seats, and the wor still deepens, and the end is not yet."

Writing from Pleasant Grov Miss., Rev. B. P. Jaco says: "W had a grand day here yesterday Two services, with large congrega tions. The Spirit of God was upo ns, and our hearts were strangel warmed. Raised most of our Con ference assessments. Will get all This was the last appointment fo the Conference year at the churc where I was licensed to preach an afterwards recommended to the An nnal Conference. It is a great pleasure to spend a year back a home."

Rev. W. D. Bass writes: "Rev Wm. Schnhle closed his protracte meeting in Bastrop last night (Nov 13). I preached for him dnring th last ten days of the battle. Conver sions and additions, and much good accomplished in many ways. Bro Schnhle is in great favor with the people of his town, not only his own chnrch, bnt the other denominations They all want him back another year, which will fill ont the four-year limit for him at that station. He is an inteligent, consecrated Christian gentleman."

Rev. B. B. Sullivan, of the North Mississippi Conference, in a private letter says: "I feel that I have been amply repaid for my efforts in putting the ADVOCATE in the homes of the people, for I not only have the satisfaction of knowing that much good has been accomplished thereby to the individnals themselves, but the additional satisfaction of being able to report salary and collections paid in fnll—a thing that has not occnrred before in years on this charge. This resnlt is dne in part to the increased circnlation of yonr excellent paper."

The following from Rev. J. A. Bowen will be read with painful interest by the nnmorons friends of Bro. and Sister Lipscomb: "Columbns, Miss., Nov. 17, 1899.—Little Mary Hargrove Lipscomb, third of Rev. George H. and Bessie Lipscomb, went to heaven this morning from the home of her grandfather, Dr. W. L. Lipscomb, to meet her sainted father. She was abont two years old, and the very likeness of her father. She has been sick nearly ever since he died. All that prayer and medical skill could do has been done. Her bereaved mother and all the family will have the prayers of hundreds of friends."

Writing from Helena, Ark., under date of Nov. 18, Rev. H. R. Singleton says: "I am closing the year at Helena, and I can report some improvement—over 110 accessions and 75 baptisms. Desirable and convenient parsonage bought and fnrnished; a $600 fnrnace added to the church, besides other improvements. A decided increase in attendance upon worship, Snnday-school, and Epworth League. We have as many as 100 at our League meetings. I hope to make a good financial report at Conference. My health has remained good, and I am in better working order than I have been in years. I can not be weaned from the NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE. It comes as a special welcome messenger from friends and kindred once a week."

"ALL FOR CHRIST."

REV. THOMAS B. CLIFFORD, Jackson, La., EDITOR.

MISSISSIPPI.

REV. HENRY G. HAWKINS, Madison, Miss., ASSOCIATE EDITOR.

Christ, upon leaving the earth, exhorted his chosen ones to reach out for universal empire. Hence it is that heathen salvation is a plank in our platform.

Our set of the League Conrse books has been received through Rev. G. W. Bachman, of Winona, Miss. They are of uniform height and width. "Our Island Empire" is the thickest of the four, with 488 pages and an index. It is in Sections I., II., III., and IV., devoted respectively to Cuba, Porto Rico, Hawaii, and The Philippines. In each section are eight chapters, with subjects as follows: Historical Sketch, Physical Conditions, Natural Productions, Civil and Political Relations, Centers of Population, Manners and Customs, Agricultural Productions, Manufactures and Commerce. The book, "Among the Forces," is devoted to Nature and the helps we receive from her. In the chapter, "Why Written," the author says: "I desire that my readers of this generation shall be the great thinkers and inventors of the next. There are amazing powers just waiting to be revealed. We have not yet learned the A B C of science. We have not yet grasped the scepter of provided dominion. Those who are most in the image and likeness of the cause of these forces are most likely to do it." There are thirty-two subjects, the first four being: "The Man Who Needed 452,696 Barrels of Water," "The Sun's Great Horses," "Old Sun Help," "Moon Help." "Great Books," by Farrar, consists of six papers, one being on great books in general, the others on the special subjects: John Bunyan, Shakespeare, Dante, Milton, Imitation of Christ. "Bible Truths," by Bishop Keener, has already been noticed in this column.

Mr. D. McArthur, Miss Helen Stewart, and Miss Rosa McNeil, who are active members of the Madison Epworth League, have for the past two weeks been at Flora in charge of the fever patients.

Miss Vic Thompson, State Secretary, sends the following:

MISSISSIPPI STATE LEAGUE ASSESSMENT. RECEIVED TO NOV. 6, 1899.

Starkville	$2 00
Vossburg	1 35
Madison	1 00
Tupelo	2 00
Total	$6 35

Has your League paid its share on this assessment? Remember the money is needed now, and no League is exempt from dues. This is a small matter, and I trust it will not be crowded out by other claims. The payment of your dues now will pay you up to the time of the next State Conference. How many Leagues will respond with their share during November? Remit to treasurer, D. G. Patton, Jackson.

Miss Anne Scales, of Macon, Miss., Columbus District Secretary, sends the following:

It is with much pleasure that I report to you the organization of two new Leagues in the Columbus district—one at X Prairie, the other at Columbus.

On Sunday evening last, Oct. 29, the West Point League held a song service and missionary rally, and realized a twenty-dollar free-will offering. The service was most enjoyable, the talks on Missions by Mr. W. F. Lagrone and Miss Josie Critz being particularly good.

Rev. R. A. Burroughs, presiding elder, appointed as Central Committee for this district: Miss Anne Scales, Miss Josie Critz and Mr. J. I. Sturdivant. This committee met Bro. Burroughs and Bro. Meek, Monday afternoon, Oct. 30, in Starkville. Mr. Sturdivant being absent, his place was filled by Mr. W. W. Magruder. It was decided that a sinking fund be raised by the Leagues, this fund to be used in case of deficit in foreign mission collection. As Conference is so close at hand, it was deemed best to have missionary rallies, and the members of the committee are now at work pushing this idea. With so short a time in which to do so much, we feel that we must go to work in earnest.

ATTENTION!

EPWORTH LEAGUERS OF MISSISSIPPI.

The State officers are earnestly pressing the work throughout the State. Our plans are large, and our purpose is to make this the very best year of the League's history in Mississippi. But we need money to pay printers and buy stationery and stamps, and to meet other expenses of the campaign. If every League in the State would pay up the five cents per member, as assessed by the State Conference, we would have the needed money. Why not? Why not now?

Mr. President of the League, this is for you.

Miss Secretary, please heed! Send five cents for each member you have in your League at once to Miss Vic Thompson, Tupelo, Miss.

H. WALTER FEATHERSTUN,
State President.

MORE OF THIS KIND NEEDED.

At a recent Quarterly Conference, in answer to Ques. 21, a local preacher's report was read, two items of which were as follows: "I have preached during the year 145 sermons, and have received 32 persons into the church." Remembering the words of ¶ 168, especially the latter part of the second sentence, I commended warmly this brother's work. There came from various members of this large Quarterly Conference spontaneous expressions of appreciation from men who were his neighbors and who had known him a long time. All of this was unusual—sadly uncommon—and calls for the explanation, which follows:

The brother is a plain man with but little education, and no extraordinary gifts whatever; but he is a consistent Christian, consecrating thoroughly what talents he has to Christ's service. He does not wait for the preacher in charge to arrange some appointments—one at the "home church" and others at popular preaching places—and then urge him to accept the arrangement; but he goes instead at the beginning of the year and secures from his pastor the allotment of a large territory into which he goes, a genuine missionary, making his own appointments, preaching regularly, holding revivals, saving souls, building up churches and receiving members—"doing the work of an evangelist, making full proof of his ministry:" like Paul, "striving to preach the gospel, not where Christ is named, lest he build upon another man's foundation." The brother was not at the Quarterly Conference; but was some thirty miles away holding a protracted meeting at an out-of-the-way sawmill, where the circuit preacher had never gone; and I have since learned that seventeen souls were converted and brought into the church at that meeting.

This local preacher is not jealous of the circuit preacher, nor does he regale his audiences with criticisms of the Bishops and abuse of the presiding elders. He does not boast of his "wonderful success in saving souls," nor discredit the ministry of men prominent in the church. Like a true minister of the Word, and a loyal son of the church, he preaches "Christ and him crucified." He has no new theories to propound and no new methods of snaring Gospel-wary sinners, but he carries to the out-of-the-way souls, that hunger for salvation, the simple old story told in the good old Methodist way; and thus he succeeds.

This picture may seem too ideal to be real; but I am relating facts only. I would give this brother's name if I were not afraid that a hundred presiding elders throughout the church would be writing him letters of persuasion to move his residence: and I hereby notify "the beloveds" everywhere that he is not to be spared from this district.

NOTICE.

The Committees on Admissions will meet Wednesday evening, at the parsonage in Monroe, Dec. 6, 7 P. M. Let all information, pro and con, in regard to applicants for readmission and admission on trial be placed in hands of the committee at that time.

S. S. KEENER, Chairman.

ARCADIA DISTRICT.

PRESIDING ELDER AND PASTORS.

On the last round for this Conference year. A little less than three weeks, and we will answer roll call at Monroe. Will we be ready? I hope so. That is, that we may feel sure that we did our best. There will be more charges that will report all collections in full than there has been in many years. There will be a larger net increase in membership than for several years, more conversions, and a better state of things generally in the district.

I write this little notice that all that read the ADVOCATE in this district may be encouraged, and do all in their power to see that their pastors, too, are paid; and that the pastor gets all the collections for his charge.

Now, brethren, you that are behind go to work and do your best, and if you don't get your charge out, you will pull it up and feel better. See how many new subscribers you can get for the ADVOCATE by Conference. May God's blessings continue with preachers, their families and flocks!

NOTICE.

To the Members of the North Mississippi and Mississippi Conferences:

The religious work at Millsaps College is counting for more this year than it ever has in the history of the college. We realize that for a young man to go out from college without God is a sad fact, and we hope to make our association at Millsaps such a power for Christ that no young man will leave here without being a Christian. For the greatest number of young men to be reached, though, is to have an attractive hall to invite them into. The association realizing this, has appointed a committee to raise money for furnishing this hall. And we ask the preachers and the lay delegates of the two Conferences to assist us in this work. R. A. Clark, a member of the committee, will be at the North Mississippi Conference, and any contribution you can give please hand it to him. C. N. Guice, another member of the committee, will be at the Mississippi Conference, and any contribution anyone in that Conference may wish to make please hand it to him. We appeal to the friends of the college, and those desiring to help us advance the cause of Christ, to assist us in this work.

The Mutual Life Insurance Com'y
OF NEW YORK.
RICHARD A. McCURDY, PRESIDENT.

Is the oldest active Life Insurance Company in the United States, and the largest and strongest Company in the world. It is purely mutual—belonging exclusively to its policy holders, for whom it has accomplished results in excess of those of any similar institution.

SINCE ITS ORGANIZATION IN 1843

It has paid to living members	$283,157,627 64
To beneficiaries of deceased members	201,591,282 42
Total paid to members, both living and dead	$647,748,910 06
And now holds for the security of its present members	277,517,325 36
Paid to and invested for its members	$925,266,235 42

THE POLICIES OF THIS COMPANY

Are remarkable for their liberality, large guaranteed values, and entire absence of all technical terms or phrases. Being practically incontestable, they provide a legacy and not a lawsuit.

Persons desiring policies in this Company can secure them from the Company's nearest agent, or if no agent is convenient, by writing to the General Agent, giving date of birth and stating what amount of insurance is desired.

PIANOS AND ORGANS BY MAIL.

The immense advantage in purchasing from us by the mail system is the guaranteed selection on the part of the oldest and largest music house South.

Selling over one thousand pianos and organs each year, and buying goods in enormous quantities, enables us to give those dealing direct the benefit of the closest possible prices on high-grade pianos and organs.

Dealing direct with the customer by mail enables us to eliminate all such items as agents' commission, hotel bills, etc., and to give our customers prices that many factories do not equal to their wholesale trade. Each piano or organ selected by us goes from our warerooms with a guarantee that if it is not as recommended, it can be returned at our expense. Any customer in the South can obtain our lowest net price by mail, and in case of purchase, the selection and instrument will be absolutely guaranteed, and from five to seven years' trial allowed to test same.

Easy payments will be accepted, and old pianos or organs will be received as part payments.

Having been in business in New Orleans half a century buying and selling all grades of pianos, we are in a position to judge of the merits and demerits of the different makes, and to know their adaptability to our trying climate. We give our customers the advantage of that experience.

GENTLE DEEDS AND WORDS.

Every gentle deed you do
One bright spirit brings to you—
One more angel watch to keep
By your pillow while you sleep.
Softer makes the wind's weird song
Through the pine trees all night long,
Clearer makes the white stars gleam
While you dream,
While you dream.

Every gentle word you say
One dark spirit drives away,
Makes the clover in the grass
Whisper greeting as you pass,
Swifter makes the cloud-ships fly
In their march across the sky,
Daintier makes each frosted flake
When you wake,
When you wake.

PRESIDENT OF THE SOUTHERN EXPRESS.

"It was either 'fish or cut bait' with me," said Colonel M. J. O'Brien, the recently-elected president of the Southern Express Company.

"My business career was begun when I was only seven and a half years old. I had lost my father and mother, and it was necessary, for the support of my sisters, that I should at once begin to earn my living. I received the enormous salary of twenty-five cents a week in the publishing-house of John Murphy and Company, Baltimore, for attending to a roller. Later I became a clerk in a wholesale drug house—that is"—and Colonel O'Brien paused—"I opened the store in the morning and swept it out, and I rose to be a full-fledged dispenser of medicines. All this time the red wheels and the green bodies of the Adams Express wagons had a peculiar fascination for me.

"I was increasing in years and stature, and finally went to the Adams Express office, and importuned an official there so persistently for a position that, to get rid of me—as I believe—he offered me a job as a driver at Memphis, Tennessee, doubtless thinking that that would scare me off. A condition was that I was to leave the day after the next—the Fourth of July. I accepted, borrowed thirty dollars, and started for Memphis.

"My first trouble rose through want of knowledge—whether, in hitching up a horse, it was the bridle or the breeching-strap that belonged in the animal's mouth. All the money I had to my name—twenty-five cents—I had to pay a man for that important piece of information, and Mr. O'Brien's eyes twinkled at my laughter."

"But what was your education up to that time?" I inquired.

"When I was eight years old, I reasoned with myself that an education was necessary. I attended night school, and later a school under the supervision of the Sisters of Charity. When I was able to afford it, I paid for instruction. If I had to start life over again, my first aim would be to secure a college education. My education, for the most part, has been gained in the school of experience. It is a hard master, but what you learn you never forget. It is impressed indelibly upon your mind.

"Well, when I first put my foot on the step of an express wagon, in Memphis, I determined that it should lead to better things; that, with intelligence and application, it would earn for me a higher position; and that I would labor, heart and soul, for its attainment. In other words, my ambition was strong. I had an eye solely for advancement, performing my duties honestly and faithfully.

"Many were the nights that I slept in my wagon, on the bluff, waiting in uncertainty for the arrival of a steamer that would carry my freight and other matter to New Orleans and other points. The competition between the boats was very great in those days, and I was a person much sought after by the captains. My first duty after my arrival in Memphis, of course, was to repay the money I had borrowed. My salary at first was thirty dollars a month. Out of that I had to pay twenty-five dollars a month for board and lodging at the cheapest place, so it took some time for me to get on a square footing with the world. Every boat that came along made me stay to some meal. I quickly saw that it was unnecessary for me to pay for board in Memphis, when I was continually dining out; and therefore I merely kept a room, which was a saving of twenty dollars a month. I suppose I could have shown favoritism to this or that captain, but I never did. I was working in the interest of the express company, and for them I worked solely. The first boat that touched received whatever I had, that it might be dispatched to another point as quickly as possible, and facilitate the service."

"What were your first savings?"

"One dollar and a half; I remember it distinctly. When it reached that enviable mark—one hundred dollars—I felt like a millionaire. There is a great deal in putting aside your first one hundred dollars. I kept adding to it, little by little. I always lived within my means, and managed to save something. Most young men do not try to save and accumulate a nest-egg. The majority are extravagant and readily part with their earnings. It is well to form business principles early in life, and to learn to economize. It is the fundamental principle of business.

"All the time I was a driver, I kept looking higher. After awhile, my employers discovered that I could do something besides drive a wagon, and I was made a shipping clerk. At that time Memphis was the only channel through which, by steamboats, connections could be made with Vicksburg, New Orleans, and intermediate points. The character of my service as a shipping clerk led in a year to my being sent to New Orleans to fill the place of cashier in that office. Previously, many business houses, including a bank, in Memphis, had made me tempting offers. I turned a deaf ear, believing in the old adage, that 'a rolling stone gathers no moss.' If you have an object in view, don't swerve from it!

"After the war, I was promoted from one position to another in the Southern Express Company, until, in 1868, I was appointed general superintendent, and subsequently became vice-president and general manager."

"Mr. O'Brien," I asked, "is there a marked road to success?"

"No rules can be laid down which will insure success. Circumstances play their part in every man's career, but, with steady, honest endeavor, and unflinching zeal and determination, a young man can always meet with at least a fair share of prosperity, even if the goal of his ambition is not attained. It depends more upon self than luck. The youthful mind is often perplexed to know what profession or occupation to follow, but my belief is that, when an avocation is selected, it should be closely adhered to, and a young man should not be swayed by opportunities for temporary advancement in other fields. When he has made his choice, he should, like the cobbler, 'stick to his last,' and there should be no limit to his ambition.

"The mind should be fixed upon the highest position; and the constant struggle to attain it is the strongest incentive to win success. Without disparaging educational influences, which can not be valued too highly, the school of experience is a great one. Familiarity with the smallest details of one's business is essential to the successful administration of any concern, and the man who has acquired his knowledge by working his way up, rung by rung, from the bottom, is the best equipped to direct those who perform the duties which he, at one time or another, himself discharged.

"There is nothing in existing conditions which should discourage young men in their pursuit of success.

"While their numbers are growing, the opportunities are more numerous, and the young men of to-day have the same chance to win success as those of a quarter of a century ago. It rests entirely with the individual.

"Always be steadfast and loyal in promoting the interests of your employers, and let strict integrity be your guiding star. Feel that you are part and parcel of whatever business you are engaged in.

"Make no promises which you are not sure can be fulfilled; and whenever higher honors are attained, do not forget that you once occupied a humble position; but, on the contrary, make your individual success the reason for words of encouragement that will stimulate the younger employee to persevere in his laudable ambition. A kind word costs nothing, and is self-repaying. Don't be forgetful of a mother's counsel.

"I think, on account of the common desire to expedite business, everyone should learn stenography, telegraphy, and typewriting. Such men are in demand, and can find openings that prove stepping-stones to higher things. A knowledge of languages is also becoming more necessary on account of the growth of our country, and its interest in exportation."—Success.

THE HELPING HAND.

I shall never forget the feelings I had once when climbing one of the pyramids of Egypt. When half-way up, my strength failing, I feared I should never be able to reach the summit, or get back again. I well remember the help given, by Arab hands, drawing me on farther; and the step I could not quite make myself, because too great for my wearied frame; the little help given me—sometimes more and sometimes less—enabled me to go up, step by step, step by step, until at last I reached the pure air, and had a grand outlook from that lofty height.

And so in life's journey we are climbing. We are feeble. Every one of us, now and then, needs a little help; and, if we have risen a step higher than some other, let us reach down for our brother's hand, and help him to stand beside us. And thus, joined hand in hand, we shall go on conquering step by step until the glorious eminence shall be gained. Ah, how many need help in this world—poor afflicted ones; poor sorrowing ones, who have been struggling, not quite able to get up the step; trying, failing; trying, failing, trying, desponding; hoping, almost despairing! O give such a one help, a little kindly aid, and the step may be taken, and another step may then be taken, and instead of dying in wretchedness at the base, he may, by a brother's hand, be raised in safety, and finally to glory.—Bishop Simpson.

To make yourself miserable by constant complaining is to impart your unhappiness to the circle in which you move. A long face and a whining voice make a bad impression upon one's own spirit and upon the spirit of others. No one loves to listen to murmurings and complaints. Speak of your troubles only to intimate friends, and do that only occasionally. When you have thus unbosomed yourself to one who sympathizes with you, then try to dismiss the matter and dwell upon something pleasant and cheerful. You have had many blessings and mercies, and let the mind give thought to these instead of to the occasional afflictions that come to you. A cheerful spirit imparts good cheer to others. A gloomy friend is a monotonous guest, but a bright companion is always a desirable associate. Make it a point to overlook the little annoyances of life and the larger ones will become less numerous. Speak often of the good that comes to you, and evil will for the most part seek other quarters. Under that sort of spirit your health will improve and your companionship will be greatly enhanced.—Texas Advocate.

KEEP SWEET.

Worry neither increases our happiness nor helps us in our work. Even regrets for mistakes or negligence waste vitality and destroy our peace of mind for things which can not be recalled, changed, or in the slightest degree modified. All this habit of worrying can be cured by preaching these ten commandments:

1. Consider what must be involved in the truth that God is infinite and that you are a part of his plan.
2. Memorize some of the Scripture promises, and recall them when the temptation to worry returns.
3. Cultivate a spirit of gratitude for daily mercies.
4. Realize worrying as an enemy which destroys your happiness.
5. Realize that it can be cured by persistent effort.
6. Attack it definitely as something to be overcome.
7. Realize that it never has done and never can do the least good. It wastes vitality and impairs the mental faculties.
8. Help and comfort your neighbor.
9. Forgive your enemies and conquer your aversions.
10. Induce others to join the Don't Worry Movement.—Exchange.

Oliver Wendell Holmes once said, during the mighty struggle between the States, that the constant cry of the masses was for bread and newspapers. Now, since more than a third of a century has changed the political and financial issues, the great cry in the Southern States is for a pleasant and reliable Chill Tonic. Dicks' Chillifuge complies with this demand. It is as pleasant as orange syrup, and as prompt to cure malaria as the bitter Sulphate of Quinine. If you have a case of Chills or Fever which you can not break, try Chillifuge, and enjoy life once more.

As the world grows older it grows wiser and more practical. The days of eloquence and flowery speech have been displaced by sound reasoning, and robust, if homely, argument. We, as advertisers, appreciate this, and, therefore, present the merits of Dicks' Chillifuge, briefly and forcibly:

It Will Cure Chills.
It Is Pleasant to Take.
It Makes Rich Blood.
It Makes Life Worth Living.

SUTHERLAND—BURRUS, the second son of Dr. H. L. and Mrs. Ethel Burrus Sutherland, was born May 14, 1881, and died of typhoid fever, July 27, 1899.

These two dates encloses a life of remarkable promise. His entire life foretokened the splendid attainments of a robust and consecrated physical, mental and spiritual manhood. His manly modesty, gentleness, cheerfulness and noble principle were sufficient to inspire the pride and sustain the fondest hope of a loving mother's heart. His diligent search for knowledge, determined perseverance, firmness in conviction, and far-reaching purpose, satisfied the father's hope. His progress under difficulties, and ambition as a student, made him esteemed by the faculty of the University of Mississippi. His purity of life, chastity of language, devotion to duty, and reverence for parental instruction, made him a model among his club-mates. One of them said of him, "If I could only live and emulate his example, I would feel I had lived a true and righteous life, worthy a mother's love." His daily life fully met the height of the Christian standard. Dr. A. A. Young says, "His life was such as to preclude the necessity of the question, 'Are you a Christian?'" Prof. P. N. McGaughey, who prepared him for his university entrance, says, "I considered him one of Mississippi's most hopeful young men; one of the brightest minds and happiest dispositions I ever knew." Bro. J. W. Mason, who knew him from infancy, says, "He was always a model boy, never using any but chaste language, or engaging in anything questionable."

As his pastor for a year and his friend for four years, I would emphasize all that has been said. With him I was a boy, and enjoyed his confidence. His warmth of friendship, his lively interest in the welfare of others, and splendid humor, impressed me. He was faithful to every trust. I am glad I had his friendship on earth, and expect it to ripen into a heavenly brotherhood. While he had never come before the congregation and confessed there his faith in Christ, yet he expressed his desire and intention to do so. I remember him expressing his wonder that any could disbelieve. He pitied the sinner; he abhorred sin. Like Samuel, he was given to God in infancy, and God talked to him in childhood. We are stunned with disappointment. We are bowed with sorrow's burden, we are torn with grief, we are blind with unbelief; our doubting hearts question. Does God thus proficiently endow for no purpose? Are the hopes that flame within us to smoulder and die in the darkness of the tomb? Are the holy ties of love and friendship to be conquered by the grave? No, no. God works with infinite and eternal purpose, and he will give direction to the unspent energies, and by and by love shall behold heavenly accomplishment and growth in God-likeness which upon earth it can not imagine. It shall behold the enduring substance of which life's fondest hope is but the slightest fleeting shadow. May God give us faith to trust him, and grace to say, Thy will be done! C. H. PITTMAN.

Lerma, Miss.

BIRCH—On Oct. 11, at 5 o'clock A. M., at his home in Matherville, Miss., the spirit of WILLIE W. BIRCH passed out of his much weakened body, made so by low state of health for almost two years, into "the eternal rest" prepared for all those who are made ready by faith in the blood of the Lamb. His suffering was not so intense as to cause him to long to get rid of it. Though he often expressed himself as being ready, through faith in the merits of Christ, to go to the spirit land, and of the loved ones he would so gladly meet should he go, he would as often add, "But if it be the Lord's will, I would like to get well, so that I may work in God's vineyard, and live more for his glory than I have."

For years he felt called to work in God's vineyard as a minister, but kept waiting to be better prepared. Then, too, he felt, by delaying the answer to his call, he could, for awhile, better aid his loved ones through life's battles. The earnestness with which he urged all those who want to see him to live for heaven, may have been the kind of sermons the Lord meant for him to deliver. Truly, "in ways we had not known he leads his own."

How often the leading through paths of suffering!

It is well for the young to be impressed with the fact of the frailty of the human body, and of how sweet life is, so that they may look into that which pertains to the spirit, and live really, live eternally.

How impressive has been made this sermon! Though his life was a life of faith and prayer, consistent in duty, zealous in action, devoted in heart, exemplary in conduct, yet, in his humility, he could not see in himself these beautiful characteristics. He hated intensely everything evil, and loved everything pure and good. His tender affection for his loved ones, and the polite, kind welcome he extended to his friends, even in his extreme weakness, was characteristic of his nature. When the death dew lay cold on his brow, he caught the tender, but sorrowful, expression of his father, and said gently, "I want to kiss you;" then asked that his aunt, Mrs. Gilmore (who was "mother" to him), come sit beside him, for he said, "I want to talk to you before I go to heaven. You have been good to me, and I have hoped to be a comfort and stay to you in your declining years;" bade his sister and cousin a fond adieu, urging them to meet him in heaven; sent messages to his absent uncles, asked his father to send the unfinished letter to his younger brother, and said, "I'm going to expect you all to meet me; I'm not uneasy about any of you." May he not be disappointed! While "I'm sweeping through the gates" was being sung by a sweet-spirited Christian friend, his spirit passed through "the pearly gates," and his body waits the resurrection. May the following lines, which point forcibly to the true source of comfort, be as healing balm poured into the broken hearts:

"I will not leave you comfortless,
Though earthly hope has fled;
My Comforter I'll send to you,
I've risen from the dead.
Thy loved ones, too, shall rise again;
Fear not, but lean on me;
The Star of Bethlehem guides the way
O'er life's dark, turbid sea."

A FRIEND.

MORSE—MRS. MARY J. MORSE was born in the city of New Iberia on Dec. 10, 1841, her parents being Dr. Henry Stuhlinger and Martha I. Cissel. Her early days were spent in a Christian home, her parents being pious, and thus in childhood was laid the foundation of that character which in after years won her many friends, and standing all the trials of earth, remained true to the last. In childhood she was an attendant of the Episcopal Church, and was confirmed in that faith in 1866 by Rt.-Rev. Bishop Wilmer. A part of her early life was spent in Sabbath-school work as a teacher, where, by word and example, she endeavored to lead the little ones to their Lord and Master.

In 1872 Sister Morse was married to Bro. H. A. Morse, a local minister in the M. E. Church, South, and united with the Methodist Church in 1877, residing the greater part of her married life in New Orleans. Bro. Morse dying in 1886, his wife was left a widow with four young children, but having faith in Him in whom she had believed, she struggled on, living to see all four grown and settled in life.

Her last days were days of much pain and bodily anguish, but amid it all she was patient and submissive. A more patient sufferer I have never seen, nor one with a calmer faith. Everyone who was with her in these hours was impressed with the confidence of her faith and the Christ-like simplicity of her whole spirit. She fell on sleep June 14, 1899, having lived a useful and profitable life.

May her patience, meekness and loving gentleness be imitated by her children and friends! JNO. F. FOSTER.

PENIX—Mrs. MARY JANE PENIX (nee Robinson) was born Nov. 15, 1836; married to J. W. Penix, Nov. 19, 1874; died in the triumph of a living faith, Sept. 29, 1899.

Sister Penix has been a devoted Christian and member of the Methodist Church from her childhood. She loved her church, and was a faithful attendant, often going during the past year when we would be surprised to see her there. Her afflictions were borne with Christian fortitude. She was a lady of naturally strong mind and of sound Christian experience. She talked with the writer, and oftentimes to her husband and family, of her approaching death with perfect resignation. The welfare of her children bore considerably upon her mind. She leaves a husband and four children, each of whom is a Christian. A few days before her death she spoke of her eldest son, Rev. J. H. Penix, who is in our school at Jackson, saying for them not to send for him; that it would be best for him not to come. It was a great test both to Joe and his mother when he left to prepare for the ministry, believing they would never see one another again in this world. Our loss in this case is gain in heaven. Giving her last words of counsel and directions about her burial, she passed quietly over the river. May the Lord give grace to her loved ones to bear them up in this, their sore bereavement, and keep them till the day of his coming!

WINE OF CARDUI

A SURE MEDICINE.

HANDSOM, VA., Dec. 31.

I have been suffering from female weakness for four years, and have taken many medicines, but Wine of Cardui and Black-Draught have done more for me than anything else.

MRS. CAROLINE EVANS.

McELREE'S Wine of Cardui

It is a mistake to take any and every kind of medicine when you are sick. There is danger in it. Most of the so-called cures for "female weakness" do nothing more than deaden the pain temporarily, and when the effect wears away the patient is weaker and sicker than before. It is never wise to take chances. You have only one life, and that is dear and precious. If you have any pain, ache, disorder or weakness in the feminine organs, nothing will help you like Wine of Cardui. It helps do away with morning sickness during the early stages of pregnancy, and modifies the pains of childbirth; recovery is rapid and future health is assured. The Wine is purely vegetable, being made of herbs whose medicinal properties act directly upon the organs of womanhood. It is a long-tried remedy, and has many years of success behind it. It is sure. Why take a chance medicine when you can get a sure medicine?

Two Verdicts.

"After a fair and impartial trial you are judged guilty by this court, and you are sentenced to be hung by the neck until you are dead." The solemn tones of the judge, the despairing face of the prisoner, and the painful stillness of the court-room, make it a scene of awful impress. Now turn to a brighter scene at the home circle. A mother radiant with joy over the recovery of a child snatched from the clutches of Malaria. An entire family rejoicing, and praising the merits of Dicks' Chillifuge, and giving their verdict that Chillifuge is without an equal for swiftness to cure.

The "Combination" Bible.

A SUPERB EDITION

of the Holy Scriptures, showing at a glance at the foot of the pages all changes made by the revisers.

New Type. All Proper Names Self-Pronouncing. The Most Valuable Collateral Matter.

There is a steady and increasing demand for first-class Bibles. Everybody is anxious to obtain a copy of the best edition of the Holy Scriptures. Old editions are constantly being replaced by Bibles that are in every way more attractive, and there is practically no limit to the demand.

OUR "COMBINATION" FEATURE.

Hitherto the King James and Revised Versions have been printed in parallel columns, but this makes comparisons of texts tedious and unsatisfactory, and makes the book very unwieldy. We have overcome this difficulty by "combining" the two Versions on the same page, showing at a glance in foot-notes all the Changes Additions and Omissions made by the Revisers.

THE OLD VERSION PRINTED IN FULL.

The King James Version is the basis, and this Version is read straight along from the text, while the Revised Version is read from the text in combination with the foot-notes. Our "Combination" Feature has met with universal approval and is strongly endorsed by all leading Divines and Biblical Scholars.

It is only by a comparison of the two Versions that the greatest benefit can be obtained from reading the Holy Scriptures, and this comparison every reader can easily make by our simple arrangement for showing the changes made by the revisers. This is the greatest triumph of Bible Publishing the World has ever known.

OUR OFFER.

To those unprogressive people who do not read and pay for the NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE we sell this Bible at the publisher's retail price—$1.25. To our subscribers we sell it at the very low rate of $2. The only condition attached to this offer is that the subscriber must pay his subscription one full year in advance, viz.: to November, 1900. We will send it postpaid to any person who will send us three new cash subscribers at the regular rate. For six new cash subscribers at the regular rate we will send two "Combination" Bibles, postpaid.

For fifty cents additional we will send a Bible with index.

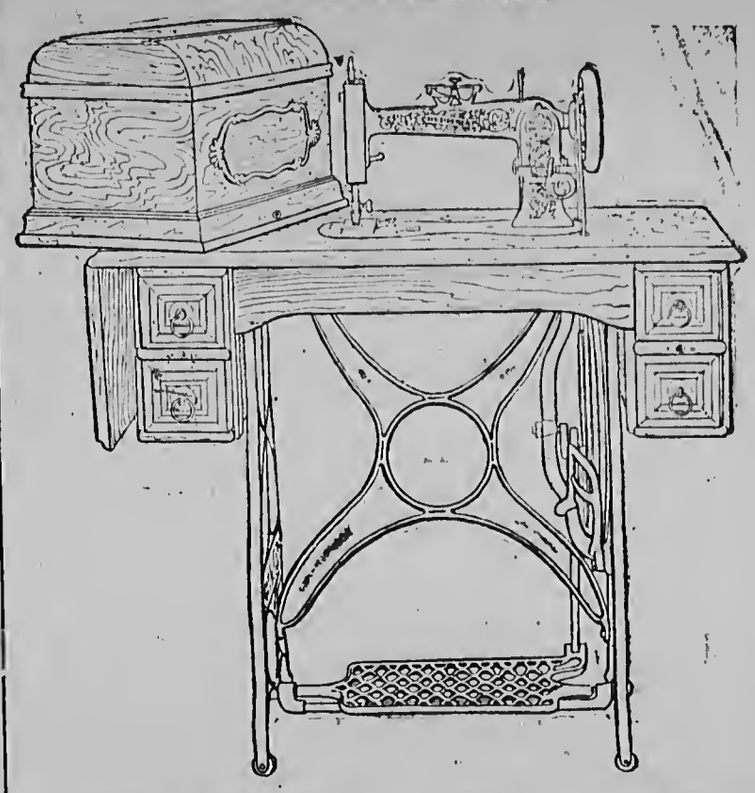
For twenty-five cents additional we will have your name engraved in gilt letters on the outside.

Send for circular. Address REV. W. C. BLACK.

P. S.—We can give no commission on renewals in connection with the above offer.

New Machine Offer.

No. 4 Columbian.



EXCELLENCE OF THE COLUMBIAN.—All wearing parts are of case-hardened steel possessing great durability, and by the turning of a screw all lost motion caused by wear can be taken up. All parts are fitted so accurately that the machines are absolutely noiseless, and so easy running as fine adjustment and best mechanical skill is possible to produce. No expense or time is spared to make them perfect in every respect, as every machine passes a rigid inspection by expert at men before leaving the factory.

NICKEL PLATED.—The balance wheel and many of the fine parts are nickel-plated, with other parts finely enameled and ornamented, giving it a rich appearance.

A Self Setting Needle and Self-Threading Cylinder Shuttle are used in the Columbian High-Arm Sewing Machine. They are so simple that any one can easily operate them in a few minutes' time, as our Instruction Book is fully illustrated, showing how to do all kinds of fancy work with attachments.

Extra Attachments, in velvet-lined case, sent free with each machine: 1 Tucker, 1 Ruffler with shirring plate, 1 Hemmer set (4 widths) and Binder, 1 Braider (Foot and Slide), 1 Thread Cutter.

ADDITIONAL ACCESSORIES.—Each machine is supplied with the following outfit: 1 Hemmer and Feller (one piece), 10 Needles, 6 Bobbins, 1 Wrench, 1 Screw Driver, Oil Can with Oil, Cloth Gauge and Thumb Screw, and a Book of Instructions. The Book of Instructions is profusely illustrated, and answers the purpose of a competent teacher.

No. 5 Machine, drop leaf table, gothic cover, case of three drawers at each end, making seven drawers in all. Dealer's price, $26. Our price, $16.25.

Furnished Free with every machine are the following named accessories: One Foot Hammer One Screw Driver, One Wrench, One Oil Can and Oil, One Gauge Screw, One Extra Check Spring, One Package of Needles, Five Bobbins and One Instruction Book.

The chief difference between Numbers 3, 4, and 5 is in the furniture—i. e., the number of drawers. If you do not want to pay for the extra drawers, you need not do so. We sell these machines under a ten years' guarantee, by which we mean that if any part gives out by reason of any defect therein, the manufacturer will replace the same free of charge. Moreover, we allow the purchaser to test the machine ten days. If at the end of ten days you are not satisfied, you have only to drop us a postal card, and your money will be refunded.

OUR OFFER.

We will send any one of the above-described machines at the prices named, and also send the ADVOCATE free for six months. The only condition attached to this offer is that subscribers who are in arrears must first pay up all arrearages to date. It would be well to avail yourself of this offer at once, as we can not promise that it will last very long. Notice that you take no risk whatever. We do all the risking. Address

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

Congress will be memorialized to admit Oklahoma to statehood.

The Boers around Ladysmith are said to be in straits for want of food.

The Boers made an attempt to capture Estcourt, but were repulsed.

The Boers officially deny the statement that their artillery is officered by Germans.

Preparations are being made for demonstrations in favor of the re-election of President Diaz by foreign residents of Mexico City.

Wreckers have left Hong-Kong to examine the cruiser "Charleston." If possible the big turret guns will be lifted and an attempt made to float the ship.

Rear Admiral Schley's flag has been raised on the cruiser "Chicago," which vessel will probably sail to join the South Atlantic squadron early next week.

Mrs. Leland Stanford's gifts to educational institutions on the Pacific coast foot up to $19,000,000. She still has as much left, which, at her death, will go for similar purposes.

Ira D. Sankey, the singer, who used to be associated with Mr. Moody, is to become an evangelist on his own account and will conduct a series of revivals in various cities this Winter.

Reliable advices from Ladysmith confirm reports that the Boers made a general and determined attack on that place on Nov. 9. They were driven back with a loss estimated at 800 men.

A combined force of Free State and Transvaal burghers occupied Colesburg, Cape Colony, without opposition by the residents, and proclaimed the district to be Free State territory.

A report has reached London that civil war has broken out in the British possession of New Guinea, eleven villages having been obliterated, with a heavy slaughter of the inhabitants.

At a meeting of the Utah Democratic State Committee the Gentile members defeated a proposition advanced by the Mormon members to get up a petition in favor of slating Congressman Roberts.

Col. Deville Boisemarull, formerly of the general staff of the French army, left France for South Africa on the invitation of the Transvaal Government, which offered him a high rank in its army.

The Executive Board of the United Mine Workers has voted to order a general strike of miners in the Southwest unless railroad and coal companies consider certain demands made by the organization.

The negro troops have been removed from Fort McIntosh, Tex., and that post is practically abandoned. This action was brought about on account of trouble between the negroes and white people of Laredo. Negro soldiers may also be removed from Fort Ringgold.

American capital to the amount of $3,000,000 has become interested in Venezuela banking, a concession having been granted to George W. Upton, of Ohio, for the organization of a national banking system which will practically control the finances of the country.

John D. Rockefeller, president of the Standard Oil Company, has made a conditional gift of $150,000 to the Rochester Theological Seminary, a Baptist institution. He will give a dollar for each dollar collected by the seminary until the sum of $300,000 is reached.

Representative Crumpacker, of Indiana, will introduce a bill at the approaching session of Congress which is intended to cut down the representation in the Electoral College and in Congress of those Southern States that have by educational and property qualifications largely eliminated the negro vote.

The women of Millvale, Pa., are protesting against the prize fights which have been pulled off in that suburban town. They have appealed to the council to stop the bouts, but the council refused, as each fight brings a $30-license fee which helps to pay the police force. The women, having formed an association, intend to go to the Opera House 300 strong at the next fight.

At the request of the British Government, the State Department cabled to Consul Macrum, at Pretoria, asking if the Transvaal government would permit him to take charge of money sent by England to procure comforts for the British prisoners of war. Upon transmitting the request to President Kruger, Macrum was refused onrtly, and told that arrangements respecting prisoners must be made through the general in the field.

The Chicago orchestra, under the leadership of Theodore Thomas, has decided to decline the invitation of the directors of the Paris Exposition to attend that show in 1900. In a letter addressed to Eduarde Colonne, chairman of the board of directors, Mr. Thomas declares that as an American citizen he is a lover of justice and liberty, and can not consistently visit the French capital. Mr. Thomas freely admits that the verdict in the Dreyfus case was responsible for his determination to remain away from the exposition.

NOTICE.

To the Preachers of the Mississippi and Louisiana Conferences—

DEAR BRETHREN: I will attend the Mississippi and Louisiana Conferences with an ample supply of Dr. Brook's "Scriptural Sanctification." This book has reached a marvelous sale during its short life—the fifth thousand just published. Its tendency is to stay the tide of disruption so manifest in every part of our Zion over this mooted question. It was written with this end in view. Its unprecedented sale shows with what success it has met. A splendid volume to place in the hands of your people. I will be prepared to give you the book at customary reduction for preachers, and contract with you for any amount of books you can dispose of among your people. The author's purpose is not to make money, but to do good in Zion. The book is almost unanimously recommended by our highest authorities.

Fraternally,
ROBT. W. VAUGHAN.

DR. D. M. BYE
Combination Oil Cure Co.
THE ONLY PERMANENT CANCER CURE
LONG DIST. PHONE 1838
LABORATORY, 916 N. CAPITAL AVE.
INDIANAPOLIS, IND.

PILGRIM HOME was built for God. A religious work will be carried on in it for the salvation of souls and the healing of diseases without remedies, depending alone on Jesus, who healed all who had faith in His name, as in the Apostles' time. Dr. D. M. Bye claims that after twenty years of success as a specialist for cancers and tumors, the Lord led him to the Oil Cure and for the last eight years the Doctor has been curing all manner of malignant diseases by anointing with oils. The remedy is not only mild and safe, but cures internal as well as external cancers and tumors and gives relief from unceasing pain. Many thousands of bad cases of cancers and tumors have been cured by using Dr. Bye's Oil Treatment and many healed by faith alone. The Doctor has received thousands of good letters from persons cured. Hundreds from ministers and Christian patients are printed in books and papers, which if one will read they will plainly see that surely God's blessing is with the Oil Cure. In the large book there are many half-toned photos showing conditions before and after treatment, which is sent FREE, giving particulars and price of Oil. Its just popularity is shown by the fact that at this time over three thousand patients are taking home treatment. Its great success has caused many counterfeiting imitators, therefore be careful. This country is full of frauds. Note this one thing: Of all the great number who have come to Indianapolis for treatment, not one has yet died on the Doctor's hands; no undertaker has yet received one cent. PRAISE THE LORD. The Doctor firmly believes it won't be long when more persons will be healed at Pilgrim Home by faith alone in Jesus than by oils, yet all have not so great faith and must use the Oil Treatment administered with God's blessing for a cure. Who Knows Where Thoughts Comes From?

If the Spring-time puts forth no blossoms, in Summer there will be no beauty, and in Autumn no fruit. So, if youth be trifled away without improvement, riper years will be contemptible and old age miserable. Then to success there are no smooth paths. It is by the old plebian heights of attainment and the temple of fame. So, young men and women, if you wish to enroll your name on the roll of honor and be among that favored class, do not sit with your arms folded and let the present opportunities pass. Not a minute's time have you to lose; not an idle thought have you time to run through that brain of yours; but be up and doing. Wake up from that drowsy slumber, and do not be a grumbler at your fate, and wonder why others succeed seemingly so easy and you can not. You forget that the key to success is toil, and nothing but a resolute will to do things will turn it. Come to our school, and we will place that ambition behind you that will win you laurels when thy mantle is frosted with many Winters.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From Our Regular Correspondent.)

There is always some dissatisfaction and grumbling over the apportionment of missionary funds by the general authorities of any denomination, and the meeting of the General Missionary Committee of the M. E. Church, which closed this week, was no exception to the rule. There were two reasons for dissatisfaction among the foreign mission workers in this case. First, the decision of the committee to increase the amount for home missions; and, second, and most important, the lack of enough money to meet the requests of those interested in particular fields of foreign missionary work. To use a homely phrase, the committee had to "cut the garment according to the cloth," and not according to the wishes of its members. As one of its members said, "We did the best we could, and put the money where we thought it was most needed, and where we believed would produce the best results." An interesting episode connected with one of the last meetings of the committee was the reading of a telegram from Bishop Hartzell, now in Africa, stating that titles in Umtali Industrial Mission had been confirmed, which enriched the church to the extent of 13,000 acres of land, and secured $50,000 for buildings thereon. The announcement, which was a surprise to the members, was greeted with applause, and followed by an appropriation of $24,868 for African missions, which was increased by a personal contribution of $500 from Bishop Hurst.

Bishop Hurst was chairman of the committee which prepared the resolution adopted by the General Missionary Committee before its adjournment on the death of Vice-President Hobart, which, although expected, greatly shocked the people of Washington, who loved Mr Hobart for the exemplary life he had led in this city. The President, the entire Cabinet, the Justice of the Supreme Court, and as many Senators and Representatives as can get here in time, will attend the funeral of Mr. Hobart, on Saturday, at his late home, in Paterson, N. J. The news of the death prostrated Mrs. McKinley. Attorney-General Griggs, who has known Mr. Hobart longer than any other official in Washington, paid him this high tribute: "As a friend, associate and friend, I can say that he had the clearest intellect, the largest business capacity, the greatest intuition of any man I ever knew; but more remarkable than these qualities were his traits of character, amounting almost to difficulty; of large-handed generosity, unostentatiously bestowed; of unselfish public spirit in all affairs of city or State, or country; and, best of all, a great heart that never beat except with love and loyalty and sympathy for all the world. His friends will miss him; so will the State and the President. Indeed, the whole land may well mourn the loss of one of our noblest and best men." The President's tribute to Mr. Hobart, in the official proclamation announcing his death, was also noble: "His private character was pure and noble. He will long be honored by his friends as a man of stellar purity and attractiveness, whose sweetness of disposition won all hearts, while his elevated purpose, his unbending integrity and single-hearted devotion to the public good deserved and acquired universal respect and esteem."

The Columbia Association of Baptist Churches, embracing all the colored Baptist Churches in the District of Columbia, held its twenty-second annual meeting this week. Many of the reports from all the churches represented, it was especially fitting that the annual sermon, preached by Rev. E. W. Bliss, should be on church expansion, with special reference to the prosperity of the local churches.

An interesting experiment in interdenominational work was inaugurated this week by the opening of a free night-school for Chinese, supported by Calvary Baptist, the Metropolitan M. E., and the Ascension P. E. Churches. The school is held in connection with a Chinese mission jointly maintained by the same churches.

Mr. Samuel Gompers, president of the American Federation of Labor, made an interesting statement before the Industrial Commission this week, in view of the talk about trust legislation at the coming session of Congress. He said that the organization he represented did not desire any legislation against trusts, because it was not certain at this time whether they were beneficial or injurious to the wage-earners of the country.

Bishop Ninde, general president of the Epworth League, presided over the opening meeting of the ninth annual convention of the Washington District Epworth League, and delivered an address on the "Twentieth Century Offering," pointing out how the work of bringing 2,000,000 souls to Christ, and the raising of $20,000,000 for the work, should be undertaken in order to succeed. Bishop Vincent repeated the same address he delivered at the international convention of the Christian Endeavor, at Detroit, on the "Power of a Unit."

A strong resolution favoring the expulsion of Roberts, the polygamous congressman-elect from Utah, and a constitutional amendment making the election of another polygamist impossible, was adopted by the Methodist General Missionary Committee.

THE TWENTIETH CENTURY MOVEMENT.

The Twentieth Century Thank-offering Movement will yield benefits much beyond the money contributed. Methodist people are putting their thoughts and energies, their hopes and purposes, together in a great common enterprise, and that of the noblest kind. Each one brings his "tale of bricks" to go into the one common structure. This is elevating. The rebound in the heart of the worker is lifting. The pulse in one beats in all—one body in Christ. The result is increase of unity, growth in the spirit of true connectionalism. The report from Brazil must quicken co-operative activity in all our borders. The gift by that Conference of $10,000 to the Twentieth Century Fund, under the presidency and leadership of a Bishop from the United States, means far more than that these Brazilians are hopeful beneficiaries of our missionary enterprise. It means that they are brothers in the field, hearts and hands joined in the common plans and purposes of our great church. This is encouraging in every phase of the case. We shall scarcely find any organ of labor more potent and effective than the Christian school in collecting, conserving and developing the forces of connectional Methodism. Especially so under the superior system of schools just now set to work by our Southern Methodist Church.

By a law as fixed in the moral and intellectual world as that of gravity in physics, our people will find that by their individual contributions to a common cause they are drawn together in support of that cause, and into fellowship of its spirit and of its results. The fact that twenty per cent. of this thank-offering fund for Christian education is to go to Vanderbilt University will lead every contributor to feel that he has part and lot in the great institution; that he is doing something to increase its noble service to humanity by thus enlarging the scholastic equipment of the church. So also will it be in its measure with any other of our church schools into which this money goes, or for which like effort is made.

The school is an essential part of the working force of Methodism. It has been so from the beginning. Wesley knew its value, and made Kingswood; gave it life and form, books and method, spirit and mission. That was the seed from which sprang the scholastic harvests that have so enriched English Wesleyan Methodism. The march of her progress has been marked by the development and agency of her schools. And now, after the growth of a hundred and fifty years, the marvelous results are to be wisely gathered into a great Methodist college in old Oxford itself. How strong the contrast! how wonderful the victory! The great revival which had its small and despised beginnings in the consecrated souls of the few students who composed the "Holy Club," returns to the home of its origin, bearing on the crest of its resistless wave the triumphs of Christian education. What a wealth of spiritual power is here brought into the work of the coming century!

So in America. Asbury, the master-builder, zealous with a godly zeal to give the people the gospel of a full salvation, taking no rest from his pioneer itineracy, did not overlook the need of the school in his evangelical mission. He toiled to build Cokesbury. Short-lived it was, but the spirit of the enterprise was not consumed in the ashes of the building. The heroic struggle has continued till now—subject, indeed, to grievous mistakes, to the hamperings of poverty, of gross prejudices, of local rivalries, of foolish oppositions and such like, but marked by instances of generous liberality, and by the sacrifices and labors of a long line of devoted and skillful workers. Among them it suffices to mention such names as Wilbur Fisk, Stephen Olin, A. B. Longstreet, Robert Paine, Prof. Tutwiler, Landon C. Garland, Mrs. Tevis. While the field is bestrewn with the wreckage of many an ill-timed, ill-placed, frail effort to build a school, yet the solid structures of Randolph-Macon, of Wofford, of Emory, and of others, remain monuments to that scholastic life which persisted in the church through all her vicissitudes and losses. Much has perished, but more has lived. What perished was not wholly vain; its folly often pointed the wise and true to better "ways and means;" so, when "time and tide" brought to the wasted fields of Southern Methodism the crying need of the highest and best in her work of education, wise men opened the way, and Vanderbilt University came as if "down out of heaven." That event was light and glory, lift and progress to our needy church. It reformed our ideas and improved our methods of school work. The university as the center of motion is drawing the other schools into proper orbits of an interactive system. In pursuance of this fact, and as a matter of progress in the school function, the church has adjusted herself to the new demands and the larger work. Surely our people ought to rejoice in the opening of such a day. Here is a great revival in Christian education; it sweeps like a flame of fire through the church, and the churches. It is not excessive; be not alarmed, the Lord is in it. We are only waking to see what ought to have been done, and what must now be done. The work will go on with immense advantage, due to limits and methods fixed by law and managed by an authorized Board of Education. This is security for the most generous outlay of effort, and must fill the heart of every true Methodist with genuine joy.

One of the first and best results in the whole movement is the great improvement in the scholastic preparation of young men for our itinerant ministry. These young men can not afford to overlook the demand or the opportunity for such preparation. Let no one be misled by the fascinations and high honors of "Brush College." That is a post-graduate course, and calls for the curriculum of a preparatory school. Neither let any young preacher fear that he will be educated out of sympathy with the people of Post Oak circuit. When he allows that fear it is time to review the whole ground of his faith and of the motives of his action. If, with humility and consecration of soul, he is striving to qualify himself in such measure as he can for the holy work whereunto he is called, will that put him out of sympathy with his work and with the souls he seeks to save? Shall we classify our preachers—send the ignorant to ignorant flocks, and learned preachers to learned people? Can any body of preachers endure such classification? How quickly would it bring divisions and strife, and how soon would the church be torn and shattered! We are one body, brothers in the same field, and we must preserve this unity of heart and life and labor, or go to pieces. No pastoral work is destitute of cultivated people, and there are few persons, even off in the woods, that will find fault with the plain preaching and plain manners of a learned man. No, there is no need to fear an educated, consecrated evangelical ministry. Paul and Wesley and the like have been the glory of the church, and will be to the end. Let every young preacher be helped and exhorted at the start to put into the heart of his calling and of his purpose the ingredient of the best intellectual training and acquisition of knowledge within his reach. Let him feel sure that he can not be too well prepared for the mission on which the Holy Spirit and the church send him. I believe that we ought to be glad that five or six young preachers from the North Mississippi Conference are now in Millsaps College in pursuit of this very end. Let the number be multiplied. All the people and all the Bishops will say, Amen!

AN EDUCATED MINISTRY.

MR. EDITOR: There has been some discussion in the ADVOCATE lately regarding ministers and their general fitness for the work. All my life long I have regarded the ministry as the highest calling in the world, and I do think that, as a rule, preachers are a noble set of men. It has been my good fortune to have been associated with many of our noblest and best preachers, and the impress upon the world of their holy, consecrated lives has been so lasting as to induce one to inquire for the reason. All of these men were consecrated to the work of saving souls, and this was their first great desire. This point brings us to the consideration of a question which sometimes forces itself upon us with some degree of sadness, when we see a lack of that burning desire to save souls and a spirit of professionalism pervading the ministry. What thoughtful man has not noticed this professionalism in many of our preachers? I say it with sadness, and yet it is manifestly true, that many seemingly go into the ministry just as they would into any other profession. It is one thing to preach with the sole object of converting and saving sinners, let the manner, the style and the subject-matter be what they may, so long as they are dignified and elegant; but it is quite another thing to preach for effect in that studied manner which is primarily intended to please and tickle the fancy. A "cut-and-dried" declamation and a precision of beautiful rhetoric will not save men's souls, nor will the highly intellectual style do it without that power which comes from heaven. Seek first to save souls, pray, study, get your theology on your knees, and the results will take care of themselves.

I do not like the idea of a young man going hastily into the ministry, for he sometimes imagines that he is called, when, in reality, he is simply acting under the impulse of the moment. A sudden glow of religion, caught, perhaps, at a recent revival, drives him into the ministry, and sooner or later he finds his mistake. Then what? He quits, or he leads a fruitless life.

Religion is a principle which underlies one's life, and not a mere sentiment. Preaching is a calling of God, and not a simple impulse to do something. Let a man wait a little and see if he is really called, and, if so, there is no danger of his getting cold before he can be licensed. A man of deep piety and a burning desire to preach the gospel doesn't get cold. I do not believe in rushing a man into the ministry any more than I believe in getting him into the church quickly. We had better go back to the old plan of taking a man on probation in both cases, and we will have a better condition of affairs in the church and in the ministry. Try them, and see whether they have gifts and graces.

While I was connected with Centenary College five young men came with licenses to preach. They had recently been converted in a revival, joined the church, I think, at that time, were licensed by the Quarterly Conference, and then came to school. Two found that they were mistaken, and quit before the end of the session. One would not study (right here I quote a truism made by one of our quaint teachers, "that if a young man had religion, it made him study his lessons"), and the other two were first-class in every way.

The plan of licensing at the District Conference is the correct plan, for there you find men who are not only capable of finding out the merits of the applicant, but they are removed from the influences of the community in which the man lives, and can pass on him impartially. If a man can't leave home affairs to go to the District Conference, then he certainly hasn't a very great desire for a license; and if his duties happen to be so imperative as to preclude his going, then his religion and desire to preach ought certainly to bridge him over till the next year. Let him exercise his gifts and graces in the prayer meeting, etc. Our church polity is the greatest in the world, and if a man can't get what he desires just when he wants it, he has plenty of chances to do good elsewhere, and may possess himself in patience till the opportunity arrives for the fulfillment of his plans.

There seems to me no question at all about an educated ministry being a necessity. The world is becoming more intelligent, and the demand for cultured brains in the pulpit is as great as anywhere else. I do not mean that a man should have a collegiate education always, but I do mean that he should be sufficiently well taught to use good language, and that the Conference course should be high, and that he should read the best books and educate himself. When a Methodist minister goes about the country we should be able to point to him with pride, and say, "He is our preacher."

Not a great while ago I heard a young man of stately appearance in the pulpit describing the ascent of an eagle on a cyclone, and he used this wonderful expression, "He soared higher and higher till he bathed his plumage in the golden beams of uncreated light." That eagle must have been high. What bombast, what nonsense! Who ever heard of uncreated light having golden beams? A woeful lack of education, coupled with a desire to please the ear with a conglomeration of high-sounding words, and an attempt to be eloquent! Education with common sense and religion never unfits a man to preach anywhere, no matter how ignorant the people. Let us have educated ministers everywhere.

In this connection I will refer to the work of a man whose memory is dear to hundreds, and whose life so aptly illustrates this point. He came to Alexandria years ago, a young man, and labored for six years in all, and was then presiding elder of the Alexandria district, and no man since has ever wholly filled his place. The intelligent, the ignorant and the poor, all enjoyed his preaching, and loved him as a brother. Scholarly, yet simple and plain, he preached to the point, and people were converted. This was the case of a man full of deep piety, inspired of the Holy Ghost, along with a classically educated mind. He was as much at home in the pine woods preaching as in a town church. He preached while nailing on shingles, and his old German carpenter was converted, dying many years afterward in the faith. He preached the unsullied gospel with a consuming desire to save souls, and people were saved. Let us have an educated ministry as far as possible, with no slang in the pulpit, and none of the wonderful yarns of questionable authenticity, and none of the fine methods by which we sometimes see evangelists manipulate an audience, as do patent medicine venders in the streets; but let us have men of God, preaching the gospel in its purity in a dignified, elegant manner.

ROBT. H. MCGIMSEY.

PHILIP WERLEIN.

IN MEMORIAM.

Several excellent notices of Mr. Philip Werlein appeared in the Picayune and Times-Democrat on the immediate occasion of his death and burial. I also would add my tribute to the character of this noble friend.

From his boyhood he was remarkable for his devotion to his parents, and readiness to serve in every way all who had any claim upon his attention. After the war he became identified with his father in the effort to revive their long and well-known music store in this city, to which he succeeded after his father's death. He was a consistent Christian. He supported most generously the church to which he belonged, often giving, as thought by some, extravagantly to its institutions, and to the support of its ministry; and this he continued to do all through the years of his last sickness. He gave annually to Centenary College of Louisiana an amount which was only equaled by two others of its patrons.

This much might be said of one, and yet the main thing in an estimate of character be wanting. He was, best of all, one who had a daily experience of the Savior's infinite love. When his hearing and power of motion had failed, he still attended church, and delighted in the atmosphere of God's house, in its assembly, its prayers, its hymns, and in the ministration of the Word. He could always be seen in his accustomed place, sitting in an invalid's chair.

While in the full strength of manhood he was an active, enterprising merchant, a pure man, a generous friend, charitable to all who were in want, and a pillar in the church of Christ. His memory is blessed not only to wife and children, brethren and sisters, but to all who knew him intimately. No one can doubt his abundant entrance into the mansions of the redeemed.

May we all profit by his noble example, and at the end join him in the presence of the Son of God!

PENTECOST.

BY REV. DWIGHT WILLIAMS.

The day of wondrous story,
The golden seal of time,
The consecrated glory
Of all the years sublime;
The world was waiting for it,
The new inaugural
Of power that should restore it,
And nations disenthral.

The day of voices breaking
Like golden seas afar,
The world's new song awaking
In one vernacular,
All tongues of discord blending
In one exultant theme,
The reign of love descending,
The ancient prophet's dream.

The Father's promise, blossomed,
The secret of his plan
To ransomed earth unbosomed,
Long kept since time began;
The culminating beauty
Of Jesus' sacrifice,
The gladdest path of duty
Wide open to the skies.

It came with balmy sweetness
To heal the night of wrongs;
It came in love's completeness
The jubilee of songs;
No dove wing in its whiteness
So beautiful and swift,
No burnished gold for brightness
Like this, the promised gift.

Now manna showers are o'er us,
The pentecostal rain
Makes fragrant all before us
Our path of toil and pain;
'Tis yours, ye poor and lowly,
The Lord's transfigured sign,
The mountain vision holy,
The breath of love divine.

HOME AGAIN.

MR. EDITOR: After having had engagements in Manila, taken Iloilo by bombardment, and captured a line of seven forts on Cebu Island, and watched seemingly a century for "our ship at sea" to bring us relief, we were delighted near the end of September by the arrival of the "Indiana" with the Nineteenth Infantry aboard. Volley after volley of cheers rent the air, handshaking such as we had never done was indulged in, and a general jubilee was held. When all had been collected aboard and anchor had been weighed, and when the ship whistled a long, single blast as a sign of departure, we all in one voice shouted, "Home!" As we steamed away the Nineteenth Infantry band gave "Auld Lang Syne" and "Home, Sweet Home." On that occasion those airs, old and familiar, time-worn and stale to many at home, were to us inexpressibly sweet. This ended our sojourn among the Malays, and as the "beautiful isle of Somewhere"—Cebu—faded behind the horizon, we saw it fade without reluctance.

We found Manila, which we had left shortly after the outbreak, deserted by natives, as it was when the regiment disembarked there a year ago. Carromettas drawn by the native ponies rushing through crowds of Chinese coolies, the sleepy buffaloes pulling their draw-carts along the river front, the great numbers of both sexes bathing themselves in the Pasig, the heavy strokes of many cathedral bells, the venders sitting at every street corner and crossing selling sugar cane, betel nuts and molasses-cocoanut candy to the passers-by; the rushing and blowing of the dozens of steam launches, having in tug cascoes of freight, to vessels that can not come to the shallow docks; the padres walking in their self-possessed manner, the busy throngs on the Escolta and the pleasure drives on the Luneta, the mast-poles of Montojo's fleet appearing above the waves of the bay—all show Manila as we first knew it.

When we had spent the week taking on coal, mustering out those who wished to remain, and taking on commissaries for the voyage, we steamed out through Boca Chica by Corrigedor Island, which commands the entrance to the bay. As we bade adieu to the revolving lights on this island we were not sorry that we had been there, but were glad we were leaving. We found the China Sea as rough as usual, and experienced the usual sea-sickness on such waters, until we reached the island of Formosa, with whose side we steamed parallel for a day and night. Formosa, as you remember, was to the Chinese and Japanese what Crete was to Greece and Turkey—the island contested for. But from our view we could see nothing except barren rocks. By seven days we were moving up into Nagasaki Bay, but, as in everything about military, we reached the bay just in time to lie over all night before going to port. Next morning scores of sampans swarmed around our transport. A sampan is generally rowed by one man standing in the rear. When they had all collected about the ship, each one calling forth in his celestial language for us to go ashore with him (as we supposed), we thought how possible it was to have confusion of tongues about the time they were to erect Babel tower.

While our ship was in dry dock we were over and about the city riding in jinrikishas, or "go-ahead carts," as some of the boys called them. One man can pull a cart on level ground, but on the hill-sides two are necessary for swift locomotion. When we tired of this novel pastime we went to the Bronze Horse Temple. It is on the top of a rounding hill, and is approached by a series of stone steps and huge stone gates from the city, a thousand yards below. In front of the temple is a huge, smoothly polished stone, with the names of the officials of the temple. To one side is a collection of curios from the China-Japan war. Further over is a tea garden, where we imbibed the pure fluid made by natives. Still further is a park set with camphor trees and the native pines. At one place, set apart from the rest by a picket fence, are two trees, and between them is a stone bearing the inscription: "Mrs. Grant and I have each planted a tree here. May they flourish, be prolific, and prosper, and be emblematic of the thrifty and rising empire of Japan! Ulysses S. Grant, President United States, June, 1879." The temple has a commanding view of the city. On the interior are divers figures, but we could see these only from a distance.

An American mission—Presbyterian—occupied our attention next. Miss Young, one of the teachers, kindly showed us over the spacious building, through music departments, carving departments, as well as chemistry and art. We saw a Goodwin's Greek Grammar, and several other books not unknown to our colleges in the States.

A late law has been made ordering the children of certain ages to the native public schools, which gives the pagans a chance at them before we can do anything. We have no Southern Methodist schools in Nagasaki, Yokohama, nor Tokio, and not having gone to Kobe, we missed seeing our missionaries. From the fact that theirs is a religion evident, and ours one felt and not seen, the natives hesitate about taking hold of Christianity. They are proud and even haughty, and don't like much to deviate from the paths of their forefathers.

After we had called at a Japanese home, and gone through the custom of taking our shoes off, and sitting on the nicely-carpeted floor, and several other things of the kind, we returned to the ship, which was by this time afloat and being coaled by women. The men make clever overseers.

Between Nagasaki and Yokohama we passed many beautiful islands, all well fortified, and met many steamers and naval vessels. At one place we looked at the top of an old volcano, and saw snow. It was cold—"mucho frio." As soon as we were in Yokohama we went to the Ladies' Asiatic Association, where they gave us some sandwiches and pie—and nothing could better please a soldier—and instructions for going to Tokio, the capital. Thirty-five minutes' run on the little railroad brought us into the city.

We found some more missionaries, who took us to preaching, and afterward to schools and churches and legations, and to the army and navy of Japan, and, the greatest of all, to the royal palace, which is surrounded by an inner moat. A gaudily-plumaged sentinel walks in front of the huge stone gate, and keeps out all strangers and suspicious characters.

When we left Yokohama the next day we felt like we were folding back one volume of the world. We had seen the Orient and its curious people; we had been busy seeing, and now we had time for meditation as we were starting on our long voyage. We thought of war—all that is discipline, all that is stern, all that is rigid, all that is arduous, all that has for its sole object the destruction of what it has required ages to built. We thought of shells flying into cities, into the private compartments of the populace; how they destroy men in fortifications and tear babies away from their mothers in their homes; of a city being burned simultaneously at every street corner, consuming live stock as well as real estate; of a demoralized people rushing in every direction, thinking that surrender means death; of hundreds lying lifeless as a result of battle; of the gloom that settles on the field after the conflict. We think to ourselves the sufferings and grievance, the painful suspense and weary watches, the sleepless nights and long marches, the gory fields and orphans rendered destitute of homes—we write it all under a single name, and that name is War.

We crossed the 180th meridian on the night of Oct. 31, and the next day we met the same old thirty-first, but in our records made it one day later—thirty-second.

But now we are approaching our own Columbia, and as the French philosopher said, we see all that has surrounded us, all that has brought us and fed us, all that we have loved. The country we call ours, the homes we always frequent, the associates so light-hearted and gay, who make life pleasant for us—this is our Columbia. The laws which protect us, the bread which pays for our work, the words we interchange with others, the joy and grief which come to us from the men and things among which we live—this is our country. We see it, we breathe it everywhere. We think to ourselves of our rights and our duties, our affections and our wants, our past and present blessings; we write them under a single name—and that name is Country.

As we near the Golden Gate we see to the right of us the tall rocks of the coast, and among these is the Cliff House, standing as a guide to those who approach. As we came nearer we see the great forty-foot guns of the fort, commanding the sea for twelve miles out; we see the camps of Presidio, where we stood our first guard, and the ground where we learned to drill. Instead of heavy strokes from the cathedral bells, we hear the many whistles of the factories and railroads. Suddenly three steamers, whistling for all they are worth, break through the dense fog. They have the committee sent from the State to meet us, but more important than the committee are the friends, mothers and sisters, all waving flags, and crying with delight to see their soldier boys reach home.

BASTROP, LA.

After a long siege of forty-four days our meeting here closed on the evening of the thirteenth instant. During the first five weeks we had ministerial help two and a half days. Our esteemed presiding elder, Rev. J. D. Harper, preached two full-orbed sermons, and my all-alive neighbor, Rev. W. R. Harvell, preached three times with power. Rev. W. D. Bass, of Corinth, Miss., did the preaching during the last ten days of the meeting.

The results of the meeting are encouraging, although the accessions were few. Four were received on profession of faith—one to be received yet. Two will be restored by action of Church Conference. Three converts will unite with the Baptist Church. There were some conversions and reclamations among church members.

All the churches here have been quickened to activity. Not even the Episcopal Church escaped the influence of the long siege. The Sunday-schools have taken on new life; ours was resurrected and set to work.

While the meeting was in progress we organized a Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor. It now has 39 members. Much interest is manifested by the young men, many of whom have become members of the society. The attendance at the Sunday afternoon prayer meetings speaks well for this community. Christian sociability and hospitality rose from the freezing-point to a very high notch—a not insignificant item.

Bro. Bass did preach the gospel in its simplicity, directness, and power. Had it been possible to get an attendance of the young people (especially the young men) in the day time, the results, doubtless, would have been more gratifying. Bro. Bass' services were highly appreciated by this scribe and by the public.

This winds up my third year here. I have learned to love this difficult field, for there are friends not a few who are loyal and true. Surely the Lord has been good to me in this long conflict, and to him be all praise.

WM. SCHUHLE, P. C.

CARROLLTON, MISS.

When we meet at Greenwood, ten days hence, Carrollton station will make a good report. The various collections ordered by the Conference will be fully met; and, under the earnest and faithful supervision of that elect layman, J. R. Bingham, we will make a creditable showing for the Twentieth Century Fund. As manager of this educational campaign for the two Conferences in our State, Bro. Bingham has wrought nobly, laboring by day and night to further this great movement. And he is succeeding.

Some weeks ago we moved into an elegant new parsonage, which is one of the most comfortable and convenient within our bounds. The brother who occupies this home during the coming year ought to be happy. Our presiding elder, Bro. Shipman, eats no idle bread. He is now making a "fifth round" of the charges, assisting the brethren in closing up the work.

We have had good revivals and a number of accessions. Bishop Galloway, Dr. Steele, Chaplain Milburn, Dr. Murrah, Joe Ramsey, and others—celebrities and less—have been with us this year.

The District Conference which met with us in May left an impress for good that abides.

No people in the Conference more greatly appreciated the labors, nor more deeply mourn the death, of the sainted Geo. H. Lipscomb than Carrollton, where he labored for two years.

The news has just reached us that one of his dear little girls, Mary Hargrove, has been gathered to the heavenly home. The brethren will not forget Sister Lipscomb in this time of sore bereavement.

We hope to meet the editor at Conference. H. T. CUNNINGHAM.

A NEW CHURCH.

We came to this charge Jan. 11, and found a very comfortable church, but an old and dilapidated parsonage. Our ladies began at once to talk about building or remodeling the parsonage, but after we had been here just one week the church was destroyed by fire. I was never so cast down as when I looked upon the ruins that morning at two o'clock, and heard some one say, "There was not a dollar of insurance," and some one else said, "The parsonage will have to wait a while now." But in a few days our people began to feel better; so a meeting was called and committee appointed to solicit funds to rebuild. As a result of the efforts put forth, on July 13 the corner-stone of the new brick church was laid by our presiding elder, Bro. T. L. Mellen. On the night of Oct. 23 we held the first service in the church, which is complete, and furnished throughout. We have the oak circular pews from Southern Seating & Cab. Co., Jackson Tenn., which are very neat and comfortable. The meeting was continued for two weeks. We were all alone until Tuesday of the second week, when Bro. Robt. Selby came to our assistance. The meeting was not what we expected or desired, but suppose it was not held at the proper time for this section of the country.

The church is a very handsome building and is a credit to a town of this size. After progress was reported on the church all of our people became more hopeful, and the good women of Newton and Hickory started out with a determination to fix up the parsonage in spite of their great loss. So they have added two new rooms, hall and front gallery, besides making improvements on the old part, thereby making a very comfortable and convenient house. All this, by their own efforts, without asking any man to contribute a dollar, knowing that the brethren had their hands full in building the church.

Our people deserve much praise for the work they have done, especially these noble women. God bless them! JAS. G. GALLOWAY.

DOES THE LAW GIVE JUSTICE?

Much has been said, and rightly said, against mob law. But whenever there is such a terrible tragedy as the one that occurred in Leake county on Oct. 20, what shall we say? Dr. Hoss, in the Nashville Advocate, of Nov. 2, asked the same question, and continues his remarks by saying: "That the law ought to take its course is certain, but who can wonder that its operation should be suspended under such circumstances? Let any man ask himself what he would do if his family had been dealt with as John Gambrel's." The answer is conclusive. There is scarcely a man anywhere who is acquainted with the action of the courts that would be willing to turn such criminals over into the hands of the law. Everyone who frequents the court-room knows that the laws of our country as they are enforced are mere pretenses to justice. Yet, "let the law take its course," is the cry of the preacher, governor, judges and lawyers.

Suppose we examine a few cases where the law took its course. A man loads his gun, walks out upon the streets of a certain city, tells his friends that he is going to kill a certain man, meets him, shoots him down, and is turned scot free by the courts. . . . Two men meet another man, shoot him down without any provocation, and then riddle his body with bullets, while his mother bends over him and pleads for her lifeless boy; are taken by the courts, one set free, the other sent to the penitentiary, and in a year or two is pardoned. . . . A man walks out of his shop, meets a man, shoots him down, pleads insanity and is turned loose, goes back to his place of business as sane as any man in town. . . . Two boys overtake a man, ruthlessly murder him without any cause whatever; are tried, sentenced to the penitentiary, are trusties in less than a month, and no doubt will be pardoned in a very short time. . . . A man is shot down by two ruffians for telling the truth; they are sent to the penitentiary for life, and are pardoned in less than four years by the man who defended them. . . . A man waits up to his son's home, calls him to the door, shoots him down; pleads insanity, consequently, a mistrial.

These, and many other instances that might be given, are the cause of mob violence. There is no justice in our courts. If a man has money, he will not be punished according to law, no matter what his crime may be. Is it any wonder when we have men who make no pretense to religion? "When the wicked rule the people shall mourn."

I am not in favor of mob law. Would to God our country could be freed of such awful crimes. Let all the good people unite and see that the law is enforced, for there is no happiness without order, no order without authority, and no authority without unity. B. W. LEWIS.

Mrs. Tom Randle sends a postal item of real encouragement. It is not often that seed-sowing yields such a speedy promise of harvest.

"Dear Sister: We have adopted your plan and have twelve 'thank-you boxes' at work in our Minden Society. We started these boxes on the anniversary of our darling's going to heaven: she gave all she had to missions just before she left us. God bless you for suggesting the 'thank-you boxes.'"

What a beautiful celebration of the dear one's home-going!—a living, growing, eternal monument, more enduring than marble.

It gives us pleasure to present the following report from our Conference treasurer for the second quarter.

W. F. M. S., LOUISIANA CONFERENCE—QUARTERLY REPORT, SEPT. 2, 1899.

Thank-offerings	$ 1 00
Dues	76 65
Mite-Boxes	40
Century Fund	41 00
Total	$119 05
Received on Conference Contingent Fund	$ 10 85

MRS. J. J. HOLMES,
Treas. W. F. M. S.

Appreciating the importance of the Twentieth Century Fund as a thank-offering from the Christians of the world, the W. F. M. S. has pledged its members to raise $75,000 of the $1,500,000 which the M. E. Church, South, has undertaken to raise. This allots $1 to every member of the W. F. M. S. There are many who will give nothing, thus leaving a margin for the grace of liberality in those who esteem it a privilege to give cheerfully. It is advisable that our auxiliaries stress this cause at the few remaining meetings of this year and, if possible, enroll the full membership of our assessment before the close of the century. Be it remembered that this free-will offering is to be used by the W. B. F. M. in the erection of school-buildings in Soochow, China; Juiz de Fora, Brazil, and Havana, Cuba.

In all our giving, be it large or small, let us season the offering with earnest prayer for the speedy extension of the coming kingdom, when all the world shall know him from the least unto the greatest.

The Christian Life.

LIVING WITNESSES.

The most convincing proof of the truth of Christianity is the reformation it produces in the lives of people. It makes deceitful men honest. It makes the violent gentle. It makes the lecherous pure. The profane become prayerful. The drunken become sober. The revengeful become forgiving. While the selfish are transformed into the benevolent and self-sacrificing. In a word, Christianity makes sinful men righteous—a work which no other religion has ever accomplished. There are transformations in character and conduct which all men can see. Seeing them, they are compelled to admit that the religion which produces them must be true. The tree is known by its fruit. Men do not gather grapes of thorns, nor figs of thistles.

We make much of Christian evidences, and more books have been written on this subject than on any other. But only those evidences are convincing which appeal to the manifest fruits of Christianity in the lives of men. If obedience to the gospel did not make men righteous, all other evidences would be insufficient to produce conviction of its truth.

We regard preaching of the gospel as essential, and rightly, if its preachers are examples of the truth they preach. If they are not, and if it is known that they are not, all their preaching, however eloquent, learned and logical, will have no power to convince men that their doctrine is true.

We lay great stress upon "the word of testimony," and rightly insist that the Christian should be able to give a reason for his faith in the gospel by telling his own experience of its saving power. We should remember, however, that actions speak louder than words, and are usually the most reliable index to a person's character. Christ commands us to confess him before men, but he does not mean verbal confession only. "Let your light so shine before men that they may see your good works (not hear your good words merely) and glorify your Father who is in heaven." Good deeds are better than good words. The place for greatest emphasis is conduct, acts of kindness and charity, perfect integrity in business, righteousness in all the relations of life, activity in the service of humanity. That is to say, the most any man can do for the advancement of Christianity in the world is to live it. His life is the most eloquent preacher of the gospel. He bears testimony to its truth more cogent than logic, and more convincing than any historical evidences. He is a living witness. His life talks. And what it says is not easily misunderstood.—Epworth Herald.

It is just as necessary that we should patiently wait for answers to our prayers as it is that we should patiently pray for what we need. Our prayers ought to be walked around with patience. An able preacher says: "The Savior knows how impatient we are that the blessing shall come quickly, and, therefore, cautions us not to faint when we do not receive it on the instant. We may not receive it in the form we looked for. It may come in a form so different that we shall scarcely recognize it as what we asked for." If the good and great God can blessedly wait on us, ought we not to hopefully wait for his reply to our prayers? His "due season" never fails to come around.—Exchange.

The man who has nothing to boast of but his illustrious ancestry, is like a potato—the only good belonging to him is underground.—Thomas Overbury.

FROM THE WORK.

A CONTINUOUS STORM.

We have something good to write about the Gallman folks every once and awhile. We thought we had a big pounding last year, but I think this exceeds that. We had a continuous storm from 11 A. M. to 6 P. M., the wind blowing from three different directions. It first began to blow from Mt. Pleasant Church in small packages of edibles and dry goods, and terminated in an extremely hard gust, which brought a whole wagon load of corn, molasses, potatoes, chickens, etc. Hardly had this storm ceased when we saw a cloud of dust rising from toward Old Crystal Springs, which proved to be the forerunner of a very severe storm, which began with a whole wagon load of corn, chickens, potatoes, molasses, etc. This was followed by wagon loads of people and bundles and boxes. Buggies, surries and other kinds of conveyances brought men, women and children, until we had about seventy-five of those good people with us, and I think everyone brought something which he left with us. While we were unloading and storing away the many good things this storm brought, we saw another storm gathering right around us, and before we were aware of it the good people of Gallman were coming in from all sides, bringing with them many pounds and bundles indicative of their love for and appreciation of our work. But the Old Crystal Springs folks came to take supper with us.

Now, how does the mistress of an ordinary parsonage feel when seventy-five people come in to take supper at one time? Mrs. W. didn't say, "Oh, my! what shall I give these folks to eat," but went to meet them with a glad heart and open arms, and gave them a hearty welcome. (She knew they brought their supper with them.) And such a supper! It is very rare indeed that such an elegant supper is spread in a parsonage. Everything that you would wish was there in abundance. After all had finished there were still whole cakes and whole fowls, and many other things were left for us. These people know how to make a preacher and his family feel good and make them want to remain the four years out, and then be sorry because the limit is four instead of eight.

Now, none of you preachers need be pitching your tents this way, for I have been here only three years.

May God bless and prosper all these people, both temporally and spiritually! Come again, all you good people, whenever you can, but especially when you can bring your supper. With much appreciation.

W. M. WILLIAMS, P. C.

AMITE CITY, LA.

As we approach the end of a journey, the end of an undertaking, the end of a year, we are inclined to a view in the retrospect, and happy is the man that can see the hand of God as he thus looks, and recognize the shadow as the shadow of his hand. We learn lessons of infinite value on cloudy days, and in the shadows we see some things that can not be discerned in the glare of the daylight. In the darkened room the image and likeness of our Friend is developed, and his features become more beautiful than we had hitherto known. Was he not "perfected by the things which he suffered"?

This has been a year full of valuable lessons. Yea, in the shadow and secret place of the Most High strength may be gathered for other duties and greater trials. The church has shared the blessing; fifty-odd souls have been added to its number, debts on church property paid, and improvements made on the preacher's home. The collections for benevolent purposes are good—the best for many years. Am reaping where my brethren have sown.

We dedicated a handsome and commodious church at Kentwood last Sunday. Our people there will ask for a resident pastor at the coming Annual Conference.

We are glad that Bishop Galloway is to be with us at Monroe. His nearness, geographically, causes us to feel that he is near us otherwise. We may, however, before this date next year, wish that we had been blest with that distance that lends enchantment to view. Your work as editor of one of the very best papers has been a blessing to me and my people. Blessing upon you and yours.

HARRY W. MAY.

Nov. 22, 1899.

COLUMBIA, LA.

Since my last report I have assisted in two fine meetings. On Monday after the third Sunday in October I began a meeting with Bro. Dan Barr at Mer Rouge. We closed out on the following Sunday at 11 o'clock. The meeting increased in interest from the first service to the close. It was a great pity that the meeting had to close. Bro. Barr is a big-hearted itinerant, and makes a visiting brother feel at home. He is loved and honored by his people. They want him returned for another year.

My next meeting was with D. E. Kelly, Jena, La. The meeting was pronounced by all to be one of the best held in the place for many years. We had fourteen accessions and some bright conversions. The Jena and Jonesville work is coming to the front. Bro. Kelly took charge of the work the first of July. They assessed him three hundred and twenty dollars, and the amount was paid by the first of November. They have agreed to pay him six hundred if he is returned.

Bro. Parker, our faithful presiding elder, has been sick, but is filling his appointments at present, and we truly hope that he will be returned to the district another year. I have found that a person can live on the Ouachita river and be well enough to preach two hundred and five times in one year. I think that I can get to Conference this year, as it is so close. I would not have missed a session in the past, but from the fact that I was trying to pay some honest debts.

G. D. ANDERS.

FROM REV. J. H. BASS.

We are trying to do the best we can in winding up for Conference. Bro. Bachman was with us at Cherry Hill the first Sunday, at Tutwiler Friday following, and at Webb second Sunday. He sold to our Sunday-school at Cherry Hill a nice library. We collected most of the money to buy one at Webb, and it is very likely that Tutwiler will also buy. Bro. Bachman's visit to our charge was highly appreciated by all, and will result in great good. It would be a difficult matter to find a man to fill his important place, as he is a tender, affectionate preacher as well as a great Sunday-school worker.

Our Sunday-school work on this charge is one hundred per cent. better than ever before. Our congations are far better than in the beginning. Our church-house at Webb is clear of debt. Our people are growing more consecrated and taking more interest. We are getting more religious literature circulated. Our Conference collections will be about one hundred per cent. above anything in the past. The pastor and presiding elder will be paid in full. We have been at work hard all of the year, doing what we honestly thought to be for the best. Of course, like other pastors, we have made mistakes that we shall never repeat; but, upon the whole, we thank God and take courage. New people are moving to our work who have taken hold and are rendering us much help.

J. H. BASS.

MAGNOLIA, LA.

I am closing up my year's work with a glorious victory for Christ. Have just closed the most successful revival of the year, which resulted in 25 accessions and equally as many conversions. We organized a new church, and they named it "Alford's Chapel." The most thrilling scene I ever witnessed was at this meeting, when the oldest man in Livingston parish was converted and joined the church. I never before so keenly felt the responsibility of performing the duties of a minister as when this eighty-five-year-old man, with some of his children and grandchildren, knelt before the altar for baptism. This makes in all eighty-eight members received up to date this year. I have been paid already over three times the amount paid to the preacher in charge last year. I have held most of my own meetings this year. I don't think it necessary to send off and employ evangelists to do our revival work for us. I'll expect to be admitted in full connection this year. May God continue to bless the ADVOCATE!

J. M. ALFORD,
P. C. Live Oak Charge.

MANY, LA.

We closed out Sunday night at Jessup amid a Pentecost. The people here never saw such a meeting; so they say. The revival broke out in the college, and the most of the scholars were converted, and many of them sanctified. I never saw greater power on people, and the people came from every direction, and got saved. No doubt there was at least one hundred, or more, converted, and not less than sixty sanctified. I know I saw time and again at least fifty people shouting at one time. Such a Pentecost I do not remember of seeing. We had thirty accessions to the church of fine young people, and we organized a League of fifty-six members. We have had about one hundred accessions since Conference. All our collections will be full at Conference.

J. S. SANDERS.

The most astonishing thing in Christendom is the fact that so many intelligent people who profess to believe in God our Creator, Benefactor and Judge, and in Jesus Christ as the only Savior of our race, and in the Bible as the revelation of God's will to us, and yet do not become followers of the great and only Savior, nor assist to any perceptible extent to send the glorious gospel of salvation to those who have it not! Professedly believers—practically infidels! What will the end be? Where will they spend the endless ages of eternity?—Rev. S. F. Crowther.

In the "good old days" a man's care for his health was marked by the completeness of the armor in which he locked himself up. It was very unhealthy in those "merry days" of jovial robber barons, to be outside of the steel case of knighthood. It was steel vs. steal every hour of the day. In our times a man needs to be armed inside rather than out. The gentle germ is like love in that he "laughs at locksmiths." You can't lock him out, but you can make it so mighty uncomfortable for him that he'll be glad to get out and seek some other lodging.

The greatest protection against disease is a healthy condition of the stomach and other organs of digestion and nutrition. Health is the true armor against the germ. The health of the stomach and allied organs is assured to those who use Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. It purifies the blood, strengthens the stomach, nourishes the nerves and gives new life to the lungs.

There is no alcohol or other intoxicant contained in "Golden Medical Discovery."

"I used ten bottles of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery and several vials of his 'Pleasant Pellets' in year ago this spring, and have had no trouble with indigestion since," writes Mr. W. T. Thompson, of Townsend, Broadwater Co., Montana. "Words fail to tell how thankful I am for the relief, as I had suffered so much and it seemed that the doctors could do me no good. I got down in weight to 125 pounds, and was not able to work at all. Now I weigh nearly 160 and can do a day's work on the farm."

THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 30, 1899.

REPORT OF PUBLISHING COMMITTEE.

The Publishing Committee of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE met in the ADVOCATE office, Nov. 22, with Dr. John T. Sawyer in the chair, and Dr. S. S. Keener at the secretary's table. All the members were present except Dr. W. T. J. Sullivan and Dr. T. C. Wier, of the North Mississippi Conference, and Rev. F. N. Parker, of the Louisiana Conference.

Dr. W. C. Black, the editor and publisher, made his annual report, which showed the ADVOCATE to be on a sound financial basis. A note of $614, being the balance due on a $1,200 debt of many years' standing, by the Publishing Committee, has been paid during the past year. This relieves the ADVOCATE entirely of debt. Dr. Black was deemed worthy of special commendation for the liquidation of this debt, and the thanks of the committee were accordingly tendered.

All the interests of the ADVOCATE, including its editorial management, were inquired into and discussed. Bating the admission into the paper of certain controversial articles written by correspondents, the committee was pleased to endorse Dr. Black's editorial work.

How to increase the circulation of the ADVOCATE, to the extent the interests of the patronizing Conferences demand, remains an unsolved problem. Three methods have been suggested, none of which are without objectionable features. One is to reduce the price of the paper conditionally, with a view to a permanent reduction. This has been tried the past year, but without success. Another method is to reduce the price of the paper unconditionally. To some this may appear feasible, and yet, if called on to assume responsibility for the possible financial loss of such a venture, they would, doubtless, be found wanting in readiness for the task. It is easy to say what some one else should do, but not always easy to do it ourselves. If some one could be found able and willing to insure the ADVOCATE against loss for one or two years, this plan could and would be tried. The committee and publisher would hail such an opportunity with grateful joy. In the meantime nothing remains but to work for the paper under the old regime. There are objections to this method and hindrances in the way, but they are less in magnitude than those found elsewhere. Whether the circulation is large or small, the ADVOCATE must be kept on a solid financial foundation. Everyone recognizes this as imperative.

In conclusion, the preachers and other readers of the ADVOCATE will permit a word of exhortation. Dr. Black is consecrating hands, head and heart to the work of furnishing the church with an indispensable family newspaper. The circulation is not what it ought to be. Many of our Methodist families are without its gracious and uplifting influence. No amount of money saved to them by not subscribing for the paper can compensate for the intellectual and spiritual loss they sustain. It is far better to pay many times the present price than to be without its helpfulness in religious life and work. Let every preacher adopt some method of working for an extension of the paper's circulation, and seek the co-operation of its present readers among the laity. A little work faithfully performed will accomplish much, and the results will be the expansion and upbuilding of the kingdom of God.

The officers elected for the ensuing year are as follows: S. S. Keener, D. D., president; John T. Sawyer, D. D., secretary, and J. D. Cameron, D. D., treasurer. Dr. Sawyer, Dr. Sullivan and Rev. R. J. Jones constitute the Executive Committee.

L. CARLEY, for Com.

THE SEASON OF THANKSGIVING.

No other holiday observed by the American people ought to exceed in gladness and significance the day now annually observed among us as a season of thanksgiving. The custom of setting apart one day in the year for the national recognition of the rulership and providence of Almighty God, and for the general rendering of thanks to him who is the source of every blessing, is not only befitting to us as a Christian nation, but is also calculated to have a most salutary effect upon the faith and morals of our people. While in a sense every day to the Christian ought to be a day of thanksgiving the observance of special seasons for the expression of gratitude and praise to our heavenly Father is highly beneficial. "Not that our thanks," as some one has said, "are to be uttered only on special occasions, but the special occasions help us to be grateful all the time, to fill the whole life with the spirit of grateful love; just as set hours of prayer help to pervade the life with the spirit of prayer."

The people of no other nations have greater cause for gratitude to the Lord of all the earth than have the citizens of this heaven-favored land. In what other country is so large a measure of liberty enjoyed, is true worth so highly honored, is property so well protected, is life blessed with such manifold comforts? Where else is the priceless boon of a good education so easily and so generally obtainable? What other country offers such favorable conditions for the achievement of success in every laudable enterprise? The common people here enjoy rights and privileges and advantages that the nobility in other ages coveted in vain. On American soil science and art have achieved many of their grandest triumphs. It is here that civil and religious liberty has found an enduring home, and lifted up the torch of truth so high that all the world is lighted thereby. It is here that Christian civilization has found its noblest expression, and has established its most glorious institutions. Though the youngest of the great powers of the earth, it is decidedly the most prosperous and one of the richest nations on the globe. As we look back over the century just closing, does it not seem that Providence has guided in our affairs, and has been fitting us as a nation to play a mighty and beneficent part in the progress of the world? We pity the man who is not grateful that he lives in such an age and in such a country.

Though we may not be able to enumerate all the blessings for which we should be grateful, yet it is helpful to do so in part and to meditate upon the manifold mercies of God. When King Louis of France began to deprecate certain expressions of admiration, used by a courtier, the reply was made: "When you cease to win victories, we will cease to utter praises." Peloubet strikingly remarks, "Only when God ceases to confer new blessings, can we cease to have thanksgiving days."

Not for many years has the outlook in the commercial and business world been so bright as at present. A great wave of prosperity is spreading over the land, and the South, though not in the deepest part of the current, is a sharer in the benefits thereof. Let us not forget that it is God who supplies the indispensable conditions of material prosperity. While in some other countries cruel famine is slaying thousands, our harvests are so abundant that we have enough not only for our own needs, but also for the hungry across the seas. Shall we not give thanks for this plenitude of material blessings, which none can claim that he deserves? Though war is being waged by us abroad, let us be thankful for the peace that reigns at home, and for the spirit of contentment that so largely prevails among us.

As members of the church of Christ we ought to render fervent thanks to God for the growth of the spirit of true Christian fraternity among the various denominations, for the increasing liberality of the rich, for the deepening interest in Christian education and in Christian philanthropy, and for the purer principles and loftier standards that are beginning to dominate political affairs. While the church has not, perhaps, grown as greatly in numbers during the present year as in some former years, yet God has graciously honored the work of his servants, and has opened up to us the grandest conceivable opportunities for missionary enterprise.

If one has little else, health is a blessing that should call forth profound gratitude. What else can be enjoyed if this be lacking? Thanksgiving Day has a lesson even for those who are "heavy of heart" on account of misfortune, bereavement, or other affliction. Through the abounding grace of God we may take with loving hearts from the hand of our heavenly Father "the bitter as well as the sweet." Like one of old, we may learn to "rejoice even in tribulation."

"Oh, that men would praise the Lord for his goodness and for his wonderful works to the children of men."

THOUGHTS ON HEAVEN.

Says a noted preacher: "When I was a boy I thought of heaven as a great, shining city, with vast walls and domes and spires, and with nobody in it except white and tenuous angels, who were strangers to me. By and by my little brother died, and I thought of a great city with walls and domes and spires, and a flock of cold, unknown angels, and one little fellow that I was acquainted with. Then another brother died, and there were two that I knew. Then my acquaintances began to die, and the flock continually grew. But it was not until I had sent one of my children to his grandparent—God—that I began to think that I had got a little in myself. A second went, a third went, a fourth went, and by that time I had so many acquaintances in heaven that I did not see any more walls and domes and spires. I began to think of the residents of the celestial city. And now so many of my acquaintances have gone there, that it sometimes seems to me that I know more in heaven than I do on earth."

Similar feelings are thus expressed by James Martineau: "When in the sanctuary of the affections the lights are almost extinguished—when the solitude would be not to depart, but to remain—we may well and naturally feel that it is time to go. For now, whatever may be the indistinctness of the future, the groups of friendship are there, and wherever they are is a shelter and a home. However strange to us the place may be in which they dwell, if, as we cross the deeps of death, their visionary forms shall crowd the shore and people the hills of that unvisited abode, it will be to us 'a better country, even a heavenly.'"

Having ourselves found pleasure in reading these thoughts, we present them for the benefit of our readers, many of whom, we are sure, will equally enjoy them. This, however, is only one aspect of the blessedness of the life to come.

Another view equally inspiring is thus expressed by the gifted Beecher: "I could hardly wish to enter heaven did I believe the inhabitants were idly to sit by purling streams, fanned by balmy airs. Heaven, to be a place of happiness, must be a place of activity. Has the far-reaching eye of Newton ceased its profound investigations? Has David hung up his harp, as useless as the dusty arms in Westminster Abbey? Has Paul, glowing with God-like enthusiasm, ceased itinerating the universe of God? David and Isaiah will sweep nobler and loftier strains in eternity, and the minds of the saints, unclogged by cumbersome clay, will forever feast on the banquet of rich and glorious thought."

LITERARY NOTES.

BY W. F. B.

The Christmas number of Scribner's contains several striking novelties in illustration. Maarten Maartens, the distinguished Dutch author (who writes in English), tells in An Author's Story a love episode in the life of a successful novelist. Bliss Perry, the new editor of the Atlantic, has a tale of two rival churches in a New England village. A story of the Jewish quarter in New York is another feature, by A. Cahan. The author of The Peach contributes The Senior Reader—a character out of the British Museum. Augustine Birrell, the English essayist and member of Parliament, contributes a review of John Wesley as a force in the development of British national life in the eighteenth century.

In the December Ladies' Home Journal, Mr. Dooley's neighbor, Molly Donahne, makes her debut. She is ambitious to reign as social queen of Archey Road, and is quite as interesting and witty as Mr. Dooley, the philosopher of her author's creation. Rev. Cyrus T. Brady draws on his experiences as missionary to write of What Christmas Means in the Far West, giving pictures of rare pathos and of irresistible humor. The letters that passed between Gail Hamilton and Whittier are published for the first time. They give some delightful glimpses of the social side of the Quaker Poet. Ian Maclaren writes on, Shall the Old Clergyman Be Shot? and Albert W. Smith (the American Lewis Carroll) contributes more of his funny nonsense verses. Dan Beard interests the boys with a Christmas novelty.

The December number of Appletons' Popular Science Monthly has a paper on the Value of the Study of Art, from that master of the subject, Georges Perrot. How Standard Time Is Obtained is the title of an interesting article by Mr. T. B. Wilson. An article of special interest to everybody is that of W. E. De Reimer on Agricultural Education in Foreign Countries. Another is a profusely illustrated article giving a history of the Development of the American Newspaper during the past hundred years. The author, Mr. Walter L. Hawley, is connected with the New York Sun. Christian Science is again held up for public inspection by President David Starr Jordan, of Stanford University, in an article entitled, The Education of the Nemesis.

We have received an attractive little book entitled, The School and Society, by John Dewey, issued by the University of Chicago Press. The price of the book is 75 cents. In this book Prof. Dewey, head of the Pedagogical Department of the University of Chicago, states the place of the school in society simply, but with startling force. The traditional method he sums up as reading—readers, geographies, arithmetics, histories, and the whole host of text-books. He insists that the old-time home hold, with its multifarious production of nearly everything used in it, gave an education which was rich in reality, immediacy, interest, and moral power that the passive processes of the modern school can not think of rivaling. Mr. Dewey recognizes manual training, cooking, sewing, drawing, modeling, and the other fads and frills, as half-conscious steps in the movement to adapt the school to the new problems it has to face. The school reflects active life on all sides, and is itself organized by the same principle that organizes life in society. His thesis is simply that the child should be in actual touch with life; that the school should immediately interpret that life through the constructive activities of the child; that real discipline is the daughter of such constructive experience.

LIFE AND WORK OF LUCINDA B. HELM.

By Arabel W. Alexander. Barbee & Smith, Nashville, Tenn. 1898. Price, $1.

The above-named work is a well-gotten-up 12 mo. of 178 pages. Lucinda B. Helm was the originator of the Woman's Parsonage and Home Mission Society of our church. To this society she gave years of arduous labor. To her, more than to any other person, the church is indebted for the large results which have been accomplished through its instrumentality. Her life and work are, therefore, a part of the history of the church. Mrs. Alexander has done her work admirably. The work is well arranged, and the literary execution is worthy of high praise. The story of so noble a life can not fail to do great good. We bespeak for it an extensive circulation.

Dr. H. Urquhart has been re-elected editor of the Alabama Advocate for four years. Rev. S. P. West was re-elected business manager and assistant editor.

A CLAIM OF OUR CITIZENS.

R. E. Brown, of Spokane, holds a judgment against the Transvaal government for nearly two million dollars. This was awarded by the Supreme Court of the South African Republic. Immediately after the awarding of it Chief Justice Kotze was dismissed by President Kruger. Brown with a number of friends went to South Africa five years ago, and W. H. Young, of Spokane, discovered valuable mineral property near Johannesburg. About the same time President Kruger threw open two farms, and it was on these that Mr. Brown had located valuable mineral property. He complied with the requirements and was entitled to proper recognition, but could not receive it. He began suit to establish his rights before President Kruger could get the Volksraad together. Then Mr. Kruger convened the Executive Council and repudiated the throwing open of the farms. The Volksraad subsequently affirmed this. Then Brown prosecuted the suit for one million pounds against the government, and in 1897 the Chief Justice awarded him judgment for three hundred and eighty thousand pounds, and was then, as above stated, deposed. The government has made many offers to compromise, and now Mr. Brown has placed the claim in the hands of the State Department at Washington, which assures him of prompt and vigorous action.—New York Advocate.

Mr. Stead, in his Review of Reviews, says that what cheered Mr. Gladstone most of all during his last trying months was the report that his granddaughter, a bright, spirituelle young maiden of twenty, had decided to dedicate herself to the work of a Christian missionary to the heathen who sit in darkness. The dying statesman was thrilled with the thought that his granddaughter had chosen the better part. To his illumined eye, nothing in the world was worth talking of or living for save the great commission to preach Christ and him crucified, as the living witness of the love of God for man. There is nothing better than that, nothing to be compared to that. Again and again he would revert to it, and always with complacement, triumphant joy.—Friend's Missionary Advocate.

A notable man passed away when Sir William Dawson died last Sunday in Montreal. This learned man spent his busy life in educational work. As a scientist he earned a world-wide reputation. His special line of investigation was geology, in which his work was original, profound and of wide scope. He wrote several books on geological subjects. He found in the Laurentian rocks of Canada the fossil eozoon, which he fairly demonstrated to be the oldest discovered form of organic life. Sir William was above all other things a devout Christian, and his work was a constant refutation that a scientist ought not to be a Christian, or that the really deep study of scientific subjects must needs make a man an agnostic. Sir William was president of McGill University.—Pittsburg Advocate.

NOTES.

Rev. F. N. Parker was in the city last week on a visit to his mother. He is in good health and spirits.

Rev. R. S. Storrs, pastor of the Church of the Pilgrims, Brooklyn, N. Y., has tendered his resignation on account of the infirmities of age. He has been the pastor of the church since its organization fifty-three years ago. Dr. Storrs is one of the ablest preachers on the American continent.

We regret to learn that Rev. J. S. Oakley, of the North Mississippi Conference, is in such poor health as to necessitate his superannuation at the approaching session of Conference.

Rev. G. W. Bachman, colporteur of the North Mississippi Conference, will attend not only his own Conference, but also the Mississippi and the Louisiana Conferences. He will have a large stock of books.

Rev. R. H. Wynn has an engagement to preach a Thanksgiving sermon at Bunas, La. Without any pastor to lead them in the good work the people of this new town have raised money and erected a house of worship. Such a spirit is highly commendable. Bro. Wynn is hereby invited to tell us something more about this people when he returns.

President Beeson, of East Mississippi Female College, writes: "The Lord is still with us in great power. We have by far the largest school we ever had; have enrolled 153 boarders. I have purchased a dwelling just south of the college, and have 22 in it; made bed-rooms out of one of the large recitation-rooms in the rear of the college. In fact, we have filled nearly every available space."

The Rev. James E. Denson, pastor of Dryades Street Church, in this city, was married, on the twenty-second, to Miss Fannie Walker, of Sharon, Miss. The ceremony was performad in the Methodist Church at Canton, Miss., the pastor of the church, Rev. James W. McLaurin, officiating. We extend our heartiest congratulations, and wish the youthful pair unalloyed felicity through life.

Through Rev. J. M. Morse we learn that the attendance at Whitworth College is increasing rapidly since the quarantines were raised. Bro. Morse also informs us that at a recent meeting of the Board of Trustees it was decided to issue in the near future six per cent. bonds to the amount of $15,000. Amendments to the charter will be asked for at the next session of the Legislature.

The following telegram from President W. M. McIntosh was received too late for our issue of last week:

Grenada has raised $3,000 for the Twentieth Century Fund, to be used for Grenada College.

This is the largest per-capita contribution from any charge in this section, so far as we know. We congratulate the friends of the college upon this good beginning. We hope it will prove to be only a beginning.

We are in receipt of a valuable help for Sunday-school teachers and scholars, a Vest-Pocket Commentary on the International Sunday-school Lessons for 1900, by DeLoss M. Tompkins, D. D., published by Fred D. Ewell, 132 Market street, Chicago. Art linen, 25 cents; full Morocco, gold edges, 35 cents. This little volume presents in a most convenient form the lessons for the entire year, together with a remarkable amount of comprehensive study helps. It is truly a "pocket companion," enabling one to always have material for study at hand.

Dr. W. B. Murrah let the light of his countenance shine into our sanctum last week. He is jubilant over the prospects of Millsaps College. New pupils are arriving every day. He thinks the attendance will considerably exceed that of last session. The deportment of the student body is excellent. A work of grace of remarkable power is going on in the college. The college Y. M. C. A. is doing most commendable work. Since the session opened several young men have decided to consecrate their lives to the work of the ministry. Pupils now entering receive special attention from the faculty to enable them to make up for lost time.

EPWORTH LEAGUE DEPARTMENT.

"ALL FOR CHRIST."

LOUISIANA.

REV. THOMAS B. CLIFFORD, Jackson, La., EDITOR.

Thanksgiving Day!

"The Lord hath done great things for us; whereof we are glad."

"What shall I render unto the Lord for all his benefits toward me?"

We ought to show forth His praise not only with our lips, but in our lives, by giving up ourselves to His service and by walking before Him in holiness and righteousness all our days.

The time approaches for the meeting of the Conferences in Mississippi and Louisiana, and soon the Leaguers will have an opportunity of extending a royal welcome to their "new" preacher.

The young people can do much toward "fixing up" the parsonage, thus making the preacher and his family feel "at home" in their new charge.

Bishop Warren A. Candler, who presides over the North Mississippi Conference at Greenwood, is President of the Epworth League Board of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

From the League Department of the Alabama Christian Advocate we clip the following, which we commend not only to the "Juniors," but also the "Seniors" in Mississippi and Louisiana:

MR. EDITOR: Several months ago Mr. J. B. Berry came to Marion to canvass for the Marion Standard. While a comparative stranger here he happened to the misfortune to break his leg. Up in the third story of the hotel the Junior Epworth Leaguers found him and visited him, carrying flowers, fruits and dainties. Mr. Berry addressed the following beautiful poem to the Junior League:

TO THE JUNIOR EPWORTH ANGELS.

For hours and hours I'd been waiting
As footsteps went by in the hall,
Trusting that some kind Christian
Would give me a few moments' call.

At last there was a soft, sweet tapping,
Just after the tripping of feet;
I was dreaming of home while napping,
How I longed my loved ones to meet!

My sore heart bounded high with pleasure
As two dear little angels entered the door.
They bore in their arms a bright treasure.
Sweet pleadings to "go sin no more."

They brought me a bouquet of sweet flowers,
With a perfumed prayer in each bud,
May the blessings of God come down in showers,
And may they be crowned with His love!

Their gifts brought hope of a bright future,
In a land where angels dwell,
Of the meeting of our loved ones
With nevermore a sad farewell.

God speed the work of these little angels,
May they meet success where'er they roam,
And at last may they be gathered
To their glorious heavenly home!

MISSISSIPPI.

REV. HENRY G. HAWKINS, Madison, Miss., ASSOCIATE EDITOR.

The League ought to be the means of the formation of true and lasting friendships. A bad person has not within him the elements of a friend, but young people in League for the Lord are apt to have those elements.

Jeremy Taylor says: "When I choose my friend I will not stay until I have received a favor from him, but I will choose such a one as will do me many favors if I need them. I mean such favors as will make me wiser and better: it may be a reboke."

In subscriptions to the Twentieth Century Fund from the Mississippi Conference thus far, Brandon station is in the lead. On Sunday, Nov. 19, Rev. B. F. Lewis and his people devoted the day to it. There was dinner on the ground, and Dr. W. B. Morrah did the preaching. Brandon has only about one hundred and seventy members, but four hundred dollars was subscribed that day, with more to follow.

The Canton League has been doing well this year. The Madisonville League has paid its five-cent assessment. The Madison League held a helpful literary meeting at the home of one of its members, Miss Maud Chilton's. There was a reading from "Among the Forces," and one from "Our Island Empire." Good music was a pleasant feature of the meeting, and the members answered to roll call with a quotation from some favorite hymn.

Rev. H. W. Featherstun, presiding elder of the Brookhaven district and State League president, has pushed the organization and work of the League in his district this year.

One of the youngest and most buoyant spirits of the Mississippi Conference is Rev. F. M. Williams, pastor of Sharon circuit.

It is time the Meridian district was reporting something to this column. Will not Tatom, Carley, Ledyard, Hawkins, Heiland, or some of the young lady workers, give us an account of what is going on in Meridian?

Let all the district secretaries heed Miss Vie Thompson's injunction that they send monthly reports to the associate editor. If they do not send every month, let them at least send quarterly reports. Any items of interest we want. Not only from district secretaries, but from any League officer or member we will welcome an item.

The associate editor anticipates being present at the meeting of the State League officers at Greenwood, Friday, Dec. 1.

SUCCESS.

As predicted, Bro. B. F. Lewis' plans brought a great victory. Brandon gave four hundred dollars, and will add another hundred.

Rev. O. L. Savage, Coffeeville, reports twenty-eight and 50-100 dollars.

Rev. J. B. Stone has secured forty-five dollars from Winona circuit, and "will increase the amount."

Rev. Geo. H. Lipscomb, of precious memory, had completed the roll-book for Winona station before he was stricken with his fatal sickness. Bro. Allen devoted yesterday to the fund (all the collections and salaries being in full, and a ten-thousand-dollar church dedicated free of debt). Results of yesterday's work not in at this writing.

Now for Conference, and then for a new start and larger amounts all round. Altogether, a united effort, and the work is done. J. R. BINGHAM.

RUSTON, LA.

Last Sunday night Bro. H. R. Singletoo, Jr., closed a very gracious revival at Ruston. He had been here two weeks. Only expected to stay one week, but so much interest was manifested Bro. Notestine held on to the meeting and held on to the preachor. After he had left he recalled him. The church was crowded every night, and many were converted—about seventy-five, I was told—and the members much revived, and upwards of fifty of them covenanted to live nearer to God and be more faithful in future.

The Sunday evening service, at 4 o'clock, was mostly for the children, and they were greatly helped and several joined the church.

Bro. Singleton proved himself to be "a workman that needeth not to be ashamed." Like his father before him, he seems to feel not only the "woe is me if I preach not the gospel," but also the woe is me if sinners are not saved by my preaching. Even David prayed for "tokens of good," and all workers in God's vineyard yearn for the same, yet they may not always be given when they look for it; but the promise is sure, and the realization will be glorious when it is manifested to them. "My Word shall not return unto me void," is token enough.

Bro. Notestine is very much lifted up at the success of the meeting, and thinks it will prove to be a permanent blessing to the church and whole community.

Ruston is blest with churches. The Baptists have been without a pastor some time, but have one now who is holding a protracted meeting this week which is being largely attended. Methodists and Presbyterians all fraternize and attend whenever there is a protracted service at either church.

Miss Narcissa Williams, treasurer of the W. C. T. U., died Saturday, and funeral services were held in the Methodist Church Sunday morning. She had been sick some time and was ready and willing to die, but desired to live to work in the beloved cause of Christ. Bro. Nolesline paid a beautiful tribute to her memory at the funeral.

L. CRARY SADLER.

TO THE PREACHERS OF THE LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

DEAR BRETHREN: In making out your reports, to be handed in on the first day of the Annual Conference session, try, as far as possible, to have them conform to the following suggestions:

First. In reporting membership, let your starting-point be the number of members on the rolls of the churches you have served this year, less the local preachers. The third column is intended to contain the total of local preachers and members, as the grand total of the members on your work when you left home for Conference. Now, if you will subtract from this total the additions you have had to the church from all sources, and to the remainder add the number that have been "removed by death, certificate, and otherwise," you will have the "total members last year." Only in this way can reliable figures be obtained from those works, the plan of which was changed by the last Conference.

Second. Be careful to report accurately all indebtedness on church property, and damages sustained; also the insurance statistics, being careful as to premiums paid.

Third. In the second table, under "Money Expended for Other Objects," include all incidental expenses, poor fund, ministerial help, etc., and in Table No. 1, under the head of "Other Church Property," report all school or other buildings, their furnishing, etc.; bells, organs, cemeteries, church and parsonage furnishings, etc; parsonage horses, cows, etc.; building and loan, and other stock, etc.

Fourth. On the second table make a note of the total amount pledged on your charge to the Twentieth Century Educational Fund, and immediately under it report the amount collected on that pledge. The difference between these amounts should be the amount to be collected next year. Also add to Table No. 3, "Money Expended by Epworth Leagues," but do not include this amount in the total on that slip.

Fifth. On the second table, under "Total from all Sources," include from first table money expended for churches and parsonages, and insurance premiums paid; all payments on second table, and Epworth Leagues and total raised in Sunday-schools on third table. This is a grand "Total from All Sources."

Let us each vie with the other to see who can best fill out the blanks.

Respectfully, your servant,
WM. G. EVANS,
Statistical Sec'y pro tem.

P. S.—I have ordered a few blanks for the above reports for those who have not been able to get them. E.

MANSFIELD, LA.

MR. EDITOR: Thinking, perhaps, a few dots from this section of our Conference domain would be of interest to some of your readers, I submit a few remarks touching our educational and church interest.

Since my last communication many more young ladies have enrolled their names as pupils, and many more are expected. We are now forced to the necessity of enlarging our boarding department, and carpenters are already at work to this end. A greater degree of prosperity has not been enjoyed by Mansfield Female College since its foundation than now. President and Sister T. S. Sligh, with their efficient faculty of Christian young ladies, are, in an eminent degree, meeting the demands of our people, and they are justly proud of their achievements.

In this connection it affords me pleasure to make favorable mention of our beloved pastor and president of the Board of Managers, Rev. J. L. P. Sheppard, whose untiring efforts in the interest of our college have drawn him close to the hearts of our people. Our church here is being put in substantial repair under his skillful supervision—a long-felt want for which we are all grateful. His busy hands and anxious heart are constantly seeking something to do for the betterment of his charge. Should we unfortunately lose his valuable services the incoming Conference year, he will leave behind him the fruits of his labor, which shall abide among us as fitting monuments of Christian zeal to greet his successor. Bro. Sheppard has all of his collections well in hand, and with proud satisfaction he will be able to give an account of his stewardship at the approaching Annual Conference. A. D. JACKSON.

DON'T NEGLECT YOUR KIDNEYS.

They are the Most Important Organs of the Body.

Is that great human engine, which decides the health of every man and woman, working properly?

Thousands of Women Have Kidney Trouble and Never Suspect It.

Are symptoms like the following staring you in the face every day:

Weak, sluggish circulation.

Puffy or dark circles under the eyes.

Sallow, yellow, unhealthy complexion.

Urine, cloudy, milk-like or stringy; dark in color or offensive.

Painful, scalding sensation in passing it.

Dull, heavy headaches, dizzy, tired feeling, faint spells, irregular heart.

Obliged to go often during the day, and to get up many times at night.

Pain or dull ache in the back.

Feeling of oppression and apprehension.

Restless, irritable and hard to please.

All fagged out, run down, sleepless nights and discouraged.

If you have any of these symptoms take the advice of one who has made a life-study of just such diseases and look well to yourself, because you have kidney trouble.

If your urine when allowed to remain undisturbed in a glass or bottle for twenty-four hours, forms a sediment or settling or has a cloudy appearance, it is evidence that your kidneys need immediate attention.

Bright's disease, which is destroying more human lives than any other disease, may be stealing upon you.

The symptoms you have noticed are the danger signals nature sets to show that the track of health is not clear.

Take Swamp-Root, the famous new discovery, whose fame is being heralded by grateful men and women, saved from untimely graves by its immediate and marvelous power over diseases of the kidneys and bladder.

Especially in cases of Bright's disease is Swamp-Root winning new friends every hour.

Swamp-Root succeeds because it cures.

Every man and woman, no matter how healthy and vigorous, would profit by taking Swamp-Root every now and then as a preventative, and thus absolutely forestall kidney and bladder troubles.

Swamp-Root is the triumphant discovery of the eminent kidney specialist, Dr. Kilmer, and is used in the leading hospitals; recommended by skillful physicians in their private practice; and is taken by doctors themselves who have kidney ailments, because they recognize in it the greatest and most successful remedy that medical science has ever been able to compound.

If you have the slightest symptom of kidney or bladder trouble, or if there is a trace of it in your family history, send at once to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., who will gladly send you free by mail immediately, without cost to you, a sample bottle of Swamp-Root and a book of wonderful Swamp-Root testimonials. Be sure to say that you read this generous offer in the NEW ORLEANS "CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE."

Swamp-Root is for sale the world over at druggists in bottles of two sizes and two prices—fifty cents and one dollar. Remember the name, Swamp-Root, and the address, Binghamton, N. Y.

OPPORTUNITY.

ADDRESSED TO THE BOYS OF AMERICA.

A judgeship is vacant, the ermine awaits
The shoulders of youth, brave, honest and true;
Some one will be standing by fame's open gates—
I wonder, my boys—Will it be one of you?

The president's chair of a great railroad maze
Is empty to-day, for death claimed his due;
The directors are choosing a man for his place—
I wonder, my boys—Will it be one of you?

A pulpit is waiting for some one to fill;
Of eloquent men there are only a few;
The man who can fill it must have power to thrill;
The best will be chosen—Will it be one of you?

The great men about us will pass to their rest,
Their places be filled by the boys who pursue
The search for the highest, the noblest, the best,
I wonder who'll fill them? I hope 'twill be you.

DETECTING WOMEN WHO SMUGGLE.

A fair-haired woman of middle age, whose keen gray eyes have a way of looking you all over at a single glance; a bright, vivacious creature whom no one would suspect of being engaged in the detection of wrong-doing for a livelihood—such is the silhouette of Miss E. Carroll Ellis, the most famous of the seven ladies whom "Uncle Sam" employs to foil the smugglers at the port of New York. A good-sized book might be written of the experiences of Miss Ellis, who, by her especial gifts and training, has become one of the most valued servants of the treasury department. Import duties on European goods constitute by far the largest item in the revenues of the government at this port, which for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1899, reached the grand total of one hundred and thirty million, three hundred and fifty-nine thousand, six hundred and fifty-four dollars and twenty-four cents. The enormous volume of the transatlantic traffic may be inferred from the fact that twenty-four lines of steamers are engaged in it. Over two hundred inspectors are on duty at the piers, empowered to take such steps as may be necessary to protect the national exchequer. Each line of steamers has a set of male customs officers to examine baggage; but, as there are only seven inspectresses, each lady must attend to several lines.

In her cozy bachelor apartments I asked Miss Ellis to tell the readers of Success how she performs the tactful detective work required of her.

"What are the requirements?" I began.

"The very first essential is the possession of an artistic eye."

"We inspectresses attend only to the women who try to evade the payment of duty. We must, therefore, be expert judges of feminine beauty, of the rightful proportions of the female form."

"In other words, you detect in a woman's appearance some unusual outline which causes you to examine her?"

"Exactly. The peculiar style of the modern woman's dress gives excellent opportunity for the padding out of the waist or skirt with smuggled goods. Dutiable goods of large bulk are seldom smuggled, the risk of seizure being too great and the gain too small. But laces, diamonds, rare and precious jewels, opium, gloves, buttons, and other dainty articles are being constantly brought in by women passengers who are perfectly willing to cheat the government if they can. A hundred yards of expensive lace, for instance, could be easily wrapped around a woman's arm and never detected if we were not quick and accurate in the use of our eyes."

"Do you find many such cases?"

"Thousands. Nearly every woman who is able to visit Europe and purchase finery there has the smuggling instinct. I do not say that nearly every woman attempts it, for that would be too sweeping a statement. But the desire is there. Women who are honorable in every other transaction seem to regard this not as a criminal act, but rather as a clever dodge, the successful performance of which gives them a sort of prestige as experienced travelers."

"Who are the worst offenders?"

"The newly rich. Next in order are the society women who live pretentiously on rather meager incomes. The really rich woman of good family is the least frequently detected—but nearly everyone seems to be possessed with the mania at least once in a life-time."

The very first woman whom Miss Ellis searched proved to be a millionaire's wife on her way from Europe to Newport to dazzle her friends with her new finery. The inspectress was scarcely more than a child then, and was trembling violently herself. The search was most thorough. When it was over, both women were sobbing hysterically, but the government was richer by the tariff on ten thousand dollars' worth of priceless lace fabric which had been cleverly stitched into a bodice.

"Did you not make an arrest for so flagrant a violation of law?" I asked.

"No. I permitted her to pay the duty. I always do that when I can. The government is the gainer."

"Do not detected persons attempt to bribe?"

"Very often. That is a serious feature of inspection. It is not nearly so common here, though, as abroad. My earliest experience was a twenty-dollar gold piece thrust into my hand by a woman passenger whom I suspected. It made me feel so humiliated that I flared up and told her what I thought of her—that I came of a family probably superior to hers, socially, and that instead of letting up in my inspection I would compel her to disrobe. Just as I expected, she had about a hundred unset gems sewed in her undergarments. I heard about the incident a few months later, at the house of a banker where I visited and where she also was on terms of intimacy. Fortunately she told the truth, and I was strengthened in my official position when the facts became known."

Many dressmakers offend in bringing in rich gowns which they declare are to be worn exclusively by themselves, but which they afterwards sell. Buyers for merchants are frequently detected in this evasion. A recent instance was that of a woman who came from France after purchasing a lot of Valenciennes, Brussels, and point lace, and who had it stitched on several well-worn black dresses. Another had five thousand dollars' worth of Duchesse lace on her cheese-cloth petticoat. The old "bustle" was a frequent receptacle for such goods.

"Have your efforts resulted in diminishing smuggling?" I asked, meaning the united efforts of the women.

"I really think so. We are feared more than the men. The day before a steamer arrives, so we are told, the cabin ladies will get together aboard ship and talk about those dreadful inspectresses. If we were not on duty, there would be much more smuggling, and I know positively that we save thousands of dollars to the government every month."—Success.

DUTY OF BEING CHEERFUL.

We speak much of the duty of making others happy. No day should pass, we say, on which we do not put a little cheer into some heart, make the path a little smoother for some one's tired feet, or help one fainting robin into its nest again. But we are not so accustomed to think of the duty of being happy ourselves. Yet the one duty is taught in the Bible as clearly as the other. Jesus said his disciples should have tribulation in the world, but he said in the same sentence, "Be of good cheer."

That is the problem which is set before us as Christians. We are to live cheerful. The fact is, however, that not all Christians are cheerful Christians at all times. Some are scarcely ever cheerful—are habitually uncheerful. Others are cheerful only at times, when the sun shines and all things go well with them.

How can we learn to be of good cheer, even in times of trouble? It does not come naturally. Nor does it come even to a Christian without being learned. All the fine things of Christian nurture and Christian culture have to be gotten through discipline. We have to learn to "be of good cheer."

Some practical suggestions may aid those who are sincerely desirous of learning this lesson. One is, that we should train ourselves to see the good things, the bright things in life. There are few habits more common, even among Christians, than this of seeing and remembering unpleasant things, and being blind to and forgetting the pleasant things, and there is no habit which is more inimical to cheerfulness.

The truth is, there are in the ordinary life a thousand pleasant things to one which is unpleasant. It is a shame, therefore, to let the one roughness or pain spoil for us all the gladness of a thousand good things, the one discordant note mar for us all the music of the grand symphony.—Forward.

One of the settled ambitions of every young man and woman should be to possess a library. To this end money should be set aside for the purchase of a good book. This book should be carefully read till it is mastered, and then put on a shelf. Then another should be bought and similarly treated, and so on till the growing proportions of the shelf of volumes entitle it to be called a library. This is the only reasonable and beneficial way to get books. More rapid buying is like too rapid eating—it leads to overloading and indigestion.—Pittsburg Advocate.

Oliver Wendell Holmes once said, during the mighty struggle between the States, that the constant cry of the masses was for bread and newspapers. Now, since more than a third of a century has changed the political and financial issues, the great cry in the Southern States is for a pleasant and reliable Chill Tonic. Dicks' Chillifuge complies with this demand. It is as pleasant as orange syrup, and as prompt to cure malaria as the bitter Sulphate of Quinine. If you have a case of Chills or Fever which you can not break, try Chillifuge, and enjoy life once more.

As the world grows older it grows wiser and more practical. The days of eloquence and flowery speech have been displaced by sound reasoning, and robust, if homely, argument. We, as advertisers, appreciate this, and, therefore, present the merits of Dicks' Chillifuge, briefly and forcibly:

It Will Cure Chills.
It Is Pleasant to Take.
It Makes Rich Blood.
It Makes Life Worth Living.

WOODWARD—Mrs. ALICE TURNER WOODWARD, daughter of Rev. and Mrs. M. G. Turner, was born in Jasper county, Miss., Sept. 12, 1873, married to Mr. J. L. Woodward, Jan. 18, 1899, and died in Hillsville, Miss., Aug. 8, 1899.

Reared in a Christian home, Alice, from early childhood, was a Bible reader and a lover of good literature. She made it a rule to begin in January of each year and read her Bible through before the close. A record in her scrap-book of the various books she had read does not reveal the name of a trashy one in the entire list. Her school-girl days were spent in Paulding, Miss., Cube, Ala., Institute, and Brookhaven, Miss., where her studious habits and amiable disposition won for her many friends among her teachers and associates. In every relation of life, as daughter, sister, wife, or friend, she was ever faithful. Sincere, she had no hiding-place even for her faults, if she possessed any. Self-forgetful, nothing appeared to give her more pleasure than to busy herself for others in her home and elsewhere. Affectionate and sympathetic, of her it can be truly said, "To know her was but to love her." Perhaps the most manifest trait of her character was her cheerfulness. This shone in her face, sparkled in her eyes, rang in her voice. She scattered sunshine everywhere she went.

The exact date of her conversion is not known to this writer, but of this experience she frequently spoke to her friends, and it was manifest in her life. She joined the Methodist Church in 1891 during a meeting conducted by her pastor, Rev. R. D. Downer, assisted by Rev. J. T. Nicholson, and ever afterward attended regularly, teaching in the Sunday-school, presiding at the organ, and cheerfully assisting in every department of church work.

The last visit she made was to the church she loved so well, to hear Bro. Knickerbocker preach. Shortly afterward she was taken ill of typhoid fever, which proved to be of such a malignant type as to baffle medical skill, trained nurses, and the tender ministrations of loving hands. After a lingering illness of eight weeks' duration the expression of suffering gave place to one of serenity, for such a sweet smile came over her face as to cause in those present to remark on the change, and they said, "Alice is dead;" but, robed in her bridal dress, she appeared to be only sleeping and dreaming pleasant dreams.

The funeral services were conducted by Bro. Downer at the same altar where scarcely seven months before she stood in all her youthful beauty and womanly loveliness as a bride, the groomsmen, excepting, of course, her brother, Will Al, acting as pall-bearers, and the flower-girls bearing the floral tributes. A large concourse of sorrowing friends followed her to the Hillsville Cemetery, where they tenderly laid her body away to sleep until He who is the "Resurrection and the Life" shall reunite her body with her soul, and both shall "fly up to heaven."

Alice has left us; our hearts are sad; but do not let us say her life was incomplete, for in the light which streams from the sacred page we can see that the Lord measures not human life as man measures life, and if "they live longest who live best," what a long life was hers!

May the consolation of the Lord Jesus to the grief-stricken father and mother, sorrowing sisters and brothers and disconsolate husband, be greater than their anguish, and may this darkness but bring to them the clearer presence of the divine bosom! FRANK M. KEEN.

SEXTON—MARY A. COOR was born Jan. 19, 1853, married O. P. Sexton at Coor Springs, Miss., Jan. 16, 1873, died Oct. 8, 1899 near Crystal Springs, Miss. She was the mother of eight children, all of whom are living. Six of her children are members of the Method st Church.

Sister Sexton joined the Methodist Church when quite young, and has been a consistent, zealous Christian since. She had suffered from consumption for six years. I visited her often. She was always cheerful and resigned to God's will. I never saw a more patient sufferer. She loved her church, and was intensely interested in the salvation of her loved ones and others. She loved to support the institutions of the church. All her contributions were given so cheerfully. Her life was a living demonstration of the power of the Christian religion to enable one to rejoice amidst afflictions and tribulation. The influence of such a life upon the home and community will abide. She had long prayed that she would never be confined long to her bed, nor live in a helpless condition. This prayer was signally answered, for though she had been afflicted for six years, she was in bed only three days, and could wait on herself until the very last. She had looked death calmly in the face during these years, and had put herself in readiness for the end. She passed away as she had lived—in the triumph of the Christian's faith. Just before she died she requested her friend, Mrs. Keithly, to read the 103rd Psalm and the fourteenth chapter of St. John. Then, as the family gathered around her, she said, "Farewell to all," and passed quietly and sweetly into eternal rest, and into those mansions that Jesus has gone to prepare for her and all who love and serve him. She was buried at the Cainmack burying-ground, surrounded by a large concourse of friends and relatives.

W. M. WILLIAMS, P. C.

MAULDIN—JAMES RANSOM MAULDIN died March 6, 1899. His parents moved from South Carolina to Philadelphia, Miss., early in life, and there they lived until after the war. He was born Aug. 8, 1852, and was about thirteen years old when his parents moved to Water Valley, Miss. Here he grew to manhood, and on Nov. 13, 1872, he was married to Miss Minnie Price, with whom he lived happily until her death. Five children blessed their married life, four of whom are still living. January 15, 1896, he was married to Miss Katie H. Gibbs, of Grenada, a most estimable Christian woman. One sweet little son has come to bless this home, and he bears the name of his now sainted father.

During the weeks of his sickness he seemed conscious that he was nearing the end, and told his wife that all was well. He was a noble man, gentle in nature, kind in disposition, and hopeful in spirit. He filled the office of alderman in the city of Water Valley for a number of years, and was known as one of the city's best and most popular citizens. For a number of years he was the agent for the I. C. railroad, and no man stood higher in railroad circles. He was a devoted member of Wood Street Church, and served as steward for a number of years. His home life was beautiful. His sweet daughters and noble son partook of his nobility of soul, and in his home there was happiness and sunshine. As a man, he was high-minded and noble; as a public official, accommodating and clever; as a husband, genial and loving; as a father, kind and affectionate; as a Christian, loyal and devoted to his Lord.

To his bereaved wife I offer the consolations of our holy religion. To his orphaned children I hold up the example of their father as he walked in the steps of Jesus.

T. W. LEWIE.

THEAD—Sister MINNIE E. THEAD, daughter of Bro. W. H. McRee, was born Jan. 22, 1879, and departed this life Oct. 9, 1899; married to Mr. J. A. Thead, Jan. 6, 1897.

Sister Minnie joined the M. E. Church, South, under the ministry of our sainted brother, N. M. Clark, in September, 1889. About three years ago she professed sanctification, and I verily believe she endeavored to live what she professed. She was the only one out of several on my work who professed sanctification that seemed to me to have the fruits of sanctification. She never was self-righteous, or a bigot, or an extremist, but an humble, loyal member of the church at Manassa; was always good and kind to her parents, pastor, and friends. She believed in doing her part in all things. She did not find fault of others, but was charitable, thoughtful, and prayerful. As a wife, she was a model. She leaves a young husband and a small girl a little over a year old to mourn her loss; also father, mother, brothers and sisters, and other connection, as well as many dear friends who shall miss her. May the Lord sanctify this unexpected bereavement to the good of all of us! J. C. ELLIE, P. C.

BARLOW—SILLA C. BARLOW, daughter of G. R. and Mrs. F. A. Barlow, died at Harrisville, Simpson county, Miss., on Oct. 3, 1899, at the age of five years and ten months.

She was sick only a few days; life terminated when least expected. Her kind and attractive disposition drew the whole family and their hopes around her; but how frail and uncertain is life! The withering of the grass, the fading of the flower, the fleeing of the shadow. Some die in manhood, some in middle life, some in the youthful period. What a large number die in infancy! The legend of the American Indian declares that, as the flowers fade in forests and prairie, their lost beauty is gathered into rainbows, and they glow again in richer colors than before. Does not the Lord and Master take the young plants and transplant them in his other kingdom? Their lost beauty gathered in the rainbow, they bud and bloom and glow in richer colors, never, never again to fade or die. May the lonely parents by faith look not at the things which are seen, but at things which are not seen, and hear the voice saying, "What thou knowest not now thou shalt know hereafter!"

Two Verdicts.

"After a fair and impartial trial you are judged guilty by this court, and you are sentenced to be hung by the neck until you are dead." The solemn tones of the judge, the despairing face of the prisoner, and the painful stillness of the court room, makes it a scene of awful impress. Now turn to a brighter scene at the home circle. A mother radiant with joy over the recovery of a child snatched from the clutches of Malaria. An entire family rejoicing, and praising the merits of Dicks' Chillifuge, and giving their verdict that Chillifuge is without an equal for swiftness to cure.

The "Combination" Bible.

A SUPERB EDITION

of the Holy Scriptures, showing at a glance at the foot of the pages all changes made by the revisers.

New Type. All Proper Names Self-Pronouncing. The Most Valuable Collateral Matter.

There is a steady and increasing demand for first-class Bibles. Everybody is anxious to obtain a copy of the best edition of the Holy Scriptures. Old editions are constantly being replaced by Bibles that are in every way more attractive, and there is practically no limit to the demand.

OUR "COMBINATION" FEATURE.

Hitherto the King James and Revised Versions have been printed in parallel columns, but this makes comparisons of texts tedious and unsatisfactory, and makes the book very unwieldy. We have overcome this difficulty by "combining" the two Versions on the same page, showing at a glance in foot-notes all the Changes Additions and Omissions made by the Revisers.

THE OLD VERSION PRINTED IN FULL.

The King James Version is the basis, and this Version is read straight along from the text, while the Revised Version is read from the text in combination with the foot-notes. Our "Combination" Feature has met with universal approval and is strongly endorsed by all leading Divines and Biblical Scholars.

It is only by a comparison of the two Versions that the greatest benefit can be obtained from reading the Holy Scriptures, and this comparison every reader can easily make by our simple arrangement for showing the changes made by the revisers. This is the greatest triumph of Bible Publishing the World has ever known.

OUR OFFER.

To those unprogressive people who do not read and pay for the NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE we sell this Bible at the publisher's retail price—$4.25. To our subscribers we sell it at the very low rate of $2. The only condition attached to this offer is that the subscriber must pay his subscription one full year in advance, viz.: to December, 1900. We will send it postpaid to any person who will send us three new cash subscribers at the regular rate. For six new cash subscribers at the regular rate we will send two "Combination" Bibles, postpaid.

For fifty cents additional we will send a Bible with index.

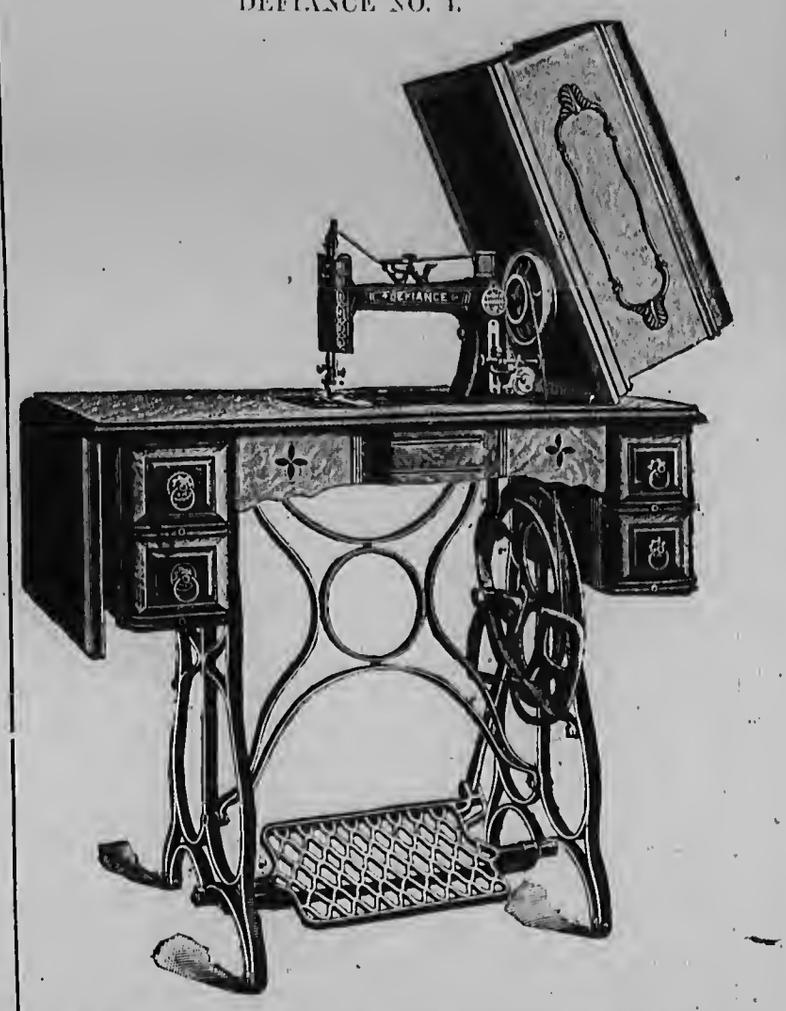
For twenty-five cents additional we will have your name engraved in gilt letters on the outside.

Send for circular. Address REV. W. C. BLACK.

P. S.—We can give no commission on renewals in connection with the above offer.

New Machine Offer.

DEFIANCE NO. 4.



The Defiance Machine is the perfection of simplicity, durability, speed, strength and ease of operation.

Construction. It is constructed of the best material in use, every bearing, without an exception, being of steel or case-hardened.

The Mechanical Devices of this machine are a combination of tried mechanical principles. In detail it differs materially from other machines. Its simplicity is at once apparent, and its great durability is admitted by the best mechanical experts.

The Arm is large and roomy, 8x5¼ inches in the clear.

No Vibration. This machine does not vibrate. Its motion is easy and quiet.

Lock Stitch. It is a lock-stitch shuttle machine.

Speedy, Light, Quiet. It is as speedy, light and quiet-running as any shuttle machine manufactured.

Double Feed—Positive Four-Motion. The double feed possesses advantages over all others. Its very shape and form obviates all the disadvantages arising from double feeds as they have heretofore been constructed, and combines in this machine all the advantages of both the single and double feed, doing away with the objections in either of them.

The operation of the feed mechanism is positive, giving an accurate four-motion movement to the feed without the use of springs.

The Needle Bar. This machine has a self-lubricating needle-bar, which is always kept clean, well-oiled, and the oil can not drop on the work and soil it.

The Needle is absolutely self-setting. No screwdriver is required in setting, a winged thumb nut being used instead.

The machine is self-threading. Put in the bobbin, draw the thread towards you, through the slot and, it is done.

The Loose Pulley for winding the bobbins without running the machine is so constructed as to admit of an instantaneous stoppage and starting of the machine without stopping the treadle movement—a valuable improvement peculiar to this machine.

Automatic Bobbin Winder. The bobbin winder operates automatically, winding the thread on the bobbin regularly and as evenly as the thread on a spool. Can be operated without running the machine.

Extra Attachments, in velvet-lined case, sent free with each machine; 1 Tucker, 1 Ruffler with shirring plate, 1 Hemmer set (4 widths) and Binder, 1 Braider (Foot and Slide), 1 Thread Cutter.

Additional Accessories. Each machine is supplied with the following outfit: 1 Hemmer and Feller (one piece), 10 Needles, 6 Bobbins, 1 Wrench, 1 Screwdriver, Oil Can filled with oil, Cloth Guage and Thumb-screw, and a Book of Instructions. The Book of Instructions is profusely illustrated and answers the purpose of a competent teacher.

DEFIANCE NO. 7½.

This cut shows our new and popular style, the No. 7½ Defiance Drop Cabinet perfectly protecting the machine from dust, and making a convenient and ornamental stand. When machine is ready for use the head is in same position as on ordinary style; when through using, it requires only the turning over of the leaf of table, and the sewing machine head drops into the case or cabinet between the drawers, completely out of sight, forming a handsome table with highly polished top.

No. 3 Machine, drop leaf table, bent cover, case of one drawer at each end and center drawer. Dealer's price, $32. Our price, $18.

No. 4 Machine, drop leaf table, bent cover, case of two drawers at each end and center drawer. Dealer's price, $34. Our price, $19.

No. 5 Machine, drop leaf table, bent cover, case of three drawers at each end and center drawer, making seven drawers in all. Dealer's price, $36. Our price, $20.

No. 7½ Machine, Drop head cabinet, case of two drawers at each end and center drawer. Dealer's price, $38. Our price, $23.

All the woodwork is of the best quality, either Light Antique or Golden Oak Finish. For Walnut Woodwork add $2 to above list prices.

The chief difference between Numbers 3, 4, and 5 is in the furniture—i. e., the number of drawers. If you do not want to pay for the extra drawers, you need not do so. We sell these machines under a ten years' guarantee, by which we mean that if any part gives out by reason of any defect therein, the manufacturer will replace the same free of charge. Moreover, we allow the purchaser to test the machine ten days. If at the end of ten days you are not satisfied, you have only to drop us a postal card, and your money will be refunded.

OUR OFFER.

We will send any one of the above-described machines at the prices named, and also send the ADVOCATE free for six months. The only condition attached to this offer is that subscribers who are in arrears must first pay up all arrearages to date. It would be well to avail yourself of this offer at once, as we can not promise that it will last very long. Notice that you take no risk whatever. We do all the risking. Address REV. W. C. BLACK, 512 Camp St., New Orleans.

P. S.—The machine will be shipped direct from the factory in the North

25,000 Trial Packages FREE!

Rheumatism Cured by a Simple Remedy that you may Try without spending a cent—Cured many cases of 30 and 40 years standing.

JOHN A. SMITH.

If you have rheumatism, write to me, and I will send you free of cost a trial package of a harmless remedy, which cured me and thousands of others, among them cases of over 30 years' standing. It is a grand remedy, and in order that every suffering reader may learn about it, I will gladly send them a Trial Package free, even if more than 25,000 bundles should apply. Many a distressing case of rheumatism, among them some which defied Hospital, Drugs, Electricity and medical skill, were successfully cured. In Denham, Ind., it cured a lady, who then cured 15 of her neighbors. In Prosser, Neb., it cured Mrs. C. Morritz, who had been afflicted for 52 years. In Fountain City, Wis., it cured Hon. Jacob Sexauer after suffering for 33 years, notwithstanding having employed seven physicians. At 130 Oak St., Vincennes, Ind., this remedy rescued Miss Emma Callender from a case of rheumatism which her physicians considered fatal. Rev. C. Sund, of Harrisville, Wis., testifies that this remedy cured two members of his congregation, one who had suffered 18, the other 25 years. Thousands of similar instances could be mentioned where this horrible plague has been completely cured. Write at once for a free trial package and other information, for it is an honest remedy that you can test before you part with your money. Address John A. Smith, 731 Summerfield Church Bldg., Milwaukee, Wis.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

A large number of fraudulent Virginia bonds have been placed on the market.

The Boers are a unit in favor of fighting, and expect in six months to possess all of South Africa.

Gen. Otis reports that the Filipino government is utterly broken up and dispersed, or in captivity.

Count Muravieff has suggested a revision of the commercial treaty of 1832 between Russia and the United States.

The Crown Prince of Germany becomes of age next May, and will have as his separate establishment the old castle at Potsdam.

The Washington Post declares that the Crumpacker bill, cutting down the South's representation, can not be passed through Congress.

Bautista, President of the Filipino Congress, has surrendered to Gen. Otis and renounced all further connection with the Filipino cause.

The British position at Mafeking is becoming more trying. The Boer lines are daily closing in, and the health of the beleagnered troops is suffering.

There is a feeling in London that the whole truth of the fight at Belmont has not come out, and that Gen. Methuen's losses are much greater than reported.

The cruiser "Charleston" has slipped off the steep bank on which she rested into deep water and disappeared. No attempt will be made to find or raise her.

Consul Macrum has been instructed to impress on President Krueger the determination of this country to look after interests of British subjects in the Transvaal.

Mrs. Leland Stanford's gifts to educational institutions on the Pacific coast foot up to $19,000,000. She still has as much left, which, at her death, will go for similar purposes.

The Russian Minister of Agriculture has decreed that henceforth women are to be employed as secretaries, clerks, etc., in the various departments of his branch of the government.

The Georgia Senate has passed a bill to prevent the employment in factories of children under 12 years of age, unless their labor is needed to support a widowed mother or an invalid father.

Aguinaldo has, temporarily at least, successfully evaded his pursuers. The wily Filipino has disappeared. The man the Americans have been chasing is Gen. Pio del Pilar, who took Aguinaldo's name.

The Franklin syndicate in New York has been raided by the police. The syndicate dealt in gold bricks in the form of giving 10 per cent. per week interest on loans, paying investors out of their own capital.

A large Mormon temple will soon be built in Louisville, Ky. It will be used not only as a place of worship, but also as the central point from which missionaries will be sent to various points in Kentucky and contiguous States.

Speaker Henderson will receive a gavel from his admirers in Iowa when Congress opens, made from rosewood brought from Manila, and taken from the Spanish battle-ship "Reina Christina," Admiral Montojo's flagship.

According to recent reports from General Otis, the commander in the Philippines, the insurgent forces in the northern end of the island have become very much scattered by the active campaigning of the three separate columns which are operating in that part of Luzon. It is further reported that Aguinaldo himself is endeavoring to escape from the island.

The rumors that have emanated from London to the effect that an understanding existed between Great Britain, the United States and Japan as to the maintenance of an "open-door" policy in China, coupled with the rumor that Germany and Russia are willing to agree to the maintenance of the "open door," provided their present territorial concessions are not interfered with, and, finally the statement of M. Deicasse, the French Foreign Minister, that France was not adverse to the "open-door" policy, and contemplated no further expansion of territory—all point to the prospect that an agreement with respect to China on the part of all the great powers is by no means impossible.

There has been a decided dearth of reliable information from South Africa during the past few days, but such information as the British War Office has seen fit to make public has utterly failed to relieve the anxiety as to the fate of the British garrisons now closely beleaguered both in Natal and on the western frontiers of the Orange Free State and the Transvaal. According to the official advices, General Lord Methuen continues to advance, and has had another fight with the Boers at Gras-Pan Station, ten miles further north than Belmont, the scene of the victory of Thursday last. Lord Methuen is apparently making steady progress, and should he be able to defeat the Boers intrenched at Modder River Station, he will be able to score what will be the first British success of importance since the commencement of the war, namely: the relief of Kimberley.

They claim that patents can now be procured in less than half the time formerly required.

Illustrated Lecture.

One of those interesting and instructive Mission Lectures will be given at the Canal Street Presbyterian Church, Thursday evening, Dec. 7, at 7:30 o'clock, under the auspices of the Ladies' Foreign Missionary Society of that church. The subject will be "India;" and the lecture will be richly illustrated by Stereopticon Views given by Mr. Jno. S. Talmage. A cordial invitation is extended to the Christian public to attend. Admittance will be only by ticket; but the tickets may be had free of all charge, on application to the pastor, Rev. Dr. J. H. Nall, or Mr. Jno. S. Talmage. An offering for the cause will be made, as each one present may be able and disposed.

Dr. D. M. Bye
Combination Oil Cure Co.
THE ONLY PERMANENT CANCER CURE
LONG DISTANCE PHONE 1618
LABORATORY 216 N. CAPITAL AVE.
INDIANAPOLIS, IND.

PILGRIM HOME was built for God. A religious work will be carried on in it for the salvation of souls and the healing of diseases without remedies, depending alone on Jesus, who healed all who had faith in His name, as in the Apostles' time. Dr. D. M. Bye claims that after twenty years of success as a specialist for cancers and tumors, the Lord led him to the Oil Cure and for the last eight years the Doctor has been curing all manner of malignant diseases by anointing with oils. The remedy is not only mild and safe, but cures internal as well as external cancers and tumors and gives relief from unceasing pain. Many thousands of bad cases of cancers and tumors have been cured by using Dr. Bye's Oil Treatment and many healed by faith alone. The Doctor has received thousands of good letters from persons cured. Hundreds from ministers and Christian patients are printed in books and papers, which if one will read they will plainly see that surely God's blessing is with the Oil Cure. In the large book there are many half-toned photos showing conditions before and after treatment, which is sent FREE, giving particulars and price of Oil. Its just popularity is shown by the fact that at this time over three thousand patients are taking home treatment. Its great success has caused many counterfeiting imitators, therefore be careful. This country is full of frauds. Note this one thing: Of all the great number who have come to Indianapolis for treatment, not one has yet died on the Doctor's hands; no undertaker has yet received one cent. PRAISE THE LORD. The Doctor firmly believes it won't be long when more persons will be healed at Pilgrim Home by faith alone in Jesus than by oils, yet all have not so great faith and must use the Oil Treatment administered with God's blessing for a cure. Add. Dr. D. M. Bye, Lock Box 25, Indianapolis, Ind.

TWO TOILERS.

Two men toiled side by side from sun to sun,
And both were poor;
Both sat with children when the day was done,
About their door.

One saw the beautiful in crimson cloud
And shining moon;
The other, with his head in sadness bowed,
Made night of noon.

One loved each tree and flower and singing bird
On mount or plain;
Some music in the soul of one was stirred
By leaf or rain.

One saw the good in every fellow-man,
And hoped the best;
The other marveled at his Master's plan,
And doubt confessed.

One, having heaven above and heaven below,
Was satisfied;
The other, discontented, lived in woe,
And hopeless died.

"The polygamist must go," is the ...scription upon the banner of those ...ho are determined that Mr. Brigham ... Roberts shall not hold his seat in ...e House of Representatives. The ...se, to judge from the amount of ...iscussion it is receiving from them, ...s aroused more interest among the ...embers of the House than any sin... one of the matters upon which ...is Congress is expected to legislate. ...r. Roberts is inclined to be belligerent, and will, it is understood, em...oy the best legal talent to be ob...ained to help him fight for the seat ...e Mormon organization is so anx...us to have him fill. His opponents ...ill not lack for good counsel. ...mong the experts in parliamentary ...w and practice who have been re...ained to help drive him out of Con...ess are ex-Senator Edmunds, ex-...peaker Carlisle, and ex-Journal ...erk Smith, of the House. There ...ems to be very little doubt that the ...ht against Roberts will be success... The only doubt seems to be as ... the method that will be followed ... get rid of him. Some even advo...te that the two senators from Utah ...uld also be deprived of their seats, ... the general ground that Utah has, ... the violation of the compact under ...hich she was admitted to Statehood, ...forfeited the right to representation ... Congress. Representative Hep...rn, of Iowa, a man of wide experi...ce, has expressed the opinion that ...ch a course would not be subject to ...al objection. The case is being ...y carefully considered by the ...lest minds in Congress, because of ... danger that hasty action might ...sult in establishing a precedent ...hich might at some future time be ...ken advantage of to deprive mem...rs of seats for purely partisan pur...ses. Those who are opposing Rob...ts are not particular how he is got... rid of; all they ask is that he be ...t allowed to sit as a member of the ...ouse.

Hon. John W. Foster, ex-Secretary ... State, and who, as Dr. Easton said ... introducing him, has spent the ...t part of the latter half of his life ... foreign lands, delivered an address ... the influence of Christianity on ...e world in general and America in ...rticular, from the pulpit of the ...stern Presbyterian Church, which ...serves a wide circulation. After ...scribing his observation of the in...ences of the various religions on ...e people of the world, and the ...arked differences in social and ...ral conditions, Mr. Foster said: ...onditions such as these we term ...ilization. This has led me to in...ire, What is Christian civilization? ... has had a history of nineteen cen...ries, and hence is antedated by two ... the existing opposing systems. ...rist's system is a personal system, ...th as to its Author and its recipi...ts. It is an appeal to the individ...l man, who, to become a member ... the kingdom, must accept and ...ply with the conditions of the ...eat Teacher. It is the mighty ...wer which has revolutionized soci...y, which is elevating and educating the masses, which has brought woman out of degradation, which has abolished slavery, which, teaching that God hath made of one blood all nations of men, has created a brotherhood of humanity unknown to any other civilization; which has brought in its train enlightenment, education and science as never before seen. It has made the Christian nations the powerful nations of the earth. What but the influence of Christ's gospel has made the home in our land so different from that of Asia and Africa." Mr. Foster's closing words were significant, when it is remembered that he is a striking representative of the educated, cultured and refined Christians of our country. He said: "To my mind, the great need of the church to-day is more of the preaching of the gospel proclaimed by Christ at the Day of Pentecost, repentance and remission of sins—the old, old story. Our sermons are too often essays and orations. The old and the simple gospel satisfies the longing of the human soul more than anything else, and if it is presented in the spirit of Paul, who cried, 'Woe is unto me if I preach not the gospel,' it will be received by the people, and the showers of grace will again come upon the churches."

Secretary Root knows nothing of any expected rebellion in Cuba, and believes the publications to that effect to have been originated by some reckless makers of newspaper sensations. Senor Evaristo Montalvo, a prominent and wealthy Cuban, now in Washington, said of the situation on the island: "Cuba is suffering because thousands have no employment. We are in need of economic rather than political reforms, and the minute that the Cubans have a chance to earn a livelihood the island will enter on a career of peace and prosperity. At present there is no work for the population except at starvation wages, and the only problem is to assist the agricultural interests, so that funds may be raised to relieve the impoverished people. If the United States will aid us in this philanthropic work, our debt of gratitude, already heavy, will be a hundredfold increased." President McKinley is studying the Cuban problem very earnestly, and Gen. Leonard Wood, commander of the Santiago district, has just arrived in Washington, under orders, to assist him with his experience and judgment.

PERSECUTIONS IN CHINA.

The American Bible Society is in receipt of reports from its agents in China, which state that, as the result of the palace revolution last year, whereby the Empress Dowager assumed power and the Emperor was practically imprisoned, persecutions of missionaries and Bible colporteurs are occurring in various parts of China, especially in the far interior. These reports come from Peking, in North China; from Shanghai, in East Central China; from parts of the province of Shantung, but they relate to persecutions remote from the chief cities. In one instance the viceroy was forced to telegraph for troops.

The Chinese society known as "The Boxers" is said to be provoking agitations and antagonisms. Two colporteurs of the Bible Society visited Peh Shui Chiang, in the province of Kansuh, and were invited to circulate Bibles from a Chinese temple. As soon as they were inside of the temple, the gates were closed, and the colporteurs were set upon and terribly beaten with long, thick sticks of firewood. Four were severely beaten; two others were attacked, but not so severely injured as the other four. Some of the elders of the town took part in the beating. The men were tied, hands and feet, to the pillars of the temple and spat upon, the people shouting, "We have tied you up as they did your Jesus on the cross!" They then began to strike them on the face and shout: "This is what your gods can do for you! Call upon your Jesus to come and save you." By this time two of the men were insensible, and a merchant who had been living in the same inn with them remonstrated with the leaders about the treatment they were giving to men who had in no way offended them. The crowd seized the merchant and beat him also. The other two colporteurs who were in the inn, hearing that the others were being beaten, ran up to the temple accompanied by one of the coolies. The mob caught them, tied them to the posts, and beat them most cruelly. The men have the marks where the ropes cut into their wrists and ankles, and also great scars and lumps on their bodies. At last the inn-keeper got the men off by giving security for them that they would leave the place. The men were then handed over to him, and the next day the people surrounded the inn shouting out to kill them. On the second day the crowd pulled them and the inn-keeper out to a tea shop, and threatened to smash their heads with great pieces of wood if they did not pay ten taels of silver and fire off crackers as an apology for their having come to the place, at the same time giving a paper of guarantee that no steps would be taken by them to have the ring-leaders punished. At first the men refused, but, as some of the friendly people pressed them, the inn-keeper paid the money and paid for the firecrackers, and the next day he got them quietly out of the place. He procured three mules to carry the three men who were most badly injured. The two others walked. Since their departure the ring-leaders have made the inn-keeper pay one thousand cash.

It is understood that the agents of the Bible Society will endeavor to obtain redress from the Mandarins of Lo Yang Hsien, the city in the province of Yan Suh, which rules the town where this disturbance took place.

New York, Nov. 14, 1899.

KEEP THE SABBATH HOLY.

It is a lamentable fact that in many of the great cities of the government, that are a marvel of growth and progress, and that are unfolding the possibilities of high civilization, the Sabbath day is very loosely observed by a large proportion of their citizens. The materialists are putting their iron heels upon many of the cherished traditions, customs and laws of America. In our mad rush after gold, and dominated by an exacting materialism, we are gradually trampling ruthlessly upon every holy faith, habit, custom and law made sacred to us by the hallowed work, guardianship and lives of our pious fathers. We have, in the excessive liberality of our constitution and government, opened our gates and hearts to the oppressed of all lands, to share our privileges and enjoy our freedom. We want to respect these people in their legitimate rights, pursuits, and avocations; but we are not willing that the ideas that have been born in the throes of oppression and monarchy, and nurtured in the corruption consequent thereto, shall come here and, blended with the corruption resulting from civil strife, shall infract and destroy our holiest laws, and then dominate our thoughts and souls, without from us a strong moral and religious protest.

Notwithstanding our brilliant culture, resplendent civilization, and great progress through Christian influences and power, yet the present utilitarian tendency of the times is to drive the men of God to the rear, and to dominate the best efforts of the age with the unbending, destructive power of a godless materialism. We must hold the Sabbath inviolate—first, because, if there is no God, no heaven, no hell, no worship, no religion, we should still need the Sabbath and Sabbath laws. Blot it out, even from a materialistic standpoint, and humanity would suffer immeasurably. Break down all Sabbath laws, and slowly and surely all work and toil would go on seven days in the week in every department to satisfy the insatiate demands of those who trample upon human energies and souls in their greedy struggle for gold.

The laws that govern the Sabbath should be rigidly enforced. Every attempt to infract them should be legally punished, and the officers of the law should see to it that under no specious pretext shall their application be abated. The preservation of the morality and sanctity of our homes, and the good conduct of those about us, demands this. Good citizenship, good government, even from a materialistic standpoint, requires the rigid observance of the Sabbath. But we must hold it sacred because it is a divine command.

"Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy; six days shalt thou labor and do all thy work, but the seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord, thy God; in it thou shalt not do any work, thou, nor thy sons, nor thy daughters, thy man-servant, nor thy maid-servant, nor thy cattle, nor the stranger that is within thy gates; for in six days the Lord made heaven and earth, the sea and all that in them is, and rested the seventh day and hallowed it." (See twentieth chapter of Exodus.)

There is the divine law. Who dare gainsay it, infract it, or trample it under foot? There is no going around it; there is no evading it. If the Bible be true, and the word and law of God, as sure as he reigns will he hold man accountable, and severely punish the people who destroy it. Destroy the Sabbath, and you shake the pillars of our moral and religious strength as a nation; break down that religion, and you assassinate our glorious and splendid civilization.

The God-fearing and God-loving men and women of the land, who realize that all the beauty and worth of life, that all physical, intellectual and moral proficiency and power; that all national civilization and greatness gets its inspiration, coloring and strength from the Christian religion, must hold this sacred day inviolate, and keep it holy and hallowed as it came from God.

To-night, as I write, many a weary soul, tried by a week of toil, will thank God for this blessed day of rest, and the still more blessed privilege of feeding the hungry soul at our holy places of worship.

If we do not guard and hold inviolate this sacred day, we are not worthy the splendid inheritance bequeathed by our sires, and on which there evidently rests the benediction of God. J. J. HOOD.

Meridian, Miss., Oct. 28, 1899.

IS IT A FACT?

Bro. Jas. A. Parker, in the ADVOCATE, of Nov. 23, says, "It is a fact observed by many these late years that the young men coming into our Conference from college are not the men who are building the churches and parsonages, and bringing scores and hundreds into the church."

I do not intend to deny this statement, but simply to ask the question, "Is this the fact?"

Bro. Parker suggests "a close comparison." I must confess that that is a little tedious, and that my time does not permit it, and that if it did, I have not the data at hand to make "a close comparison" of man with man, and year with year, so as to justify or deny Bro. Parker's statement. But I have examined the Minutes of the Louisiana Conference, covering a period of ten years, with some degree of faithfulness. And here are a few of the things which I find.

Beginning with the Conference of 1889, I find that seventy men have been admitted on trial into the Louisiana Conference to present date. [I do not refer to transfers, or those coming to us with the territory from the Mississippi Conference.] So far as I am able to determine, ten of these were college graduates, and six others had been to college, but had not finished the course. Of the ten college graduates, six are in full connection, three on trial, and one a missionary in Mexico. Of the six in full connection, five are in the regular work, and one teaching. Of the three on trial, one is in the regular work, and two are students of theology at Vanderbilt University; so that there are but six of the ten college graduates in the regular work. Of the six who went to college for a while, not completing the course, four are in the regular work, one transferred, and one located. So far the ten years have contributed ten men "from college" to the regular work of the itinerant ministry in the Louisiana Conference. Of the sixteen men "from college," three failed in their examinations; of the fifty-four men who had not been to college, eleven, so far, have not failed in their examinations. The other forty-three, with the three "from college," somewhere along the road found the load a little too heavy, and they failed to come "to Conference knowing their lessons." Some of them may have failed under the touch of Bro. Parker's probing questions.

But is it a fact that these men "from college" do not build churches and bring men into the fold? First, as to the accessions on profession of faith, I find that the ten young men "from college" received last year 113 persons into the church, an average of eleven each, while the 104 other preachers received 1,015, an average of ten each.

Second, as to finance for all purposes, the average for the young men "from college" is $1,294.61, while the average for the 104 other preachers is $1,026.40. I do not know about the church-building, but there was some church repairing, and some payment of church debts, on the part of the men "from college." A glance at the field occupied by these men last year will show that they were on low-rate works, so far as salary goes. It ought to be noted, however, that for every dollar they received on salary, they collected $1.72 for other purposes, while the other members of the Conference, omitting the presiding elders, for every dollar received on salary collected $1 30 for other purposes. Or allow me to state it this way. The average amount per man collected for all other objects, other than salary, by the men "from college" was $818.90, and by the other members of the Conference $598.07. Is it a fact that "the young men coming into the Conference from college are not the men who are building churches and parsonages, and bringing scores and hundreds into the church?" We are not building the churches and parsonages, and paying the church debts, as fast as the case seems to require, it is true. We are not bringing the scores and hundreds into the church who ought to be there, is also true.

The young men who have come into our Conference from college during the last ten years have served, among others, such works as Carrollton, Craps Street, Gretna, Parker Chapel, Algiers, Moreau, Sabine, Sniphur Mine, Spring Creek, Montgomery, Gross Tete, Bastrop, New Iberia, and Crowley. There may have been some more pretentious places, but I do not call them to mind just now. I think that it is safe to say that a few of the best places—best for harvesting souls and collecting money—have escaped the scholarship of the men "from college." J. M. HENRY.

DISCOUNTING THE CHAPLAINCY IN THE ARMY.

This is done by discrimination in the matter of pay. The chaplains are paid $1,500 a year, while all staff officers of the same rank receive $2,000. If there ever was any good reason for this, there is none now. Formerly chaplains were assigned to posts, but are now assigned to regiments and sent to the field.

We need mature men in the chaplaincy. A man of age, experience and manliness sufficient to make a good chaplain is apt to have a family. On $1,500 he could live very well at the military post, but when he is sent to the front, most likely to the tropics, the family must be left behind. He, therefore, has two establishments to keep up, and the sum of $2,000 is not more than enough to cover expenses.

Here, as elsewhere, the laborer is worthy of his hire. The position of a chaplain is one of danger as well as toil. He must encounter all the dangers of climate just as other officers have to do. As his duty leads him to the hospital, he is especially liable to all contagious and infectious diseases. All we ask is that he shall receive justice at the hands of the government.

The average man in the army, as well as the average civilian, is apt to think the chaplain has a soft place. This is parallel to the belief that a pastor of an ordinary congregation has a fine time and but little to do. The truth is, there is no easy time for the man who has the care of souls. The two things are incompatible. The man who, either in the chaplaincy or the pastorate, can reconcile it to his conscience to seek ease or worldly pleasure, has no business in these positions. It would be well if there could always be such correspondence and mutual trust between the civil and ecclesiastical authorities as would result in the appointment of men eminently qualified for the work of the chaplaincy. Let us have suitable men for chaplains, and then let them be creditably sustained.

The object is to beat back the dark waves of sin and temptation which forever surge around our army and threaten the moral shipwreck of soldier boys who went out from Christian homes. If we fail in this, we might as well, as suggested by one who has seen the evil, place over the door of all our recruiting stations the same warning which Dante placed over the entrance to his Inferno, "All who enter here leave hope behind."

THE SUCCESS OF SEEMING FAILURE.

It is a well-known fact among preachers that the very sermon which seems to be an ignominious failure from a sermonic standpoint is often the sermon that does the most good. Seeming failures and actual failures may have their function of influence for good. It is told of the early career of Bishop Simpson that at one time he thought seriously of quitting the ministry on account of several wonderful sermons he heard the Rev. John Waterman preach. The embryo Bishop and the theologian despaired of his own powers because of the superior ability of an older preacher. A short time afterward, a visiting minister, of longer standing in the Conference, preached so indifferently that young Simpson took heart and resolved to continue in the work of the ministry.

Who knows but that the failure of this unnamed brother saved to Methodism and the church of God at large Matthew Simpson, a man "filled with the Holy Ghost and with power"?—Baltimore Advocate.

ASPIRATIONS.

BY JAMES MONTGOMERY.

Higher, higher will we climb
Up the mount of glory,
That our names may live through time
In our country's story:
Happy, when her welfare calls,
He who conquers, he who falls.

Deeper, deeper let us toil
In the mines of knowledge—
Nature's wealth and learning's spoil
Win from school and college;
Delve we there for richer gems
Than the stars of diadems.

Onward, onward will we press
Through the path of duty;
Virtue is true happiness,
Excellence true beauty;
Minds are of supernal birth,
Let us make a heaven of earth.

Close and closer then we knit
Hearts and hands together,
Where our fireside comforts sit
In the wildest weather:
O! They wander wide who roam
For the joys of life from home.

Nearer, dearer bands of love
Draw our souls in union,
To our Father's house above,
To the saints' communion;
Thither every hope ascend,
There may all our labors end.

USELESS REPETITIONS AND CANT PHRASES IN SERMONS AND PRAYERS.

Church goers and intelligent listeners say that great force is lost in a discourse from the pulpit, and power is lost in prayers, by a hobby word or phrase repeated every few sentences, not in keeping with the thought designed to be elucidated, or interlarding the prayer when it requires one-fourth of the time of the prayer to ling the phrase in. In the time of long ago it was said a Presbyterian preacher asked one of our old pioneer preachers why it was that they required their candidates for the ministry to go through college, and then pass a theological course, and you take your boys from the plow-handles and from the work-bench, and in a year or two they can beat our men preaching. The old pioneer replied, "It is because we tell one another."

In my boyhood days I admired a good old man for his kind, fatherly attentions to me. I thought his preaching was faultless, but one Sabbath, before a very intelligent congregation, in a discourse of, say, fifty minutes, he repeated the phrase, "Are we prepared to understand?" seventy-two times. This repetition occupied all of five or six minutes. Had he taken this time up in repeating his hobby before reading his text, then announced his text, and proceeded with his sermon without ever recurring to it again, the discourse would have been better received by some of that congregation.

A story which came to me in my younger days, as I now recall from memory, ran about as follows: A father was anxious to train his son, in going to church, to remember the text and the general drift of the sermon. After returning from church one Sabbath, sitting with his family, the sire asked, "Well, my son, what was the text to-day?" The youth, squirming a little, answered: "'An evil and adulterous generation seeketh after a sign, and there shall no sign be given it but the sign of the prophet Jonas, for as Jonas was three days and nights in the whale's belly, so shall the Son of man be three days and nights in the heart of the earth,' and he said, 'We are a weak generation,' seventeen times." The father said: "Stop that nonsense. I want you to tell me what the preacher said about Jonah." "Oh," replied the boy, "he said Jonah went down to Joppa, and got into a ship to go to Tarshish. Pa, I know just how many shingles are on the roof of that church." "I am not asking you about the roof of the church," said the parent. "What did the preacher say about Jonah?" "He said Jonah tried to run away from the Lord, as though any man could get away from God. Pa, there are just one hundred and fifty shingles from one end of that house to the other." "I am not talking about shingles," said the father. "I want you to tell me about the sermon." "Well," said the son, "when the boat got out to sea there came a great storm, and when the ship was about to sink they cast lots to see whose it was to blame, and the lot fell on Jonah, and they threw him into the sea, and the storm stopped, and there was a great calm. And, pa, there were just eighty courses of shingles from one side of the church to the other." "I am not wanting to see what you know about shingles," said the parent. "Tell me about the sermon, if you know." The son, taking up the other line of his thoughts, said: "The Lord had a great fish there that swallowed Jonah, and swam to land right towards Nineveh, and vomited him out on dry land, and Jonah went on and preached. And, pa, I multiplied the hundred and fifty shingles in the courses by the eighty courses, and it made just twelve thousand shingles on that house." The parent, rather irritated, said, "Now, boy, if you know anything about that sermon, I want you to tell me." The youth then went on to tell how the preacher spoke of the cruel death of Jesus, of his burial, of his rising out of the grave, showing himself to his apostles, and of his ascension into heaven. After some further conversation the mother, who had been sitting by, to commend her boy, said, "Son, you certainly do know something about the sermon, if you did count the shingles," and was answered by him, "Yes, ma, and Mrs. Posey spanked her baby five licks right in the church, for I counted them."

This story does not seem to be just in line with my subject, but it illustrates something which came up in my experience—that a sermon or prayer may be listened to with profit, while other thoughts may be kept along at the same time.

Soon after I began to speak to congregations I had an older brother who had heard me a time or two. I felt around him to know what he thought of my efforts. He said, "If you would not say, 'Almighty, All-wise, and Omnipotent God,' so often, you might do very well." After some thought I came to the conclusion that it was rarely ever in place to say it. After being reviewed from time to time by my older brethren on my hobbies, useless repetitions, and tautologies, I began to listen to others, to catch their sense, and at the same time note their errors, that I might the better detect my own faults and learn to correct them. The following will illustrate the tautology I detected in a college professor, thus: In all my acquaintance I have never met a man who defied the claims of the living God, and maintain a social influence after he defied the claims of the living God.

I remember being at a camp meeting once when a preacher was put up to conduct the early morning service. He began and continued in a strain like this: "This morning, O Lord, we come before thee this morning, that we might worship before thee this morning. We thank thee this morning that thou hast kept us safe through the past night to see the light of this beautiful morning. And now, O Lord, we ask thee this morning to prepare us for the work of this day," etc. Here I had lost the devotional feeling to say "Amen!" and am sure if the Lord heard that prayer, he knew it was day, whether the sun was up or not. At prayer meetings and elsewhere I have heard "Our Father," and "Our heavenly Father," and "O, our heavenly Father," until my devotion was marred. Not long since I counted the above repetition in its variations seventeen times in a prayer of about twenty-five sentences.

After some training in these criticisms I found I had trained myself, to my annoyance and chagrin, to be more of a critic than a prayerful listener. To overcome this I began to pray earnestly for the preacher, and to listen for good things, and to treasure up the best things heard. I have met some preachers who were confirmed critics. They never failed to criticise their brethren in the ministry. In this they barred themselves from any special good the preaching might do them. They embarrassed the brother in the pulpit, and rather prejudice those who hear the criticism against the preacher.

"THE TRANSFORMING POWER OF THOUGHT."

"Finally, brethren, whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honest, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report; if there be any virtue, and if there be any praise, think on these things." (Phil. iv. 8.)

Paul here, after graphically picturing upon the canvas of Holy Writ the characteristic virtues of the Christian man for the benefit of the Philippian mind, exhorts them to think, to think definitely, to think with an object in view; to "think of these things:" "Whatsoever things are true:" not abstract terms that are wanted, give your definition in the concrete, clothe it in human form. Pilate asks, "What is truth?" But Christ did not answer, He, the embodiment of all truth, stood before him. "I am the way, the truth and the life." (Jesus.) "Whatsoever things are honest"—honorable—venerable: "That which is to be venerated on account of age and service, satisfaction from long use." "Whatsoever things are just:" conformed to the truth. The unjust judge is commended because he sought for himself a sureease from care, and not for the justice rendered in his decisions. "Whatsoever things are pure:" clean, clear, unmixed and without alloy. A pure mind is one that contemplates that which is holy, chaste and clean. A pure gospel is one unmixed with heresy. Pure gold is that that has no dross and is without alloy; and a pure Christian is one who is not tainted with sin. "Whatsoever things are lovely:" the earth blossoms, the flowers bloom for the delectation, the delight of man. "Whatsoever things are of good report:" reputation seems here to be held up before men as an incentive to holy living—the good-will—yea, more, the praise of our fellow-man—is worth the seeking—yea, more, is worth the having. "If there be any virtue:" Christian courage, fortitude, zeal for the church of God, the cause of Christ. Bravery to speak and to act in defense of Christianity, loyalty to the church militant. "If there be any praise." Are you praised? says Paul, "I praise you not." Do you stand worthy of recognition by a godly community for your consistent and virtuous life—are you praised? "Be not conformed to this world; but be ye transformed by the renewing of your minds." (Paul.) "As a man thinketh in his heart so is he." The worth of Christian thinking; thought is transforming in its nature; it recreates. The power of thought, close, consecutive thought, has solved mysteries, demonstrated problems of science and philosophy, materialized inventions, and to-day controls the industries and lands of a universe. How and of what should we think? Properly directed, thought brings to us not only temporal blessings, but, as well, a large share in all the spiritual graces of the divine nature and life. Can we not exalt our manner of thinking just as we can our manner of living? or, rather, Can not we exalt our manner of living by our manner of thinking? How many are dependent upon others to do their thinking for them? See how largely the politician depends upon the newspaper for the forming of public sentiment and opinion.

The church to-day needs men capable of thinking; of thinking not only for themselves, but men who are also qualified to wrestle with the deep things of God: those who are interested in God's plan of salvation, in human redemption, in the fearful penalties of sin as visited upon the transgressors of the divine law, as well as the results of the fall to posterity. The power of thought? "See Newton standing under an apple tree, and, by the simple process by which an apple fell to the ground, discovering and handing down to mankind the laws of attraction and gravitation—laws which govern as well with the falling of a leaf as with the parabola of a comet: Benjamin Franklin flying a hemp-string kite discovers and hands down to us electricity—one of the most useful forces yet known to man. Again, see Watts as he watches the boiling tea-kettle, and from this incident grasps the idea of utilizing the power thus generated by steam. See Fulton and the first steam engines and steamboats as they ply the mighty waters of the Hudson, or traverse as locomotives the vast prairies or dense forests. Galileo counting the strokes of the massive chandelier, as he stands in the entrance-way of the grand Pisa Cathedral, and compares the strokes with the pulsations of his own heart-beat, discovers the isochronism of time, and thereby enables man to utilize the greatest time-saving mechanism made." (Farrar.)

It has well been said that "thought rules the world," for what other force is so potent for man's weal or woe? "All art and science and philosophy are evolved from the silent workshop of the brain." There in the quiet recesses of the cellular tissues of the cerebral membranes there is generated thoughts and ideas which are to dominate the commerce, to control the traffic, and to regulate the industries of two continents. There are solved the problems of human life and the destinies of the nations. All philanthropic enterprises, all charitable institutions, and all evangelical effort is first conceived, planned, and executed in the mind; whether only in imagination as air castles, to be lost in wild and weird speculations, or whether as the practical monuments of the nobility and saintliness, the sagacity and the ingenuity of some nobleman. "Edison in his study is a more potent factor in the scientific world than a thousand workmen with spade and loom and forge."

"So the influence of a Christian life, lived along gospel lines, thought out upon the divine plan, does more to elevate the lives of men than much shallow talk and loud profession." (Haynes.) Give the church thinking men and women, students who have been educated in the deep things of God, and whose largest aspirations are for the furtherance of his kingdom upon earth—men and women who are educated, trained to think for themselves—and you have then turned loose upon society and in the church of God a force for good, the results of whose lives eternity alone can reveal.

A DEARTH OF PREACHERS.

I have been reading articles under the above caption for some time past, and must say I think some of them are begging the question. I think the subject of an educated ministry is fully settled. The church has acted wisely in this matter. She has said her ministers must be educated, because it is a "sine qua non" to a progressive Protestant Church and an effective ministry. A call to preach means a call to prepare to preach. The question, then, is not, Must we educate?—but, How must we educate that we may be best prepared for the work? I think just here lies most of the trouble with the ministry at the present time and all time past.

Education does not simply consist in stuffing the mind with books or laws and sciences. A man may go through college and learn all these, and then be a fool, a crank, or a knave. As man is a tripartite being—endowed with soul, mind and body—he should be educated as such, if he is ever truly educated. His intellect, sensibility and will must all be educated after the divine plan, so that he can think right, feel right, and act right.

The law of the church is sufficiently flexible. All that is necessary is for the Examining Committees to exercise good judgment in their examinations. Some men come from college with less real education than others who have come from the public schools. The church will take into her ministry all who prove themselves educated after the divine plan, whether they come from the college halls, log school-house, or the chimney corner. The only real educational qualification the Christian church has ever demanded of her ministers is a mind trained to think right, a soul trained to feel right, and hands trained to work right. These should be required, and anyone who is not thus prepared is not fit for the high and holy calling.

IN MEMORIAM.

Mrs. Mary G. Bancroft (nee Ramsey) was born in Chatham county, N. C., Feb. 7, 1823, and departed this life in Forest, Miss., Oct. 11, 1899. When nine years of age she moved with her family to Alabama, in which State she lived till grown. She was educated at the Female Seminary in Tuscaloosa, and while there joined the Methodist Church under the ministry of Rev. C. Hardy. She was the daughter of Mr. A. K. and Nancy Ramsey, and sister of Rev. T. Y. Ramsey, of the North Mississippi Conference.

She was married to Rev. George Bancroft, of the Alabama Conference, Dec. 24, 1847. God blessed their union with eight bright and happy children, three of whom remain with their aged father to mourn her loss. In 1878 her husband was transferred to the Mississippi Conference, where he labored as a faithful itinerant till December, 1893, at which time he was superannuated. Within a year or so afterwards they came to Forest to live with their granddaughter, Mrs. Mary Gardner, whose faithful attention and loving devotion to them has been greatly admired by the people here.

Sister Bancroft was a faithful preacher's wife. She was a helpmeet indeed to her husband in all his labors as a pastor. She was ever willing to deny herself the pleasure of his company in order that he might visit his people and attend to the work required of him. Since her death Bro. Bancroft told me that she never threw so much as a straw in his way, but was always a great help to him. They journeyed together in this life nearly fifty-three years, and it will not be long before they will be reunited in heaven, never to separate again.

It was my privilege to be with Sister Bancroft often during her last illness, and it affords me pleasure to say to her friends that she bore her sickness with Christian fortitude. She was patient and resigned to the will of God, and when the time came for her to go she was ready, and died a triumphant death in the Lord Jesus. The last words she spoke were, "Glory! glory! glory!" Well may it be said of her, She fought a good fight and kept the faith. To-day she is wearing the crown of righteousness that was laid up for her at God's right hand. In the language of the poet we say:

"Servant of God, well done!
Rest from thy loved employ;
The battle fought, the victory won,
Enter thy Master's joy."

. . . . . .

"The pains of death are past,
Labor and sorrow cease;
And, life's long warfare closed at last,
Her soul is found in peace."

Annual Meeting of the Woman's Home Mission Society, Delhi District, Louisiana Conference.

MINUTES.

The first district meeting of the Woman's Home Mission Society of Delhi district opened at Collinston, Friday morning, Sept. 23, 1899; Mrs. M. E. Carr, district secretary, presiding. After the hymn, "All hail the power of Jesus' name," Rev. D. C. Barr conducted the devotional exercises. Next in order was the appointment of Miss H. D. McLaurin as recording secretary. Then followed the usual roll-call of auxiliaries by the president: Mer Rouge, Monroe, Oak Ridge, Bastrop and Collinston. It was moved and seconded that Collinston Auxiliary be made members of the convention, and that Bros. Barr and Randle be made members of this body, with privileges of the floor.

An address of welcome on behalf of the Collinston Auxiliary was given by Miss H. D. McLaurin. An appropriate response was made by Mrs. F. M. Williams, of Mer Rouge. Then followed appointment of committees: On Courtesies, Publication, and Resolutions.

Report from Mer Rouge was then heard, Mrs. Renwick stating the adult auxiliary of Mer Rouge was in a flourishing condition. Mrs. Williams reported the juvenile auxiliary as in a hopeful condition, they having had many discouragements to contend with. Total membership, 40; subscriptions to Our Homes, 16; amount of dues since March, $10.90.

From Oak Ridge Juvenile Auxiliary, Miss Mattie Hawsey reported: Enrolled, 26; average attendance, 20; average collections per monthly meeting, $1.25; amount sent forward since last session of Louisiana Annual Conference, $13.45; collected on Educational Loan Fund, $5, to make their pastor, Rev. D. C. Barr, a patron of that fund. Mrs. Randle here made a thrilling talk on Our Homes and homes for our preachers' families, and gave us the history of the first organization of Parsonage and Home Mission Auxiliary at Oak Ridge by her in May, 1887.

We were next entertained by the reading of two interesting articles by Misses Minta Reily and Mattie Hawsey; subjects, Miss L. B. Helm and Miss Belle Bennett.

Report from Monroe Juvenile Auxiliary, given by Miss Nina Sanders, showed fine work done by the juveniles. This auxiliary was organized by Mrs. Carr, our district secretary, only last April, and they now have 56 members. Dues collected, $15, besides local charity work done.

Mrs. Howell's report from Collinston Auxiliary showed that deep interest had been manifested by members of this auxiliary in our Home Mission work. For the two years they have been organized they have, aside from their connectional dues, in various ways raised money and furnished their church with pews, and made other improvements.

Then followed the address of our district secretary, delivered in soft, sweet accents, showing the magnitude of woman's work in our society, which impressed us with the opportunities of the present and possibilities of our future.

The remainder of the programme was varied by readings, recitations, and songs by the choir. Misses Etella Reily and Jennie Vaughan had appropriate recitations, which were appreciated. A paper on "The Twentieth Century Fund," prepared by Mrs. Wimberly, of Mer Rouge auxiliary, was, in her absence, read by Mrs. F. M. Williams, which was an intellectual feast.

Mrs. J. T. Howell entertained us by an interesting reading on Soule Bennett Memorial School. Mrs. M. A. Carr made a most interesting address to the juvenile department of the Collinston Auxiliary. Mrs. J. T. Howell was appointed lady manager of this department—a just tribute to her tact for interesting and managing children.

Rev. T. S. Randle was made a patron of the Twentieth Century Educational Loan Fund by the juveniles of Collinston, which was most heartily endorsed by the adult members of the auxiliary, this auxiliary being made up of both adult and juvenile members.

A paper, "The Best of the Child for the Best for God," was next read by Mrs. McLaurin. A splendid talk (by request) from the president followed on the mission work done, and to be done, in the mountainous district of Kentucky, which stirred the hearts of all.

Mrs. Randle secured a list of new subscribers for Our Homes. Throughout the convention her good talks were an inspiration.

After the reports of committees it was voted that the convention accept the invitation extended by Monroe's delegates to hold its next annual meeting at that place.

After a most earnest prayer by Rev. T. S. Randle for our work, and thanksgiving to our Father in heaven for the success of our W. H. M. work in Delhi district, the hymn, "God be with you till we meet again," was sung, and Bro. Randle dismissed us with the benediction.

The Christian Life.

DO YOU PRAY IN SECRET?

Prayerfulness will scarcely be kept up long unless you set apart times and seasons for prayer. There are no times laid down in Scripture except by the example of holy men, for the Lord trusts much to the love of his people and to the spontaneous motions of the inner life. He does not say, "Pray at seven o'clock in the morning every day," or, "Pray at night at eight, or nine, or ten, or eleven," but says, "Pray without ceasing." Yet every Christian will find it useful to have his regular time for retirement. And I doubt whether any eminent piety can be maintained without these seasons being very carefully and scrupulously observed. We read in the old traditions of James the Apostle that he prayed so much that his knees grew hard through his long kneeling; and it is recorded by Fox that Latimer, during the time of his imprisonment, was so much upon his knees that frequently the poor old man could not rise to his meals, and had to be lifted up by his servants. When he could no longer preach, and was immured within stone walls, his prayers went up to heaven for his country, and we are in these times receiving the blessing. Daniel prayed with the windows open daily and at regular intervals.—Spurgeon.

THE PURPOSE OF THE BIBLE.

The purpose of the Bible is to save the souls of men. Incidentally it promotes the safety and comfort of the body. Incidentally it also teaches many very useful things. But we must never lose sight of the fact that the root-thought of the Bible, from Genesis to Revelation, is how sinful men may find a refuge in Jesus Christ from the divine indignation toward sinners and sin. Every chapter in the Bible must be read in the light of this fact.—H. M. Simpson.

ARE 10,000 MEN MISTAKEN?

Unless about 10,000 men, mainly professional men—lawyers, doctors, editors, preachers and all other classes, including the writer, are very much mistaken, the Electropoise effects cures and gives relief where all other known remedies have failed. Especially is it efficacious in the cure of feeble women and children. "I have used one for the past two years, and find it invaluable as a curative agent."—Rev. Zaphaniah Meek, D D., Editor of Cen. Methodist, Catlettsburg, Ky.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS BY FAMOUS PEOPLE.

Miss Clara Barton, President Red Cross Armenian Relief Expedition, writes from Constantinople: "As you remember, I am not an entire stranger to the virtues of the Electropoise, and I will take great pleasure in passing your offering to afflicted humanity."

Rear-Admiral Luce, U. S. N., Retired, writes from his home in Newport, R I.: "It gives me pleasure to inform you that the Electropoise has been used in my family for the past eighteen months with most satisfactory results. The one just ordered is the second I have had of you."

Venerable Archdeacon Horatio Gates, of Kansas City, Mo., writes: "Last Winter my daughter was attacked by La Grippe, and through the ravings of this terrible disease reduced to a helpless cripple. In eight weeks after the first application of the Electropoise my little girl was entirely restored."

Dr. C. Colegrove, of Holland, N. Y., a graduate of the Medical Department of the University of Buffalo, writes: "In La Grippe I have never failed to get diseased action under control in a few days. I greatly prefer the Electropoise to any and all agencies for the cure of the sick of which I have any knowledge."

Alvah N. Kentner of the Kentner Fruit Co., Charlotte, N. Y., writes: "Since the day the Electropoise arrived I have not taken 10s worth of drugs of any kind, and my health has steadily improved. The stomach and liver troubles have entirely disappeared."

Your address on a penny postal will secure our 128 page illustrated booklet giving a full explanation of this great treatment, and 300 letters from people who have used the Electropoise and tell how it cured them after all other remedies had failed. You will find that the Electropoise is neither a battery or belt, lasts a life time, can be used on every member of the family, and for all the ills flesh is heir to. Isn't it worth your investigation?

AGENTS WANTED

To sell the Electropoise in every city, county, and State. We give exclusive territory, and want 1,000 live men and women representing us before the first of December. Write at once as we now have some of the best territory open to applicants.

AN AGENT WRITES:

THE ELECTROPOISE OFFICE,
Room 31, No. 16 State St., Rochester, New York.
April 11th, 1899.

Dear Sir:—

In reply to your favor of the 6th inst., would say that I have sold the Electropoise for four years. Have spent upwards of $500 for advertising. I have devoted a part of my time only to the business, and find, that after proper instructions, purchasers are always satisfied with the results. This is gratifying, and makes the business a pleasant one and tends to increase sales.

My profits are more than $1,600 00.

Very truly yours,
FRANK T. SKINNER, Agent.

Write at once for terms, stating territory desired, and we will mail you all the necessary information together with our 16-page periodical, The Electropoise Agent. Address The Electropoise Company, Room 100, No. 1123 Broadway, New York City.

FROM THE WORK.

BROOKSVILLE, MISS.

The old church at Brooksville, Miss., has just been torn down to give place to a new and more modern one. This old church has served its day and generation well. It dates back to the fifties, when the colored slaves belonged to the same church with his master. Its membership in the beginning was composed of those who constituted the church at Union Chapel.

The Brooksville house of worship was built in 1835. Hon. Thos. H. Dixon was the moving spirit in its erection. For several years a close leader in the Union Chapel Church, he was fitted to be the leader in this larger and more inviting field. The writer has before him the class book used by Bro. Dixon for several years before the erection of the Brooksville Church and for some years thereafter. In this book appear the names of the charter members of the Brooksville Church. To-day, as we stand between a glorious past and a more glorious future, and look back over the large list of those whose membership has been here, we find but one person living whose name appears upon the charter roll—Mrs. M. A. Dixon, widow of the man who was the prime factor in the erection of the old church. Sister Dixon tells with thrilling interest how they struggled to raise the money to build the house. In the Summer of 1855 the house was finished sufficiently to be used, and Dr. W. P. Harrison came and dedicated it. Rev. Geo. Shaffer was the presiding elder, and A. J. Coleman, preacher in charge. Rev. Wm. Vaughn was pastor here in 1856-7. In 1858 Rev. Robt. K. Hargrove, now Bishop, who had left a position in the University at Tuscaloosa to join the itinerancy, was preacher in charge. He and his young wife spent a pleasant year here, and at its close he was assigned to Columbus station, and instead of selling everything he did not care to move, he did the generous and handsome thing of giving his cow to his presiding elder, Bro. Koger, and his pet pig to his special friend, Sister Dixon. W. C. Hearn was here in '59. J. A. Peebles and Crymes served the work most of the time during the war. Dr. Henry Urquhart, now editor of the Alabama Advocate, served the work in 1870, but went back to Alabama when the Columbus district was taken out of the Alabama Conference and the North Mississippi organized. Since that time O P. Thomas, J. L. Futrell, J. T. Cunningham, J. W. Perry, J. F. Evans, H D Howell, E. H. Cacey, J. W. Luter, D. L. Cogdell, J. A. Leech and the writer have served the work respectively.

During the forty-four years of the church's existence thousands of dollars have been raised by the congregation for religious purposes, and there has been a steady increase in the yearly contributions. While the past two or three years have drawn heavily upon the church by death and removal, the church is still in a healthy and growing condition. Twenty-five have been added to the church this year. This congregation has raised more money for religious purposes during 1899 than in any other year of its existence. The new house that is going up will be a credit to the town, and an honor to the industry and fidelity of its liberal membership.

Many useful men and women have gone out from this church to bless the world with their consecrated lives. May God help the present membership to face the future with all of its problems, and, girding on the panoply of God, to go forward to the conquest of the world! In reference to the new house now going up I would say, "Long may she wave and never waver." E S LEWIS.

MERIDIAN, MISS.

The Conference year is drawing to a close; so I believe I will send in a report from "East End." Our congregations have held up very well from the beginning. There have been ninety-five (95) accessions during the year. Eighteen infants and twelve adults have been baptized. I think the Conference claims will all be met. And as our church has a reputation of meeting all assessments, I hope this will not be an off year. I have made nearly six hundred pastoral visits.

We held a ten days' meeting this fall. Bro. W. M. Sullivan, of Vossburg, did most of the preaching. Dr. Weems, of Central Church, and Bro. H. M. Ellis, of West End, were with us, preaching occasionally and doing other efficient work during the meeting. Souls were born into the kingdom. It is a great pleasure to have our ex-presiding elder, Bro. P. A. Johnston, and his excellent family in our congregation. Bro. Johnston's body is feeble, but his faith is strong. His sweet prayers are a benediction to us. Also we have with us Bro. D. G. W. Ellis, with whom we often have sweet counsel. He does a good deal of preaching at points not far from the city.

D. P. BRADFORD.

A PASTOR'S HEART.

Here is Bishop Wilberforce's advice to a clergyman who wished the Bishop to tell him why he had failed, and how he was to succeed: "Show the people that you have a pastor's heart, and I do not think they will be long in giving you the natural return—their support. I can not tell you how earnestly I long for such a change in your ministry, in its fundamental character. I see not the love of soul, I see not faith in your Master's presence in it. Your ministry looks to me like the stinted unwilling service of that fearful character—the mere professional priest. God knows if this is so. I speak of the aspect which outwardly your ministry wears. My advice, for which you ask, is pray! pray for more thorough conversion of the heart—pray for ministerial zeal—pray for love to Christ. Pray for the outpouring of the Spirit on your own soul, and on your ministry, and then live in your parish, live for your parish; work in it only as a man can work who has come to his work from intercession for his people."—Southern Churchman.

"I heard Mr. Moody say the other day that a lady had come to him asking how she might be delivered from the habit of exaggeration, to which she was very prone. 'Call it lying, madam,' was the uncompromising answer, 'and deal with it as you would with any other temptation of the devil.'"

Marriage is said to be an equal partnership. But the kind of a one-sided partnership it really is, cannot be better expressed than in that old saying, "A wife should double her husband's joys and halve his sorrows." That's what is expected of a wife, and the wonder of the world is that she comes so closely to expectation. For as a rule from the time of marriage onward, her body is daily drained of strength and her mind daily burdened by cares. She lies on the couch, her back aching, from female trouble, and gets up and puts on a smiling face to meet her husband.

Marriage can only be an equal partnership when the drains and strains of married life of the woman can be replaced by the perfect health of the delicate womanly organs. No woman need suffer with inflammation, ulceration, debilitating drains or female trouble. There's an absolute cure for all these in Doctor Pierce's Favorite Prescription. It makes life a pleasure, does away with morning sickness, and makes the baby's advent easy and almost painless.

"I had been a sufferer from uterine trouble for about three years, having two miscarriages in that time, and the doctors said I would have to go through an operation before I could give birth to children," writes Mrs. Blanche E. Evans, of Parsons, Luzerne Co., Pa., Box 41. "When about to give up in despair I saw the advertisement of Dr. Pierce's medicine and thought I would give it a trial as a last resort. I bought a bottle of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, and after taking it felt better than I had for years. After taking four and one-half bottles I gave birth to a bright baby girl who is now four months old and has not had a day of sickness."

"Favorite Prescription" contains no alcohol, whisky or other intoxicant. Nothing else is "just as good." Refuse all substitutes. If you go for Dr. Pierce's, get Dr. Pierce's.

THURSDAY, DECEMBER 7, 1899.

AT GREENWOOD.

We were present at the North Mississippi Conference most of the time dnring its recent session. Being bnsy with pnblisher's bnsiness, we engaged the facile pen of "Gilderoy" to report the proceedings. Bishop Candler's presidency gave great satisfaction. He dispatches bnsiness with wonderful rapidity. His address at the Educational Rally was a masterly production, and prodnced a profound impression; and the same may be said of his Thanksgiving sermon. The brethren gave us a most cordial reception. Greenwood entertained the Conference most royally. Our new church, jnst completed, is the handsomest we have seen in the State of Mississippi. (We have not yet seen the new church at Vicksbnrg.) It is modern in style, and almost perfect in all its appointments. It has eleven rooms besides the auditorium and the Snnday-school room. We hope to give a cnt and a fnller description at another time. We most heartily congratulate the enterprising pastor and his liberal flock upon the erection of such an edifice.

We were entertained in the home of Bro. and Sister Mayre, to whom we are under lasting obligations for their generous hospitalities. We had as onr co-guests Bros. J. W. Boswell, W. B. Murrah, M. L. Burton, W. M. Thornton and J. B. Streater.

The Conference passed resolutions strongly commendatory of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, and promising increased diligence in extending its circnlation.

NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

THIRTIETH SESSION.

The North Mississippi Conference met in the Methodist Church in Greenwood, Miss., Nov. 29, 1899. Bishop W. A. Candler in the chair.

The opening exercises were conducted by the Bishop. The hymn was No. 221, and the Scripture lesson Rev. i. The recording secretary of the last session called the roll, and a large majority of the members answered to their names.

Revs. G. H. Lipscomb, W. A. Dollar, H. P. Gibbs, A. J. Jones and B. F. Phillips had died during the year.

T. W. Lewis was elected secretary; R. M. Evans, recording secretary; J. M. Bradley, assistant secretary, and J. R. Countiss, statistical secretary.

The honrs for meeting and adjonrning and the bar of the Conference were fixed. The usual standing committees were then appointed.

Communications from the Publishing Honse and from the several connectional Boards were received and referred to the appropriate Boards and Committees without reading.

The characters of all the presiding elders were passed. Rev. J. S. Oakley was not able to be present, but, by appointment of the Bishop, Rev. N. G. Angnstus represented the Durant district. Bro. Oakley's character was passed, and his name referred to Committee for the Snperannuated Relation. The secretary was instrncted to convey to Bro. Oakley the love and sympathy of the Conference in his afflictions.

Reports of Boards of Trnstees of Millsaps College, Grenada College, and the Woman's College of Oxford were referred to the Board of Edncation.

The names of W. J. O'Bryant, J. A. Lowe and B. S. Rayner were referred for the snpernnmerary relation.

C. N. Terry, J. W. Bates, J. M. Hampton, W. R. Rainey, W. S. Harrison, S. A. Ellis, Joseph Johnson, J. W. Poston, T. L. Foster, C. C. Grisham, J. A. Leech and A. P. Sage were referred for superannuated relation.

Those who remain on trial and the deacons of one year were examined and passed to the classes of the next year.

As far as examined the characters of all the preachers passed.

It was announced that a Thanksgiving sermon would be preached on Thursday by Bishop W. A. Candler.

After annonncements Conference adjourned.

SECOND DAY.

The Conference met at the appointed hour with Bishop Candler in the chair. The opening services were conducted by Dr. W. T. J. Sullivan.

Minutes of yesterday's session read and approved. The roll was called for the second time.

Communications from several of the General Boards were presented and referred to proper Committees and Boards without reading.

Question 10 was called, and Gersham F. Morehead, Robt. A. Clark, A. Howel Mitchell, W. B. Pinson and M. L. Ward, local preachers, were elected to deacon's orders.

Question 14 was called. H. B. Estes and W. T. Browning were elected to elder's orders as local preachers.

Question 12 called, and S. A. Brown, J. J. Garner, C. P. Moss, W. L. Anderson and J. W. Raper were elected elders.

The hour for preaching having arrived, Bishop W. A. Candler preached a Thanksgiving sermon of great depth, compass and power and of great spiritual force. A collection was taken for the Orphans' Home at Water Valley, Miss.

THIRD DAY.

The Conference convened at nine A. M.; the Bishop in the chair. The religious exercises were conducted by Rev. T. J. Newell, of the Memphis Conference. The Minutes of yesterday's session read and approved.

The following were admitted on trial in the traveling connection: Gersham S. Morehead, Harry D. Estes, W. E. Brogan, Thos. H. Porter, Jno. T. Lewis, W. B. Pinson and Jesse W. McGee were admitted on trial.

W. D. Parrish, from North Alabama Conference, and S. L. Pope, from Indian Mission Conference, were received by transfer.

The report of the trustees and manager of the Orphans' Home at Water Valley was submitted and adopted. Rev. M. L. Burton, the manager, resigned, and Rev. Jas. G. Galloway, of the Mississippi Conference, was elected to fill the place.

H. C. Parrott and W. G. Bark were readmitted.

W. T. Browning and Earl R. Tucker were called forward to answer the disciplinary questions preparatory to admission into full connection. The address of the Bishop was full, rich and vital with the power of God.

Earl R. Tucker was elected to elder's orders as a traveling preacher.

The names of the preachers of the Grenada district were called, and their characters were passed.

Rev. J. G. Galloway; Rev. George D. French, pastor of Presbyterian Church, and Dr. Featherstun were introduced.

The Conference adjourned with benediction.

FOURTH DAY.

Conference convened at the appointed hour, with the Bishop in the chair.

Religious exercises conducted by Rev. J. D. Newsom.

The Minutes of yesterday's session read and approved.

J. W. McGee was elected to deacon's orders as a local preacher.

The characters of the preachers of the Winona, Durant, Colnmbus, Corinth, Holly Springs and Greenville districts passed.

Rev. A. T. Buck, an elder, was located at his own reqnest.

Dr. Hammond, secretary of the Board of Education, was introduced, and addressed the Conference in behalf of the great interest committed to his hands.

The report of the Committee on the American Bible Society was read, and the Conference was addressed by the Rev. George D. French, of the Holston Conference, agent of the Society.

The privilege of addressing the Conference was extended to Rev. W. C. Black, in view of the fact that he had to leave on the next train. The report of the committee will be presented later.

It was ordered that when we adjourn, we adjourn to meet at 3 o'clock.

Adjourned with the benediction.

FOURTH DAY—AFTERNOON SESSION.

Conference met at 3 o'clock P. M; Rev. Amos Kendall in the chair by appointment of the Bishop. Religious exercises conducted by Dr. J. W. Boswell.

CONFERENCE NOTES.

BY "GILDEROY."

The Conference sessions are held in the beautiful new Methodist Church in Greenwood, erected at a cost of $18,417.

The Bishop said on Thursday that up to that time no layman had said one word to him about the appointments, and this is well, for the Bishop has nine gentlemen capable of giving him all the help he needs. They were selected for that purpose.

The preachers are all well clad and seem to have been well fed. Some of them are of the lean kind.

Thursday night was the anniversary of the Sunday-school Board, and Mr. J. R. Pepper, of Memphis, Tenn., made the address. It was brimful of fine suggestions in regard to this arm of our work. Bro. Pepper stands at the head of the Sunday-school workers in our Methodism.

Rev. Jno. W. Boswell, D. D., our confrere of the Nashville Advocate, was present, smiling, happy and busy, looking after the affairs of the Publishing House. He is a member of the North Mississippi Conference.

Bro. Towson, of the Japan Mission Conference, was on hand looking after the interests of the Review of Missions, one of the best publications of its class on the continent.

The Orphans' Home, under the management of the Rev. M. L. Burton and his estimable wife, has been a splendid success. The Home is free of debt, the property in fine condition, and a great and noble work has been done.

Dr. Featherstun was on hand looking after the work of the Epworth League in the North Mississippi Conference. His best energies are devoted to this department of church work.

The beautiful city of Greenwood, on the bank of the Yazoo river, afforded abundant and abounding hospitality to the members of the Conference.

All the business sessions were largely attended by the citizens of the town and by the people generally.

The editor of the ADVOCATE and Dr. Boswell, of the Nashville Advocate, were kept pretty busy settling accounts and counting shekels.

Some few of the preachers' wives are present enjoying the Conference. It is a great pleasure, refreshment and uplift to them. Some of them hear their husbands' old sermons over and over till they get hungry for some good preaching.

The anniversary of the Board of Education was held on Friday night for the purpose of having a grand Twentieth Century Fund Rally. The address was made by Bishop Candler. This address was massive, packed with information, sparkling with wit and hot with inspiration. The like of it was never heard before in these parts. The subscriptions to this fund amounted to $5,600.55.

Snnday was a great day in Greenwood. The sermon by Bishop Candler was one of rare power. It stirred the hearts of all the people. This was followed by the ordination of deacons, both traveling and local. The spacious church was packed full of eager and expectant people.

The love-feast was a season of grace to all present. The testimonies were many and full of assurance and love.

The anniversaries of the Board of Missions and of the Epworth League were held Satnrday night. The missionary address was made by Rev. T. J. Newell, of the Memphis Conference, and the League address by Rev. H. Walter Featherstnn, of the Mississippi Conference, and president of the State Epworth League.

The memorial service at 3 P. M., Sunday, was followed by the ordination of elders, traveling and local.

Greenwood did herself fine in entertaining the Conference. Each member and visitor had the best home. The homes were all good, better and best.

Rev. W. B. Murrah preached a fine sermon to a full house on Sunday night.

Bro. J. H. Mitchell is hard to beat as Conference host. He was alert, kind, courteous and patient, and attentive to the wants of everybody.

NOTES.

Miss Helen Gould has given $1,000 to a Y. M. C. A. library at Texarkana, Texas.

Rev. J. J. Kelly, of the Louisiana Conference, let the light of his countenance shine into our den recently.

At the recent session of the Virginia Conference, Rev. S. A. Steel was stationed at Centenary Church, Richmond.

A brother who modestly withholds his name sends us ten dollars as a thank-offering, and wishes it applied to missions.

Bro. Beeson, of Alabama, father of Prof. J. W. Beeson, of E. M. F. College, recently adopted an orphan from our Water Valley Home.

Rev. J. C. C. Newton has been transferred from the Japan Mission Conference to the Virginia Conference, and stationed at Crittenden.

Rev. F. G. Hocutt passed through the city Tuesday en route to Conference at Monroe, and made an appreciated call at the ADVOCATE office.

Rev. E. A. Schell has resigned the Epworth League secretaryship in the M. E. Church, and Dr. W. P. Thirkield has been elected in his stead.

Mrs. M. M. Kersh, of Pelahatchie, Miss., has given $500 to our Orphans' Home at Water Valley. A most praiseworthy act. May her example prove contagious!

Rev. P. D. Hardin, of the Mississippi Conference, writes: "We are winding up in good shape. Our people gave us an appreciated pounding 'Thanksgiving night.'"

Pastors of the Mississippi Conference should bear in mind that the Board of Education expects them to carry with them to Vicksburg the Twentieth Century Educational Fund roll-books.

Rev. R. M. Blocker, of the Louisiana Conference, writes: "For more than three weeks my wife has been quite ill with spinal trouble. We have very little hope of her recovery. Pray for us." We bespeak for our brother the sympathies and prayers of the brethren.

Rev. M. L. Burton has resigned his position as manager of the Water Valley Orphans' Home, and Rev. J. G. Galloway, of the Mississippi Conference, has been elected in his stead. Whether Bro. Galloway will accept we are not informed. Bro. Burton will go into the pastorate in the Mississippi Conference.

Below we give an extract from a private letter recently received from a young lady who is a professional teacher: "I am a Baptist; but I have thrown my whole heart into the work of upbuilding the people of this community; and, as it is a Methodist neighborhood, I am trying to introduce their church paper into every family. Only one family in this church takes it. I herewith send you their names and addresses in order that you may send them some sample copies. Later I will call and ask them to subscribe. I am teaching here, and it has been my experience that I do better where my patrons take their church paper." If all Methodist preachers had the zeal and the wisdom of this Baptist sister, an uplifting force would be put into operation whose ultimate results no mathematician can compute.

A CURE FOR ASTHMA.

Asthma sufferers need no longer leave home and business in order to be cured. Nature has produced a vegetable remedy that will permanently cure Asthma and all diseases of the lungs and bronchial tubes. Having tested its wonderful curative powers in thousands of cases (with a record of 90 per cent. permanently cured), and desiring to relieve human suffering, I will send free of charge to all sufferers from Asthma, Consumption, Catarrh, Bronchitis and nervous diseases, this recipe, in German, French or English, with full directions for preparing and using. Sent by mail. Address with stamp, naming this paper, W. A. Noyes, 820 Powers' Block, Rochester, N. Y.

Mrs. Robert Elliot, Edwards, Miss., writes that she is much pleased with the machine recently ordered from the NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE.

REV. T. B. WHITE.

The Conference year is drawing to a close, and we have many things to regret, and more to thank God for. While the death angels visited our camp meeting and took our beloved brother, T. B. White, from among us and from his earthly labors to that heavenly mansion prepared for the finally faithful, and while we bow with submission to the divine will of God, we sorely regret the death of our beloved brother; but we mourn not as those that have no hope, for we know our loss is his eternal gain. And in behalf of the tent-holders of Siloam Camp Ground, we offer Bro. White's bereaved family our heart-felt sympathy in this, their deep sorrow, and can but point them to the Lamb of God, our great burden-bearer, and pray his guidance through this vale of sorrow to that celestial city where they will be reunited with their loved ones again.

MRS. L. E. WILCOX,
DR. R. P. JEFFERIES,
J. L. MOORE,
Committee.

The longer I live the more I am certain that the great difference between men, between the feeble and the powerful, is energy—invincible determination, a purpose once fixed, and then, death or victory! That quality will do anything that can be done in this world, and no talents, no circumstances, no opportunities will make a two-legged creature a man without it.—Sir Thomas Fowell Buxton.

LITERARY NOTES.

BY W. F. B.

"Some history of lake shipping and much information about the enormous trade of the Great Lakes," is the subject of an article in the December Ainslee's. The story of the invention of the tug is particularly interesting.

In the December number of the American Monthly Review of Reviews there is an editorial summary of the results of the elections, with a discussion of their import as an indorsement of the administration's policy. The editor also describes the progress of the Philippine campaign, the war in South Africa, and many other matters of international interest. A curious chapter in Oriental diplomacy is contributed by Mr. William N. Brewster, who writes on China's Secret Mission to Japan.

McClure's Magazine, for December, with its drawings by such artists as Howard Pyle, Frank Du Mond, and C. K. Linson, is notably artistic. In the introduction and prologue of Dr. John Watson's (Ian Maclaren's) Life of the Master, there is a more than satisfactory opening of what promises to be a unique and valuable feature throughout the year. There are two Christmas stories—one of the South and tramp life; one of the West and railroad life. There is a characteristic poem by the author of The Man with the Hoe. The dramatic story of Laurens' special mission to France, that saved the cause of the American Revolution, is effectively told by James Barnes, illustrated by Howard Pyle; Ex-Secretary Bontwell gives the inside history of The Impeachment of Andrew Johnson, of which he was one of the Congressional managers; and there are a number of other contributions of notable quality and interest.

The first illustration in the December number of the Self-Culture Magazine is an exquisite reproduction of a mural painting of The Adoration of the Magi. The paper in which this series appears is entitled A Unique London Chapel, and describes a chapel of rest in which no service will ever be held, no sermon will ever be preached, and no artificial light will ever be need, the purpose of its founder being to provide a place of retirement from temporal cares where the mind may be led to spiritual rest through the contemplation of religious paintings, details of which are beautifully reproduced. Other splendidly illustrated articles describe the Death of George Washington, the centennial of which falls on the 14th of December; Our Spanish-American Fellow-Citizens of New Mexico; Fort Ancient, the remains of the Mound-Builders of Ohio; Greenwich, Its Kings, Queens, and Heroes; a paper on Florida, entitled The Manatee, and some Japanese scenes and portraits.

If we exclude sympathy and wrap ourselves round in a cold chain armor of selfishness, we exclude ourselves from many of the greatest and purest joys of life.—John Lubbock.

EPWORTH LEAGUE DEPARTMENT.

"ALL FOR CHRIST."

REV. THOMAS B. CLIFFORD, Jackson, La., EDITOR.

MISSISSIPPI.

REV HENRY G. HAWKINS, Madison, Miss., ASSOCIATE EDITOR

We have heard several readers of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE speak of the benefit which they have received from reading the sixth, or Home Circle, page. One father stated that this one page was more than worth the price of the paper. One young lady worker, twenty years of age, remarked recently that she had been benefited more by reading this page than by anything else that had touched her life. Any young person who reads this page weekly is apt to grow in heavenly knowledge, and also in the practical knowledge of the things of this life.

Any young person who adds to the above weekly reading a weekly perusal of the Epworth Era, and a daily study of a small portion of the Bible, is not only growing in grace, but is being educated.

If your chapter has not within it a circle of members who are systematically studying the League course, at least have one or two selections from the books read periodically at the literary and social meetings, or even at the devotional services. Such a reading as "Moon Help" from the little book, "Among the Forces," would require only about three minutes, but interest all listening.

Miss Vic Thompson, State secretary, has sent the following:

MISSISSIPPI STATE LEAGUE.

Assessment received to Nov. 20, 1899: Starkville, $2; Vossburg, $1.35; Madison, $1; Tupelo, $2; Columbus, $5; Shuqualak, $1.10; Inka, $1.35; Canton, $2; West Point, $1.65; Sardis Juniors, $2.10; Greenville, $2.50; total, $22.

Jas. B. Holland, president of the West End League, Meridian, in a recent issue of the Epworth Era, had the following report concerning the League Union of his city:

"The Epworth League Union, of this city, is composed of Central, West End, South Side, and East End Leagues. Meetings are held bi-monthly, at which an interesting programme is rendered, besides the usual business. A Board of Control—composed of the pastors, president, three vice-presidents, and secretary—govern the Union and offer recommendations. An Executive Committee, composed of one member from each League, prepares the social programmes, etc. The last meeting, conducted by the president, Mr. W. D. Hawkins, the most enthusiastic Leaguer of our district, and to whom much credit for the growth and worth of our city's League is due, was one greatly enjoyed by a goodly number of Leaguers. When the business was concluded the social feature of the League was taken up, and a most delightful rendition of music, solos, addresses and papers were furnished the audience. The president spoke in high terms of the Epworth Era, which is, doubtless, the best young people's paper published, and urged that every Leaguer who could possibly do so should take advantage of the present extremely liberal offer and subscribe.

"A committee is preparing a Thanksgiving celebration, to occur at the City Hall, which promises to be a great success.

"With best wishes for the Era and the Epworth League."

HAD SPENT OVER THREE HUNDRED DOLLARS.

After spending $315.00 with our family physician, and my wife had suffered the many ailments that accompany two years of sickness, I had concluded that I must lose her. I was entreated and finally induced to try G. F. P. with her and in consequence to our three children have been added others. I speak of this to show how much good the medicine did her. It not only cured her, but has given her abundant strength to bear all of her household duties without hired help. You can always rely on me as one of your strong supporters.

ARE YOUR KIDNEYS WEAK?

Kidney Weakness Caused by Overwork, by Lifting or a Strain.

We do not always know the constant danger that confronts us through all the daily walks of life. It may be an accident or sudden illness, or perhaps, a disease that has been stealing upon us from day to day.

It used to be considered that only urinary troubles were to be traced to the kidneys, but now modern science proves that nearly all diseases have their beginning in the disorder of these most important organs.

Now by this is not meant that you should overlook all the other organs and merely look after the kidneys.

Your other organs may need attention—but your kidneys most because they do most.

If you are sick begin taking Swamp-Root the great kidney remedy, because as soon as your kidneys are well, they will help all the other organs to health.

The kidneys may get weak or diseased from a thousand and one causes; from overwork, worry, a simple cold, from lifting, a strain, or excess in high living.

Others may suffer from diabetes, dropsy, swelling of the feet and ankles, rheumatism, bad blood, gout, gravel, catarrh, of the bladder, sleeplessness, anaemia, nervousness, headache or neuralgia.

All these symptoms are due to kidney trouble, and the most prompt and effectual cure is Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root the great kidney remedy.

In taking Swamp-Root you afford natural help to nature, for Swamp-Root is the most perfect healer and gentle aid to the kidneys that is known to medical science.

If there is any doubt in your mind as to your condition, take from your urine on arising about two ounces, place it in a glass or bottle and let it stand twenty-four hours. If, on examination, it is milky or cloudy, if there is a brick-dust settling, or if small particles float about in it, your kidneys are in need of immediate attention.

Swamp-Root should at once be taken upon the least sign of ill health. It will make you well and is for sale the world over in bottles of two sizes and two prices, fifty-cent and one dollar.

Swamp-Root is used in the leading hospitals, recommended by skillful physicians in their private practice; and is taken by doctors themselves who have kidney ailments, because they recognize in it the greatest and most successful remedy for kidney, liver and bladder troubles.

To prove its wonderful efficacy, send your name and address to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., mentioning that you read this generous offer in the NEW ORLEANS "CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE" when you will receive, free of all charge, a sample bottle of Swamp-Root and a valuable book, by mail, prepaid. This book contains many of the thousands upon thousands of testimonial letters received from men and women cured.

THE BEST EVER MADE.

The very best premium offer we have ever made is our Sewing Machine Offer now running. You get the machine at a fabulously low price, and with it get a six months' subscription free. You have different styles to select from, and you have ten days to test the machine. Don't fail to read our offer.

Two Verdicts.

"After a fair and impartial trial you are judged guilty by this court, and you are sentenced to be hung by the neck until you are dead." The solemn tones of the judge, the despairing face of the prisoner, and the painful stillness of the court-room, makes it a scene of awful impress. Now turn to a brighter scene at the home circle. A mother radiant with joy over the recovery of a child snatched from the clutches of Malaria. An entire family rejoicing, and praising the merits of Dicks' Chillifuge, and giving their verdict that Chillifuge is without an equal for swiftness to cure.

TAKE NOTICE

That we are now handling two different styles of the Holman Bible in Bourgeois type. One we sell to paid-up subscribers at $1.50, the other at $1.30. The $1.30 Bible is substantially the same we have hitherto sold at $1.50. The one we sell at $1.50 is a far better Bible than has ever been sold at such a price. It is a marvel of cheapness. See our offer.

I, the undersigned, take pleasure in making known my thanks to Messrs. Finlay, Dicks & Co., Ltd., manufacturers of Chillifuge, for having completely cured my daughter, with one bottle, of malarial fever of long standing. The pleasant taste made it most acceptable to the patient. Believing that I do a favor to suffering humanity, I give this for publication.

Home Circle.

THE ONE WHO STAYS AT HOME.

The wheels of the world go round and round,
In the press of the busy throng,
Morn with its matin melody,
And night with its vesper song;
The tides are out and the tides are in,
Like the sea with its ebb and flow,
For there's always one to stay at home,
Where there is one to go.

Abroad on the highway's noisy track,
There is rush of hurrying feet,
The sparks fly out from the wheels of time,
To brighten the bitter and sweet;
But apart from the beaten road and path,
Where the pulse of earth runs slow,
There is always one to stay at home,
Where there is one to go.

Over and over good-byes are said,
In tones that die with the day,
When eyes are wet that can not forget,
And smiles have faded away:
Smiles that are worn as over a grave,
Flowers will blossom and blow;
For there's always one to stay at home,
Where there is one to go.

Always one for the little tasks,
Of a day that is never done;
Always one to sit down at night,
And watch with the stars alone;
And he who lights on the world's broad field,
With banner and blast and drum,
Little dreams of a battle gained,
By the one who stays at home!

"WHAT FOOLS WE MORTALS BE!"

Paley, "one of the sublimest spirits in the world," died at thirty-nine, of overwork. The great naturalist, Linnæus, so exhausted his brain that he did not recognize his own work, and forgot his name. Henry Kirke White won the prizes at Cambridge with his life. When Timothy Dwight was a student at Yale, he studied nine hours and taught six hours a day, taking no exercise. His mind entirely gave way, and it was a long time before it recovered.

The list of men and women who have been suicides, or almost suicides, from overwork, might be indefinitely prolonged.

Imagine the surprise of the angels at the death of men and women in the early prime and vigor of life. Could we but read the notes of their autopsies, we might say less of mysterious Providence at funerals. These would run somewhat as follows:

What! is it returned so soon?—a body framed for a century's use returned at thirty?—a temple which was twenty-eight years in building destroyed almost before it was completed? What have gray hairs, wrinkles, a bent form, and death to do with youth?

Has all this beauty perished like a bud just bursting into bloom, plucked by the grim destroyer? Has she fallen a victim to tight lacing, over-excitement, and the gayety of fashionable life? Poor thing!

Here is an educated, refined lady who died of lung starvation. What a tax human beings pay for breathing impure air! Nature provides them with a tonic atmosphere, compounded by the Divine Chemist, but they refuse to breathe it in its purity, and so must pay the penalty in shortened lives. They can live a long time without water, a longer time without food, clothing, or the so-called comforts of life; they can live without education or culture, but their lungs must have good, healthful air-food twenty-four thousand times a day if they would maintain health. Oh, that they could see, as we do, the intimate connection between bad air, bad morals, and a tendency to crime! It hardly seems credible that there are thousands of wealthy people, living on the best streets of large cities, who actually deny themselves the free air of heaven, and starve, literally starve, for sunlight, the source of all physical life and power. How many children, sent to induce man to return to Paradise, live and sleep where plants would die!

Here are the ruins of an idolized son and loving husband. Educated and refined, what infinite possibilities beckoned him onward at the beginning of his career! But the devil's agent offered him imagination, sprightliness, wit, eloquence, bodily strength, and happiness in eau de vie, or "water of life," as he called it, at only fifteen cents a glass. The best of our company tried to dissuade him, but to no avail. The poor mortal closed his "bargain" with the dramseller, and what did he get? A hardened conscience, a ruined home, a diseased body, a muddled brain, a heart-broken wife, wretched children, disappointed friends, triumphant enemies, days of remorse, nights of anguish, an unwept deathbed, an unhonored grave. And only to think that he is only one of many thousands! "What fools these mortals be!"

Did he not see the destruction toward which he was rushing with all the feverish haste of slavish appetite? Ah, yes; but only when it was too late. In his clenched hand, as he lay dead, was found a crumpled paper containg the following, in lines barely legible, so tremulous were the nerves of the writer: "Wife, children, and over forty thousand dollars all gone! I alone am responsible. All has gone down my throat. When I was twenty-one I had a fortune. I am not yet thirty-five years old. I have killed my beautiful wife, who died of a broken heart; have murdered our children with neglect. When this coin is gone, I do not know how I can get my next meal. I shall die a drunken pauper. This is my last money, and my history. If this bill comes into the hands of any man who drinks, let him take warning from my life's ruin."

What a magnificent specimen of manhood this would have been if his life had been under the rule of reason, not passion. He dies of old age at forty, his hair is gray, his eyes are sunken, his complexion sodden, his body marked with the labels of his disease. A physique fit for a god-fashioned in the Creator's image, with infinite possibilities, a physiological hulk wrecked on passion's seas, and fit only for a danger signal to warn the race! What would parents think of a captain who would leave his son in charge of a ship without giving him any instructions or chart showing the rocks, reefs, and shoals? Do they not know that those who sleep in the ocean are but a handful compared with those who have foundered on passion's seas? Oh, the sins of silence which parents commit against those dearer to them than life itself. Youth can not reconcile the great solicitude of parents regarding their education, their associations, their welfare generally, with the mysterious reserve in regard to their physical natures. An intelligent explanation, by all mothers to the daughters, and by all fathers to the sons, of the mysteries of their physical lives, when at the right age, would revolutionize civilization.

This young clergyman killed himself trying to be popular. This student committed suicide by exhausting his brain in trying to lead his class. This young lawyer overdrew his account at Nature's bank; and she foreclosed by a stroke of paralysis.

This merchant died at thirty-five by his own hand. His life was slipping away without enjoyment. He had murdered his capacity for happiness, and dug his own spiritual grave while making preparations for enjoying life. This young society man died of nothing to do and dissipation at thirty, very little brains found.

Here is a good old man of sixty, his gray hair, if we could believe his enlogists, a mark of wisdom. But such wisdom ought to have saved him from dying of "old age" at sixty. Did he not know that his hair was growing gray, his face becoming pinched and wrinkled, his brain losing its former activity, his step becoming feeble because his blood no longer carried its full load of nutriment to all parts of the body? Did he not realize the simple truth that man begins life in a gelatinous condition and ends in an osseous state, being soft in infancy and hard in old age? Did he ever think that age is but ossification, and is produced by too much of the carbonates and phosphates of lime in food and drink, which not only harden the bones, but also thicken arteries and veins, and check the fullness and freedom of the flow of the human River of Life?

What a miserable farce the life of men and women seems to us! Time, which is so precious that even the Creator will not give a second moment until the first is gone, they throw away as if it were water. Opportunities which angels covet they neglect as of no consequence, and die failures, because they have "no chance in life." Life, which seems so precious to us, they spurn as if but a bauble. Scarcely a mortal returns to us who has not robbed himself of years of precious life. Very few return to us dropping off in genuine old age, as Autumn leaves drop in the forest. If they could but see the wonders of the human body, whose exquisite beauties excite admiration even in heaven, they would not torture it with hideous dress, abuse its sacred functions with foolish excesses, or even neglect its thorough care. Has life become so cheap that mortals thus throw it away?—Success.

Oliver Wendell Holmes once said, during the mighty struggle between the States, that the constant cry of the masses was for bread and newspapers. Now, since more than a third of a century has changed the political and financial issues, the great cry in the Southern States is for a pleasant and reliable Chill Tonic. Dicks' Chillifuge complies with this demand. It is as pleasant as orange syrup, and as prompt to cure malaria as the bitter Sulphate of Quinine. If you have a case of Chills or Fever which you can not break, try Chillifuge, and enjoy life once more.

As the world grows older it grows wiser and more practical. The days of eloquence and flowery speech have been displaced by sound reasoning, and robust, if homely, argument. We, as advertisers, appreciate this, and, therefore, present the merits of Dicks' Chillifuge, briefly and forcibly:

It Will Cure Chills.
It Is Pleasant to Take.
It Makes Rich Blood.
It Makes Life Worth Living.

GILLESPIE—Died on Thursday, Oct. 26, 1899, at the residence of his grandson-in-law, S. B. Spann, near Opelousas, Col. JOHN CRAWFORD GILLESPIE, in his eighty-fourth year.

Col. Gillespie was born in Montgomery county, Va., Jan. 8, 1816. He was the son of Rev. Samuel P. V. Gillespie, of the M. E. Church, who served the church in the States of Virginia, Tennessee, Kentucky, Alabama, and Mississippi.

Col. Gillespie was a man of remarkable integrity of character, and filled many positions of trust in State and National employ. In 1842 he married Miss Evalina N. Foard, of Alabama, and in 1873 emigrated to Texas, residing at Bryan until 1880, when he came to Opelousas and took charge of his wife's estate in that vicinity. He was for years an earnest member of the M. E. Church, South, and was well informed in all that pertained to the history of that church. It was most interesting to converse with him upon church subjects. His experience was rich, and his knowledge of men and things extended. It was in his personal Christian life that he was more than interesting, and became a teacher. How beautiful was his faith, simple and child-like his trust! When he talked of his Lord, his mercy, love, and grace, it was evident that he spoke out of the fullness of the heart. He had tasted and seen that the Lord was good. The promises had for him a reality that came of testing, and Christ was indeed to him a present Savior, whom he loved and of whom he was under no circumstances ashamed, but whose honor was his chief delight. The Bible was his chart, and the Spirit his guide. He was a great sufferer, and had been confined to his room almost continually for the past two years. His end was in peace, and he fell "on sleep" as an infant upon its mother's breast.

DRAKE—Mrs. NONA DRAKE, wife of Mr. C. R. Drake, of Ebenezer, Miss., and daughter of Mr. F. R. and Mrs. Scottie Nixon, died in Durant, Miss., Sept. 2, 1899, aged twenty-six years and one month. She was joined together with C. R. Drake in the holy estate of matrimony, Jan. 18, 1899, with whom she lived happily till our Lord called her to a higher sphere. She joined the M. E. Church, South, at Salem, Ebenezer charge, in 1897, where she continued a consistent member. A devoted wife, a Christian and true friend to all, has gone to her reward.

We extend our sympathies to her bereaved husband, relatives, and many friends, and pray that the Holy Spirit may comfort their sad hearts, and that he may lead them through this land of sorrow and bereavements to the land of bliss, where we shall meet again, and where sickness and pain and death are no more. Those who knew her best loved her most. A great loss to us, but gain to her. Let us say, "Thy will be done."

"Mourn not for those who sweetly rest
In heaven above in Jesus' breast."

Her pastor, J. W. TRADWELL.

CALCOAT—Mrs. SARAH E. CALCOAT (nee Powell) was born April 1, 1851; married to W. A. Calcoat, Dec. 1, 1870; passed peacefully away June 24, 1899.

Sister Calcoat has been a loyal member of the Methodist Church for about fifteen years. So long as health admitted she was a regular attendant at church. For eleven years Sister Calcoat was an invalid, most of the time confined to her bed. She bore her suffering patiently, and set her friends an example of fortitude. She leaves behind a husband, two sons, two daughters and many friends to mourn her death. Her loved ones and friends were faithful and unfailing during all her sickness. She has fought her fight against sin and misery, and has gone home to her reward.

Loved ones, grieve not that she is through with this world of sin, sorrow, and trouble. May you prove faithful to her God, that you may some day meet her in that bright world where loved ones meet to part no more!

H. W. LEDBETTER.

Simsboro, La.

ELLISON—Mrs. MARY ELLISON (nee Moore) departed this life Oct. 20, 1899. She was born in Alabama, July 14, 1814. At an early age she came to Mississippi, where, in young womanhood, she was married to Mr. Thomas Ellison, with whom she lived happily until his death in 1894. Their union was blessed with eleven children, six of whom are living to mourn their loss.

Sister Ellison was a consecrated member of the M. E. Church, South, for sixty years. Hers was one of those homes where the weary pilgrim at always found a welcome. She was true and faithful in all the relations of life. As a church member, she was steadfast; as a neighbor, she was kind; as a mother, she was dutiful and loving. To the community in which she lived she has left an example worthy of imitation; to her children and grandchildren, a legacy worth more than silver or gold. Of her we think it might be said, as of Mary in olden time, "She hath done what she could." For two years previous to her death she was a great sufferer, but she bore her sufferings with Christian fortitude. During her last days she was faithfully ministered unto by her daughter, Miss Julia, and her niece, Miss Mattie Moore, as well as by numerous friends and relatives. The body was laid to rest in the family burying-ground, there to await the resurrection morn. May the bereaved ones so live as to meet her "in the city not made with hands, eternal in the skies!"

Her pastor, J. J. GOLDEN,
Vaughns, Miss.

HANSEL—SARAH P. HANSEL, daughter of B. E. and S. E. Powell, was born in Williamson county, Tenn., Dec. 4, 1811; moved with her parents to Marshall county, Miss., in February, 1847. She was twice happily married. January 22, 1861, she married Mr. J. W. Grovis. He lived only a short time. She married Mr. Hubbard Hansel, March 10, 1875. She was the mother of four children, two sons and two daughters. The sons are now living, and are members of the church.

Sister Hansel gave her heart to God and her hand to the M. E. Church, South, in her sixteenth year. She was a model Christian, a devoted mother, both to her own and her foster children. At the time of falling on sleep she was the superintendent of the Sabbath-school in Early Grove Church. When the final summons came, July 16, 1899, in her own home in Early Grove, Miss., she was fully ready. Her son, Hagh, is now in her place in the Sabbath-school. The Lord ever guide the children of Bro. and Sister Hansel.

D. L. COGDELL.

WOOD—Died at the family residence on Scott street, Alexandria, La., on Thursday, Oct. 5, 1899, Mrs. LOUISA E. A. WOOD; born in Rapides parish, Nov. 4, 1815. Her grandfather, Mr. Charles Stewart, moved from Kentucky to Rapides parish in the year 1802. The deceased married Giles C. Wood, of Maryland, in this parish in 1833. She was the mother of eleven children; three living (daughters), all of Alexandria. The deceased has been a widow for many years.

The death of Mrs. Wood takes from Alexandria her oldest native citizen. Her mother was the only sister of Ann H. Carlin, of Alexandria. The deceased's father was D. Kimball, a planter of Rapides parish; reared in the Methodist Church, Methodist at heart. I often heard her sing the old Wesleyan hymns. She joined the Episcopal Church with her children; a devoted, true wife and mother. She left us to join the angels in heaven. Rector Dr. H. C. Duncan, St. James Church, officiated at the funeral.

From one who knew and loved her from childhood, L. L. CHEVALIER.

KELLY—Tribute of respect to Capt. JOHN KELLY by Tchula Sunday-school, Tchula, Miss.:

Whereas, Almighty God, in his all-wise providence, has seen proper to remove from our midst our beloved brother and faithful worker, Capt. John Kelly; therefore, be it

Resolved, That we bow in humble submission to this inexorable decree, knowing that he doeth all things well; that we wish to express our appreciation of his services as a Sunday-school worker among us; that we greatly deplore the loss of so valuable a teacher and so zealous an advocate of Sunday-school interests.

Resolved, That we extend to the bereaved wife and family our heartfelt condolence, but can assure them of the fact that their loss is his gain. He has gone to his reward and rest. We commend his life as an example worthy of imitation.

Resolved, That these resolutions be entered upon the Minutes of Tchula Sunday-school, and our county papers and NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE be requested to publish the same.

H. Christmas, Mrs. W. H. Madden, Jackson Reeves, Committee.

KIDD—Resolutions by the Bunkie, La., Methodist Sunday-school in memoriam of Mr. W. B. KIDD, a consistent member of the senior class, who passed away Oct. 3, 1899;

Whereas, It has pleased the great Superintendent of the universe to remove from our school our brother and fellow-student; therefore, be it

Resolved, That while we deplore his removal, yet we bow in humble submission to the will of Him who doeth all things well. We miss him, but how much greater the loss and how much more the grief of the loved ones in their lonely home! We condone and sorrow with them, and point them to the haven of rest, praying that they may be joyfully reunited there.

Mr. J. M. Watson, Mrs. J. P. Haney, Miss Flora Walton, Committee.

WINE OF CARDUI

WOMEN WHO WORK.

ST. LOUIS, MO., Aug. 12.

Though only 19 years old, I suffered from pains and female troubles two years. Last spring I got so bad I had to quit work. I had to support myself, and could not afford a high-priced doctor. I got one bottle of Wine of Cardui and that made me feel better. Have now used several bottles and am well. My mother used the Wine for Change of Life and was greatly relieved.

MISS MARGARET WALSH.

McELREE'S Wine of Cardui

Many girls and women find it necessary to earn their own living in various kinds of employment. Their work is often so hard and confining that the health breaks down. Their delicate constitutions are unfitted for tiresome tasks. Weakness nearly always makes its appearance in the peculiarly delicate womanly organs. Constant standing on the feet, and coming and going at the beck of a superintendent or foreman, induces falling of the womb, leucorrhœa, headache and backache. The pay of women workers is often so notoriously small that when sickness comes they have no money to engage skillful physicians. To them Wine of Cardui is truly a blessing. It cures them of their ills at a small cost, and they can act as their own physicians. No doctor can do as much for "female troubles" as Wine of Cardui.

The "Combination" Bible.

A SUPERB EDITION

of the Holy Scriptures, showing at a glance at the foot of the pages all changes made by the revisers.

New Type. All Proper Names Self-Pronouncing. The Most Valuable Collateral Matter.

There is a steady and increasing demand for first-class Bibles. Everybody is anxious to obtain a copy of the best edition of the Holy Scriptures. Old editions are constantly being replaced by Bibles that are in every way more attractive, and there is practically no limit to the demand.

OUR "COMBINATION" FEATURE.

Hitherto the King James and Revised Versions have been printed in parallel columns, but this makes comparisons of texts tedious and unsatisfactory, and makes the book very unwieldy. We have overcome this difficulty by "combining" the two Versions on the same page, showing at a glance in foot-notes all the Changes Additions and Omissions made by the Revisers.

THE OLD VERSION PRINTED IN FULL.

The King James Version is the basis, and this Version is read straight along from the text, while the Revised Version is read from the text in combination with the foot-notes. Our "Combination" Feature has met with universal approval and is strongly endorsed by all leading Divines and Biblical Scholars.

It is only by a comparison of the two Versions that the greatest benefit can be obtained from reading the Holy Scriptures, and this comparison every reader can easily make by our simple arrangement for showing the changes made by the revisers. This is the greatest triumph of Bible Publishing the World has ever known.

OUR OFFER.

To those unprogressive people who do not read and pay for the NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE we sell this Bible at the publisher's retail price—$4.25. To our subscribers we sell it at the very low rate of $2. The only condition attached to this offer is that the subscriber must pay his subscription one full year in advance, viz.: to December, 1900. We will send it postpaid to any person who will send us three new cash subscribers at the regular rate. For six new cash subscribers at the regular rate we will send two "Combination" Bibles, postpaid.

For fifty cents additional we will send a Bible with index.

For twenty-five cents additional we will have your name engraved in gilt letters on the outside.

Send for circular. Address REV. W. C. BLACK.

P. S.—We can give no commission on renewals in connection with the above offer.

EXCELLENCE OF THE COLUMBIAN.—All wearing parts are of case-hardened steel possessing great durability, and by the turning of a screw all lost motion caused by wear can be taken up. All parts are fitted so accurately that the machines are absolutely noiseless, and as easy running as fine adjustment and best mechanical skill is possible to produce. No expense or time is spared to make them perfect in every respect, as every machine passes a rigid inspection by competent men before leaving the factory.

NICKEL PLATED.—The balance wheel and many of the fine parts are nickel-plated, with other parts finely enameled and ornamented, giving it a rich appearance.

A Self Setting Needle and Self-Threading Cylinder Shuttle are used in the Columbian High-Arm Sewing Machine. They are so simple that any one can easily operate them in a few minutes' time, as our Instruction Book is fully illustrated, showing how to do all kinds of fancy work with attachments.

Extra Attachments, in velvet-lined case, sent free with each machine: 1 Tucker, 1 Ruffler with shirring plate, 1 Hemmer set (4 widths) and Binder, 1 Braider (Foot and Slide), 1 Thread Cutter.

ADDITIONAL ACCESSORIES.—Each machine is supplied with the following outfit: 1 Hemmer and Feller (one piece), 10 Needles, 6 Bobbins, 1 Wrench, 1 Screw Driver, Oil Can with Oil, Cloth Gauge and Thumb Screw, and a Book of Instructions. The Book of Instructions is profusely illustrated, and answers the purpose of a competent teacher.

No. 3—Drop leaf, Bent cover, case of two drawers at one end and center drawer. Dealer's price, $29. Our price, $17.

No. 4—Drop leaf table, Bent cover, case of two drawers at each end and center drawer. Dealer's price, $31. Our price, $17.75.

No. 5—Drop leaf table, Bent cover, case of three drawers at each end and center drawer, making a seven-drawer machine. Dealer's price, $33. Our price, $18.50.

The chief difference between Numbers 3, 4, and 5 is in the furniture—i. e., the number of drawers. If you do not want to pay for the extra drawers, you need not do so. We sell these machines under a ten years' guarantee, by which we mean that if any part gives out by reason of any defect therein, the manufacturer will replace the same free of charge. Moreover, we allow the purchaser to test the machine ten days. If at the end of ten days you are not satisfied, you have only to drop us a postal card, and your money will be refunded.

OUR OFFER.

We will send any one of the above-described machines at the prices named, and also send the ADVOCATE free for six months. The only condition attached to this offer is that subscribers who are in arrears must first pay up all arrearages to date. It would be well to avail yourself of this offer at once, as we can not promise that it will last very long. Notice that you take no risk whatever. We do all the risking. Address REV. W. C. BLACK, 512 Camp St., New Orleans.

P. S.—The machine will be shipped direct from the factory in the North

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

Congress opened on Dec. 4.

The Cuban census has been completed.

The Filipino garrison at Bayombong has surrendered to the Americans.

The Society of Total Abstinence, just formed in Vienna, is the first ever established in Austria.

The British transport "Huronia" with a cargo of mules has reached Cape Town from New Orleans.

A bill has been introduced in the House appropriating $2,000,000 for a new postoffice at New Orleans.

Joubert has concentrated his forces near Colenso, and promises to sturdily contest Buller's advance across the Tugela.

Commander Booth-Tucker, of the Salvation Army, held several services in this city on Sunday, which were well attended.

Eight thousand men are employed by the British in strengthening the fortress, at Gibraltar. Spanish workmen have been dismissed.

All the association cotton mills of Fall River, Mass., employing 28,000 hands, have declined to grant a 10 per cent. advance in wages.

Great Britain is mining her harbors hastily, but thoroughly, with a view, it is said, of asking France to explain her unfriendly attitude.

The leader of the native rising in Mindanao Island has been assassinated by a native official, who treacherously led him into a trap.

The call for more troops has given England something of a shock, and the public has begun to look forward to a long and bloody war.

American troops have taken Santa Cruz and Tagudin, in the Philippines, the natives meeting the victorious Americans with brass bands.

The Republicans in the House will object to the seating of Roberts, the polygamist. It looks now as though the matter will be made a strict party issue.

England and Italy have partitioned territory which really belongs to Abyssinia, and King Menelik is expected to be heard from soon at the head of 100,000 men.

The battle at Modder river proved to have been undecided. The British failed to drive the Boers from their strong entrenchment, but the Boers retired during the night.

It is said that the American Sugar Trust has arranged to buy all the more important independent refineries in the country, and increase its capital from $75,000,000 to $200,000,000.

Gen. Meyer has introduced a bill in the House providing for the immediate acquisition by the United States of the Jetties, the government to maintain the channel through South Pass.

One of the most important developments of late, in connection with public matters in Germany, has been the campaign inaugurated by Emperor William in favor of a materially increased navy.

In view of the coming Exposition and the extra demand for local transportation, a school for coachmen has been opened in Paris. This school turns out from 100 to 150 per month. A born Parisian can graduate in two weeks, but an outsider is obliged to remain thirty days, as they must know every nook and corner of Paris, and must take a course and pass examination in the police laws.

There are 48 vessels of all classes under construction for the navy, of which four battle-ships should be finished early next year, and another in October, 1900; of the three other battleships under construction, one should be finished in 1901, and the two others in 1902. The cruiser "Albany," now building in England, and most of the thirty-three torpedo boats, ought to be finished during the coming year, and the four monitors in 1901.

The week opens without a word of news such as the British public is so anxiously awaiting. With a larger army in the field than the country ever before mobilized, it can only be said that the loss of 3,500 men, entailed before the enemy's borders have been crossed, is a serious matter, and while there is no feeling of despondency as to the eventual result of the war, it is regretfully admitted on all sides that the strength of the Boer resistance has been woefully underestimated.

The opening week of the session of the House promises to be crowded with stirring events. At the very threshold of the session will come the contest over the admission of Representative-elect Roberts, of Utah. The Roberts case has attracted the attention of the whole country. It is said the Republican leaders have adopted a plan of procedure which is designed to prevent Mr. Roberts from taking the oath of office until after the charges in connection with his alleged polygamous practices have been investigated by a special committee.

NOTHING GOOD IS EVER LOST.

The story of arts that have been lost, and inventions that have been forgotten, and knowledges that have been consumed by fame—all these are idle talk. The time was when Wendell Phillips thought the huge stones in the temple of Diana demanded the steam engine. Wider knowledge hath taught us that the pyramids can be accounted for by one despot and a thousand slaves. Man can forget where he saw the poison ivy, but not where he found the clustering vine. Men have forgotten how to make thumb-screws and instruments of torture. Once he has made a book, a loom, or an engine, he can never forget the art. Yea, the very seavenger, emptying a bushel of chaff and one grain of wheat into the streets, will find that mother earth will search out that grain, shelter its root in the soil beneath and its plant in the sun above, and make the chaff and filth to change their form and lend crimson hues to bud and fruit. Therefore, open thy hand, O publicist, knowing that thy handful of to-day will have increased to-morrow, and will seed the world with harvests. Open up thy spring in the desert, for though an enemy stop up the fountain with stones, he can not stay the spring bubbling from the heart of God's earth. Plant vine and tree for weary man's shade and shelter, for the enemy, sharpening his knife to destroy, shall be made a servant to cut away the dead branches from the tree that shall heal the nations. For this is God's world. It is keyed to happiness, not to misery. Vices are waning, and virtues are waxing.—Hillis.

PILGRIM HOME was built for God. A religious work will be carried on in it for the salvation of souls and the healing of diseases without remedies, depending alone on Jesus, who healed all who had faith in His name, as in the Apostles' time. Dr. D. M. Bye claims that after twenty years of success as a specialist for cancers and tumors, the Lord led him to the Oil Cure and for the last eight years the Doctor has been curing all manner of malignant diseases by anointing with oils. The remedy is not only mild and safe, but cures internal as well as external cancers and tumors and gives relief from unceasing pain. Many thousands of bad cases of cancers and tumors have been cured by using Dr. Bye's Oil Treatment and many healed by faith alone. The Doctor has received thousands of good letters from persons cured. Hundreds from ministers and Christian patients are printed in books and papers, which if one will read they will plainly see that surely God's blessing is with the Oil Cure. In the large book there are many half-toned photos showing conditions before and after treatment, which is sent FREE, giving particulars and price of Oil. Its just popularity is shown by the fact that at this time over three thousand patients are taking home treatment. Its great success has caused many counterfeiting imitators, therefore be careful. This country is full of frauds. Note this one thing: Of all the great number who have come to Indianapolis for treatment, not one has yet died on the Doctor's hands; no undertaker has yet received one cent. PRAISE THE LORD. The Doctor firmly believes it won't be long when more persons will be healed at Pilgrim Home by faith alone in Jesus than by oils, yet all have not so great faith and must use the Oil Treatment administered with God's blessing for a cure. Add. Dr. D. M. Bye, Lock Box 25, Indianapolis, Ind.

THE WAY OF THE WORLD.

We have observed that it is the fashion in most all circles of society to feed, curry and water the fat horses; but to let the poor ones get about what we are forced to give them. While a man is down in the world, nobody pays much attention to him. He is poor and obscure, and receives but little attention. Nobody feeds or curries him. But let fortune come his way and smile upon him with wealth, or high distinction, and everybody is ready to stuff his rack with hay and fill his trough with corn. The newspapers emphasize his importance, and public approval crowns him with honors and preferments. He is the observed of observers, and his comings and goings are noted with much pleasure. To entertain him is a genuine delight, and to present him with tokens of esteem is the order of the day. And the only difference between his present and former states is that now he is up in the world, while before he was down in the world and unknown. In his real merit he has not changed a particle. In his first estate he was poor and needed attention, but did not get it; now he is up in the world and can take care of himself, and does not particularly need attention, but it is forced upon him from all quarters. It proves that, after all, there is a good deal of snobbery in human nature. Success is a god at whose shrine there is no lack of suppliants, but failure frightens them all away. The rule ought to be reversed. The poor horse is the one that needs the curry-comb and a well-filled trough; but the fat one is able to take care of himself. So the man who is down in the world is the one who needs to be taken by the hand and lifted to his feet. The rich one, or the one in high esteem, can get along without this aid. Christ came into the world to look after the poor, the lowly, the down-trodden, the oppressed, the helpless. These are still his wards, and he expects us to give them sympathy and encouragement. Let us, therefore, curry, feed and water the poor horses that come our way, as well as those that are fat, well-kept and sleek.—Texas Advocate.

RESOLUTIONS.

Resolutions of fourth Quarterly Conference, Wilson circuit:

We, the Board of Stewards and members of the Quarterly Conference, desire to express our appreciation of the efficient services of the Rev. R. W. Tucker as presiding elder of the Baton Rouge district, and as pastor of Wilson circuit for the quadrennium preceding his presiding eldership. We desire further to express our love, confidence, tenderest esteem in behalf of his faithful services in our midst during the last eight years, and pray God's blessing upon him, his family and his labors wherever he may be called to serve the Master.

Resolved, That this be recorded in the Quarterly Conference Minutes, and published in the NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE.

A Small Beginning.

A little snow ball on the summit of the Alps, rolled up by the winds, moves slowly downward. Gaining in strength and size, it grows rapidly to giant proportions, and finally becomes the frightful avalanche, destroying everything in its path. Consumption begins with a little cough, a trifling pain, a passing flush on the cheeks. This is but the beginning of the avalanche, consumption, that knows no pity, recognizes no distinction. Just at the beginning thousands commit the error of not checking and curing the disease by using MARSDEN'S PECTORAL BALM.

In California.

The Golden State is seriously considering the necessity of quarantining against consumptives. This means that God's fresh air and sunshine, nowhere more entrancing and beautiful than on the Pacific slope, may be denied to the unfortunate sufferers. Thousands have been greatly benefited and many cured by the delicious atmosphere of California, and it appears a most cruel measure, even though sanctioned by medical men.

Many persons now in the advanced stages of consumption, and surely doomed, could have been cured by early resort to that most gracious healing remedy, MARSDEN'S PECTORAL BALM.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From Our Regular Correspondent.)

Victory is in sight for the moral sentiment of the country in the Roberts case. Mr. Roberts was not allowed to take the oath as a member of the House of Representatives, and his right to do so has been referred to a committee, with instructions to investigate the charges against him, including that of being a polygamist, and report to the House. This was all that the opponents of Roberts asked, as they claim to be able to furnish absolute proof of his guilt. There is little doubt that the committee will report against him, and that the House will be practically unanimous in adopting the report of the committee. The vote on the adoption of the resolution for the appointment of the committee does not reflect the sentiment of the members of the House on the Roberts case, because there was a division of opinion as to the proper method of procedure, the minority favoring allowing him to take the oath before the investigation. Those who have made this victory possible do not intend to stop with having Roberts shut out of Congress; they intend to keep up the fight until a constitutional amendment against polygamy is adopted.

President McKinley, in the concluding sentence of that portion of his annual message to Congress dealing with the Philippine Islands, used this language, worthy to be printed in letters of gold in every educational institution under the American flag: "Our flag has never waved over any community but in blessing. I believe the Filipinos will soon recognize the fact that it has not lost its gift of benediction in its world-wide journey to their shores." Is there another head of a great nation who can truthfully say as much?

Senator Lodge has made a suggestion that the Senate create two new committees, to be known as the Committee on Pacific Islands, and the Committee on Relations with Cuba and Porto Rico, which has been well received. The first-named committee would have jurisdiction over legislation affecting the Philippines, Guam, Hawaii, and the island in the Samoan group that will be formally transferred to us as soon as the treaty arranging therefor, which has already been signed by the representatives of the United States, Great Britain, and Germany, goes into effect. These islands being now American territory, matters pertaining to them can not properly be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and many senators think it too suggestive to give the Committee on Territories jurisdiction over this legislation.

Dr. Newell Dwight Hillis delivered the first of the series of lectures arranged by the Y. M. C. A. for this season, his subject being, "John Ruskin's Message to the Twentieth Century." Dr. Hillis declared his belief that Ruskin was "the first prose writer in all of England in the last three centuries," and that his message to the twentieth century was his famous creed that men and women of righteousness were the greatest blessings of a nation. Mr. Justice Brewer, of the United States Supreme Court, introduced Dr. Hillis to the audience, among whom were Secretary and Mrs. Gage, at whose home Dr. Hillis is a guest.

Commissioner of Education Harris, in his annual report, makes some interesting statements about education in the new possessions of the United States. For instance, the report says of Alaskan schools: "The Sitka Industrial School, founded by the Missionary Board of the Presbyterian Church, has accomplished excellent work in educating the young of the Indian and Eskimo tribes, particularly in industrial arts. Other schools under various denominations have either been supplied a teacher, or paid an allowance per pupil." And of Hawaii: "The present status of the educational system of Hawaii is all that can be desired. The school system of the islands has for some years been noted as remarkable for its completeness, even when compared with school systems on the continents of America and Europe." The report says the reported population of Porto Rico is 890,000, of which 500,000 are white; that illiteracy is stated to be 87.4 per cent. of the white and 86.8 per cent. of the colored population, and that a reorganization of the school system of the island is now in progress. Some figures are presented concerning the Philippines, but they all came from Spanish sources, which means that they are unreliable. Perhaps there will be some reliable data concerning those islands available by the time the Commissioner of Education prepares his next annual report.

Secretary Root has been deservedly complimented for the paragraph in his annual report dealing with army canteens. After stating that he agreed with the present construction of the law, he added: "It is, however, questioned by many citizens, and it is very desirable that if Congress does in fact intend to absolutely prohibit the sale of beers and light wine in post exchanges to the soldiers of our army in States where such sale is permitted by law to all other persons, this intention should be expressed in terms which are free from doubt."

Washington, Dec. 6, 1899.

CHARTER OF INCORPORATION OF WHITWORTH FEMALE COLLEGE.

The purposes for which this charter is granted are as follows:

ARTICLE I.

The following-named persons: I. W. Cooper, E. H. Monnger, A. C. McNair, B. F. Jones, J. T. Butler, Frank B. Catching, J. F. Powell, J. M. Morse, I. W. Lampton, Julia R. Love, Addie V. Marshall, J. Wesley Martin, R. L. Harrell, W. W. Simmons, together with the president of said college, the preacher in charge of Brookhaven station, and the presiding elder of the district in which the college is located, are hereby constituted a body corporate and politic, by and under the name and style of Whitworth Female College, and by that name they and their successors may sue and be sued, plead and be impleaded, contract and be contracted with, and have a common seal and break the same at pleasure, and may accept donations of real and personal property for the benefit of the college, and contributions of money or negotiable securities of every kind, in aid of the endowment of such college, and may confer degrees and give certificates of scholarship, and make by-laws for the government of said college and its affairs, as well as for their own government, and do and perform all other acts for the benefit of said institution and the promotion of its welfare, that are not repugnant to the Constitution and By-laws of this State, or of the United States; all of such acts to be under the general direction of the Mississippi Conference of the M. E. Church, South.

ARTICLE II.

The presiding elder of the district in which this college is situated shall be ex-officio president of this body corporate, and as soon after the issuance of this charter as convenient shall call together the persons named in Article I., who shall meet in the city of Brookhaven in this State, and shall complete their organization by the election of a vice-president, secretary and treasurer; and shall prescribe the duties, powers and terms of office of said officers. They shall also select by lot from the said trustees one-half, who shall be trustees of said college for three years and until their successors are elected; and the other half, not so elected, shall continue in office for the term of six years and until their successors are chosen as hereinafter mentioned. Five trustees shall constitute a quorum of this corporation.

ARTICLE III.

The said trustees shall, before the meeting of said Conference next before the expiration of the term of office of any of their members, notify the secretary of said Conference thereof, and the vacancy or vacancies shall be filled by said Conference in such a way and at such time as it may determine, and the persons so elected shall succeed to the office, place, jurisdiction and powers of the trustees whose terms of office have expired. And the said corporation, and the college established by it, shall be subject to the visitorial powers of said Conference at all times, and the said college, its property and effects, shall be the property of said church under the special jurisdiction of said Conference.

ARTICLE IV.

The said trustees, when organized as hereinbefore directed, shall be known by the corporate name set out in Article I. of this charter, and all money, promissory notes and evidences of debt heretofore collected for said college, shall be turned over to, and receipted for, by them in their said corporate name; and all debts heretofore contracted by said college shall be assumed and provided for by this corporation; and the said corporation shall have full power to issue bonds giving security therefor, raise funds, take notes or other securities for the purpose of building, endowing, maintaining, furnishing and equipping said college.

ARTICLE V.

The cost of education shall, as far as practicable, be reduced by said corporation to the lowest point consistent with the efficient operation of said college, and to this end reports shall be made to the said Conference from year to year, and its advice in that behalf taken, and every reasonable effort shall be made to bring a collegiate education within the reach and ability of the poorer classes of this State.

ARTICLE VI.

This corporation shall require as a condition for graduation from said college the completion of the curriculum laid down for colleges by the General Board of Education of the M. E. Church, South.

THE TREMENDOUS CRISIS IN THE EAST.

BY BISHOP WARREN A. CANDLER, D. D., LL.D.

The Roman Catholic Church chooses to occupy a peculiar position among the religious bodies of the world, and must, therefore, receive treatment in accord with its peculiarities. Its head, the Pope of Rome, claims temporal power and a place among the political princes of the earth. Because this claim is set aside by Italy, he is pleased to call himself "the prisoner of the Vatican." His emissaries were ready to claim seats at the recent Peace Conference at the Hague, but their claim was denied. Romanism, by the logic of its pretensions, is also an intolerant faith. Intolerance is of its essence. When it could execute its judgments against dissenters from its tenets it denounced them as heretics and punished them as criminals.

A church having these peculiarities can not be treated with the toleration every good man should accord to such peaceful bodies as the Baptist, Presbyterian, Congregational, Episcopal, or Methodist Churches. They claim no civil power, and extend a brotherly hand to all who love the Lord Jesus. Not so Romanism. It challenges criticism by its political purposes and its religious intolerance. No good man is required to tolerate intolerance, especially when it grasps at the sword of Cæsar to work its ends.

These reflections are suggested by the situation in the Philippines and the posture of affairs in China just now. The conditions in those lands as they affect the people of this country require that the American government should teach Romanism how to keep to its place. When the case is fully understood we have no doubt the American people will see to it that justice is done.

The situation in the Philippines is suggested by the following words of Gen. Funston, recently addressed to an audience gathered at the Leland Stanford University:

"If Congress would drive out the friars and confiscate every inch of church property, the bottom would drop out of the insurrection within one week. The inhabitants of Luzon are completely under church rule."

It appears, then, that American soldiers are slain because Romish friars practice treason and incite insurrection.

More recent than Gen. Funston's utterance is an interview of Archbishop Chapelle, in which he informed the American public that he was about to depart for the Philippines, with the blessing of the Pope and the "sanction" of President McKinley, to appease and conciliate these refractory elements by assurances that the title to church property in the Philippines would be confirmed to them by the government of the United States, when it is remembered that the title to much of this property was really by purchase of the Spanish government, and not by treasure of the Romish Church, and that the government of the United States has succeeded to all the property of Spain in the archipelago, the enormity of this proposition will appear. Must we buy the islands from Spain, and then purchase peace from the friars? This seems to be the idea.

But the case is worse in China, if possible. There our American citizens and missionaries are living virtually under a papal protectorate, backed by France and administered by a mixed court, which is composed of Romish priests and local Chinese officials, with an ultimate appeal to the consuls of France (who are under Romish influence), or to the French minister at Peking. This intolerable situation is of recent date, and has been brought to pass by a diabolical diplomacy as skillful as the Jesuitism which inspired it is unscrupulous.

Some of the effects of all this nefarious arrangement may be gathered from the extracts given below, which are taken from the Shanghai Mercury, of Sept. 29, 1899. The editor gives first this horrible incident of personal assault:

"In a certain place just over the borders of Hupeh, above Kiukiang, a community sent a deputation to a certain mission asking them to open work there, and sending word that they would give a donation for the purpose. The foreigner of that mission sent a native preacher up there to investigate, with the result that it was determined to open a station entirely at the expense of the natives of the place—that is to say, there were to be no foreign funds employed. The Catholics have a place there and a native priest in residence. The Romanists said the Protestants should not open work there, but, of course, no attention was paid to this threat. One of the oldest Protestant native preachers was sent to rent a building, and carried some thirty dollars of the native subscription in his pockets. This preacher has been in connection with his mission for nearly thirty years, and is more than sixty years of age. On the road he was pounced upon by some score, or more, of members of the Roman Church, who robbed him of his money and clothing, smashed his chair, and beat him so unmercifully as to leave him on the road for dead. The man only saved his life by feigning death as he lay bleeding upon the ground. The head of the Romanist band then cut the skin of his face so as to make the blood come, and went to the priest, and reported that he had been badly mauled by the Protestant preacher. This story was reported to the officials. The mandarins acknowledged that these fellows were villains, and that they should be treated as outlaws, and refused to believe that the Protestant preacher had beaten the head of the robbers. You would only need to look at the poor, asthmatic, sixty-odd-years-old preacher to see that he is physically incapable of being able to whip an active lad of ten, much less a stalwart young blood such as he who headed the Romanists. The preacher had with him only one attendant besides his chair-bearers, who bolted at the first sign of trouble. The French priests will not allow the officials to punish these robbers, and the day our informant left Kiukiang a note was put into his hands to say that the French consul had gone up to strengthen the hands of the priest, and to protect the pirates, and to endeavor to lay all the blame on the preacher whom they now seek to incriminate. The officials are now telegraphing and sending special messengers for native Protestants to go up and face the French father and the consul. This the Protestant missionaries have refused to allow them to do. One of the missionaries has the case in hand, and he has been to Shanghai to see the United States consul to find out what can be done. If this be true, it is a flagrant piece of injustice, and we do not see what is to be done to keep things straight."

Discussing another incident, the editor makes the case still more clear. He continues:

"In Kiangsi province a Protestant mission has been receiving extraordinary success. People by the thousands are flocking to their church, and this, although they have done no work there, and although the entire district until the last three years has been intensely anti-foreign. The Roman Church has been very strong, and has carried things for years with a very high hand, so much so that both the officials and people are afraid of them. The most trivial case is magnified, reported to consuls, and even carried to Peking. Crowds of bad and worthless characters go to the Roman Catholics, and are freely taken in by them. These new converts then use foreign influence and power to work their nefarious schemes, and to oppress their neighbors. All this, continued through years, during which they have extorted vast sums from the officials and people in claims and otherwise, has given them a noisome reputation. Many petitions were sent to the Protestants to open work, and they did so, and with the result that multitudes came to them. They have a general idea that they will be under Protestant protection against the Catholics, and they are freely subscribing toward churches and such like."

It is said the American minister "has referred the subject to the headquarters of Protestant missions in the United States," whatever that may mean. This is well enough, but he would better use his diplomatic offices to change the status. It is well enough to ask in defense of expansion, "Who will haul down the flag?" But when Romanism oppresses and persecutes missionaries sent out by American Protestants, it is better to inquire if Rome has not already hauled it down, or left it flying in order to pour contempt upon it.

A "Know-Nothing" crusade is not desirable. An A. P. A. campaign need not be preached; but Protestants should cause the authorities at Washington to understand that Romish aggressions shall not be carried on under the protection of this government. Let it be understood once for all that Romanism has just as many, but no more rights under our government than Presbyterianism, Episcopalianism, Methodism, or any other form of faith. The pope is no more than any other Bishop. Cardinal Gibbons stands on the same level with other ministers of religion, notwithstanding his gandy robes of office.

Another matter: The mighty ferment in China calls for speedy evangelism of that populous land. There dwell one-fourth of all the men and women on the planet. If that huge iceberg shall melt under Protestant preaching, the religious temperature of the whole race will be raised. Moreover, the situation calls for immediate action. Changes have already taken place which make the problem of China more difficult than it was even so short a time as a year ago.

China is the most immense missionary field on the earth, and is ripe for the harvest. The United States is the richest nation that is now, or ever was, on the earth, and its wealth is mostly in Protestant hands. These two facts point to the possibility of an immeasurable triumph through our generosity or an unprecedented crime by our stinginess. No people ever confronted a greater opportunity or a more weighty responsibility.

This tremendous crisis in the East calls for our courage as citizens and for our consecration as Protestants. As citizens, we must teach the Romanists to keep their place. As Christians, we must learn the high uses of our means in this epochal hour. As servants of our Lord, we must act and act at once. "The night cometh, when no man can work."—Nashville Advocate.

Five minutes spent in the companionship of Christ every morning—aye, two minutes, if it is face to face and heart to heart—will change the whole day, will make every thought and feeling different, will enable you to do things for His sake that you would not have done for your own sake, or for any one's sake.—Drummond.

LUCY KING'S RIDDLE.

(Some years ago a prominent merchant of Trenton, N. J., said to an eccentric lady, named Lucy King, that, if taking the subject from the Bible, she would compose a riddle which he could not solve, he would give her a handsome prize. She won the prize with the riddle given below. Perhaps some of our readers are wiser than the New Jersey merchant. We shall see.—EDITOR.)

1. My body God did make complete
But without arms, or legs, or feet.
My ways and acts he did control,
But to my body he gave no soul.

2. Adam God made out of dust,
But thought best to make me first;
So I was made before the man
To answer God's most holy plan.

3. A living being I became,
And Adam gave to me my name;
I from his presence then withdrew,
And more of Adam never knew.

4. I did my Maker's law obey,
And from it never went astray.
Thousands of miles I go in fear,
But seldom do on earth appear.

5. For purposes wise which God did see,
He put a living soul in me.
A soul from me my God did claim,
And took from me that soul again.

6. And when that soul from me had fled,
I was the same as when first made;
And without hands or feet or soul,
I travel on from pole to pole.

7. I labor hard by day and night;
To modern man I give great light.
Thousands of people, young and old,
Do by my death great light behold.

8. Nor right nor wrong can I conceive;
The Scriptures I can not believe.
Although my name therein is found,
They are to me an empty sound.

9. Nor fear of death doth trouble me.
True happiness I ne'er shall see.
To heaven I shall never go,
Nor to the grave, nor hell below.

10. Now, when these lines you surely read,
Go search your Bible with all speed;
For that my name is written there,
I honestly to you declare.

READY TO GO.

My summons may come in the morning,
Or the deep, peaceful slumber of night;
It may come with a lingering warning,
Or as quick as a flash of sunlight;
It may come while I m thinking of heaven;
It may come while my thoughts are astray;
While I m sitting alone in my dwelling,
Or greeting some friend on the way.
What the day or the hour when the bidding
Comes to me I never can know,
And I pray at the call of the Master
I may answer, "I'm ready to go."

REV. R. L. MOORE.

The subject of this sketch, Rev. R. L. Moore, a member and minister of the Methodist Free Church, was born near Holly Springs, Miss., Dec. 13, 1838, and departed this life at his home near Myrtle, Miss., Aug. 5, 1899.

Bro. Moore was happily married to Miss S. J. Dodds, Sept. 7, 1858. From this union sprang three affectionate daughters and a devoted son who mourn with their sorrow-stricken mother the death of their father. But their sorrow is not one of bitterness, but of loneliness.

Bro. Moore was converted to Christ and joined the M. E. Church, South, July, 1860, under the preaching of our revered Bro. J. H. Brooks—the text being John iii, 8. In 1851 he entered the Confederate Army and bravely fought for what he thought was right. When the unhappy struggle was over he returned home, and, though financially broken up and somewhat demoralized by the war, he went to his farm and worked to make a support for his young wife and growing family. In this he succeeded well. In the year 1874 he was powerfully revived in a great meeting conducted by Bro. J. M. Mitchell, who was preacher in charge of what was then known as the Hickory Flat circuit in the Holly Springs district, North Mississippi Conference.

Soon after this great revival Bro. Moore felt he was called to the ministry, and immediately made application to the Quarterly Conference for license to preach, which was granted him in the Fall of 1874. From this time on he was a close student of the Bible and other good books. He preached often and was of great help to his pastor. In 1881, for reasons best known to himself, Bro. Moore left our church and joined the Methodist Free Church, of which he was an honored and faithful member and minister at his death. He was a good provider and gave all his children a good English education. He had a happy Christian home, which was always open to the preachers of all denominations. Though he had a nervous temperament, yet he had a sweet and charitable spirit.

Bro. Moore's death was caused from catarrh of the throat, from which he suffered intensely for several months. Though his sufferings were long and severe, yet he bore them with great patience and Christian fortitude. He would often say to his family, "The Lord has done a great deal more for me than I could have asked or expected, and now I am ready, willing and waiting for the blessed summons to the home above."

Bro. Moore was a kind husband, a tender father, a good citizen, a devoted Christian. I knew him well and loved him as a brother. May the grace of our blessed Lord comfort and sustain the bereaved family and many friends!

MEDITATIONS!

MR EDITOR: I am away out here in the country, surrounded by a primeval forest, but not like the forest of Dante's Inferno:

Where no track
Of steps had worn a way. Not verdant there
The foliage, but of dusky hue; not light
The boughs, and tapering, but with knars deformed,
And matted thick: fruits there were none,
But thorns instead, with venom fill'd."

Our forest is the cool, shady home of the sylvian nymphs:

Where stately trees grow,
And sweet fountains flow;
Where beautiful birds sing,
And make the woods with music ring;
Where the nimble squirrels play and chatter,
And make acorns and nuts clatter;
Where sweet flowers richly bloom,
And fill the air with their perfume.

I live in the country because my people live here, and thus we are more closely identified. I love to get as near my people as I can, and try to know as much of them as I can, and sympathize with them all I can. We have some of the best people to be found in the State up here in North Mississippi, and I love them. My association with them has been very pleasant. I came among them two years ago a stranger; now I feel akin to them all. No people in city or town are more refined or polite. But it has not been all joy and peace:

"For ever since the world was made,
Sometimes there's sunshine, sometimes shade:
Sometimes the gentle, blowing breeze
Will sway the flowers and bend the trees.

"Sometimes the lightning's dart and flash,
Sometimes the thunder's roll and crash,
Sometimes there's peace and joy and love
Showered down from heaven up above."

So we have had sickness, sorrow, disappointment, and death. I have stood on the border of the Beulah land. "And not a wave of trouble rolled across my peaceful breast." I am so glad that death has no sting for a Christian. We have buried some of our best and most time-honored people this year. But God has been good to us, and we have had many expressions of divine love and mercy. Some precious souls have been added to the church, and others made happy in trusting God fully.

Well, another Conference is near at hand, and we that are yet alive, and can, must go up to roll-call. I thought last Spring I would never hear the roll called again, but God has spared me, and if I live a little while longer, I will see the dear brethren who asked God to let me live longer. No, I can not see all of them, for some of them have crossed the Stygian river.

Bro. Jones, patient and meek, has gone from his long suffering, and Bro. Gibbs, consecrated and true, and dear Bro. Phillips, for many years faithful, loving, and full of good deeds, and, last, Bro. Lipscomb, zealous, true, and powerful for good—all gone before. They have laid down their labors and entered into the joys of their Lord. Precious is the memory of these dear brethren. Peace be to their ashes and joy to their spirits. May their mantle of faith and love fall on us who remain, and may we press the battle till we hear the welcome command, "Enough; come up higher!"

Oh, what a blessing and inspiration it is to go to Conference and meet our loved fellow-workers! May we all go in the spirit of the Master, and may he go with us! There is very important work to be done there. Plans must be laid for another year, and a great deal depends on how that work is done. Then the preachers and their family must be provided for. All can not get good, easy places. Some will, and some will not; some will be pleased, and some will not. My, what a solemn responsibility rests on our Bishop and his cabinet! May God strengthen them and lead them into all wisdom, love, and truth, and may all be done for the glory of his holy name, and for the advancement of his kingdom!

THE PREACHER'S HOME.

It has been beautifully said that man's ideal is God's reality. In the beginning he gave us an example, creating the beautiful earth for our habitation. From mountain-top o'er valleys, plains and forests—on out to the boundless seas—the eye is ravished with beauty. Just a little dot of desert-land by way of contrast. And again, in the apocalyptic vision of our heavenly home, we see mansions of stately proportions, builded on streets of gold, and all the crowns of earth robbed of their jewels to adorn the gates that lead into that fair city.

Man, who was made in His own image, and endowed with His nature, has ever been reaching out after high ideals. In music, in painting, in art, in all things, God is the teacher, and the children of men the pupils striving for perfection.

Suppose just now that we could go one step further in science, and throw a flash-light upon the mind, photographing the impressions there created by the utterance of that one word—Home.

Probably the wandering itinerant may be thinking of the place where innocent childhood and happy maidenhood were spent, where father and mother, sister and brother all contributed their share in the home-making; where so many years were spent in the building of it, and so many silent acts of love and sacrifice helped to make it an ideal home of comfort and rest to the weary soul—that it has become a part of her life. As we look back upon that period where years of concentrated labor was spent to make the home a center of influence, a type of the heavenly one in all things, we are glad we appreciated our opportunity, for it is ours now, only in a limited sense. There is just one way, and only one, that we can still use this privilege in all its broadest meaning. We must realize that we belong to one great family, and that every Methodist minister's wife is our sister; that we are ever building for each other, and there is that scattereth and yet increaseth.

The first object of the Home Mission Society is the providing of comfortable homes for the preachers of our land; so it behooves us in coming together to determine whether it could yet be written of each of us, "She hath done what she could." We dream that if our Lord were only here in our midst, we would delight to honor him, to lay our richest treasures at his feet; but how often it is forgotten that his ministers are his representatives here, and he has said, "Inasmuch as ye did it to the least of these, ye did it unto me."

It may be truly said that the preacher's home indicates the estimation and appreciation of Christ's ministers in that community. Where poor material is accepted to go in the construction of the parsonage, and little attention is paid to its architecture, in that place the right spirit is sadly lacking.

The first thing to consider, however, is the location of the parsonage. It is a question open to discussion; but, as a general rule, the voice of our sisterhood, echoed by the little ones, will be lifted in appeal for a home under the protecting shadows of the church. Think of the many meetings that mother must attend, being compelled in many instances to carry the little ones with her, or leave them at home with a more or less trustworthy servant. Surely in either case her obligation as mother and church worker would be made easier by being only a few steps from the church. In case of sickness it is especially desirable that the home should not be far away.

If it is possible, the plan should be made by a good architect; and if the parsonage is to be built by our help, by loan or donation, I think it would be wise to have the plan submitted to a committee appointed by our Board for that purpose, for it has been clearly demonstrated that eloquent preachers and conscientious laymen sometimes have very poor ideas about the construction of a house.

It should be large enough for the average family, and a room to spare for the occasional guest, if possible; and a quiet corner-room fitted up for the pastor's study, being well-lighted and suitably furnished, remembering that a book-case and desk are a necessity. A community will be certain to be well paid for this trouble. The pastor will be stimulated to careful work, and will be properly equipped for it. Much thought should be given to the convenience and comfort of the dining-room and kitchen, for in many cases there is not even the "maid of all work" to lighten the labors of the preacher's wife; and surely she must conserve her strength to meet the many demands made upon her.

This all properly comes under the supervision of the W. H. M. S. Yea, more. To the individual or combined efforts of our good women we must look for proper furnishing, for, in the economy of our itinerant host, it is inexpedient to own much household goods. The worn traveler feels her heart grow light when she enters the new home and finds warmth and good cheer within—neat, substantial furniture; clean, comfortable beds awaiting her. She feels that the angel of love has been there, and she inwardly resolves that she will merit such kindness, and will do more toward keeping that home sweet and attractive than she has ever done in the past, for surely such loving care deserves appreciation. She need not await with such anxiety her good husband's return to know if the freight has arrived, for she sees around her everything that is necessary for the comfort of her family. Tears may be falling, but they are tears of thanksgiving that her lot has been cast with people who show their love for God's servant in a practical way.

It takes continual work and care to keep a home in repair. But it should be our pride and pleasure to leave each one in better condition than we found it, and to leave some substantial reminder that we have passed that way.

These homes are to become the centre of light and influence. Shall it not be through yon and me—rather through us—through preacher and people? The motto of my native State is very applicable, "United we stand, divided we fall."

If this message is anything, it is opportune. The time is close at hand when we must be ready to say good-bye to old friends and home, and go we know not where.

Let us return home and, with the good women of the H. M. S., prepare as for the coming of a bride, making our preparations according to the capacity of our resources. The reflex action of such work is wonderful. It is not until we have expended ourselves that we understand, "It is more blessed to give than to receive."

This is such a busy life, and sometimes we grow so weary; but "the toils of the road will seem nothing when we get to the end of the way;" and, dear co-workers, draw strength for your work from the thought that our Savior has gone to prepare a place of rest for us, and eye hath not seen, ear hath not heard, neither hath it entered into the heart of man to conceive what God hath prepared for us. SELF-DENIAL WEEK AT GRENADA COLLEGE.

The young ladies of Grenada College received a great blessing during the Week of Prayer and Self-denial, set apart by the Woman's Board of Foreign Missions. Our president's wife was the inspiration of the movement, and it was through her Christian influence and loving guidance that this week proved to be a refreshing season to many who were thirsting for the waters of everlasting life. It was she who arranged the self-denial tables in the dining-room, and my heart overflows with gratitude when I tell the readers of our column that one table was sufficient to accommodate all those who were unwilling to enter into this plan.

There was no compulsion; simply a voluntary desire upon the part of faculty and student body to enter upon this season of prayer and self-denial. Some were unable to do so on account of physical infirmity, but they gave their hearty sanction to the movement and brought gifts of love to His altar. No meat or dessert was allowed on any of the denial tables, and the money accruing therefrom was credited to the "May McIntosh" Society. Every morning a member of this society conducted devotional exercises in the chapel, following closely the program prepared by the Woman's Missionary Advocate.

On Thanksgiving day a special service was held at ten o'clock. A holy stillness pervaded the room when the first girl acknowledged God's wonderful power over her heart and life, and promised unswerving allegiance to his dear cause. One by one, like pearls slipping from a broken string, did these dear girls praise God for his compassionate love, and as gleaming pearls are hidden away in a casket for safe keeping, so we pray that their lives may be hidden in God's love, and as long as they abide in the secret place of the Most High they will dwell forever in the palace of a King. I never felt the invisible presence more wonderfully. Like Jacob of old, my heart cried out, "Surely the Lord is in this place." Through nearly every testimony there rang out a clear, full note of joy and thankfulness for the beautiful Christian influence that permeates every niche and crevice of Grenada College. After this sacred hour, that strengthened the faint-hearted, the girls and teachers attended the Presbyterian Church, where union services were held. As it was Thanksgiving we had no abstaining at dinner. A bountiful repast was enjoyed by all. On each table was placed a receptacle for a thank-offering. This amounted to about seven dollars. After dinner the girls were divided into groups. Ladened with baskets and Bibles, they started forth upon errands of love and missions of mercy. No one was forgotten that day. Even the prisoners in jail were visited. A blessed prayer meeting was held with them in bonds of the law, and fettered with the iron bonds of sin. As the shades of eventide darkened the shadowed places, these tired, but happy girls went home through the purpling twilight with angels of grace lingering about them, and through the limitless realms of the air, through the streets of the City Immortal, was wafted the fragrance of these deeds done "In His Name." These precious girls realized the quiet, sweet joy of a duty well performed; also the uselessness of searching for fruitage forbidden when the golden pomegranates of Eden are ripening within their grasp.

Our season ends to-night—Friday. We have fifteen dollars and a sweet sense of divine ownership that surpasses all the riches of this earth. With shielded eyes we look upward beyond the sunset bar, beyond the evening star, and see the yellow glow of jasper, the violet tinge of amethyst, the foundation and capstone of that city not made with hands, eternal in the heavens.

The Christian Life.

THE GOSPEL OF EMPHASIS.

There are people who do not seem to clearly discern the difference between noise and power. Undoubtedly power is often accompanied with noise, but there are still greater powers which work in silence. The thunderbolt has power, but the power of the sunbeam is far greater than that of the thunderbolt. Much of the noise made by machinery is due to imperfect construction, or to defects and derangement of the parts. An engine that rattles and clatters may not have a tenth part of the power of one which is perfect in its fittings and appointments, and moves without jostling or rattling, but with a thousand horse-power. So in the gospel, men who but imperfectly comprehend the truth of Christ and the ways of God are sometimes far more demonstrative than others whose understanding is more complete and accurate. The gospel of the Son of God is no more dependent upon thunder and lightning and earthquake than the seed which is cast into the ground. When once the Word of God is sown and its vital energies have taken root in the human soul, its original work may go on in sunshine or in storm, in silence or amid the tumult, and the day of eternity alone can reveal the full extent of that mighty power which "wrought in Christ when it raised him from the dead," and which still works in the hearts of all who know his grace and share his love. No human excitement, spasmodic, struggling or artificial zeal; no politic craft working unseen to accomplish personal ends, can take the place of this divine, eternal power by which God works in the hearts of the sons of men. It is not eloquence, it is not emphasis, it is not fuss and noise and fury; it is the hidden and divine energy of him "who worketh all things according to the counsel of his own will," and whose silent, but beneficent, energies have brightened and blessed a lost world and reconciled a wandering race to God.—Exchange.

GENUINE SYMPATHY.

It is of the greatest moment that we exhibit tenderness in dealing with those who are in distress. Let it be admitted that the grief is in consequence of errors that might have been avoided. Who made us the authorized agents of swift punishment? How unreasonable to think that burdens can be lifted from the sorrowing in this way. It is often the case that self-reproach is sufficiently natural to a soul plunged in grief, without adding anything in word or look.

When Job was obliged to listen to such suggestions that fell from the lips of his false friends like poisoned arrows, his reply was a manly revolt out of his deepest nature—a revolt against that cold, censorious method with which sufferers are even now sometimes met in their helplessness: "I have heard many such things: miserable comforters are ye all. Shall vain words have an end? . . . I also could speak as ye do: if your soul were in my soul's stead, I could heap up words against you."

Like our great "Burden-bearer," we must, in a true sense, take upon our own hearts the sorrow that we would relieve. Here is no room for the conventional or the mere professional. Jesus entered the deepest depths of every sorrow. Our experience, unlike his, must of necessity be partial. But, then, if our sympathies are truly genuine, and if our hearts are open toward all forms of suffering, we will be able to bear for others—if not in the divinely perfect way, yet in our own human measure.—Exchange.

ONE SIN.

There was but one crack in the lantern, and the wind has found it out and blown out the candle. How great a mischief one unguarded point of character may cause us! One spark blew up the magazine and shook the whole country for miles around. One leak sank the vessel and drowned all on board. One wound may kill the body. One sin destroys the soul.

It little matters how carefully the rest of the lantern is protected; the one point which is damaged is quite sufficient to admit the wind. And so it little matters how zealous the man may be in a thousand things if he tolerates one darling sin; Satan will find the flaw and destroy all his hopes.

The strength of a chain is measured not by the strongest, but by its weakest link, for if the weakest snaps, what is the use of the rest? Satan is a close observer and knows exactly where our weak points are; we have need of very much watchfulness, and we have great cause to bless our merciful Lord, who prayed for us that our faith fail not.

Either our pride, or our sloth, our ignorance, our anger, or our lust, would prove our ruin unless grace interposed; any one of our sensual faculties might admit the foe—yea, our virtues and graces might be the gate of entrance to our enemies. O Jesus! if thou hast indeed bought me with thy blood, be pleased to keep me by thy power even unto the end.—C. H. Spurgeon.

PROFITABLE BIBLE READING.

In spite of all our helps and methods of study, we have a strong conviction that our young people are not as familiar with the Bible as they ought to be. How few have a knowledge of the times and occasions of the writing of the books of the Bible, or could describe their general contents! How few can quote the Scriptures which teach and support the doctrines they believe! The old way of committing proof texts may have been faulty, by reading special meanings into passages, and yet it was better than the dim, indefinite views which so many have. The more we read and study the Bible, the greater is our enjoyment and interest in its careful perusal. But the Bible should not be read merely as one studies history or science. We should read for spiritual help and the inspiration of our faith. Every Christian should be able to say, "Thy word have I hid in mine heart, that I might not sin against thee."—Christian Guardian.

THE ONE ALTOGETHER LOVELY.

If you wear the livery of Christ, you will find Jesus so meek and lowly of heart that you will find rest unto your souls. He is the most magnanimous of captains. There never was his like among the choicest of princes. He is always to be found in the thickest part of the battle. When the wind blows cold, he always takes the bleak side of the hill. The heaviest end of the cross lies ever on his shoulders. If he bids us carry a burden, he carries it also. If there is any which is gracious, generous, kind, and tender, yea, lavish and superabundant in love, you always find it in him. His service is life, peace, joy. Oh, that you would enter on it at once! God help you to enlist under the banner of Jesus Christ!—"Last Words of Rev. C. H. Spurgeon."

In our experience of temptation, conflict, sorrow, and fear, when burdened with responsibilities and worn with care, and in the closing moments of earthly life, Christ will ask that we may receive the grace we need, and at last be received to glory. Blessed be God for the hope of heaven through him who ever liveth to make intercession for us!—Robert F. Sample.

IN MEMORIAM.

MRS. MARY BANGS MAGRUDER.

On Tuesday, Nov. 14, 1899, at her home in Baton Rouge, Mrs. Mary Bangs Magruder fell asleep in Jesus. By nature, and through grace, she was a remarkable woman. Some account of her life and estimate of her character is eminently fitting.

She was born in Newburg, N. Y., Feb. 15, 1818. At nearly eighty-two years of age she died in full possession of her faculties. She came of noble Methodist stock. Her father, Rev. Heman Bangs, and uncle, Dr. Nathan Bangs, were both men of conspicuous ability and extensive usefulness in the M. E. Church in the earlier years of this century. She was reared in the church by godly parents, and in her youth knew a number of the choice spirits of Methodism in those days. Such men as Dr. Wilbur Fisk and Bishop Hedding she knew well. Her early associations were ever fresh in memory, and made equally profound impressions upon her character.

On Nov. 22, 1837, she was married to Mr. W. H. N. Magruder, a young Mississippian, who had been a student of the Wesleyan University at Middletown, Ct. Coming South, their first home was on a plantation in the State of Mississippi. Later Prof. Magruder entered upon his life-work as a teacher. After leaving Mississippi their home was in Jackson, La., until they moved to Baton Rouge, where, for over forty years, Mrs. Magruder spent her useful and devout life. In coming to the South, Sister Magruder was again the friend and associate of many of the noblest men and women of our church. She was privileged to know and hear such men as William Winans and Benjamin Drake, and others whose names are in the Lamb's book of life. For nearly sixty-two beautiful years she fulfilled the duties of wife and mother with Christian fidelity, and magnified the opportunities of domestic life and its most gracious hospitalities. Many students of other days and ministers of the gospel, who were the privileged guests of that home, will recall the quiet poise and sweet dignity of her place there. She became the mother of a large family. Most of her children have preceded her to the world of spirits, but there remain four sons, with their venerable father, to mourn her loss and hold in precious memory her life.

Sister Magruder was a woman of active sympathy with the practical interests of life. Nearly everything worth considering interested her. She enjoyed life. If there was a morbid element in her character, I could never detect it. Her interests were not restricted, and her mind was clear and active to the end. She was fully alive to the work of the church. In her old age she remained the faithful and efficient president of one of the ladies' societies in the church. Just a few days before her death she sent a message of exhortation to her fellow-workers. Her character was balanced; she had no eccentricities. There was a serene rest in her face. Her actions never suggested a restless mind. She had no fear of circumstances, and was not governed by the fortuitons. She was strong, but it was the peculiar strength of a disciplined womanhood. "God's gentleness had made her great."

In Sister Magruder was expressed that singular blending of the New England character with Southern characteristics. She came here with a noble nature and training, and assimilated our very best. Her religious life and character was normal. She was converted and joined the M. E. Church when about fourteen years of age. For sixty-eight years she followed the Master with unfaltering loyalty. She was soundly converted. She told me in her last illness that she had never doubted her conversion. Such a life as hers was only possible upon the basis of a clear knowledge of acceptance with God. She was devoted to the Bible. She read the Scriptures with an understanding heart, and believed them as the oracles of God.

As the last days came there was a quiet majesty in the composure of her spirit. She literally had no preparation to make; as she herself said, that was done long ago. In a last conversation she spoke to me of her peace and of the blessings of God which she had enjoyed all her life, of her willingness to go and calm rest in God, and finished the conversation, saying, "Bless the Lord, O my soul." Her work was finished, and now the Master's work in her is complete, for she beholds him face to face, and is satisfied, being awake in his likeness.

GONE HOME.

Mrs. Sallie V. Smith, wife of Rev. J. H. Smith, of the North Mississippi Conference, passed from earth to the mansion prepared by her Lord for her in her Father's house, Oct. 24, 1899. She died full of faith, requesting her friends and loved ones not to weep for her, as she was going home to enjoy the treasures she had duly laid up in life.

She was the daughter of Enoch and Ann Stuart, and was born near Lagrange, Tenn., May 25, 1843. While she was a child her parents moved to Coahoma county, Miss., where she was reared to womanhood. She was born the second time, of the Holy Spirit, when about fourteen years old, and united with the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, at old Mount Moriah Church, now the town of Clarksdale, Miss. Her conversion was clear and sound, and she ever after lived faithful to her vows, and was a true witness for God by both word and deed. Her only daughter says of her, "Mama lived for the pleasure of others." Everyone who knew Sister Smith bears a like testimony to her unselfish devotion. She was sick for many months, which were mainly spent in the home of her kind and devoted sister, Mrs. Spotwood of Lyon, Miss., where she died. Though all the time a great sufferer, she did not murmur or complain, but was a model of patience, constantly concerned not to burden others with her suffering and care for her.

She was buried in the cemetery at Clarksdale, just by the spot where she first gave her heart to God, and her hand and name to his church. The funeral was attended by a large company of relatives and friends.

She was thrice married. The first time was to Rev. Thos. M. Melugen, of the Memphis Conference, Dec. 30, 1862. He died April 2, 1866. July 5, 1869, she married the second time to Mr. W. A. Gibson. He died Nov. 30, 1880; and Dec. 18, 1884, she was again married to Bro. J. H. Smith.

She was the mother of only two children, both the fruit of her second marriage. The first born died in infancy; the second, Miss Mattie Gibson, now a young lady, lives to mourn her great loss. Her stepfather says of her, "She was a dutiful and affectionate daughter to her mother." A fact that should give her comfort. All who have known her bear testimony that Sister Smith was a true and faithful wife, mother, and neighbor, and that she filled the difficult place of the wife of an itinerant Methodist preacher well, and was ever a true adviser and helpmeet to her husband. She shared his labors, and suffered the self denial and hardships that befall the itinerant's wife, not only without complaint, but with joy and gladness which she in manner, word, and deed proved to all. We can truly say, "She hath done what she could," and "she is not dead, but sleepeth" in the grave, awaiting the hour when she shall hear her Divine Lord and Redeemer's voice, and shall come forth to everlasting life. The disembodied spirit has already heard the applauding voice of the Father, saying, "Well done, thou good and faithful servant: thou hast been faithful over a few things; I will make thee ruler over many; Enter thou into the joy of thy Lord."

A Hindoo believing in the transmigration of souls, ate no animal food, because in destroying even a worm he might be destroying the body occupied by an ancestor. A traveler coming upon the Brahmin taking his vegetable meal, told him it was impossible to avoid destruction of animal life and, to prove it, focused a microscope on the fruit the Brahmin was eating. That pious person drew back horrified at the living forms he saw. What did he do? Throw away the fruit? Not he! He smashed the microscope and went on with his meal.

There are people who are suffering with weak lungs. They have an obstinate cough, are weak, emaciated, hopeless. They have been taught there's no hope for them. Some one puts into their hands one of Dr. Pierce's books or advertisements and through this medium they see healthy, happy men and women, who declare that their lungs had been weak, they had been racked by coughs, had been emaciated, feeble, hopeless, and were positively and permanently cured by Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. These cures can be numbered by scores of thousands.

Are you sick? Will you throw aside the advertisement, break the microscope, or will you make one effort for health?

We do not recollect having seen anywhere a better recipe for becoming wise than that of Solomon: "He that walketh with wise men shall be wise;" and to empasize this he asserts, "The companion of fools shall be destroyed."—Selected.

"Great occasions do not make heroes or cowards; they simply unveil them to the eyes of men. Silently and imperceptibly as we wake or sleep, we grow and wax strong, we grow and wax weak, and at last some crisis shows us what we have become."

Every man can help on the world's work more than he knows of. What we want is the single eye, that we may see what our work is, the humility to accept it, however lowly, the faith to do it for God, the perseverance to go on till death.—Norman McLeod.

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

We had the pleasure of attending the recent session of the Louisiana Conference at Monroe. Our time being taken up with official business, we were so fortunate as to be able to utilize the deft pen of Rev. F. S. Parker in reporting the proceedings. Bishop Galloway's presidency was up to his usual high standard. We have never seen the business of an Annual Conference move more expeditiously or more smoothly. The session was pleasant and harmonious in a remarkable degree. Several magnates from abroad were present. Dr. G. D. French represented the American Bible Society in a speech replete with information concerning the work of the Society. Dr. Barbee made a forceful presentation of the great interest which he has in charge. The church extension cause was ably represented by Dr. P. H. Whisner. Dr. Hoss presented the claims of the Nashville Advocate in an able and witty speech which elicited hearty applause. Bishop Galloway's address at the Educational Rally was superb, and so was his address to the class for admission. The collection for the Twentieth Century Fund amounted to something over $2,300.

During our stay we had the pleasure of hearing two good sermons—one by Rev. W. W. Drake, the other by Rev. J. M. Henry. Monroe entertained the Conference royally. Dr. Pierce makes an admirable Conference host. The Conference passed resolutions strongly commending the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, and urging vigorous effort for an extension of its circulation.

With our genial friend, Rev. Wm. Schuhle, as co-guest, we had the good fortune to be assigned to the hospitable home of our good friends and former parishioners, Bro. and Sister J. E. Gibbs. Our association with this elegant Christian family was most delightful.

THE LOUISIANA CONFERENCE—MONROE.

To a large part of the membership of a Methodist Conference its annual sessions become registers of growth and marks of change for better—or for worse, it may be. Some of us who have hardly been allowed a place as yet among the older and more solid portions of the body, can trace the outlines of the history of the Conference by the events and character of the dozen, or more, sessions that have been convened since we looked with mingled wonder and admiration upon one of these unique assemblages of men of one work, and received our initiation into the mysteries of a system whose precise working has in these dozen years become familiar in every part, not less, but more, wonderful. The statistics to follow will afford comparisons near and remote as to material prosperity of the church, and as to membership. Figures are important, and the great accuracy and fullness of those provided for by the Methodist system afford an excellent basis for much important study. Some things figures do not tell. That the spirit of devotion, of brotherly love, of loyalty to the obligations of their calling, is vigorous; that jealousy for the honor of the church and the purity of the ministry, hopefulness for the outcome of all the difficult, delicate and important enterprises committed to them; that unity of purpose and concord of thought obtain throughout, we can safely say.

A considerable improvement in equipment for the work one would suppose upon the part of the younger members; a growth in holiness and larger experience makes the faces of the old men beautiful and their words wise. The body becomes larger year by year, and the winnowing process of trial becomes more thorough. The church can count upon a better ministry as the number of young men offering themselves for the ministry comes nearer to filling the need of the whitening harvest field.

After all that has been said upon the subject of Conference examinations, we venture to assert that the young men have been stimulated to more thorough work, and that the congregations to be served will have no complaint to make about the strengthened mental fibre, and larger information, and better teaching that must result from the so-called hardship of more accurate and thorough examinations.

As for the city of Monroe, when the Conference session was held, evidences of growth are on every hand. The cotton compresses, sawmills, brick-yards, car-shops, mercantile corporations, banks, and proposed cotton mill, compose very large business interests, owned almost entirely by citizens of Monroe. But in churches, more than in any other particular, is there an enhancement. A Presbyterian Church two years old, costing $14,000, is a thing of beauty and convenience, and the substantial fraternity of pastor and congregation have converted it into a Methodist Church for the present. Our own new church-building was to have been completed for the Conference session, but is still without ceiling or furnishing. It was begun three years ago under the pastorate of Rev. E. N. Evans, and is to cost $18,000. It is of the Romanesque style, has amphitheatrical auditorium, lecture-room opening into main room, class-rooms, and all the conveniences of the modern church plant. Dr. Pierce, the present pastor, has been very successful in raising money to pay off the local indebtedness, and the work will now be carried to completion. It is rarely that a man succeeds during the first year of his pastorate in winning the esteem, confidence and affection of his people as completely as Dr. Pierce has since his coming to Monroe.

Bishop Galloway is with us fresh from Twentieth Century triumphs in Arkansas. From the three Conferences there held by him he reports as subscribed at Conference above $15,000. The anniversary of the Board of Education was held Friday evening. Rain diminished the attendance, but from those present a subscription of $1,200 was obtained. (This amount was increased to $2,340 the following day by an appeal on the Conference floor.) The addresses were by Dr. P. H. Whisner and Bishop Galloway. Enthusiasm and information go together in this enterprise. Universal Methodism has caught the spirit of thank-offering, and Louisiana will not fall behind.

The easy and rapid flow of Conference business almost exhausted the roll under Question 20, "Are all the preachers blameless in their life and official administration?" during morning of the first day. The general summary of the presiding elders in most cases showed progress on the several districts. Dr. Keener, of the New Orleans district, said that, notwithstanding the commercial quarantine, the district showed an advance. Mr. Tucker reported a very considerable financial improvement on the Baton Rouge district. Dr. Carter stated that on the Opelousas district finances were better, and three new churches had been built. Dr. Parker said that the preachers on the Alexandria district had wrought well and faithfully. Old church buildings had been replaced by new ones, parsonages had been improved, and one new one built. Dr. Sawyer reported a very successful year on the Shreveport district. Five or six charges reported the finances in full this year, as against one in full last year, and two-thirds of the preachers had gotten all the collections. Mr. Crews reported a good year on the Arcadia district. Six hundred conversions had been reported, and a net gain of 350; several charges were in excess of the benevolent assessments. New churches and parsonages had been built, and old debts paid. Mr. Harper reported a good year on the Delhi district, attended by spiritual advance and revivals.

The touching remarks of the superannuates, as their names were called, were heard with reverence by their brethren who are still in the ranks. But three of the veterans of the cross will answer no more. Thomas B. White, Joseph H. Stone and Lewis A. Reed had died during the year. Suitable memoirs will appear. J. White Davis had died in the active work. The venerable Reynolds S. Trippett was represented by letter. Bishop Galloway spoke of having seen him at his home in Doncaster, England, and having visited historic Epworth in his company two years before, while fraternal messenger to the English Wesleyan Conference. T. S. Randle offered himself again for effective service.

The Conference was specially favored by distinguished visitors this year. At Mansfield, last year, we were entirely ignored by the connectional fraternity. On this fact it was remarked, "You must be either perfected or rejected." Dr. J. D. Barbee, senior Book Agent, was introduced to the Conference, and later made a capital speech on thinking and reading. Rev. George D. French, of the Tennessee Conference, district secretary of the American Bible Society, was introduced, and later made an appeal for support of this cause. His request that an assessment be laid upon the Conference for the Bible Society was not granted, as it was thought that there were assessments enough, and doubted whether such a measure would add to the contributions. The Louisiana Conference was long accustomed to the visits of the lamented Dr. Morton. His successor in office, Dr. P. H. Whisner, visited us, and if he failed to fill Dr. Morton's place among us, it was only because we have not yet learned to know him as well. His addresses on education and church extension were well received. Dr. Hoss, of the Nashville Christian Advocate, was in Louisiana for the first time. He is a mountaineer, and has hitherto stayed away from the flats, not of choice, as he assured the Conference, but "being let hitherto." He charmed everybody; delighted, instructed and quickened the whole Conference by his address, which was a sort of apologia pro vita suo as editor. His theme brought him to touch upon almost everything pertaining to the Methodist ministry. Dr. Hoss also, with Dr. Boiling, addressed the missionary anniversary meeting.

The church extension anniversary had to be observed at an afternoon session, but was fairly well attended for an afternoon meeting. Mr. Spurgeon, I think it was, who asserted that the devil was the originator of afternoon services. Conference dinners are less conducive to alert attention than to somnolence. The church extension will show an advance of 20 per cent. in collections. Six applications for aid were granted, and three recommended to the General Board, one to the Home Mission Society. An excellent report was submitted by Rev. S. J. Davies, secretary of the Conference Board, and Dr. Whisner addressed the meeting on the necessity of the house of worship and the relation of his Church Extension Society to this necessity.

The missionary anniversary was addressed by Drs. Boiling and Hoss. The former, with his polished rhetoric and popular eloquence, and the latter, with great thought, clear statement, and earnest appeal, held for an hour and a half the magnificent audience before them. Though speaking from the pulpit of a Presbyterian Church, Dr. Hoss could not refrain from glorying a little in Arminianism as the gospel of missions. The report of the Conference Board was made by Rev. J. B. Cassity. Hon. A. M. Mayo, of Lake Charles, presented the report of the treasurer, as W. B. Thomson, Esq., of New Orleans, the long-time treasurer, was detained at home on account of illness in his family. Dr. Sawyer concluded the meeting by an appeal for a special domestic mission contribution. That the Doctor gets what he asks for may be taken for granted.

The point specially emphasized in the Bishop's address to the class received into full connection was the necessity and potency of personal fitness for the work of the ministry. Here, as everywhere else, his continuous growth and increasing strength became evident.

The great occasion of the Conference is usually the Sunday morning service and sermon by the Bishop, followed by the ordination of deacons. This was indeed an occasion long to be remembered. The auditorium and annex were crowded, even for standing room, in spite of the rain that fell continuously through the day. The sermon, upon the friends of Jesus, touched every heart, and lifted all to higher purposes of loyalty and labor for love's sake in the kingdom and patience of Jesus. Dr. Barbee preached to an overflow meeting in the old Methodist Church. In the afternoon Dr. Hoss preached at the ordination of elders.

(Monday's proceedings have not been received as we go to press.)

PAINT TALKS, XXIII.

WHY "PATENT PAINTS" ARE IN DISREPUTE.

It has been shown in these papers that when the ingredients are rightly selected, ready mixed paints should be both better and cheaper than any other kind of paint. It may be remarked, in passing, that there is, generally speaking, no such thing as "patent paint." Paints are furnished as dry pigments to be mixed in the paint shop with the necessary oil, turpentine and drier; as paste paints to be thinned down with oil or as ready mixed paints containing all the required ingredients ready for the brush. Some paste paints are supplied already incorporated with the tinting colors, while in other cases, especially pure lead, the color must be added to the white base.

Now if anyone will take a little white paste paint (lead for example) and add to it a small quantity of color, incorporating it thoroughly, he will find that he can apparently obtain a uniform tint; but if he will now take a small portion of this tint and grind it vigorously under a muller, he will see that the tint deepens and brightens as the grinding proceeds. This illustrates the fact that paints cannot be thoroughly mixed without mechanical means.

The beauty of the so-called "patent paints" depends on this fact; for however good or however bad they may prove to be, the ready mixed paints are beautiful.

Now when the painter takes his white base and mixes with it the color, oil, turpentine, drier, etc., necessary to fit it for application, he does at the expense of man-labor exactly what is done by machinery in the paint factory. He makes a ready mixed paint; but as the process is purely mechanical he cannot do it either so well or so cheaply as it could be done by a machine; more color will be required to produce the same tint; and the paint will not be so homogeneous, and therefore not so good.

What, then, is the matter with "patent paint?" With some of them, nothing. Everyone has seen ready mixed paints that answered every demand. Of the rest, generally speaking, it can be safely said that they have just one defect, and that is water. Water is not a good painting medium, but by the use of alkaline emulsifiers it can be made to mix with oil, and a cost of nothing per gallon, to replace linseed oil at forty or fifty cents a gallon, such paint looks all right, but it does not wear.

The test for water in paint is to soak a strip of gelatine in it over night. If the gelatine swells the paint contains water; if not, there is no water present.

Good ready mixed paints all contain a large proportion of zinc white, and the valuable properties of zinc white in paints have frequently been pointed out. If it were not for water "patent paints" would never have fallen into disrepute. Good ready mixed paints can be obtained by buying only such as bear the name of a well-known manufacturer, and making sure that they contain no water.

LITERARY NOTES.

BY W. F. B.

The December St. Nicholas contains The Doll that Santa Claus Bought, Ermee's Christmas Doll, and Christmas on the Home Station—a naval story. The Rev. Dr. John Watson, popularly known as Ian Maclaren, holds Afternoon Service in God's first temples, the groves; and Marie von Vorst admits us to the home and studio of the "painter in ordinary to children," the clever French artist, Boutet de Monvel. In The Lost Colony we see the first of a series of colonial story-and-travel sketches by Elbridge S. Brooks.

The cover of the December Century is suggestive of the approaching Christmas season. The brief opening poem, The Old Master, is decorated by Edward Edwards, and illustrated by Louis Loeb in a frontispiece as seasonable as the cover. The Christmas Dancers, a poem embodying a Saxon legend, is accompanied by several full-page pictures by Mr. Hutt. In this number Sir Walter Besant begins a series of papers on life in East London—a subject that no writer knows more intimately. In telling the story of an imaginary girl of the tenement-houses, he is aided by the pencils of Joseph Pennell and Phil May, the best known of pictorial interpreters of the London slums. In the second installment of his study of Oliver Cromwell, Mr. Morley takes up his hero at the beginning of his parliamentary career, and carries him forward to the call to arms, in 1642. Dr. Weir Mitchell continues his revelations of the seamy side of the medical profession in The Autobiography of a Quack; Ernest Seton-Thompson, as author and artist both, gives a further glimpse of the life of a man-killing bear, in The Biography of a Grizzly; and other contributors of fiction are Margaret Sutton Briscoe, Harry Stillwell Edwards, Gelett Burgess, and Virginia Woodward Cloud. Zionism is explained by Prof. Richard Gottheil, of Columbia University, who interprets it as "a tremendous yearning to be better Jews, in order to be better men."

In the Coming Age, for December, is an elaborately illustrated paper by the editor on The Life and Work of F. Edwin Elwell, Sculptor. The conversations also call for special notice. J. J. Enneking, one of the few American artists who enjoys an international reputation, discusses Art from the Standpoint of Painter. Mr. Enneking's picture forms the frontispiece of the number. Rev. J. Henry Wiggin discusses in a most interesting and valuable manner the early dramatic history of Boston, in a conversation entitled Puritanism and Play-Houses of Boston. Rev. Robert E Blabee contributes a very timely paper on Washington After a Hundred Years. The philosophical interpretation of the Poems of Emerson is continued by Mr. Charles Mailey, president of the Boston Emerson Society. Dr. E. M. Babbitt, LL.D., answers a question raised by Prof. Dolbear in a previous paper under the title, Is Our Universe Primarily Spiritual? This number contains three notable poems, suitable for the Christmas season, one entitled, Great God is Near, by the talented young poetess, Miss Coletta Ryan; The Coming of the Prince, by Dr. James Hedley; The Christmas Tide, by J. A. Edgerton. An illustrated Christmas story by Mrs. Reifsnider is also a most attractive feature of this issue.

The December number of The American Illustrated Methodist Magazine has for frontispiece a portrait of Rev. William Nast, the John Wesley of German Methodism. Coleridge's Ancient Mariner, by James Main Dixon, is given first place in this number. The author furnishes a fresh and suggestive interpretation of this popular poem and discusses the circumstances which led Coleridge to write it. The illustrations of the article are reproduced from the Dore edition of the poem by permission of Messrs. Harper Brothers. Rambles in Normandy, by SaLees Kennard, is a descriptive article on this picturesque province, and is beautifully illustrated. Bishop Charles B. Galloway contributes an interesting article on Blennerhassett. The story of Harman Blennerhassett, seldom told and almost forgotten, possesses a weird mingling of romance and tragedy, and forms a part of one of the most thrilling chapters of our national history—that in which Aaron Burr played such a conspicuous part. The tenth chapter of The Illustrated History of Methodism is The First Decade of American Methodism. It takes up the early preachers who began to plant societies in New York, Philadelphia, Maryland, and elsewhere in the colonies.

The Christmas number of Frank Leslie's Popular Monthly is one of surpassing beauty and literary distinction. The following is the table of contents: Room Forty five, a farce, by William Dean Howells, illustrated by Grunwald; Paste, a complete story by Henry James, illustrated by Howard Chandler Christy; Christmas Presents, an inimitable sketch by Marietta Holley ("Josiah Allen's Wife"), illustrated by Grunwald; Miss Mason's Christmas Dinner, a complete story by Margaret E. Sangster, illustrated by Chominski; the opening installment of The Bath Comedy, the new serial story by Agnes and Egerton Castle, illustrated by F. Luis Mora; John Howard Payne, an illustrated account of the strange, eventful history of the life and death of the author of Home, Sweet Home, by Milton E. Ailes; The American Woman as a Home-Maker, by Mary A. Livermore.

DEPARTED.

Bro. Barney Cassity, son of Rev. J. B. Cassity, of the Louisiana Conference, passed peacefully away on Nov. 22 here, in Many, after four days' illness with swamp fever. He bore the suffering without a murmur; expressed himself as having no fear and fully resigned to God's will. Bros. Cassity and Marvin were with him for two days before he left us. He has left many friends in this country, who esteem him very highly, and his second turning to God, and his devoted Christian life since has borne much fruit for the Master, and his memory is precious to many.

EPWORTH LEAGUE DEPARTMENT.

"ALL FOR CHRIST."

REV. THOMAS B. CLIFFORD, Jackson, La., EDITOR.

MISSISSIPPI.

REV. HENRY G. HAWKINS, Madison, Miss., ASSOCIATE EDITOR.

Rev. H. W. Featherstun, State League president; W. F. Lagrone, first vice-president; Mrs. G. H. Mathis, third vice-president, and Miss Vio Thompson, corresponding secretary, and some of the district secretaries met in Greenwood, devising plans for the operation of Leagues in Mississippi, and arranging the program for the next State League Conference. Among other things, steps were taken looking to the rising of the Leagues for the prevention of deficits in missionary collections of the circuits and stations, and to prevent deficits in the districts and in each Annual Conference as a whole; a sinking fund is proposed. It was decided to hold the State League Conference on Thursday, Friday and Saturday of the last week of April, 1900. It will be devoted to methods of League work and models of the different League meetings.

At the sitting of the State League cabinet the following items were caught: At West Point the League holds an occasional missionary mass meeting on Sunday evening, in place of the regular preaching service. At the last one nineteen dollars was contributed. At Tupelo the collection basket is passed at every devotional service. At Columbus the League meetings held at the church have been attended by two or three hundred people. The League itself has one hundred members, or more. But it is very difficult at Columbus to get a boy or young man to read or speak in public, their training in this point having been neglected.

Rev. R. H. B. Gladney, of Enpora, allotted to his League the task of raising his assessment for foreign missions. Several members of the League assumed the responsibility, and succeeded in getting the full amount.

The Leagues in the Holston Conference help in raising the missionary collections, so that there is no longer a deficit in that Conference. It is the Holston plan that is proposed for the Mississippi Leagues.

The Leagues elect new officers this month. Much depends upon a wise choice. A League is what its officers make it. We have in mind one Leaguer who, whenever put at the head of any department, brings that department to the front and makes it chiefest.

The brethren of the North Mississippi Conference, during the session at Greenwood, contributed twenty-five dollars towards the erection of the Lambuth monument at Pearl River Church, which is in the Jackson district.

There are being developed in Mississippi some fine League workers. Besides the members, many of the young preachers are learning how to make this wheel run. And some of the older preachers have put their brains and hearts into the work among the hands of young people, and have found therein sources of strength.

We note in Our Home that the Leagues of Oxford, Holly Springs, and Crawford Street, Vicksburg, have recently make contributions to the Orphans' Home.

There is a flourishing League in the Whitworth Female College. With the piano, organ, and three violins, they have fine music.

KIDNEY TROUBLE PREYS UPON THE MIND.

Women as Well as Men Suffer and Are Made Miserable by Kidney and Bladder Trouble.

Kidney trouble preys upon the mind, discourages and lessens ambition; beauty, vigor and cheerfulness gradually disappear when the kidneys are out of order.

Kidney trouble has become so prevalent that it is not uncommon for a child to be born afflicted with weak kidneys.

Pains, aches and rheumatism come from excess of uric acid in the blood due to neglected kidney trouble.

Kidney trouble often causes quick or unsteady heart-beats and makes one feel as though they had heart trouble, because the heart is overworked in pumping thick, kidney-poisoned blood through the veins and arteries.

Unhealthy urine from unhealthy kidneys is the chief cause of bladder trouble, followed by suffering so painful to many that life is made miserable.

The bladder is situated in front of and very close to the womb, and for that reason any pain, distress, disease or inconvenience manifested in the kidneys, back, bladder or urinary passage is often, by mistake, attributed to female weakness or womb trouble of some sort. The error is easily made and may be easily avoided by paying a little attention to the condition of the urine.

Fill a bottle or common glass with your urine and let it stand twenty-four hours; a sediment or settling indicates an unhealthy condition of the kidneys; if it stains the linen it is evidence of kidney trouble; too frequent desire to pass it or pain in the back, dull heavy headache, nervousness, irritability, plenty of ambition but no strength, weak circulation, sallow complexion; these are all convincing proofs that the kidneys and bladder need prompt attention.

The symptoms you have noticed are the danger signals nature sets to show that the track of health is not clear.

Take the advice of one who has made a life study of just such conditions and look well to yourself, because you have kidney trouble.

Bright's Disease which is destroying more human lives than any other disease, may be stealing upon you.

There is comfort in knowing that Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, the great kidney remedy fulfills every wish in promptly curing kidney, bladder and uric acid troubles.

Thousands of Women Have Kidney Trouble Before They Suspect It.

Swamp-Root is the wonderful new discovery of the eminent kidney specialist, Dr. Kilmer, and is used in the leading hospitals; recommended by skilful physicians in their private practice; and is taken by doctors themselves who have kidney ailments, because they recognize in it the greatest and most successful remedy that medical science has ever been able to compound.

To prove what Swamp-Root will do for you, send at once to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. It is not so much the language you use,
As the tones in which you convey it.

"Come here!" I sharply said,
And the baby cowered and wept;
"Come here!" I cooed, and he looked and smiled
And straight to my lap he crept.

The words may be mild and fair,
And the tones may pierce like a dart;
The words may be soft as the Summer air,
And the tones may break the heart.

Whether you know it or not,
Whether you mean it or care,
Gentleness, kindness, love and hate,
Envy and anger are there.

Then would you quarrels avoid,
And in peace and love rejoice,
Keep anger not only out of your words,
But keep it out of your voice.

—Youth's Companion.

WHY PEOPLE ARE OUT OF WORK.

It is most interesting to study the people who hang about employment offices in great cities, or who are constantly going about looking for work, "trying to get a job." They often claim that the trusts or untoward social conditions are to blame for their idleness. But, if we examine these people, we shall find, in many a case, that there is a screw loose somewhere. Some of them are dissipated; some have been drifting about for years as "Jacks-of-all-trades;" some are slovenly or have filthy personal habits; most of them are shiftless; many have bad manners, or have been so wretchedly brought up that employers could not endure them in their stores or offices; some are lazy, while many of them are hopeless wrecks. The great majority do not know how to do things properly. They have not been trained to accuracy or thoroughness; they only half do things.

This is the great secret of the army of the unemployed. Not more than one in twenty of the domestic servants who are seeking situations can fill a position efficiently. They botch their work; they are careless; they do not seem to know how to live with civilized people; they scratch costly furniture, ruin tapestries, break valuable china, while most of them do not know even the first principles of cleanliness, and practically nothing of sanitary science. Not one cook in a hundred knows anything of the chemistry or science of the kitchen, and yet most of them complain of a condition of things which keeps them from getting work.

Probably not more than one person in fifty of those who are looking for positions as bookkeepers knows how to keep a set of books. They are not naturally accurate; they do not know how to concentrate their minds, and consequently blunder, make erasures, and blot their pages. Thousands of stenographers are out of positions, but how rare it is to find one who is really competent. Very few of them know anything of the laws of punctuation or English composition; they can not spell correctly, and most of them are so narrow in their education and experience that they are of little use to a broad-minded man. They know little of geography, biography, or history; and, if reference is made to anything outside of their office routine, they are utterly at sea. They know little of books, of countries, or of men. They have simply learned to write shorthand mechanically, entirely overlooking the fact that, in order to be a really successful stenographer, one must have a broad general education. How difficult it is to find an office boy who is bright, quick, thoughtful, attentive, discreet, courteous, and polite.

Every employer very quickly appreciates merit, and notwithstanding the army of unemployed in every large city who can not procure situations, scores of business men and institutions are constantly looking for employees who can properly fill positions. First-class stenographers, bookkeepers, hotel employees, clerks, etc., are exceedingly rare; and there are very few young men and women who are thoroughly competent to serve as managers, superintendents, or in any other positions of a responsible character.

Competency and efficiency are always in demand, while incompetents and inefficient workers by the thousand are starving for want of employment.—Success.

A TRAMP'S ELOQUENT LECTURE.

A tramp asked for a free drink in a saloon. The request was granted, and when in the act of drinking the proffered beverage, one of the young men present exclaimed:

"Stop; make us a speech. It is a poor liquor that doesn't unloosen a man's tongue."

The tramp hastily swallowed the drink, and as the rich liquor coursed through his blood he straightened himself and stood before them with a grace and dignity that all his rags and dirt could not obscure.

"Gentlemen," he said, "I look to-night at you and myself, and it seems to me I look upon the picture of my lost manhood. This bloated face was once as young and handsome as yours. This shambling figure once walked as proudly as yours, a man in the world of men. I, too, once had a home and friends and position. I had a wife as beautiful as an artist's dream, and I dropped the priceless pearl of her honor and respect in the wine-cup and, Cleopatra-like, saw it dissolve, and quaffed it down in the brimming draught. I had children as sweet and lovely as the flowers of Spring, and saw them fade and die under the blighting curse of a drunkard father. I had a home where love lit the flame upon the altar and ministered before it, and I put out the holy fire, and darkness and desolation reigned in its stead. I had aspirations and ambitions that soared as high as the morning star, and broke and bruised their beautiful wings, and at last strangled them that I might be tortured with their cries no more. To-day I am a husband without a wife, a father without a child, a tramp with no home to call his own, a man in whom every good impulse is dead. And, all swallowed up in the maelstrom of drink."

The tramp ceased speaking. The glass fell from his nerveless fingers and shivered into a thousand fragments on the floor. The swinging doors pushed open and shut again, and when the little group about the bar looked up the tramp was gone.—New Orleans Picayune.

FAMOUS FARMER BOYS.

There are some people foolish enough to laugh at the homely virtues of a farm life. They are fortunately few and they are fortunately growing fewer; but it is well sometimes to look at the list of great men who came up from the farm—not all of them, for that would fill a thousand volumes, but some of the most notable ones that flash into mind in a moment.

Nearly three-fourths of the men who have been chosen by the people for the great offices of the nation are men who were early familiar with wooded hills and cultivated fields. For example, Washington, Lincoln, Grant, Garfield, Hamlin, Greeley, Tilden, Hayes, Blaine, Harrison, and many others almost equally conspicuous in current events of living memory. Among journalists, Henry Watterson spent his early life in rural Kentucky, and Murat Halstead was born and lived on a farm in Ohio; W. H. Vanderbilt was born in a small New Jersey town and early engaged in the business of ship chandlery; Russell Sage was born in a New York village; Jay Gould spent his early years on his father's farm in New York State; Whittier and Howells spent their youth in villages, the former dividing his time beween farm employment and his studies. Follow the list out yourself and see how long it will become.—Kansas City Times.

PLEDGE THE BOYS.

Only total abstainers are safe. The boy who is principled against smoking, chewing, drinking, gambling and using bad language has, perhaps, a thousand chances for success in life as compared with a boy who indulges in any or all of these bad habits. No better use can be made of the quarterly temperance Sunday in the Sunday-schools than to induce the children, with a due sense of the solemnity of the act, to sign a more or less comprehensive pledge of total abstinence. For younger children it may be best to limit the pledge to a year and repeat it annually. Older ones may take a pledge for life or till they obtain their majority. The time does not matter much, but it is of great importance that children and teachers should range themselves on the right side in the great battle with vice. Each school should have an Honor Roll to hang on its walls with the names of all who have signed the pledge, and corresponding cards to give to the signers to hang up at home.—Montreal Witness.

Let us beware how we make ourselves too busy to secure life's great end. When the excuse rises to our lips and we are about to say we are too busy to do good, let us remember we can not be too busy to die.—Christian Worker.

It used to be fashionable to write on a woman's stone, "She hath done what she could." But now we must write, "She hath done what she thought she never could do."—H. M. Echoes.

A Small Beginning.

A little snow ball on the summit of the Alps, rolled up by the winds, moves slowly downward. Gaining in strength and size, it grows rapidly to giant proportions, and finally becomes the frightful avalanche, destroying everything in its path. Consumption begins with a little cough, a trifling pain, a passing flush on the cheeks. This is but the beginning of the avalanche, consumption, that knows no pity, recognizes no distinction. Just at the beginning thousands commit the error of not checking and curing the disease by using MARSDEN'S PECTORAL BALM.

Two Verdicts.

"After a fair and impartial trial you are judged guilty by this court, and you are sentenced to be hung by the neck until you are dead." The solemn tones of the judge, the despairing face of the prisoner, and the painful stillness of the court-room, makes it a scene of awful impress. Now turn to a brighter scene at the home circle. A mother radiant with joy over the recovery of a child snatched from the clutches of Malaria. An entire family rejoicing, and praising the merits of Dicks' Chillifuge, and giving their verdict that Chillifuge is without an equal for swiftness to cure.

TAKE NOTICE

That we are now handling two different styles of the Holman Bible in Bourgeois type. One we sell to paid-up subscribers at $1.50, the other at $1.30. The $1.30 Bible is substantially the same we have hitherto sold at $1.50. The one we sell at $1.50 is a far better Bible than has ever been sold at such a price. It is a marvel of cheapness. OBITUARIES.

LEWIS—NANCY CARTER was born near Winchester, Tenn., Aug. —, 1826. She was married to W. R. Lewis when about twenty years of age, and moved to Elyton (now Birmingham), Ala., and later to Louisiana, where the husband died several years ago. To them were born three children, all having preceded them to the better world. She long since united with the M. E. Church, of which she was an esteemed member until the time of her death, which occurred Sept. 1, 1899, aged seventy-three years.

Her last illness was not of long duration, though her health had been failing for some months. She always expressed herself ready to go to her heavenly home when the Father saw fit to call her. When loved ones were hovering around her bed she spoke calmly of her approaching death, and though loth to leave her family and friends, she expressed a perfect willingness to go, and after two days of unconsciousness passed peacefully away. She leaves one grandson, a niece (foster daughter) and her son, one brother and a host of friends to mourn their loss.

Mrs. Lewis will long be mourned by neighbors and friends whose homes she has visited in hours of deep affliction. She was ever ready to speak cheering words to the sorrowing, and supply the wants of the needy, but most she will be missed in the family circle, where her gentle smile and encouraging words were as sunbeams in the hearts of those who loved her and were filled with grief at the separation; but let us remember:

"When our loved ones in dust are sleeping,
Nevermore to wake below,
Let no cease our bitter weeping,
And appease our sharpest woe.

For as Christ, the King Immortal,
Died that death might be his prize,
Rose to break the grave's strong portal,
So the dead in Christ shall rise.

If we, then, with Christ ha risen,
Let us set our hearts above;
Earth is but a transient prison,
Heaven an endless home of love."

AMES—Died, MIRIAM ROSE AMES, infant daughter of Alberta Yerger and Alex. H. Ames, aged ten months. "And a little child shall lead them."

God lent her to us for awhile,
We thought she came to stay,
And all our hopes and all our plans
In her small hands did lay.
She did the lonely hours beguile,
And made our life a Summer's day;
But angels wanting our sweet child,
They could not let her stay.

They whispered softly to each other:
"Shall we, can we, leave her here?
Or bereave a loving mother
And a father fond and dear?
Our Lord has need of just such flowers
In his glorious realm above,
And this little child shall lead them
Till they find his wondrous love."

Hovering o'er the cradle
Where in our darling lay,
They waited yet a little while,
Then bore her soul away.
Her baby form we robed in white,
And placed beneath the sod.
Her sinless soul had winged its flight
To Life, to Love, and God.

Yes, a little child shall lead thee
Thro' the path which she has trod;
An upward journey leading
To the bright courts of God.
Oh, follow in the footsteps,
You'll be free from every ill;
At your journey's end you'll find her
In Jesus' arms, but yours still!

JESSIE Y. BONNAY.

SIBLEY—BERTHA MAY, infant daughter of R. A. Sibley, Jr., and Alletha B. Sibley, was born in Newton county, Miss., Oct. 26, 1898; was baptized by her grandfather, R. A. Sibley, Sr., Jan. 29, 1899; died in Meadville, Franklin county, Miss., July 15, 1899, after an illness of three months and one day.

Sweet little Bertha May's angel now beholds the face of our heavenly Father. Her mother, Alletha Belle Sibley, wife of R. A. Sibley, Jr., of the Mississippi Conference, followed her little one month later, who departed this life Aug. 16 1899 in Meadville, Franklin county, Miss. Alletha Belle Sibley was daughter of Wm. E. and M. E. Mangum; born in Smith county, Miss., Oct. 23, 1870; was converted and joined the church in early girlhood; was married to R. A. Sibley, Jr., June 2, 1897. She was mother of four children, three of whom survive her; also a broken-hearted husband.

Oh, how sad to have mother and babe separated from us! But it will be but a short separation; we will rejoin them on that eternal shore.

Our daughter, Alletha Belle, was a devout Christian, known only to be loved; kind mother, affectionate wife, useful church member. Our irreparable loss is her eternal gain. Mother and babe are waiting and watching for us at the beautiful gate. We shall soon be there. R. A. SIBLEY, Sr.

WADE—SHANNON L., son of Elisha and Mary Ann Wade, was born in Jones county, Miss., Aug. 5, 1836, and died at his home in Attala county, Miss., Oct. 20, 1899. He was married to Miss Nannie Glass, Jan. 7, 1861, the happy union being blessed with but one child, which preceded the father to their heavenly home.

Bro. Wade was a great sufferer for twenty-eight years, but bore his suffering with patience, realizing that in the deepest sorrow and severest pain God's grace was sufficient.

He was converted and joined the M. E. Church, South, in early life, and continued in the faith till the Master called him from labor to reward. He was for many years a steward of the church, and while affliction prevented him from being as active as he desired to be, it can truthfully be said of him, He was the preacher's friend, and his was the preacher's home.

The writer was with him frequently in his last illness, and found him perfectly resigned, and patiently awaiting the summons which was to deliver him from his suffering and call him to his rest, sweet rest. We shall miss him here, but expect to meet him again.

A. T. BUCK.

Salilis, Miss.

HEARON—ROSA MAY HEARON, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Marcus Hearon, died Sept. 17, 1899.

Oh, how full of sorrow are these few words to the many who loved her so dearly! How beautiful was her life! Though ended in the very dawn of its morning, she leaves the impress upon our hearts of a most lovely little Christian. She often asked her mama about heaven, and would sit for hours and listen to the reading of the Scriptures. From the time she could lisp the name of Jesus she said her prayers every night. A more conscientious child I never knew.

In token of our love, we, the officers and members of the Little Penny Society, be it

Resolved, That we submit to the afflictive providence which robs us of our beloved member, comforting our hearts with the thought that she is now in the presence of God.

Resolved, That we cherish her memory, trusting that the example of her sweet Christian life may inspire us to more active and willing service for our Master, and we will try to meet her in heaven.

Resolved, That we tender to the bereaved family our deepest sympathy, and ask that a copy of these resolutions be sent them.

MRS. J. J. GARNER, Pres.
MARY ELLA FAIZELL, Sec.
Poplar Creek, Miss.

FLEMING—J. G. FLEMING was born April 2, 1830; joined the M. E. Church in 1867, and has been a faithful member up to the time of his death, which occurred Oct. 11, 1899. He was ripe for the beautiful beyond. A beautiful Christian character, full of good works. He and his faithful companion could truthfully say to their children, "Follow me as I follow Christ." They lived together here as one, and have gone to heaven to live as one through the ceaseless ages of eternity. To the children I would say: Live as they lived, and one day you will meet them at the beautiful gate where partings are felt and feared no more.

ROBT. H. BARR, P. C.

FLEMING—MARGARET ELIZABETH FLEMING (nee Wiggins) was born Jan. 23, 1840, and departed this life Oct. 15 1899. She joined the M. E. Church in Butler county, Ala., in 1853, and came to Mississippi in 1854; was married to J. G. Fleming in 1855, who preceded her only six days to the glory world. She was a faithful wife and mother up to her death. She was paralyzed some time before her death, but, Job-like, bore her afflictions with patience. She was a Methodist of the olden type, living a consistent Christian life six days in the week. She has gone to see the Savior she loved so well, face to face.

In California.

The Golden State is seriously considering the necessity of quarantining against consumptives. This means that God's fresh air and sunshine, nowhere more entrancing and beautiful than on the Pacific slope, may be denied to the unfortunate sufferers. Thousands have been greatly benefited and many cured by the delicious atmosphere of California, and it appears a most ornel measure, even though sanctioned by medical men.

Many persons now in the advanced stages of consumption, and surely doomed, could have been cured by early resort to that most gracious healing remedy, MARSDEN'S PECTORAL BALM.

of the Holy Scriptures, showing at a glance at the foot of the pages all changes made by the revisers.

New Type. All Proper Names Self-Pronouncing. The Most Valuable Collateral Matter.

There is a steady and increasing demand for first-class Bibles. Everybody is anxious to obtain a copy of the best edition of the Holy Scriptures. Old editions are constantly being replaced by Bibles that are in every way more attractive, and there is practically no limit to the demand.

OUR "COMBINATION" FEATURE.

Hitherto the King James and Revised Versions have been printed in parallel columns, but this makes comparisons of texts tedious and unsatisfactory, and makes the book very unwieldy. We have overcome this difficulty by "combining" the two Versions on the same page, showing at a glance in foot-notes all the Changes Additions and Omissions made by the Revisers.

THE OLD VERSION PRINTED IN FULL.

The King James Version is the basis, and this Version is read straight along from the text, while the Revised Version is read from the text in combination with the foot-notes. Our "Combination" Feature has met with universal approval and is strongly endorsed by all leading Divines and Biblical Scholars.

It is only by a comparison of the two Versions that the greatest benefit can be obtained from reading the Holy Scriptures, and this comparison every reader can easily make by our simple arrangement for showing the changes made by the revisers. This is the greatest triumph of Bible Publishing the World has ever known.

OUR OFFER.

To those unprogressive people who do not read and pay for the NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE we sell this Bible at the publisher's retail price—$4.25. To our subscribers we sell it at the very low rate of $2. The only condition attached to this offer is that the subscriber must pay his subscription one full year in advance, viz.: to December, 1900. We will send it postpaid to any person who will send us three new cash subscribers at the regular rate. For six new cash subscribers at the regular rate we will send two "Combination" Bibles, postpaid.

For fifty cents additional we will send a Bible with index.

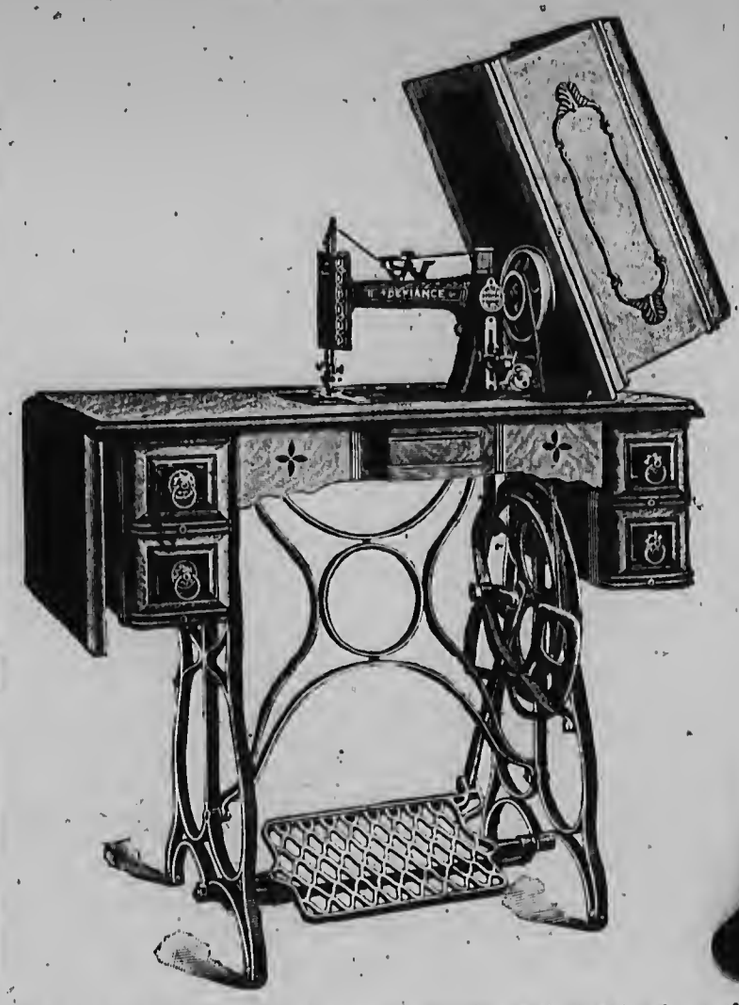
For twenty-five cents additional we will have your name engraved in gilt letters on the outside.

Send for circular. Address REV. W. C. BLACK.

P. S.—We can give no commission on renewals in connection with the above offer.

New Machine Offer.

DEFIANCE NO. 4.



The Defiance Machine is the perfection of simplicity, durability, speed, strength and ease of operation.

Construction. It is constructed of the best material in use, every bearing, without an exception, being of steel or case-hardened.

The Mechanical Devices of this machine are a combination of tried mechanical principles. In detail it differs materially from other machines. Its simplicity is at once apparent, and its great durability is admitted by the best mechanical experts.

The Arm is large and roomy, 8x5½ inches in the clear.

No Vibration. This machine does not vibrate. Its motion is easy and quiet.

Lock Stitch. It is a lock-stitch shuttle machine.

Speedy, Light, Quiet. It is as speedy, light and quiet-running as any shuttle machine manufactured.

Double Feed—Positive Four-Motion. The double feed possesses advantages over all others. Its very shape and form obviates all the disadvantages arising from double feeds as they have heretofore been constructed, and combines in this machine all the advantages of both the single and double feed, doing away with the objections to either of them.

The operation of the feed mechanism is positive, giving an accurate four-motion movement to the feed without the use of springs.

The Needle Bar. This machine has a self-lubricating needle-bar, which is always kept clean, well-oiled, and the oil can not drop on the work and soil it.

The Needle is absolutely self-setting. No screwdriver is required in setting, a winged thumb nut being used instead.

The machine is self-threading. Put in the bobbin, draw the thread towards you, through the slot and, it is done.

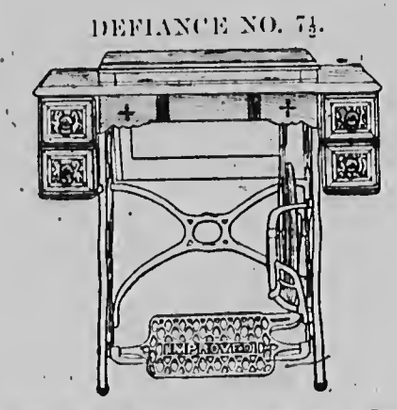
The Loose Pulley for winding the bobbins without running the machine is so constructed as to admit of an instantaneous stoppage and starting of the machine without stopping the treadle movement—a valuable improvement peculiar to this machine.

Automatic Bobbin Winder. The bobbin winder operates automatically, winding the thread on the bobbin regularly and as evenly as the thread on a spool. Can be operated without running the machine.

Extra Attachments, in velvet-lined case, sent free with each machine: 1 Tucker, 1 Ruffler with shirring plate, 1 Hemmer set (4 widths) and Binder, 1 Braider (Foot and Slides), 1 Thread Cutter

Additional Accessories. Each machine is supplied with the following outfit: 1 Hemmer and Feller (one piece), 10 Needles, 2 Bobbins, 1 Wrench, 1 Screwdriver, Oil Can filled with oil, Cloth Gauge and Thumb-screw, and a Book of Instructions. The Book of Instructions is profusely illustrated and answers the purpose of a competent teacher.

DEFIANCE NO. 7½.



This cut shows our new and popular style, the No. 7½ Defiance Drop Cabinet perfectly protecting the machine from dust, and making a convenient and ornamental stand. When machine is ready for use the head is in same position as on ordinary style; when through using, it requires only the turning over of the leaf of table, and the sewing machine head drops into the case or cabinet between the drawers, completely out of sight, forming a handsome table with highly polished top.

No. 3 Machine, drop leaf table, bent cover, case of one drawer at each end and center drawer. Dealer's price, $32. Our price, $18.

No. 4 Machine, drop leaf table, bent cover, case of two drawers at each end and center drawer. Dealer's price, $34. Our price, $19.

No. 5 Machine, drop leaf table, bent cover, case of three drawers at each end and center drawer, making seven drawers in all. Dealer's price, $36. Our price, $20.

No. 7½ Machine, Drop head cabinet, case of two drawers at each end and center drawer. Dealer's price, $38. Our price, $23.

All the woodwork is of the best quality, either Light Antique or Golden Oak Finish. For Walnut Woodwork add $2 to above list prices.

The chief difference between Numbers 3, 4, and 5 is in the furniture—i. e., the number of drawers. If you do not want to pay for the extra drawers, you need not do so. We sell these machines under a ten years' guarantee, by which we mean that if any part gives out by reason of any defect therein, the manufacturer will replace the same free of charge. Moreover, we allow the purchaser to test the machine ten days. If at the end of ten days you are not satisfied, you have only to drop us a postal card, and your money will be refunded.

OUR OFFER.

We will send any one of the above-described machines at the prices named, and also send the ADVOCATE free for six months. The only condition attached to this offer is that subscribers who are in arrears must first pay up all arrearages to date. It would be well to avail yourself of this offer at once, as we can not promise that it will last very long. Notice that you take no risk whatever. We do all the risking. Address REV. W. C. BLACK, 512 Camp St., New Orleans.

P. S.—The machine will be shipped direct from the factory in the North

CHOICE Vegetables will always find a ready market—but only that farmer can raise them who has studied the great secret how to obtain both quality and quantity by the judicious use of well-balanced fertilizers. No fertilizer for Vegetables can produce a large yield unless it contains at least 8% Potash. Send for our books, which furnish full information. We send them free of charge.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

Gen. Otis declares that the rising in the Island of Negros is of small importance.

An English syndicate has contracted with Mexico to lease the Tehuantepec railroad for fifty years.

Mr. Montagne White says Kruegor will fight to the last ditch, and that the Transvaal women will not let him make terms.

In a mine explosion at Carbonado, Wn., a large nnmber of miners were killed, sixteen bodies having already been recovered.

A sortie from Ladysmith stormed and captured Lombard's Kop, a hill overlooking the town, pntting ont of action two cannon and captnring a Maxim.

Four new steamships, duplicates of those sold to the government dnring the war with Spain, will be bnilt by the Southern Pacific for the trade between New Orleans and New York.

The trial of the Roberts osse began on Dec. 9 before the Honse committee. The polygamist denied some of the charges made against him and bitterly denounced one of his accusers.

Duluth has been added to the list of cities receiving from Mr. Carnegie gifts for the erection of free public libraries. The sum is $50,000, to be expended upon a building, provided that the city gives a satisfactory site for it.

It is expected the President will soon send to Congress a special message regarding rewards for officers and men of the north Atlantic fleet who distinguished themselves dnring the war with Spain, and whose gallantry has not yet been recognized.

The French government has formally demanded the degradation of the viceroy of Canton because the order to execute the Chinese magistrate who was responsible for the murder of two French officers at Montao has not been carried out. The tsung-li-yamen will probably refuse.

The American Beet Sugar Manufacturers' Association held a meeting at Omaha, Neb., recently, which is of special interest to everybody interested in the Louisiana sugar industry. The beet sugar manufacturers adopted resolutions protesting against the proposed admission, either duty free or at a reduced tariff, of sugar and other products of the islands recently captured from Spain.

An expedition, headed by the battleship Oregon, has left Manila for Subig. It is reported that the Filipino commander, General Alejandrino, with his staff, has surrendered to General MacArthur, and there is also a rumor that Alejandrino is at Aguilar, suffering from a wound received in a fight between insurgents and bandits, and that he will be given an opportunity to surrender and will be properly cared for.

The ugly dispute which has arisen between the friends of Admirals Schley and Sampson is rapidly finding its way into Congress, and there is a very good chance that the whole matter will be aired in the National Legislature, unless wise counsels prevail and the attempts of the radical element in the navy to damage Admiral Schley's reputation be abandoned. A resolution has already been introduced extending the thanks of Congress to Admiral Schley, and it is said that a vigorous effort will be made to pass the measure.

The opposition to General Wheeler's taking his seat as a member of the House of Representatives from Alabama, is to be renewed by Representative Bailey, of Texas, whose resolutions last year brought a report from the House judiciary committee that a military and congressional office could not be held at the same time. General Wheeler is now in the Philippines, but it has been understood that he would return to take his seat. The sergeant-at-arms has over $2,000 to the credit of the Alabama member, covering salary from March 4 last to date, but General Wheeler has not asked for the amount, and has expressed an unwillingness to sign the certificate usually required of members in the settlement of their accounts.

It is hardly too much to regard General Gatacre's repulse near Stormberg as the most serious defeat British arms have yet sustained in the whole campaign in the Transvaal. Already the official advices show that two men were killed, nine officers and seventeen men were wounded, and nine officers and 596 are missing. But it is evident that the worst is not yet known. The proportion of wounded and killed is so small, when compared with the missing—who are undoubtedly prisoners in the hands of the Boers—that the supplementary list of casualties is awaited with serious misgiving. It is also feared that there were serious losses of guns and equipment. The most serious aspect of the affair is the effect it is likely to have on the Dutch in Cape Colony, who have been wavering as to whether to throw in their lot with the Boers. Hosts of the northern farmers are now likely to join the rebellion. Defeat is also serious because it will delay the junction of General Gatacre with General French at Naauwpoort. The plan was for their combined forces to relieve the pressure on Lord Methuen's column.

Another reason for the decline of oratory, and probably the most powerful of all, is the growth of the reading habit and the critical frame of mind which reading begets. A man reads generally alone, and can, if he pleases, pause and weigh what he reads. At all events, he remains perfectly cold in the presence of the type, and gets used to a great deal in newspaper articles of what would a generation ago have passed as eloquence if delivered in court or on the stump. Then it must be confessed that oratory does not bear very well the criticism of the calm, reasoning mind. Most of it consists of what used to be called "claptrap"—that is, points which few men would venture to present to their neighbors round a table, but which is somehow, when addressed to an audience in a loud voice, with gesticulation, more or less exciting or amusing. The ease with which an assembly laughs at the poorest and stalest joke does much to explain oratorical success. In a crowd the critical faculty is as it were suspended, but newspaper and other reading is fostering it and enabling it to resist the crowd influence. The tricks of orators, which fifty years ago no one noticed, are considered legitimate features of the art, are now objects of general merriment or contempt. These things are true, not only of this country, but all countries. The democratic age, contrary to general expectation, is proving unpropitious to oratory. It is compelling everybody who talks in public to "talk business," because what he says will, by most people, be seen in print only and have to bear fireside examination.—The Evening Post.

GRAND NATIONAL PRIZE OF 16,600 FRANCS AT PARIS

In the moral realm there are many things which God, because of what he is in himself, must despise. There are some things which he does not and never will despise. One is a broken and contrite heart—a triturated heart—a heart broken to pieces. The suggestion undoubtedly is that of a soul brought to see its sinfulness, guilt and destitution through the operation of the Holy Ghost, humbly, penitently and self-forsakingly turning away from sin and dependence upon everything, to the living God. No matter what the past history of the person may have been, no matter how deeply stained with iniquity the soul is, no matter how proud, rebellious and stubborn it may have previously been—if now humble and penitent before God, he will not despise it. There is exceeding comfort in such a thought as this. The infinitely holy God does not turn away from or refuse help to a soul, however horribly polluted it may be, because it is polluted, but because it remains impenitent, indifferent, proud and self-sufficient. Let it be proclaimed with emphasis: "A broken and contrite heart, O God, thou wilt not despise."—The Indian Witness.

A Serious Decision.

"Why CHILLIFUGE Won't Cure Chills"—is a question that brings to mind the story of a society of learned men formed for debating problems.

The question was presented: "Why a fish weighing ton pounds, put into a vessel of known weight, filled with water, did not increase the weight?" After hours of hot debate the fool of the club announced that it did, for while the debate had been going on he had tried the experiment.

They claim that patents can now be procured in less than half the time formerly required.

Beef Steak in a Bottle.

That fresh, juicy beef, ready for digestion, can be made into a delicious cordial is a marvel, but chemistry has accomplished it. Sick people at a distance from markets and needing the nourishment afforded by beef tea can procure Dicks' NUTRITIVE ELIXIR and find it the best liquid food and stimulant known. For loss of appetite, weak digestion, debility, typhoid fever, and consumption it is invaluable.

THE FOURTEENTH CHAPTER OF JOHN.

If pastors ask the sick what Scripture they desire, it is only a form, for there is one chapter which every man and woman wants to hear in great sorrow, or when the shadow is falling. The leaf which contains the fourteenth chapter of St. John's gospel should be made movable in our Bibles in order that it might be replaced every ten years. By the time a man has got to middle age that leaf is thinning, and by old age it is only a brown film that is barely legible, and must be gently handled. Yet with every reading—say six times a week—the pastor notices that it yields some new revelation of the divine love and the kingdom of heaven. If one is sinking into unconsciousness, and you read, "In my Father's house are many mansions," he will come back and whisper, "Mansions," and he will wait till you finish, "Where I am, there ye may be also," before he dies in peace.—Ian Maclaren, in Cure of Souls.

We have referred more than once to the desperate and despicable measures resorted to by some representatives of the tobacco manufacturers to develop a taste for tobacco in growing boys, in order to keep up the demand. The opposition which the anti-cigarette reformers have had to meet is not less underhanded and ingenious than that displayed by the advocates of the saloon. A recent phase of the campaign is the manufacture and sale of a variety of chewing gum containing nicotine. It has been very popular with Chicago school children since its introduction. On complaints by parents and teachers the health department recently analyzed the gum, pronounced it dangerous to health, and ordered its sale stopped. This latest invention is worthy to be placed along with the brandy and whiskey candies as an example of the admirable ethical principles characteristic of these twin industries, the liquor business and the cigarette business. Whatever difference of opinion may exist as to the use of tobacco and liquor by adults, we never heard of any reputable physician or scientist who did not pronounce them highly injurious to children.—Baptist Standard.

A personal letter from a country minister comments thus on the tendency of the times: "This pleasure-seeking age does not at all grasp Paul's 'Rejoice.' It is thoroughly saturated with another formula. The pleasant is the right. Play is become the first business of life. It is an easy recipe for happiness to turn all tragedy into comedy, to take life lightly. A popular author says, 'There is nothing so much a man's business as his amusements.' No doubt this is successfully used by many—and all the higher problems and destinies of life left out. Christ's religion is absolutely opposed to this. We need a new asceticism that shall snub this pleasure-seeking and make self-control a higher and than happiness." There is food for serious thought in such words, especially in these midwinter weeks, when faithful ministers and laymen are watching, as one watcheth for the morning, for the dawn of better times in the churches. Is not this inordinate "pleasure-seeking" one great hindrance?—Congregationalist.

Dr. D. M. Bye, of Indianapolis, Ind., Certainly Cures Cancers, and Sufferers Should Know It

CLARKSVILLE, TENN., JULY 25, 1899.

It has become very common to write certificates or testimonials to the worth of something, or some person undeserving, and which frequently proves to be a palpable fraud. This I would avoid, and would not make this statement, which I do voluntarily, without even a suggestion or request to do so, did I not hope to bless some poor sufferer, feeling conscious in my own heart that the man whose merit I may extol is honored of God; is deserving of greater praise and reward than I am able to bestow. Without entering into full details, I will simply state that I had a Tumor on my left breast of nineteen years' growth. About the time it commenced giving some pain a very dear friend lost her life from the use of the surgeon's knife on just such a looking Tumor as mine. Of course, I was not encouraged to pursue that treatment; in fact, my physician advised me against it, as he thought possibly it might not for long years, if ever, cause serious trouble. The time, however, did come. The growth seemed very slow until late years. Finally it came to great size, and continued growing rapidly, having two bleeding sores or ulcers about three inches apart near the size of a baby's head. I called in my doctor, one of the best and most successful surgeons of the State, a man of piety and Christian integrity. He examined the Tumor carefully, and pronounced it malignant; said it had been growing so long that the roots had possibly taken hold between the ribs, and there was no hope or safety with the knife in such a case. I was left in despair, hope vanished; and there was nothing before me but great suffering from this loathsome affliction and certain death. I read many advertisements promising certain cure. My physician said they were generally humbugs to get money, which is true. However, my husband wrote to several specialists, and one that he had the most faith in answered honestly that he did not believe it could be cured in its present late stages. Others thought they could cure it for $150 or $200. At last my eye caught a statement in the "Silver Knight Watchman" from a Texas minister, stating the wonderful skill of Dr. D. M. Bye, of Indianapolis, Ind., in a case very similar to mine. There was such force of earnestness in the statement that it impressed me as inspired purposely for my benefit. We wrote Dr. D. M. Bye at once, giving diagram and measurement, 22 inches in circumference, 9 inches in length, 6 inches across, giving age, conditions, health, etc. He answered that he had relieved cases as bad, and believed he could cure mine. I ordered his remedies by express, and he sent directions by letter, which I followed closely. Used his Oils first month with no apparent results, excepting the softening and slight reduction in the size of the Tumor. Not the slightest pain attended the treatment. I then began on the second month's treatment. The first remedy, as he said it would, brought the two bleeding sores together in one, and formed a hard scab three inches in diameter. This caused no pain. Then he used a remedy to separate the diseased flesh from the sound. Soon the whole Tumor dropped out with all its roots and branches, leaving a cavity as large as a small tea cup, and I have suffered no pain whatever from it since. Now my breast is entirely healed, and I believe is as sound as ever. Of course, it left a scar, but that's nothing. I would take a dozen such to get rid of so loathsome a thing; indeed I regard the cure as wonderful, something akin to a miracle, and my dealings with Dr. D. M. Bye stamps him as a pure Christian gentleman, whose first object is to do good and relieve suffering. Truly he must be a man blessed of God and endowed with skill in his high calling. If any sufferer wants further particulars, I will take pleasure in answering inquiries, and those who do not know me or my husband can write any citizen or officer of Clarksville, Tenn.

A PRAYER AND ITS ANSWER.

THE PRAYER.

"Give her, I pray, all good;
Bid all the buds of promise grow
To perfect flowers of happiness,
Where'er her feet may go.
Bid Faith's bright shield, and Love's strong arm,
Protect her from all coming harm.

"Lest there should be some other thing,
Better than all the rest,
Which I have failed to ask," I said,
"Give her the very best,
Whatever that to thee may seem,
Of all that I can ask or dream."

THE ANSWER.

She lies before me, still and pale:
The roses that I prayed
Might bloom along her path of life,
Are on her bosom laid;
Crowned with a strange, rapt calm, she lies
Like one made dumb by sweet surprise.

"The best that I could ask or dream;"
This was my prayer, and now
That she is wrapped in sweet repose
With God's peace on her brow,
I wonder, sobbing, sore dismayed,
If this is that for which I prayed.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From Our Regular Correspondent.)

Gen. Leonard Wood, now military governor of the province of Santiago, Cuba, and generally believed to be about to become military governor of the entire island, delivered an address before a meeting of the American Auxiliary of the Cuban Provisional Red Cross, in Washington, this week, on the educational needs of Cuba, that was full of practical suggestions and good advice. He said, "There is an enormous number of children there who, while not exactly homeless, are drifting about, and not receiving any education." He said that he had long had the idea of introducing industrial schools in Cuba; that there are many buildings available for use for such a purpose which could be obtained, but added these words of caution: "The work must be conducted on business principles. Unless it be conducted on hard business lines, it will fail." Senor Quesada, who addressed the same meeting, said that Gen. Wood had left him nothing to say, except that he endorsed every word he had spoken. Among those who attended the meeting were Mrs. Hull, wife of Representative Hull, of Iowa, who presided; Mrs. Hay, wife of the Secretary of State; Dr. and Mrs. Wallace Radcliffe; Mrs. Sternberg, wife of Surgeon-General Sternberg, of the army, and Mrs. Henderson, wife of the Speaker of the House.

Owing to a newspaper statement that the War Department was about to increase the number of chaplains in the army by appointing a chaplain for each of the volunteer regiments now in service, the department has received applications for the places from several thousand ministers of all denominations. The number of chaplains in the army is regulated by law, and the War Department can not make a single appointment until Congress authorizes it. That no chaplains were provided for the volunteer regiments was an oversight on the part of the last Congress, and it is very probable that at the present session a bill authorizing a number of chaplains for the volunteers will be passed.

One of the congressional practices that ought to be reformed is that of introducing bills "by request." If no senator or representative can be found willing to assume responsibility for a bill, it is fair to assume that the bill either belongs to the class known as "crank" bills, or that it is put forward for some wrongful or fraudulent purpose. The bill for the pensioning of ex-slaves, which has been introduced, always "by request," in a number of Congresses, is unquestionably one of the latter class. This week this bill was introduced in the Senate by Senator Pettus, of Alabama, who expressly stated that he was in no way responsible for it. Senator Gallinger, chairman of the Pension Committee, declared that the bill was a bad one, introduced for no other purpose than to obtain money from ignorant ex-slaves by making them believe in the possibility of its becoming a law, which he declared it never would. Senator Mason stated that he had been induced to introduce a similar bill in the last Congress, which he afterwards ascertained was used for a bad purpose; and Senator Thurston, who introduced the bill, "by request," in the Fifty-fourth Congress, also made a similar statement. Senator Cockrell declared that such a bill ought not to be even dignified with being referred to the Pension Committee, but it was decided that the best way to get rid of it was to have that committee make an adverse report upon it, which could be used to show its fraudulent nature.

Dr. Henry McCook, of Philadelphia, delivered an interesting address before the Presbyterian Alliance of the Presbytery of Washington City, Tuesday evening.

Dr. J. G. Butler closed the golden jubilee of his pastorate of Luther Memorial Church with his fiftieth annual sermon, which was largely a resume of his experiences during the period in which the national capital has grown from a straggling town of 40,000 to an imperial city, admittedly the most beautiful in this country, and among the most beautiful in the world, of nearly 300,000 inhabitants. He said near the close: "No part of our record gives greater satisfaction than remembrance of the years through which the nation passed in the time of greatest trial. We have come forth a nation of free men, and by the influence of the gospel the wounds of the nation have been healed, so that to-day we are a united people, and know no North or South. All are loyal to the flag of freedom."

Solicitor-General Richards, who argued the case in which the United States Supreme Court recently handed down the decision against the Addyston Pipe Trust, is very positive in his opinion that the decision in question makes any laws against trusts that Congress may see fit to enact, in addition to those already in the statute books, valid. In his own words: "The Supreme Court held that Congress may prohibit the performance of any contract between individuals or corporations where the natural and direct effect of it is to regulate or restrain interstate commerce. In other words, the anti-trust law applies to every agreement in restraint of interstate trade, whether made by corporations or individuals." Although there has been no official statement to that effect, it is presumed that the decision will result in other trust prosecutions by the government.

LETTER FROM "GILDEROY."

There, now; Bishop Candler has gone and done it, he has. He jerked me out of a good, warm, comfortable, cozy nest, and put me on a district as large as all out of doors. I had rather be two pastors than one presiding elder. This is the most thankless job in our Methodism except the Bishop's job. I have had twelve years' rest from it. I am not proud of the promotion, I am not. I dread the responsibility. I hate to be parted from my wife. We have been jogging along side by side for forty years. At best we will not journey together much longer. I begrudge every hour I am away from her. I love books, papers, magazines and Reviews, but a presiding elder has little time for reading, and when he has time he is too tired to read profitably. I love to write. Writing has been a sort of mania with me from childhood. It is not a task, but delightful recreation. It is difficult to think and write when one is fatigued. I am not old; oh, no. I am not only on the outside, I am young on the inside; but, really, I am older than I was forty years ago. I am getting so I like to roost every night on the same limb, in my own bed. I don't rest as soon after a hard ride as I did years ago. I am not as supple and limber-jointed as a boy. The nights are darker than they used to be, or else I can not see as well in the dark. If it were left to me to choose my work, I'd never choose to be a presiding elder. I would not. The Bishop sent me to it. I go because I am sent. I promised to do that forty-one years ago. I go cheerfully; would go cheerfully to any charge in my Conference, or any other. It is a great honor to work for my Lord in any corner. I am not going to go growling; that would be ugly. A sour start hurts the preacher and the work. It begets a ferment. I feel like I am too small a man to be spread out over so wide a territory. It is hardly a smell of butter to the slice of bread. This last was an upsetting Conference. If I count correctly, there were one hundred changes. The Bishop gave us a new deal in presiding elders. All the new ones, but two, had been "a horse" before. We will see how Young and Woollard pull. The boys must "scotch" for them up hill. They will need to get breath up all the long hills. There will be many of them. The presiding eldership looks like a big thing to some men at long range. When one gets there the enchantment is all gone. Well, I must do my best. The shadows are growing long. I am on the sunset side of the hill. What I do must be done quickly. The supernumerary or superannuated relation is not far ahead of me. The journey that ends in the grave will soon come to an end. I've no time to fool away now. I must work while it is day. I go to new territory. I am glad of this. My old sermons will be new to new people, provided they have fresh fire and love in them. Without this, or these, the newest sermons are older than the oldest. It is the Spirit that makes sermons, new or old, burn and blaze with pith and power. There ought to be thought, lots of it, but it ought to be thought on fire. I am going, but I can't help looking back longingly, not for onions and leeks, but for books, pens, paper, and ink. How do Bishops find time to read? They are forever on the go. I am sorry for them. It is a wonder to me that they do not run dry. I would, I know. Four years on a district pumps me dry, or it did years ago. None but full men ought to be put in these corners. Few men have resources enough to run effectively and efficiently longer than four years in district work. Most men need to stop and fill up. Presiding elders can not take water on the fly. The tanks are about four miles—years—apart. Let me off at four, better at three, still better at two, and, best of all, at one. I will be out of water and short of steam one year hence. My tender-room and steam capacity are small, very small. When a man works at one thing too long it disqualifies him for other work. I'd like to keep my hand in on several kinds of work. If Bishops were not such great men, they would get so they would not know how to do anything else but to be Bishops. It is a treadmill sort of life—the same thing over and over. Variety, the spice of life, is wanting. An Annual Conference will do, but six or seven of them in a string, and for years, would come to be monotonous. Quarterly Conferences do to presiding elders. The sacrament of the Lord's Supper comes to be too much a matter of business—becomes common.

GILDEROY.

3. Who are discontinned? E. T. Denson, at his own request.

4. Who are admitted into full connection? H. W. Ledbetter, F. N. Sweeney, P. H. Fontaine, J. M. Alford, W. T. Woodward.

5. Who are readmitted? None.

6. Who are received by transfer from other Conferences? R. W. Dodson, from the Little Rock Conference; H. R. Singleton, from the St. Louis Conference; I. W. Cooper, from the Mississippi Conference.

7. Who are the deacons of one year? P. R. Knickerbocker, P. O. Lowrey, T. M. Wafer, W. H. Benton, W. A. Clark, C. C. Wier, A. W. Turner.

8. What traveling preachers are elected deacons? Henry W. Ledbetter, and his ordination on Sunday morning was announced and certified by the Bishop.

10. What local preachers are elected deacons? Daniel E. Kelly, Luther L. Roberts, Denny F. Turner, James M. Manly, and their ordination by himself on Sunday was reported and certified by Bishop Galloway.

12. What traveling preachers are elected elders? Ira L. Bronson, C. P. Smith, and W. H. Hatfield, and their ordination Sunday afternoon was announced and certified by the Bishop.

13. No local preachers elected elders.

16. Who are located this year? W. J. Roberts, at his own request.

17. No supernumeraries.

18. Who are superannuated? R. S. Trippett, George Jackson, M. C. Manly, P. A. Johnston, J. M. Johnston, J. L. Wright, Wilson Moore, J. F. Sonrlock, A. D. McVoy.

19. What preachers have died during the year? Lewis A. Reed, Thomas B. White, J. H. Stone, J. White Davis.

20. Are all the preachers blameless in their life and official administration? was naked. Their names were called, one by one, and their characters examined and passed.

22 and 23. How many infants have been baptized during the year? 1,132. Adults? 717.

24. What is the number of Epworth Leagues? 64. Members of Leagues? 2,078.

29. What amount is necessary for the superannuated preachers, and the widows and orphans of preachers? $1,400.

30. What has been collected on the foregoing account? How has it been applied? $2,970.

31. What has been contributed for missions? Foreign, $5,363.81; domestic, $1,971,11.

32. What has been contributed for church extension? $1,325.32.

33. What has been contributed for the American Bible Society? $239.65.

36. What is the number of societies? 385. Of houses of worship? 303.

37. What is the value of houses of worship? $483,135.

39. What is the value of parsonages, and what is the amount of indebtedness? Value, $71,543; indebtedness, $5,870.50.

40. What is the number of district parsonages? 4, valued at $6,700. Of presiding elders' districts? 7.

45. Where shall the next Conference be held? Baton Rouge, New Iberia and Arcadia were nominated, and Baton Rouge selected.

The Conference adjourned Monday morning. The changes were not many, and the appointments gave general satisfaction. With the reputation of Monroe's hospitality as high as ever, the preachers left joyfully for their fields of labor, triumphs and trials awaiting them, but strong in the Lord, and uplifted by the new high views and by the inspiring companionship they had received and enjoyed during this delightful session.

THE WORK OF PREACHERS.

Recently a lawyer in a tirade of abuse, in which he declared that women and preachers could neither perceive nor tell the truth, also said preachers are parasites in society, living on the honest toil of other people while making no return for what they get. The applause given the sentiment by some preachers present and by others indicates that the sentiment has something, in some part, of the public mind to support it. I have long seen inklings of the fact that there are preachers who feel that the ministry is a class exempted from the honest toils of humanity. These feel no moral obligation to earn a living. They are sponges and dead beats. To say this is in no way to concede the truth of the allegation aforesaid, any more than to affirm that there are lawyers who are courthouse bullies and all-round toughs is tantamount to vulgarizing the whole legal profession.

Passing from the low exceptions in the ministry to the general high level of the highest calling on earth, and remarking as we pass that preachers need not complain at being classed with women in any classification of virtues, I come to deal with the work of preachers. They must stand or fall by their Master's rule: "By their works ye shall know them." The man who reads history can not remain ignorant of the fact that with the coming of Jesus Christ into the world there came the greatest regenerating force among men humanity has felt. His teaching went to the secret sources of all human conduct. When Jesus left the world, he gave his teaching into the hands of his chosen ministry. The expanded Judaism stripped it of its swaddling clothes, gave it a new heart-beat, opened to the world its true meaning, and taught the sanctity of all human life and the universal brotherhood of man. Ministers bearing the message of their Master renewed the hopes of the race. They lifted humanity above the bestialities of heathenism and reconstructed the thought and life of the people who heard them. When the vast Roman empire fell by its own corruption, ministers garnered the seeds of the Christian civilization and sowed them amid persecutions, poverty and martyrdoms beside all waters.

Ministers, directly and indirectly, have founded every college, seminary and university in Christendom. Oxford, Cambridge, Edinburg, Glasgow, Berlin, Heidelberg, Harvard, Yale, Princeton, Brown, all of them and all the rest, State universities not excepted. Ministers have not only founded these, but they have stood by them and guarded them through the centuries. Ministers have been the foremost force through the ages in popularizing learning. They do now give and always have given a greater per cent. of their scanty income to schools and education than any other men on earth. They have stood for the church and the schoolhouse side by side, and these are the lighthouses that dispel the enveloping darkness of all times. These, the church first, are the civilizing forces operating constantly to build a better social order.

Preachers have made and enriched the literature of civilization. They have written a vast volume of the world's best books. They have held the light for the writing of what else is good. But for the work of preachers enlightening the masses in England there would have been no Shakespeare, no Lord Bacon, no written English jurisprudence. Over the mother isle to-day would reign the uncultured barbarism of our heathen ancestors. Our own great country would be unknown on the map of the world. No statue of liberty enlightening the world would have been dreamed of. There would be no liberty. England and America would be no other but heathen nations. Christianity is the heart and life of modern civilization, and preachers are the heaven-ordained light bearers of Christianity.

Preachers more than all others have built the American commonwealth with the truth they are commissioned to preach. The Bible is humanity's book. Its Divine Author is humanity's best friend. The gospel is a message of freedom to the race; freedom from destructive vices first, and freedom from outward oppression next. It is no accident that where there is the free preaching of the gospel the people enjoy liberty. A great political philosopher has said: "All people are as free as they deserve to be." The gospel builds character and secures freedom by making people ready for it. Preachers, with the scantiest living, plain, unpretentious men, have traversed mountains, valleys and plains, laying the foundations of civilization, and have builded the present social state, themselves little knowing the value of their service to the world. They thought most of heaven, but enriched both worlds. Preachers have enriched the commerce of the world. They have gone to all lands and taught people how to live. Barbarians are neither good producers nor good buyers. The higher Christian life is the longer life. Its power to produce is enlarged. Its needs are multiplied. Christianity is the greatest commercial force in the world, because Christianity leads the race toward all possibilities. Many a preacher, moreover, has enriched a neighborhood by a hundredfold more than he was paid for his services. He has broken up saloons, led men to sobriety, and taught them to use their money in right ways. Thus whole communities have risen from poverty and squalor to affluence and refinement, and the plain preacher did it with his heavenly message, told maybe in poor English.

Preachers have, by their teaching, contributed more than physicians to the health of humanity. Better than healing is prevention. Christianity tends powerfully to the longevity of the race, because it works in the individual the conditions of health. Whatever properly regulates the life makes for health.

Preachers have stood for every great moral and social reform. They have heroically fought back the destructive tides of evil which submerge human hopes in despair. They, as a class, stand for sobriety against the saloon, for honesty against gambling, for the home against the brothel, for marriage against concubinage; they stand for law against licentiousness. The church and the preacher are the bulwarks of society against all combinations of evil.

Preachers have been the founders and unfailing supporters of all forms of benevolence. They have followed the drunkard, the libertine, the gambler to his last hour with calls to a better life, and when he sank into the grave, the victim of his own vices, they said the best words they could at the grave, and then took his orphans to some friendly asylum and cared for them till they could care for themselves. All this preachers have done, without money and without price, purely for the love they feel and preach.

As a great class, preachers have done all these things and more, all the time knowing they could never hope for more than a common living. They have enriched the world, content themselves to remain poor. There is not another class among men who have done half so much for the world and received so little of this world's goods in return. Their reward is on high. They do not expect it here; they do not seek it. But to call them parasites is a graceless falsehood.—Baptist Standard.

YET PURSUING.

BY THOMAS MACKELLAR.

After the storm blow'th over,
The grass will sparkle anew;
Though clouds above you may hover,
They only brighten the blue.

There is no virtue in worry,
No good in picking up cares;
Be calm, nor rush in a hurry,
Or you may trip unawares.

Life's duty lieth in labor,
Such as the Master will crown;
Go lend a hand to your neighbor,
Uplift the man that is down.

All human praises eschewing,
Let motive sanctify act:
The Lord beho'deth the doing,
And sifteth the fable from fact.

At work with brain or with finger,
Thy working hallow'd by prayer,
No storm will over thee linger,
The clouds will vanish in air.

Away with sighing and sadness!
Grieve not the Heavenly Dove;
But up and labor with gladness
In faith, in hope, and in love.

ADVANTAGES OF EARLY REVIVALS.

We desire to say a few things to pastors with reference to the advantages of early revival meetings.

1. Early revivals bring the pastor and his people together in those warm attachments that are dependent upon the labor of love and associations of a revival for their birth. This especially applies to those pastors who have been assigned to new appointments. In most charges there are people who never meet the new pastor until the "big meeting" comes on. This ought not to be. Nevertheless, in many instances it is true. Many among this class never contribute anything to the support of the pastor until they become acquainted with him, and learn to love him. The sooner a disease is treated the better the chances are for recovery.

2. Early revivals give the pastor a better showing to test that oft-repeated adage that "a new broom sweeps clean." He can exercise his evangelistic gifts with a much better degree of success than he can to wait till the year is half gone. He can better impress the people with the great purpose of his mission, which is the salvation of souls. The people know that the new pastor has not had time to learn anything about their individual failings from hearsay; hence the pastor can preach against the devil and all sin, and drive the truth home to guilty consciences, and his hearers are minus that imaginary wall of prejudice growing out of the suppositions on the part of some individuals that the pastor has familiarized himself with the history of their cases from what others have told him. There is a point here. People like to be told of their wrongs from the pulpit (that is, the sincere ones do), but the truth has a more direct and better effect if the one to whom it applies does not have the idea that the pastor has had a personal informant. An early revival is a near route to a successful year. It makes a great deal of difference, too, for sinners to get the idea that the pastor is specially interested in their personal salvation. They will love him quicker, and are, consequently, easier won to Christ.

3. Early revivals have their corresponding financial advantages, both as to the support of the pastor and the Conference collections. The people—farmers and merchants, poor people, and the better to do—have more money during the first part of the year than in the Summer, and are, therefore, better prepared to meet their financial obligations to the church. The people, as a rule, are all at home in Winter, instead of being away on long tours to Summer resorts, pleasure trips, etc.; hence, more of that important class attend Winter revivals, and are benefited, and more readily give of their means to the cause of God. The writer has seen pastors test Winter revivals time and again. Not a great while ago one of our most worthy pastors, whom I never shall cease to love, moved on to his new work, and went about his Master's business at once. He saw that a revival was what his people needed, and must have. He was a good preacher and a revivalist himself; but he arranged with me to assist him. We began the meeting one cold, rainy night, with a small crowd, and continued ten days. The result was one of the greatest revivals I ever saw. More than threescore souls were added to the church. The meeting was in a small town on a circuit. The pastor, up to the time of the revival, had received but little money at that place. At the close of his revival the people paid him in subscription and cash about three hundred dollars, and seventy or eighty dollars on a parsonage debt, after having paid this helper over a hundred dollars. Again: Not many Winters ago I assisted one of our pastors in a revival just after he had reached his appointment—a station. We continued the meeting three weeks, through rain, sleet, snow, mud, and sunshine, which resulted in one hundred additions to our own church, and the inmates of the parsonage well provided for. A genuine revival is the condition of church finances. Early revivals are better for pastors, better for the church, better for sinners, and better for the glory of God.

WHAT A LOCAL PREACHER THINKS ABOUT AN EDUCATED MINISTRY.

DEAR BRETHREN: Much has been said through the press, and otherwise, about an educated ministry. The terms are improperly stated; it should be a ministry educated. This implies men educated in the doctrine and discipline of our church, after they have been called of God and commissioned to preach the everlasting gospel, and not men educated specially for the ministry. God makes no mistake, and when he calls men to preach the Word, if they enter the work with their soul in it, he will certainly qualify them to do the work. I don't oppose education, but I do oppose losing sight of the spiritual man and laying too much stress on the mental man. What we want to-day is men anxious about the salvation of the souls of men, having the same mind that was in St. Paul when he said, "God forbid that I should glory save in the cross of Christ." Too many of our boys to-day glory in the fact that they are college graduates; and if some of these young men could control Methodism, it would not be long till our church would be run by college graduates, and those men who have borne the burden and heat of the day would have to take a back seat. This, in my opinion, would be manifesting more zeal than knowledge, and running the church on a scientific scale rather to please men than to please God.

Some of the most influential men, and men of power in the church, have been called from the humble walks of life. God and the church in harmony have taken them in charge, and through the discipline of our church, backed by the Word of God, they have come up to the full stature of men in Christ Jesus, doing the work no other man could but those called of God. God is not ignorant of the fact that we are in a progressive age, and all this fuss about an educated ministry is nonsensical and uncalled for. What we want in our church to-day is more evangelical Christianity, and that will give us the power, whether we be noble or ignoble, bond or free. If the church will put into practice what they know, they will come out right in the end. We have men to-day who, no doubt, have been called of God, and would be a power in the church but on account of the rigid examinations, and, being forced to some extreme part of the district to stand said examination, are held back, thus frustrating God's plan. No one need to be a graduate to understand the fact, from a Bible standpoint, that the great masses of the people to-day are in sin's destructive ways, and anyone who has the love of God in his heart can admonish them to look to Christ and live. The plan of salvation is based on the fact, "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved;" and if we would preach more on this line, and leave off those geographical surveys and planetary expansions, we would come nearer reaching the hearts of the people. What do we care about this old earth as to whether it once was boiling hot, and taken it billions of years to cool before it could be inhabited by man? One thing we know: We are here walking about as rational men, and held accountable to God for our walks through life. And then they soar to the starry heavens, and try to tell us of the countless worlds, and almost locate the house not made with hands, with its innumerable rooms 16x18 feet square for each soul. We might conjecture a thousand times told, and never get this thing right. But the uneducated man can point sinners to the cross, and be a successful worker in the vineyard of the Lord.

Yours for what is right,

REPLY TO PROF. ATWATER.

BY MARY H. HUNT,

Supt. of Scientific Temperance Instruction for the World's and National W. C. T. U.

There is going the rounds of the press a report of the experiments of Prof. Atwater, of Wesleyan University, Middletown, Conn., on the effects of alcohol on a man shut up from four to twelve days in a small air-tight metal chamber. Here, in addition to an ordinary diet, he was fed with alcohol to the amount usual in three glasses of whisky per day, and all his bodily processes watched. From the effect of the alcohol as noted in this experiment, in conditions wholly outside of ordinary human experience, broad deductions and generalizations are drawn which Prof. Atwater thinks should change the present temperance teaching of the pulpit, the platform, the Sunday-school and public school.

Happily, in the abstract of his report he tells what he thinks are the errors in the present teaching which call for correction to make it tally with the case of this man in the box. He says, "The errors are in insisting that alcohol is not a food, but a poison, and that in any quantity, large or small, it is necessarily harmful and not useful."

Prof. Atwater further says "The question of alcohol being called a poison depends on the definition of the term poison." If so, any teaching on the question of whether alcohol is a poison, or not, should be based on a correct definition of a poison.

After admitting that so much depends on the definition, Prof. Atwater fails to give his definition of a poison except as the following statement, applied to alcohol, may be considered one. He says, "Alcohol used in quantities and ways which cause no injurious effects can not be called a poison."

Would he say that no substance which can be used in quantities and ways which cause no injurious effects can be called a poison? If so, a new classification of nearly all substances known to the scientific and popular mind as poisons would be called for. A long list would have to be taken out of the catalogue of poisons, such as strychnia, arsenic, belladonna, opium, and others used by physicians as medicines in quantities and ways which they claim cause no injurious effects, but benefit instead. If the possibility of these substances being used in ways which are not injurious does not take them out of the poison list, why should the same possibility, if such possibility exists, take out alcohol?

STANDARD DEFINITIONS OF A POISON.

Prof. Atwater's definition of a poison—if a definition it may be called—differs essentially from that which appears in such standard authorities as medical dictionaries, encyclopedias, and the writings of eminent medical men. The instruction concerning alcohol as a poison, given in the indorsed physiologies used in the public schools, is based on these standard definitions. Prof. Atwater's criticism of this instruction is based on a conception of a poison which is entirely different from the definitions of the standard dictionaries.

"A poison is a substance which, when absorbed into the blood, is capable of seriously affecting health or of destroying life," says Alfred Swain Taylor, M. D., F. R. S., lecturer on Medical Jurisprudence in Guy's Hospital, London. His definition is virtually the one used by the scientific world of to-day, and is the one followed in the foregoing public school instruction. Dr. Taylor classes alcohol as a poison. Quain's Dictionary of Medicine says, "A poison may be defined as a substance having an inherent deleterious property which renders it capable of destroying life by whatever avenue it is taken into the system;" and among such poisons it enumerates alcohol. Dr. Adolf Fick, professor of physiology in the University of Wurtzburg, Germany, says: "From an exhaustive definition we shall have to class every substance as a poison which, on becoming mixed with the blood, causes a disturbance in the function of any organ. That alcohol is such a substance can not be doubted."

It will be found, on examination, that the definitions of a poison given in the indorsed temperance manuals for the public schools are in harmony with the foregoing authorities, and that in calling alcohol a poison the school text-books teach that alcohol is a substance with inherent properties which render it capable of injuring health and destroying life. Who can deny that it has this capability?

In the indorsed manuals for public school use a definition in substance like the foregoing is given in nearly every case, in direct connection with the statement that alcohol is a poison. Thus there is no occasion for misconception as to what is meant by this term. Whoever is taught from the pulpit, the platform, the Sunday-school, or public school, that a poison is a substance which has the inherent power, when introduced into the circulation, to injure health and destroy life, and that alcohol is such a poison, is learning truths he will not have to unlearn.

The question whether alcohol, as a medicine, can be used in quantities and ways which cause no injurious effects, is not a topic for the public schools, but for medical colleges. The nature and effects of alcoholic drinks—that is, of alcohol as a beverage, not as a medicine—is what the laws of forty-one States and the National Congress require taught all pupils in all public schools as a part of physiology and hygiene; therefore, the effects of alcohol, when used as a medicine, are purposely omitted from the indorsed school physiologies.

SHOULD ALCOHOL BE CLASSED WITH THE WORLD'S FOOD SUBSTANCES?

Prof. Atwater says, "Whether alcohol is to be called a food, or not, depends upon the definition of a food." We wish he had given the public his definition of a food, that we might know whether, in using that term, he means what is generally understood by it.

The common idea of a food is a substance which can be depended on to nourish the body without doing it immediate or ultimate injury. Prof. Atwater apparently considers that anything that can be oxidized in the body and yield energy should be classed as a food. This may be a proper chemical definition of a food, but it is not the ordinary definition. If it were, many violent poisons, as, for instance, muscarine, the active principle of the poisonous mushroom plants, which is oxidized in the body and thus liberates energy, should be classed as foods. If chemistry, for its own purposes, frames a definition of a food which will admit such known poisons together with alcohol, it should in all honesty tell the people that by a food it does not mean a nutritious substance that will nourish without harming the body.

It is evident that other considerations than the mere ability to oxidize and yield energy must enter into a consideration of food values from any rational or practical point of view. Alcohol is a narcotic, and like other narcotics it has the power to create an uncontrollable desire for itself. Sugar and fats are not narcotics, and have not this power. On the contrary, the desire for them is soon satisfied, and then no more is relished. Prof. Atwater himself admits that "many begin with the moderate use [of alcohol], which leads to disastrous excess." No one can tell how soon his attempted moderation will result in excess. "The evil of this excess," Prof. Atwater admits, "is one of the most serious facts with which the physiologists, sociologists and moralists of to-day have to deal."

Truth, the whole truth, can be trusted; it will not beguile to destruction. The whole truth in regard to alcohol, stated in its proper relations, will not leave the false idea that alcohol is a food in the same sense that fat and sugar are foods.

NOT PROVEN.

In conclusion, we submit that inasmuch as Prof. Atwater says the classification of alcohol as a food or a poison depends upon the definition of these terms, and inasmuch as he has not proven the standard definitions of a poison inaccurate, nor the popular ideas of a food wrong, therefore, he has not sustained his charge that the pulpit, platform, Sunday school and public school are in error when teaching in accordance with these definitions and ideas.

If, by any merely technical definition which the world will accept, Prof. Atwater is able to claim that alcohol is a food, we reply by quoting the following from Wood's Therapeutics concerning alcohol, "For a person in health it must be considered as one of the most wasteful, uncertain, and often deleterious of known substances which are considered foods."—Zion's Herald.

The Christian Life.

MORE AND MORE.

Of the many Bible words which grow and grow into our thought and life, with our advancing years, few seem more impressive, even from the standpoint of merely worldly experience, than the familiar idea phrased in the text, "Unto him that hath shall be given." We give more and more love to those worthy of our affection; we bestow an ever-increasing confidence upon those whose friendship we have tested; and we are ready to multiply honors and rewards for those who have rightly won them already. And this text is the best explanation of the oft-asked question, "Why we do not ask favors and aids of those who have the most leisure time, but rather of those who are the busiest and most sought for?" In this world, and in every line of work, we are pretty sure to want the men who are wanted by others. A word of counsel or a minute's help from one who has shown efficiency in every labor, is worth more than a sermon from an idle by-stander, or a whole day's attempted service on the part of him whom the world very properly lets alone. Those who have the most to do are the very ones who are readiest, whenever possible, to do something more; and the qualities which make their time most valuable to themselves and others are the very qualities which they are readiest to enlist in still further service at the call of duty. Notwithstanding all the element of truth in Gray's lines about mute, inglorious Miltons and village Hampdens, or in Milton's assurance that "they also serve who only stand and wait," let us not forget the fact that it is a good thing to be wanted in this world of work.—Sunday-School Times.

A GREAT HINDRANCE.

The desire of appearing to be useful, rather than of being so, is a dreadful hindrance to real usefulness. Making present visible results the measure of value for one's labor leads to superficial habits of thought and action. Sham and show hinder excellence and reality. Setting up pretense and parade in place of truth and honesty destroys the earnestness and sincerity of nature, corrupts the simplicity of our motives, and makes us vacillating and time-serving rather than single-hearted and true. The man whose aim is to seem rather than to be, is self exiled from the noblest field of human activity, which lies always in the strong, deep, still, under-current of influences which, unheeded by the thoughtless multitude, act slowly, silently, but irresistibly and effectually. He is not permitted to do a thing in the best way, unless this way should happen to be that which will secure to him present honor. He will not hold on the even tenor of his way, through good report and evil report, but he must be a sort of public weathercock, shifting with every popular excitement, and ever on the outlook to win the applause or escape the blame of men. Such men love the praise of men more than the praise of God, and their empty hearts and hollow lives collapse before the pressure of temptation or adversity, as a hollow tree goes down before a hurricane. If we would be strong, we must be honest, faithful and true to ourselves, our conscience and our God.—Exchange.

RELIGION SUPERIOR TO CIRCUMSTANCES.

It is easy to persuade ourselves that we would serve God better if we were in easier circumstances. Every man feels that he is capable of gratitude, and he does not see how he could be indifferent to heaven if God would bless him as he did Job. And most of us are sure that if our minds were free from financial care, religious duties would be a delight. But experience has not shown that the rich are more grateful than the poor, or that the rich find it easier to serve God than the poor, or that those who have no burdens think more upon the name of the Lord than those who have hardly a moment they can call their own. The mistake is in supposing that religion is the creature of one's surroundings. Multitudes have gotten the idea into their heads that if they are lost, it will be because of their surroundings, and are anxiously looking for better surroundings as their only hope of being made better. We are not saved by surroundings, but by Christ. It is the glory of Christianity that it saves men in spite of their surroundings, and then sets them to work to better their surroundings. It is the duty of a Christian to seek to improve his circumstances in life; but it is worth remembering that men in the best of circumstances have been lost, and that men in the worst circumstances have been saved. Not even the almost ideal situation suggested by the prayer, "Give me neither poverty nor riches," insures a man's salvation.—Richmond Christian Advocate.

LIVING WELL TO-DAY.

Living well to-day is the best anyone can do. We can not live in the future. We must live in the present. If that be lived wisely, there need not be any anxious concern for the morrow; for, says a judicious writer, "the value of the future depends entirely upon the value attached to to-day; there is no magic in the years to come; nothing can bloom in those fairer fields save that which is sown to-day. The great aim of Christianity is not to teach men the glory of the life to come, but the sacredness of the life that now is; not to make men imagine the beauty of heaven, but to make them realize the divinity of earth; not to unveil the splendor of the Almighty, enthroned among angels, but to reveal the deity of the Man of Nazareth. He has mastered the secret of life who has learned the value of the present moment, who sees the beauty of present surroundings, and who recognizes the possibility of sainthood in his neighbors. To make the most and best of to-day is to command the highest resources of the future, for there is no future outside of us; it lies within us, and we make it for ourselves."—Religious Telescope.

DON'T FORSAKE YOUR FIRST LOVE.

Every genuine preacher of the gospel fell in love with his work. It may have been when he accepted Christ as his Savior and entered upon his service; or it may have been after calm deliberation and reflection for several years. But whenever the decision was made it was accompanied with a glow, and a warmth, and an enthusiasm which he had never experienced before. It was an Edenic hour, like "a little heaven below." This rapturous experience should be cultivated by the preacher through life. It should keep flaming through his heart and mind and his whole being. It should be carried with him to his study, to his pulpit, to the places of his social meetings, and to the homes of his people. In all his intercourse with his people and with his fellow-men it should glow in his face, sweeten his lips, and give a love touch to his hand. And if his love for his work at any time seems faint, and his devotion to it cold, he should pour out his lamentation of this before God, and make it the burden of his request, in secret prayer, that God would bring him back to his first love.—Exchange.

Troubles are tests. Tests of men and women. The Evangelical Messenger says that "as to trouble men are four. Number one is overwhelmed, goes down beneath the waves, and rises not again. Number two just manages to keep his head above water; but what a time he has of it, how loud and strong his lamentations, what a pitiful object! Number three swims easily out and does not mind it much; he gets wet, but he is a philosopher and soon dries himself, making no fuss about it nor coming to any harm. Number four feels the force of the flood as much as the other three, but he is so encased in rubber that the stream only tosses him forward on his way and he exults at the strange means God has taken to promote his progress. Defeat, devastation, peace, triumph—which will we have? The Almighty is able to make his children victorious over all their trials, turning them into means of grace for which hearty thanks can most fitly be given. It is possible not merely to bear them with patience and resignation, but to exult at the glorious results therein wrought."—Exchange.

ARE 10,000 MEN MISTAKEN?

Unless about 10,000 men, mainly professional men—lawyers, doctors editors, preachers and all other classes, including the writer, are very much mistaken, the Electropoise effects cures and gives relief where all other known remedies have failed. Especially is it efficacious in the cure of feeble women and children. "I have used one for the past two years, and find it invaluable as a curative agent."—Rev. Zephaniah Meek, D. D., Editor of Cen. Methodist, Catlettsburg, Ky.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS BY FAMOUS PEOPLE.

Miss Clara Barton, President Red Cross Armenian Relief Expedition, writes from Constantinople: "As you remember, I am not an entire stranger to the virtues of the Electropoise, and I will take great pleasure in passing your offering to afflicted humanity."

Rear-Admiral Luce, U. S. N., Retired, writes from his home in Newport, R. I.: "It gives me pleasure to inform you that the Electropoise has been used in my family for the past eighteen months with most satisfactory results. The one just ordered is the second I have had of you."

Venerable Archdeacon Horatio Gates, of Kansas City, Mo., writes: "Last Winter my daughter was attacked by La Grippe, and through the ravings of this terrible disease reduced to a helpless cripple. In eight weeks after the first application of the Electropoise my little girl was entirely restored."

Dr. C. Colegrove, of Holland, N. Y., a graduate of the Medical Department of the University of Buffalo, writes: "In La Grippe I have never failed to get diseased action under control in a few days. I greatly prefer the Electropoise to any and all agencies for the cure of the sick of which I have any knowledge."

Alvah N. Kentner of the Kentner Fruit Co., Charlotte, N. Y., writes: "Since the day the Electropoise arrived I have not taken 10c worth of drugs of any kind, and my health has steadily improved. The stomach and liver troubles have entirely disappeared."

Your address on a penny postal will secure our 128 page illustrated booklet giving a full explanation of this great treatment, and 300 letters from people who have used the Electropoise and tell how it cured them after all other remedies had failed. You will find that the Electropoise is neither a battery or belt, lasts a life time, can be used on every member of the family, and for all the ills flesh is heir to. Isn't it worth your investigation?

AN AGENT WRITES:

THE ELECTROPOISE OFFICE,
Room 31, No. 16 State St., Rochester, New York.
April 11th, 1899.

Dear Sir:—

In reply to your favor of the 6th inst., would say that I have sold the Electropoise for four years. Have spent upwards of $500 for advertising. I have devoted a part of my time only to the business, and find, that after proper instructions, purchasers are always satisfied with the results. This is gratifying, and makes the business a pleasant one and tends to increase sales.

My profits are more than $1,600.00.

Very truly yours,
FRANK T. SKINNER, Agent.

Write at once for terms, stating territory desired, and we will mail you all the necessary information together with our 16-page periodical, The Electropolse Agent. Address

IN MEMORIAM.

Barnard E. B. Cassity, the oldest son of Rev. J. B. Cassity, of the Louisiana Conference, M. E. Church, South, was born Feb. 28, 1872; was converted at the Cypress Camp Meeting, in DeSoto parish, at about fourteen years old. He lived a consistent Christian for a few years, when he was drawn away by wicked associates, and became more wicked than at any former period of his life. He began working for Allen Bros. & Wadley, at Allenton, in 1896, and moved to Zwolle in 1897 to work for the same firm. At the time of his death he was the planer foreman and shipping clerk for the H. J. Allen Lumber Co.

He married Miss Girtie Hayes in June, 1898. She died suddenly on July 3, last. After her death he was deeply convicted of sin, and his testimony was that, for three months he had lived in torment and slept on pillows of thorn. In this condition he attended the Zwolle Holiness Camp Meeting, and on Oct. 15, 1899, during the altar service in the afternoon, he rushed up to the writer, handed him two cigars, and said, "Bro. Howell, I surrender all, and I want all God has for me." He then went down at the altar in a perfect agony. Knowing that he felt a call to preach the gospel, I stooped and asked him if he was willing to do what he knew God wanted him to do. He said he was; so I announced immediately that he would preach that night. He did not get the assurance of pardon until the "grove prayer meeting" at sundown the same day. He preached that night from the text, "Prepare to meet thy God," and when he called for penitents the altar was filled with probably 75 or 80 penitents, he himself going to the altar to seek the blessing of entire sanctification. At that service there were at least thirty people either converted or sanctified. The following Friday evening, at our holiness prayer meeting, after walking blamelessly in regeneration for five days, he was wholly sanctified, and until his demise, which occurred on Nov. 22, 1899, he was constant and clear in his testimony to these two great blessings. He was "instant in season and out of season," and full of good works.

At his funeral, which took place in our church at Zwolle, after a memorial service we called for penitents, and at least one soul was happily converted, and many rejoiced because of the special and mighty influence of the Holy Ghost. We laid him away beside the one he so loved in this life, but we expect to meet him where there shall be no more parting. Barnie is gone, but, thank God! we will soon be with him and like him, having our robes washed and made white in the blood of the Lamb. His pastor,

ROBT. P. HOWELL.

FROM THE WORK.

CADDO CIRCUIT.

Caddo circuit has three appointments, as our pastor learned when he reached here after hearing the edict of the Bishop at the Annual Conference—Greenwood, Caddo Chapel, and Keachie. Our Bishop sent us a brand-new man, or, at least, new to this charge. He was received very graciously by the whole work. Our presiding elder (also new) was with us at our first quarterly meeting, which was held at Keachie in January, and assessment made for support of pastor; also a division of his time. Greenwood, two Sabbaths of each month; Caddo Chapel, one Sabbath; Keachie, first and fifth Sabbaths. Conference claim collections by the pastor have been good, and while his salary has not all been paid, he expresses himself as very grateful to his charge for the sympathy and kindnesses extended to him and family, "strangers in a strange land." And while there has not been that degree of visible success which we desired on the work this year, yet we think there has been quite an advance on some lines of church work.

1. Two Epworth Leagues have been organized—a feature of church work never before known in the history of this circuit; and, I may add, both are doing fairly well.

2. There has been an increase in Sunday-school work at some points, and while the increase has been small, we return thanks to the Giver of all good gifts for interest manifested in this important field of labor.

3. There has been one class meeting which, for part of the year, met regularly every two weeks, and those who attended found it a great benefit to their spiritual condition.

We have had a decrease in membership this year to quite a goodly number. Some have passed "over the river" to that clime from whence no traveler returns, and the angels are peering over the battlements of heaven, waiting for others who are looking for the summons, "Come up higher; your work is finished." Some by certificate and otherwise.

The financial report for ministerial support will be far below that of last year. The circuit will fall behind nearly one hundred dollars on pastor and presiding elder's salaries, while collections ordered by the Conference will be in advance of last year.

Besides all this, we have raised about one hundred and sixty dollars for repairs on church and parsonage at Keachie; and just here I would like to ask a question, Why is it that a preacher's salary is considered canceled (the balance due) when the Annual Conference convenes? It is not thus with any other debt under the sun. If, perchance, the preacher owes a few dollars, it must be paid, though his family are in need, while we, who promised to pay our pastor a stipulated amount for actual support of his family, consider our obligations canceled after Conference convenes, and the Bishop either returns our former pastor, or sends us another. Why, oh, why, is this difference without a distinction made? Is it just? Is it what "Jesus would do?"

Our pastor is a good, consecrated Christian, giving his whole time to his people. He has labored earnestly and faithfully in the Spirit of the Lord, and whatever failures may have been, we humbly crave that it may not be ascribed to him; and should the Bishop see fit to return Rev. J. O. Bennett to the Caddo work, we will not only return thanks to him, but the whole cabinet, for we point at him with pride, and say, "He is our pastor."

Keachie, La., Dec. 6, 1899.

A WORD OF CAUTION.

The old saying that "a man, who is naked can't give away his shirt," is only another way of saying that you can't give what you haven't got. The man can't give "free medical advice," or any other kind of medical advice who hasn't got a medical education and a certificate to the fact, in the form of a diploma. And in this particular a woman has no more privilege than a man. She can't give medical advice without medical education and medical knowledge.

The offer of free medical advice made by Dr. Pierce, chief consulting physician to the Invalids' Hotel and Surgical Institute, Buffalo, N. Y., has been imitated by so many, who without any medical qualifications claim to give "medical advice" that a word of caution is necessary.

Don't write for medical advice to any one, man or woman, who is not a physician. If they are physicians they will take the title of physicians or doctors so that you may recognize them. If they don't claim that title it is because they dare not, for fear of the law.

Do not forget that there is just as much difference in doctors as in artists. Every little town has its artist who draws and paints. But these "artists" generally paint copies of the works of great artists like Millet. There was only one Millet.

There is only one Invalids' Hotel and Surgical Institute, such as Dr. Pierce presides over. Thousands of women come or write to Dr. Pierce who have found no help at the hands of doctors of lesser skill and narrower experience.

Any sick or ailing woman, suffering from the distressing forms of disease peculiar to women, is invited to consult Dr. Pierce, by letter, free. Such consultations are absolutely private. Each letter is treated as a sacred confidence, and each answer is sent in a plain envelope, bearing no printing upon it.

In this way offensive questions and repulsive examinations may be avoided. Address Dr. R. V. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y.

THURSDAY, DECEMBER 21, 1899.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE PROCEEDINGS.

FIRST DAY.

The Conference convened in Vicksburg at 9 A. M, Wednesday, Dec. 13, 1899, in the main auditorium of the new Methodist Church. In the absence of a Bishop, Rev. T. L. Mellen was elected president pro tem by ballot. The religious exercises were conducted by Bro. Mellen, the opening prayer being offered by Dr. W. L. C. Hunnicutt, and after the singing of an appropriate hymn, the Conference was led in prayer by Rev. R. D. Norsworthy. The roll was then called by Dr. C. G. Andrews. Nearly all the clerical members and a goodly number of lay delegates answered their names.

Dr. Andrews was elected secretary-in-chief, with the following as his assistants, namely: Revs. J. A. B. Jones, G. H. Galloway, J. T. Leggett, G. S. Harmon, H. G. Hawkins, and C. F. Emery.

Organization having been effected, a motion was passed to accept the kind invitation of Rev. Dr. Hillhouse, pastor of the Presbyterian Church, to hold the sessions of the Conference in the Presbyterian Church, and the Conference immediately adjourned to that building. The change was made on account of the fact that the unfinished and open condition of the new church, and the noise from the work in progress, would have interfered seriously with the comfort of all present, as well as with the deliberations of the Conference.

Business having been resumed in the new place of meeting, the usual standing committees were appointed; a number of communications and reports were read and referred to the proper committees. Nine A. M. and 1 P. M. were fixed as the hours for meeting and adjournment. Dr. P. H. Whisner, secretary of the Board of Church Extension; Dr. J. D. Barbee, agent of the Publishing House; Dr. Geo. D. French, agent of the American Bible Society, and Rev. C. D. Atkinson, solicitor for the Review of Missions, were introduced, and each addressed the Conference in behalf of the special cause he represented. Dr. John J. Tigert, editor of the Bi-monthly Review, on being introduced, stated that he would address the Conference on another occasion. Later on Dr. Hillhouse, pastor of the Presbyterian Church in Vicksburg; Dr. Sproles, pastor of the Baptist Church, and Dr. W. B. Murrah, president of Millsaps College, were presented to the Conference.

A resolution of appreciation and commendation, which was unanimously passed by the Louisiana Conference during its recent session respecting Rev. P. A. Johnston, a venerable and saintly superannuate who has just transferred back to the Mississippi Conference, was read, and awakened a tender and hearty response in the hearts of the brethren. Bro. Johnston was for over thirty years an active and highly useful member of the Mississippi Conference, and it is eminently fitting that the closing years of his life should be spent among those who have known him longest and best, especially as he became a member of the Louisiana Conference merely as the result of the change made several years ago in the boundary between the two Conferences.

Shortly after the noon hour Bishop Duncan arrived, and took the chair. After expressing regret at being unable to reach the Conference sooner, the Bishop mentioned that he felt it a great pleasure to be permitted to be present.

Question 20, "Are all the preachers blameless in their lives and official administration?" was next called, and the characters of the presiding elders having been passed, each made a report of the work and condition of his district. The reports were nearly all gratifying, and indicated that substantial progress has been made the past year along all lines.

The characters of the following were passed, and their names were referred for superannuation to the Committee on Conference Relations, namely: A. B. Nicholson, E. A. Flowers, G. Bancroft, J. W. Harmon, J. A. Vance, H. R. Caldwell, R. A. Sibley, J. H. Evans, N. B. Young, W. B. Hines, P. Howard, D. G. W. Ellis, L. P. Meador, T. W. Brown, R. B. Downer, and W. W. Hurst. Bro. Hurst has been effective up to this time, but, on account of age and failing health, he announced that he wished to superannuate. The name of J. W. Sandell was referred for a supernumerary relation.

After various announcements Conference adjourned with the benediction.

SECOND DAY.

Conference was called to order at 9 A. M.; Bishop Duncan in the chair. After roll call and the reading and approval of the Minutes of yesterday's session, the characters of J. M. Cowan and G. R. Ellis were passed, and their names were referred to the committee for a supernumerary relation. The name of J. H. Holland was referred for superannuation. The passage of character was continued, and action was taken in the case of the undergraduates as follows: Thos. J. O'Neal, F. L. Crowson, J. W. Campbell, L. F. Alford and J. J. Golden, having stood approved examinations, were continued on trial and advanced to the class of the second year. W. L. Blackwell and R. L. Webb were continued on trial and in the class of the first year. H. A. Gatlin, M. A. Thurman and W. A. Terry were continued in the class of the second year. L. E. Alford and H. J. Moore were advanced to the class of the third year. R. A. Sibley, Jr., and Geo. W. Huff were continued in the class of the third year. J. H. Foreman, Jas. C. Ellis, Henry C. Brown, Geo. P. McKeown, John A. Moore, Geo. M. Hull and F. B. Ormond were advanced to the class of the fourth year. H. B. Trevilion was continued in the class of the fourth year. Thos. B. Cottrell, having stood an approved examination on the fourth year's course, was elected to elder's orders.

It was announced that A. H. Shannon, who is now a student in Vanderbilt University, has transferred to the Tennessee Conference.

At his own request Thos. J. Norsworthy, who this year served the Camden circuit, was granted a location.

The following local preachers were elected to deacon's orders: H. P. Lewis, Jr.; Jas. Johnson, who is a full-blooded Choctaw Indian; R. L. Webb, W. L. Blackwell and Geo. W. Hiveley.

The passage of character was resumed, and reports were heard from a considerable number of the itinerants.

The report made by Rev. A. F. Watkins for the Crawford Street Church, Vicksburg, was highly gratifying. All the assessments have been raised in full. Forty members have been received during the year by letter and on profession. Notwithstanding the fact that over $16,000 has been expended on the new house of worship now nearing completion, the sum of $250 has been subscribed by the members to the Twentieth Century Fund, thirty five of which has been paid. Splendid reports were also made by Revs. R. W. Bailey, pastor of First Church, Jackson; J. M. Weems, pastor of Central Church, Meridian, and by D. P. Bradford, pastor of East End, Meridian. The brother last named reported ninety-nine accessions for the year, and a net gain in membership of seventy. Central Church, Meridian, has, perhaps, the largest Sunday-school in the Conference, the total enrollment being 588. The report made by Bro. Geo. W. Huff indicated phenomenal success, he having received into the church on the Whittington circuit this year 194 new members, and raised nearly $3,000 for all purposes.

A report from East Mississippi Female College was read by Pres. J. W. Beeson, and referred to the Board of Education. As the report showed, this institution is in a most flourishing condition. The enrollment for this session has already reached three hundred, of which one hundred and fifty-eight are boarders. Thirty-one of the students have professed conversion since the opening. Shortly before adjournment Dr. Tigert, the Book Editor, came forward, and made an eloquent appeal in behalf of the Bi-monthly Review, which is so dear to his heart, and also gave some needed advice and information respecting the compilation of our church statistics, especially with reference to the supposed decrease in our membership, about which there has been so much talk of late.

Bishop Galloway came in a little while before the close of the session, and was warmly welcomed both by Bishop Duncan and by the Conference. The Conference was honored this morning by the presence of Revs. C. P. Colmery, pastor of the Presbyterian Church, Edwards, Miss.; J. A. Bowen, of the North Mississippi Conference; F. S. Parker and V. D. Skipper, both of the Louisiana Conference.

After sundry announcements came the benediction.

THIRD DAY.

Conference met at the usual hour, Bishop Duncan in the chair. The devotional exercises were conducted by Dr. C. G. Andrews. After the reading and approval of the Minutes, a resolution offered by Rev. C. F. Emery was unanimously adopted extending cordial thanks to our Jewish friends in Vicksburg for their kindness and courtesy in permitting the Crawford Street congregation to use their synagogue during the past eight months, pending the construction of the new church.

Question 20 was taken up, the characters of all the itinerants not previously acted upon were passed, and reports were heard from all the remaining pastoral charges. C. M. Crossley, having stood an approved examination, was advanced to the class of the fourth year.

Dr. G. C. Harris, of the Protestant Episcopal Church, was presented to the Conference.

J. W. Tinnin was announced as having withdrawn from our church and ministry, and his credentials were turned over by his presiding elder to the secretary of the Conference.

Thos. H. King was readmitted into the traveling connection.

The following were admitted on trial, namely: James M. Corley, James Erastus Williams, John Robert Jones, William S. Hightower, and John Early Gray.

Mr. Norman Guice, a bright young student of Millsaps College, who is soliciting funds for the erection of a Y. M. C. A. building at the college, was introduced to the Conference, and made a short talk in behalf of this worthy enterprise.

Rev. I. L. Peebles introduced a resolution making it the duty of each pastor to get up at once in his charge a petition to the next Legislature asking for the enactment of a law prohibiting the running of excursion, freight and passenger trains on the Sabbath. After some discussion the resolution was passed by a large vote. If each pastor will respond heartily to this resolution, the numerous petitions sent up to the Legislature are sure to have great weight.

A resolution was introduced by Rev. H. G. Hawkins petitioning Congress to greatly increase the number of chaplains for our army, the present number being wofully insufficient, considering the recent large increase in our military force; and also asking that no discrimination be made against army chaplains as to pay in comparison with other military officers. Same was adopted.

It having been announced that Rev. P. H. Howse recently had the misfortune to lose two horses—a loss he could ill afford to sustain—a collection was taken for his benefit, and the sum of $56 was quickly raised.

The report of the Board of Directors of our Orphans' Home at Water Valley, which was read by Rev. A. F. Watkins, mentioned that eighty-seven children have been cared for by this splendid institution this year. Twenty-seven of these have been adopted into good Christian homes. Fifty-three remain in the Home. The North Mississippi Conference has contributed $2,800 the present year for the support of the Home; the Mississippi Conference about $2,365. There is not a dollar of indebtedness on the institution, and everything is in fine working order. The report expressed great regret at the resignation of Rev. M. L. Burton, who has proved himself a most efficient manager, and stated that Rev. W. S. Harrison, of the North Mississippi Conference, has been elected local manager, with Rev. W. T. Griffin, of the Mississippi Conference, as field agent. Rev. R. J. Jones and R. L. Bennett were elected to fill the vacancies in the Board of Directors caused by the expiration of the terms of office of two members.

The report made by Rev. I. L. Peebles this morning was one of the most gratifying that has been heard this Conference, there having been 169 accessions to the church at McComb City this year, the net gain in membership being 103. Bro. Peebles has baptized 100 infants.

Another splendid report was that made by Rev. R. A. Breland, of the Amite Church, who mentioned having received over 200 members, the net increase on the charge being 125 members. The amount raised on the circuit for all purposes is fully double that of last year.

Rev. P. D. Hardin had the good fortune to report all his assessments as overpaid.

The best report, perhaps, as regards the Twentieth Century Fund, was made by Rev. B. F. Lewis. Unless we are misinformed, Vossburg, under the pastorate of Rev. W. M. Sullivan, has made the largest offering—$112—to our Orphans' Home.

FOURTH DAY.

The devotional exercises were conducted by Rev. R. D. Norsworthy. Minutes of yesterday were read and approved. A resolution offered by Rev. C. F. Emery, and others, petitioning our National Congress not to recognize the claims of Brigham H. Roberts to a seat in that body, and asking for an amendment to the Constitution absolutely prohibiting polygamy, was unanimously adopted.

A resolution offered by Rev. T. L. Mellen was adopted, recommending the erection of a Methodist Church in North Jackson, near Millsaps College.

The report of the Committee on the State of the Church was read by Rev. I. L. Peebles, and adopted without change.

Rev. J. N. Tucker, missionary to the Choctaws, made a report of his work. His character was passed, and he was located at his own request.

Rev. J. W. Crisler read the report of the Committee on Publishing Interests, some items of which were discussed at considerable length, the report being finally adopted after being amended by the striking out of a clause censuring the publisher of the NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE in admitting certain advertisements deemed objectionable by some. Pending the adoption of the report, the editor of the NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE addressed the Conference in behalf of its official organ. A resolution, signed by H. M. Ellis and J. A. B. Jones, was passed, thanking Dr. W. C. Black for the recent liquidation of the debt of long standing on the ADVOCATE. Revs. R. J. Jones, L. Carley, and A. F. Watkins were reappointed on the ADVOCATE Publishing Committee.

A resolution, signed by Geo. H. Thompson, C. G. Andrews, J. M. Weems, and others, was adopted, providing for the election at this Conference of a committee of three, the same to confer with a like committee from the North Mississippi Conference, which shall inquire into the practicability of publishing a Methodist paper in Mississippi.

Rabbi George Solomon, of Vicksburg, was at this point introduced to the Conference.

Report No. 1, of the Board of Education, recommending adverse action in regard to the new charter recently obtained by Revs. J. W. Chambers, J. M. Morse, and others, for Whitworth College, having been read, President Chambers rose and made a speech of some length, in which he stated the grounds and reasons for the action that had been taken. Final action in the matter was deferred till the afternoon session, which it was decided to hold, beginning at 3 P. M.

By the adoption of the report of the Committee on Conference Relations, all the brethren whose names had been previously referred for superannuation were granted that relation. The request of G. R. Ellis and of J. M. Cowan for a supernumerary relation was refused. At his own request J. M. Cowan was then located.

The following were admitted into full connection after having answered the disciplinary questions satisfactorily, to-wit: H. J. Moore, L. E. Alford, and G. S. Harmon. Bishop Duncan's address to the class thus admitted was brotherly, humorous, original, and full of the soundest wisdom. The golden suggestions and advice it contained were greatly enjoyed by the Conference, and will prove of lasting benefit to many.

Just before adjournment a resolution introduced by Rev. T. B. Holloman was adopted, inviting Bro. G. W. Bachman, colporteur of the North Mississippi Conference, to travel through our Conference year as far as practicable the coming year, in view of the fact that we have no regular colporteur. After a number of announcements, Conference adjourned with the benediction.

FOURTH DAY—AFTERNOON SESSION.

Conference reassembled at 3 P. M.; Dr. W. L. C. Hunnicutt in the chair by request of Bishop Duncan. Rev. C. D. Cecil led in prayer, after which reports from the following committees were read and adopted, with some amendments in one or two instances: Joint Board of Finance, on Sabbath Observance, Temperance, Epworth League, Bible Cause, and District Conference Records. The General Secretary of the Epworth League having asked for an expression of opinion from the Conference as to the advisability of holding a General League Conference next year for the Leaguers of Southern Methodism, the Epworth League Committee declared against the holding of such a gathering.

The debate on the report brought in this morning by the Board of Education was resumed, and continued until a late hour, the report being finally adopted without change. By virtue of this action the Conference repudiated the new charter recently obtained for Whitworth College, and disavowed the legality of any mortgage upon the property of that institution by reason of certain express stipulations in the original deeds of gift to the church.

A telegram was received from Rev. V. V. Boone, who was called home yesterday to the bed-side of his mother, stating that she had just died. A resolution expressing condolence was passed, and Rev. J. A. B. Jones was instructed to communicate the same to Bro. Boone.

Rev. W. B. Lewis, of Yazoo City, continues to be one of our most successful pastors, as his report to-day indicated. All his assessments were raised in full. Over $2,700 was raised for all purposes, and 33 new members were received during the year.

Sundry announcements were made, and the benediction was pronounced.

Following is the program as announced for Sunday:

At the new Methodist Church: 9 A. M., love-feast, conducted by W. B. Lewis; 11 A. M., sermon by Bishop Duncan, followed by the ordination of deacons; at 3 P. M., sermon by Dr. Hunnicutt, followed by ordination of elders; 7:30 P. M., sermon by Rev. H. W. Featherstun, followed by sacramental service conducted by Dr. C. G. Andrews.

First Baptist Church: 11 A. M., sermon by Dr. W. B. Murrah; 7:30 P. M., sermon by Bishop Duncan.

Presbyterian Church: 11 A. M., Rev. J. E. Carpenter; 7:30 P. M., Rev. J. M. Weems.

Wesley Chapel M. E. Church: 11 A. M., G. H. Thompson; 7:30 P. M., W. T. Griffin.

South Vicksburg: 7:30 P. M., W. J. Ferguson.

Calvary Baptist Church: 11 A. M., Rev. R. W. Bailey; 7:30 P. M., Rev. J. E. Carpenter.

SIXTH DAY.

Conference met at 9 A. M., Bishop Duncan in the chair. Rev. C. Mc Donald conducted the devotional service. A resolution offered by Rev. J. P. Drake was unanimously adopted, the purport of which was that the Conference in the action that it took Saturday afternoon respecting Whitworth College did not intend to reflect upon the integrity and sincerity of Revs. J. W. Chambers, J. M. Morse, and others, in obtaining a new charter for the college.

Reports were heard from the Sunday-school Board and Church Extension Board.

Brookhaven was selected as the place for holding the next session of the Conference.

Miss Addie Purnell, president of the Woman's Home Mission Society, was introduced, and made an interesting talk in behalf thereof. The Conference by resolution expressed its thanks to Miss Addie Purnell and her co-adjutors for their valuable assistance to the brethren in repairing and building parsonages.

A splendid report was then read from the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society by Mrs. Scott Phillips, president of the Vicksburg District Society.

Rev. A. F. Watkins introduced a resolution expressing the cordial thanks of the Conference to the Vanderbilt family for their continued liberality to Vanderbilt University, and requesting Secretary Andrews to forward a copy of the same to them. Adopted.

A resolution offered by Capt. S. B. Watts was adopted providing for the appointment of a committee to take steps to secure proper title deeds for all our institutions of learning and looking to the prevention of the putting of any incumbrance upon such property.

Report No. 2 on Publishing Interests recommended the appointment of Rev. M. M. Black as assistant editor of the NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE. Adopted.

Report No. 2 of the Board of Education, giving some important facts and suggestions regarding the Twentieth Century Movement in our Conference, was read and adopted.

Report No. 3 of the Board of Education and the report of the Board of Missions were then read and adopted.

A resolution offered by Rev. H. W. Featherstun was adopted, expressive of sympathy with Bishop O. P. Fitzgerald in his infirmity, and also thanking Bishop Duncan for his kindness in coming to hold the Conference in place of Bishop Fitzgerald, and for his courteous administration thereof.

The Conference then went into memorial service in honor of Rev. J. M. Pugh, who died during the year, the memoir prepared by Rev. W. B. Lewis being read by Rev. J. P. Drake. Appropriate tributes were paid by a number of the brethren.

A number of committees called for by certain resolutions previously passed were announced, as were also the standing committees for the ensuing year.

The usual resolutions of thanks to the railroads, to the secular papers and to the people who entertained the Conference, were adopted by a rising vote.

Following are some of the items read at this juncture by the statistical secretary:

Number of local preachers, 120; number of members, 37,756. Infants baptized, 1,018; adults baptized, 656; number of Epworth Leagues, 80—an increase of 23 over last year; Epworth League members, 2,339—an increase of 349; number of Sunday-schools, 357; Sunday-school teachers, 2165; Sunday-school scholars, 17,532; amount raised for superannuates and for the widows and orphans of deceased preachers, $4,288.26; amount raised for foreign missions, $6,122.25; amount raised for domestic missions, $2,613.26; amount raised for church extension, $1,854.37; number of societies, 448; number of houses of worship, 403; number of pastoral charges, 120; number of parsonages, 109.

Then followed the reading of the appointments, after which Conference adjourned sine die.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE NOTES.

The new Methodist Church in Vicksburg, which is now nearing completion, is not surpassed in beauty, adaptability and general excellence by any in the State. It will be quite an ornament to the city, an honor to Methodism, and the joy of the congregation who are to worship therein. It will cost, when finished, about $26,000. The lot on which it stands is worth $10,000 additional.

The Conference was brightened by the presence of twenty-five, or more, preachers' wives, who enjoyed, if possible, even more than their husbands, listening to the highly interesting proceedings of our annual assembly. No more heroic set of women can be found than the wives of Methodist itinerants.

Dr. Tigert's sermon, Wednesday night, was both pleasing and powerful, and was eagerly listened to by a large audience.

The Rally, Thursday night, in behalf of the Twentieth Century Fund, was a grand success. Magnificent addresses, to which no synopsis could do justice, were delivered by Bishops Galloway and Duncan, and were followed by a collection, which resulted in the raising in cash and subscriptions of over $3,500. One thousand of this amount was subscribed by that untiring friend of education, Major R. W. Millsaps. The collection was all the more gratifying as, on account of the inclement weather, the audience was much smaller than was expected. The preachers, however, were on hand, and more liberal givers than they can not be found on this earth.

Our Conference was honored by the presence of the genial and portly G. W. Bachman, and the devout and sweet-spirited J. A. Bowen, of the North Mississippi Conference.

We were glad to have with us also from the Louisiana Conference the gentle and scholarly F. S. Parker, the modest P. H. Fontaine, the energetic V. D. Skipper, the consecrated C. D. Atkinson, and the loyal and persevering J. M. Alford.

In calling for the reports, Bishop Duncan put great emphasis upon the Twentieth Century Thank-offering movement. If the pastors do not push this matter vigorously and enthusiastically during the year 1900, our lack of zeal will not be the Bishop's fault.

As a host, Pastor Watkins was thoughtful, obliging, and tireless, and could not be improved upon. He is deservedly popular, both in his charge and in the Conference.

The following preachers' brides were in attendance, namely: Mrs. H. G. Hawkins, Mrs. J. J. Golden, and Mrs. L. E. Alford.

Bishop Duncan's sermon, Sunday morning, in the new church, which was packed almost to its utmost capacity, was a grand and searching presentation of the duties, qualifications and responsibilities of a spiritual shepherd. At its conclusion the following were ordained deacons: G. S. Harmon, H. P. Lewis, Jr.; R. L. Webb, W. L. Blackwell, Jas. Johnson, and Geo. W. Hiveley.

Bishop Duncan was to have preached at the First Baptist Church, Sunday night, but not being well, Rev. T. L. Mellen delivered a most excellent sermon in his stead.

At 3 P. M., Sunday, after a very forceful and thoughtful sermon by Dr. W. L. C. Hunnicutt, Revs. F. B. Ormond and T. B. Cottrell were ordained elders.

It was the breeziest session that has been held for several years.

Pres. L. T. Fitzhugh, of Belhaven College, was a welcome visitor to the Conference.

A successful and interesting missionary rally was held Saturday night.

Friday afternoon Rev. L. S. Jones preached a strong and moving sermon.

The sermon by Rev. J. E. Carpenter, Friday night, was highly spoken of.

The people of Vicksburg displayed a most lavish and kindly hospitality during the Conference. In consequence thereof, a larger number of visitors than usual were in attendance. We were delightfully entertained in the home of Mr. and Mrs. B. W. Griffith, to whom we are indebted for marked courtesies and kindness.

The Conference was highly delighted with the presidency of Bishop Duncan, who, both in the chair and in the pulpit, impressed all with his eminent fitness for the bishopric. He is a man of tremendous force, wise in counsel, and radiant with the spirit of love. The remarks that he interspersed at intervals as the Conference business proceeded were so pertinent and sensible as to be like pearls

DON'T NEGLECT YOUR KIDNEYS.

Weak Kidneys Caused by Over-work, by Lifting or a Strain.

It used to be considered that only urinary troubles were to be traced to the kidneys, bnt now modern science proves that nearly all diseases have their beginning in the disorder of these most important organs.

Now by this is not meant that you should overlook all the other organs and merely look after the kidneys.

Your other organs may need attention—bnt yonr kidneys most, because they do most.

If yon are sick, do not neglect yonr kidneys, because as soon as they are well, they will help all the other organs to health.

The mild and immediate effect of Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, the great kidney remedy, is soon realized. It stands the highest for its wonderful cnres of the most distressing cases. Swamp-Root will set your whole system right, and the best proof of this is a trial.

You may have a sample bottle of this famous kidney remedy sent free by mail postpaid, by which you may test its virtues for such disorders as kidney, bladder and uric acid diseases, and urinary troubles, obliged to pass water frequently night and day, smarting or irritation in passing, brick-dust or sediment in the urine, constant headache, backache, lame back, dizziness, sleeplessness, indigestion, nervousness, skin trouble, Bright's disease, neuralgia, rheumatism, bloating, irritability, worn-out feeling, lack of ambition, loss of flesh, sallow complexion.

If your water, when allowed to remain undisturbed in a glass or bottle for twenty-four hours, forms a sediment or settling or has a cloudy appearance, it is evidence that your kidneys and bladder need immediate attention.

Swamp-Root is the great discovery of the eminent kidney specialist, Dr. Kilmer, and is used in the leading hospitals; recommended by skillful physicians in their private practice; and is taken by doctors themselves who have kidney ailments, because they recognize in it the greatest and most successful remedy for kidney and bladder troubles that science has ever been able to compound.

If you have the slightest symptoms of a kidney or bladder trouble, or if there is a trace of it in your family history, send at once to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., who will gladly send you, by mail immediately, without cost to you, a sample bottle of Swamp-Root and a book containing many of the thousands upon thousands of testimonial letters received from sufferers cured. Be sure to say that you read this article in the NEW ORLEANS "CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE."

If you are already convinced that Swamp-Root is what you need, you can purchase the regular fifty-cent and one-dollar size bottles at drug stores. Don't make any mistake, but remember the name, Swamp-Root, Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root.

Home Circle.

A MEMORY.

BY EUGENE FIELD.

The fire upon the hearth is low,
And there is stillness everywhere;
Like troubled spirits, here and there
The firelight shadows flattering go.
And as the shadows round me creep,
A childish treble breaks the gloom,
And softly from a farther room
Comes: "Now I lay me down to sleep."

And somehow with that little prayer,
And that sweet treble in my ears,
My thought goes back to distant years
And lingers with a dear one there;
Again I hear the child's Amen,
My mother's face comes back to me;
Crouched at her side I seem to be,
And mother holds my hand again.

Oh, for an hour in that dear place!
Oh, for the peace of that dear time!
Oh, for that childish trust sublime!
Oh, for a glimpse of mother's face!
Yet as the shadows round me creep,
I do not seem to be alone—
Sweet magic of that treble tone—
And "Now I lay me down to sleep."

"COMMODORE" VANDERBILT.

"I have three teams here that I want to get over to Staten Island," said a boy of twelve, one day in 1806, to the innkeeper at South Amboy, New Jersey. "If you will put us across, I'll leave with you one of my horses in pawn, and if I don't send you back six dollars within forty-eight hours, you may keep the horse." The innkeeper asked the reason for this novel proposition, and learned that the lad's father had contracted to get the cargo of a vessel, stranded near Sandy Hook, and take it to New York in lighters. The boy had been sent with three wagons, six horses, and three men, to carry the cargo across a sandspit to the lighters. The work accomplished, he started, with only six dollars, to travel a long distance home over the Jersey sands, and reached South Amboy penniless. "I'll do it," said the innkeeper, as he looked into the bright, honest eyes of the boy. The horse was soon redeemed.

"My boy," said the same boy's mother, on the first of May, 1810, when he asked her to lend him one hundred dollars to buy a boat, "on the twenty-seventh of this month you will be sixteen years old. If, by that time, you will plow, harrow and plant with corn the eight-acre lot, I will advance you the money."

The field was rough and stony, but the work was done on time, and well done. From this small beginning Cornelius Vanderbilt laid the foundation of a colossal fortune. He would often work all night, carrying vegetables from and to Staten Island.

The young boatman's courage was put to the test one day when a gale swept over the harbor, and disaster threatened anyone who might start out in face of the storm. Mariners and boatmen generally agreed that it would be unsafe to venture on the raging waters, and the boatmen—all but one—remained at home with their produce intended for the New York market, waiting for fair weather. Not so Cornelius Vanderbilt. With the keenness which characterized him in later life in his steamship and railway undertakings, he perceived that should he make his way to New York on a day when the other boatmen did not dare to cross, he would be sure to get much higher prices for his produce, and he felt confidence in his ability to guide his craft safely through the angry waves. Vanderbilt started, with many premonitions of evil on the part of those who were standing about when he pushed off from the Staten Island shore. He reached New York in safety with his load, and was hailed with surprise and joy by the city marketmen, who were anxious for his stock of fresh vegetables. The boldness of the young boatman, and his skill and success as a navigator, were talked of everywhere, and people said that, whatever happened, Vanderbilt was certain to make his trips with regularity, and also with safety. At the Staten Island and the New York landing-places travelers waited for Vanderbilt's boat, preferring it to others which were starting earlier, or whose owners offered to take passengers for less than Vanderbilt.

Cornelius Vanderbilt was always reliable, and this reliability helped him to get an important contract for transporting provisions to the forts in the vicinity of New York during the war of 1812. Other carriers made lower bids than young Vanderbilt, but he was already well known as certain to carry out an agreement under any and all circumstances, and the authorities felt that if they accepted his terms, neither stress of weather nor any other condition would prevent the arrangement from being carried out. It was of vital consequence, with hostile English men-of-war hovering about the entrance to the harbor, and the forts liable to attack at any time, that the supplies should go to the forces stationed there with certainty and regularity, and it was decided that the record of the young Staten Island boatman gave assurance that his service would be both certain and regular. This contract, making Vanderbilt, who was still a minor, an important factor in the defense of New York against the public enemy, may have been the turning-point in his career. It called general attention to him as a man who possessed the confidence of those charged with the nation's interests, and it proved his capacity for higher and broader responsibilities.

In 1818 Cornelius Vanderbilt had saved $9,000, and owned two or three small vessels. He was a believer in the power of steam, as applied by Robert Fulton, to propel boats in the water, and he became captain of a steamboat which ran between New York and his new home at New Brunswick, New Jersey. He and his wife kept a hotel there, which Mrs. Vanderbilt made popular by her careful attention to the needs of the guests, her industry and unwearying good humor.

Such was the beginning of the great Vanderbilt fortune. Hard work, enterprise, reliability, and daring in seizing opportunities from which others shrank, were the characteristics which enabled the first Cornelius Vanderbilt to become the master of a railway empire and the founder of a house whose wealth probably aggregates half a billion dollars.

There was no chance; there was no luck about his operations. He succeeded where others failed because he had courage, industry, and ability in a degree superior to his competitors. He also had a remarkable faculty of concentration.

Cornelius, or—as he came to be known on account of his large steamship interests—"Commodore" Vanderbilt, entered upon the second stage of his career by chartering steamboats, and running opposition to all the old lines, up the North river, up the East river, up the Connecticut river—everywhere. As he made money, he invested it in stocks which were available in cash, and always ready for a bargain. Honorable in trade, prompt, firm, and reliable, he was decided in his business, and could drive as hard a bargain as any man in the city. His custom was to conduct his business on the cash principle, and never allow a Saturday night to close without every man in his employ getting his money. If anybody was about to fail, wanted money, had a bargain to offer, he knew where to call. Nothing came amiss. A load of lumber, coal, or cordage; a cargo of a ship, or a stock of goods in a factory; glassware, merchandise, or clothing—the Commodore was sure to find a use for them.

When Vanderbilt concluded to devote himself altogether to his railroad business, he disposed of his steamship interests, not by degrees, but promptly and completely. He created the New York Central road out of his various railway acquisitions, and aimed to make it the finest property of the kind in the world. He certainly made it one of the finest, and under his policy, continued by his successors, it has grown to be a great transportation empire, with its arms reaching across the continent.—Success.

TRUTHFULNESS.

Few people will tell a glaring lie. We usually seek to dress the devil in the livery of heaven. We ease our conscience by taking a fact as our starting-point, and then let our imagination play with it a little. Our prevarication is, therefore, largely in warping the fact, and especially by exaggeration. We Americans have such a love for big things, for the novel and sensational, that we are apt to magnify that which we tell. Dr. Watson shrewdly suggested in his lecture on Scottish characteristics that this is the fundamental element of American wit. Certain it is that there is a sad lack of a conscientious desire to tell the truth. Our conversation is very loose. Even good men get three black crows out of something as black as a crow. The desire to project ourselves into what we tell often leads us to color our words unduly.

It is a bad habit. The habit will grow. Truth is the sacred basis of all human relations. We necessarily take each other on trust. As soon as confidence is gone the benefit and beauty of human relations is undermined. Society can no longer prosper, for suspicion and distrust will disorganize everything. Lying is a denial of the rights of man, for men have a natural right to the truth. We think a gentleman was right who said to us a few days ago: "I esteem truthfulness above everything in a man. If a person will lie, there is very little nobilty to appeal to in him."

Boys, be truthful, Strangle the white lies. They are seeds that sprout black ones. Be careful in your speech to state things exactly, or you will find, when you least wish it, a lying tongue will get you into trouble. There is great virtue in the man who, as Emerson puts it, eternally stands for a fact.—Epworth Herald.

A Small Beginning.

A little snow ball on the summit of the Alps, rolled up by the winds, moves slowly downward. Gaining in strength and size, it grows rapidly to giant proportions, and finally becomes the frightful avalanche, destroying everything in its path. Consumption begins with a little cough, a trifling pain, a passing flush on the cheeks. This is but the beginning of the avalanche, consumption, that knows no pity, recognizes no distinction. Just at the beginning thousands commit the error of not checking and curing the disease by using MARSDEN'S PECTORAL BALM.

Two Verdicts.

"After a fair and impartial trial you are judged guilty by this court, and you are sentenced to be hung by the neck until you are dead." The solemn tones of the judge, the despairing face of the prisoner, and the painful stillness of the court-room, makes it a scene of awful impress. Now turn to a brighter scene at the home circle. A mother radiant with joy over the recovery of a child snatched from the clutches of Malaria. For several years she, with her devoted sister, Miss Jane Williams, has resided in Ruston with an older sister, Mrs. S. M. Faulk. Of their father's family there is but one more, besides these three devoted women—Mrs. N. M. Calhoun, of Vidalia, La.

Miss Nancy's Christian character and example made her presence a constant inspiration to holy living. She was timid, reticent; in frail health, but one of the most regular of attendants at the preaching and prayer-meeting services, and her saintly character made her presence a benediction to all who "seek those things that are above." She never made excuses, or tried to evade responsibility, but was ready always to perform a duty.

With such a life it is not at all surprising that her testimony to the last was definite and satisfactory. She repeatedly stated that she trusted fully in the Lord, and that he was with her. She was without doubt or fear, having "full assurance of faith."

After five weeks of excruciating pain she very calmly passed away, Nov. 18, 1899. A large number of friends gathered for the simple service at the church Sunday morning. We sang, "Children of the heavenly King," "We praise thee, O God, for the Son of thy love," and, "There is a fountain filled with blood"—hymns of her own selection. Her pastor, in a short address, paid a beautiful tribute to her life. The remains were taken to Monroe, and thence to the family cemetery, Faulk's Chapel, and laid to rest with the glorious hope of the resurrection.

A LOVING FRIEND.

WALSWORTH—KISIAH MAULDIN was born Sept. 8, 1818, in Edgefield district, S. C.; moved to Alabama with her parents while young. She was married to William Walsworth, July 2, 1835; moved to Tippah county, Miss., in 1836; was converted at Salem Camp Meeting in 1837 or 1838, and joined the M. E. Church, South; moved to Louisiana in 1850, and settled in Jackson parish, where they have lived ever since. She remained in the M. E. Church till 1885, when, moving to a different settlement, and for convenience of church, she joined the M. P. Church, of which she was a consistent member till death, which happened Oct. 6, 1899. Being too feeble to keep house, they were living with their son, D. F. Walsworth, at the time. On Friday morning the family got up early, in order to go to Siloam Camp Meeting, and she got up to help them off; was well and lively, when a pain seized her. Clapping her hands to her head, her son soon had father and all in the room where she was. She lived about half an hour, when, looking up heavenward, she exclaimed, "O Jesus!" and fell asleep. To them were born six boys and two girls, of whom four sons and husband are here to mourn our loss.

May God comfort the aged husband in this deep trial, and finally bring him and his children to the mansion that Jesus hath prepared, and may we all be one unbroken family in that home, sweet home!

Her loving son, H. O. WALSWORTH.

Jackson, La.

BAGGETT—ANNY BAGGETT was born in 1816; died Nov. 14, 1899, at the home of his son, Robt. Baggett, near Sugartown, La.

"Uncle Andy," as he was called, has been a member of the Methodist Church, South, for about forty years, and lived an exemplary life, and when age and disease came on us found him at his post. We have never been associated with a more congenial spirit. He was prepared; death had no terror for him, but he surveyed it with joy and met it with composure. A few days before his demise I stood by him and asked him how he felt, and he said he was weak in the flesh, but strong in the spirit. He was a kind neighbor and a true friend. He died the death of the righteous; he was conscious to the last. Truly a good man has died and gone to rest, and to join the loved ones above that have passed through the bloody-waved throng, there waiting and watching for him on the golden shore. We laid him to rest in the Sugar Creek Graveyard with the distinguished dead on Nov. 15. A large congregation of loved ones and friends attended the last rites at the grave. He was the father of seven children, of which six children and his two wives preceded him. Weep not for him, dear ones, but let's all pray to join him some sweet day in the heaven of rest.

WESTBROOK—Mrs. ALCIA ANN WESTBROOK was born in Drew county, Ark., March 15, 1850; moved with her parents to Mississippi and settled in Amite county. She was married to J. E. Westbrook in 1873, and to this happy union was born four children; three survive her. Her husband died while the children were young, and the fearful responsibility of training the children rested wholly upon the young mother. The beautiful Christian character developed in the children is a living demonstration of her fidelity to this sacred trust. She was a daughter of the late Rev. Wm. Wood, L. E.

It was my privilege to be her pastor for three years. She was true to her church. After her husband's death she made her home with her mother. It was indeed pathetic to see how tenderly she cared for and affectionately administered to the wants of her aged mother. She was both daughter and companion. Visiting the home after her death, the mother, referring to her, said, "She was the most affectionate child I ever saw." She suffered long and painful; death was a great relief. The angels came for her June 22, 1899.

J. W. TENNIN.

SEALES—WALTER HAAS, infant son of Walter and May Seales, was born Feb. 21, 1899, and after suffering for two long months with slow fever God called him home the twenty-second of October, 1899, aged eight months and one day.

Oh, what grief-stricken hearts the bearing away of this little treasure has produced! Little Haas was a dear, sweet little babe; the pride of his parents, the light and life of their home. Never was a soul more tenderly nursed and cared for than was this little one, the fond mother and father watching over his little cradle day and night, administering to his wants; and, oh, how we prayed that he might be spared to them! But, alas! He who doeth all things well saw fit to remove from this earth their only son, and we can but bow in humble submission to His will. Weep not, dear parents; your little darling's voice has been hushed in silence here to break forth on that far-off shore, where is no more suffering, no pain, no death.

"There is no death; an angel form
Walks o'er the earth with silent tread.
He bears our best-loved things away,
And then we call them dead."

You have a tie in heaven now, dear father and mother, that binds you to live so that you may meet him again and live with him throughout eternity. HIS AUNT.

COWAN—Once more a budding flower has been plucked while in the bud to bloom in that land of everlasting felicity; EDNA, daughter of S. C. and Margaret Cowan, aged eight years three months and eleven days. As the stars were giving way to the great orb of day on the morning of Nov. 4, 1899, her spirit took its flight from this rough clime to the Giver of all good, from whence it came.

Edna was a great sufferer, having been afflicted with rheumatism from her third year; but she bore her affliction with the fortitude of one far beyond her years. She was a bright, winsome little girl; the idol of the home. She leaves a father, mother, and seven brothers and sisters, to mourn her untimely demise. May God bless the sorrowing ones!

FORSHAG—By resolution of the Amite City Sunday-school of the M. E. Church, South, a committee of three was appointed to draft resolutions suited to the death of our co-worker, PHILIP P. FORSHAG. In compliance with the above, your committee beg leave to submit the following:

Whereas, Philip Peter Forshag, our pupil, co-worker and companion, was called hence on Wednesday, Nov. 1, 1899, at the age of seventeen years and twenty-five days; therefore, be it

Resolved, That in the death of Peter Forshag his Sunday-school teacher loses a bright pupil, the Sunday-school a helper, the church a pillar, the community a preceptor, and his family a jewel.

His was a life of Christian work without simulation. When the old church bell rings, and the familiar hymns are sung, his classmates of many years will be reminded of Peter, for many a time have his little hands called us to the service of God—his God—and in song service his voice was amongst the loudest. His was a living example of Christian consecration, and may his precepts urge us to try to renew our companionship in the life everlasting.

Duncan F. Young, Jennie L. May, E. M. Ellis, Committee.

WINE OF CARDUI

THE LINK THAT BINDS.

JACKSON, TENN., Nov. 23.

I was subject to miscarriage for three years, and suffered constantly with backache. I wrote to you for advice, and after using three bottles of Wine of Cardui, according to your directions, I am strong and well, and the mother of a fine girl baby.

Mrs. E. N. JOWERS.

McELREE'S Wine of Cardui

There is no use talking—a baby in the house is the link that binds husband and wife together. Nothing is sadder than fruitless wedlock. The prattling and cooing of the little ones offset a thousand times the occasional worries and trials of life. When a wife is barren, there is a derangement somewhere in the genital organs, caused by one or more of those common disorders known as "female troubles". Wine of Cardui is the remedy. It puts the organs of generation in a strong and healthy condition, fitting the wife for the sacred duty of reproducing her kind. During the period of gestation the entire system of the expectant mother is built up to withstand the ordeal of labor, and when the little one makes its advent it is lusty and strong, well-fitted to grow to maturity in perfect health. The mother, too, passes through the trial with little pain and no dread. Wine of Cardui is truly a wonderful medicine for women.

The "Combination" Bible.

A SUPERB EDITION

of the Holy Scriptures, showing at a glance at the foot of the pages all changes made by the revisers.

New Type. All Proper Names Self-Pronouncing. The Most Valuable Collateral Matter.

There is a steady and increasing demand for first-class Bibles. Everybody is anxious to obtain a copy of the best edition of the Holy Scriptures. Old editions are constantly being replaced by Bibles that are in every way more attractive, and there is practically no limit to the demand.

OUR "COMBINATION" FEATURE.

Hitherto the King James and Revised Versions have been printed in parallel columns, but this makes comparisons of texts tedious and unsatisfactory, and makes the book very unwieldy. We have overcome this difficulty by "combining" the two Versions on the same page, showing at a glance in foot-notes all the Changes Additions and Omissions made by the Revisers.

THE OLD VERSION PRINTED IN FULL.

The King James Version is the basis, and this Version is read straight along from the text, while the Revised Version is read from the text in combination with the foot-notes. Our "Combination" Feature has met with universal approval and is strongly endorsed by all leading Divines and Biblical Scholars.

It is only by a comparison of the two Versions that the greatest benefit can be obtained from reading the Holy Scriptures, and this comparison every reader can easily make by our simple arrangement for showing the changes made by the revisers. This is the greatest triumph of Bible Publishing the World has ever known.

OUR OFFER.

To those unprogressive people who do not read and pay for the NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE we sell this Bible at the publisher's retail price—$4.25. To our subscribers we sell it at the very low rate of $2. The only condition attached to this offer is that the subscriber must pay his subscription one full year in advance, viz.: to December, 1900. We will send it postpaid to any person who will send us three new cash subscribers at the regular rate. For six new cash subscribers at the regular rate we will send two "Combination" Bibles, postpaid.

For fifty cents additional we will send a Bible with index.

For twenty-five cents additional we will have your name engraved in gilt letters on the outside.

Send for circular. Address REV. W. C. BLACK.

P. S.—We can give no commission on renewals in connection with the above offer.

No. 3—Drop leaf, Bent cover, case of two drawers at one end and center drawer. Dealer's price, $29. Our price, $17.

No. 4—Drop leaf table, Bent cover, case of two drawers at each end and center drawer. Dealer's price, $31. Our price, $17.75.

No. 5—Drop leaf table, Bent cover, case of three drawers at each end and center drawer, making a seven-drawer machine. Dealer's price, $33. Our price, $18.50.

The chief difference between Numbers 3, 4, and 5 is in the furniture—i. e., the number of drawers. If you do not want to pay for the extra drawers, you need not do so. We sell these machines under a ten years' guarantee, by which we mean that if any part gives out by reason of any defect therein, the manufacturer will replace the same free of charge. Moreover, we allow the purchaser to test the machine ten days. If at the end of ten days you are not satisfied, you have only to drop us a postal card, and your money will be refunded.

OUR OFFER.

We will send any one of the above-described machines at the prices named, and also send the ADVOCATE free for six months. The only condition attached to this offer is that subscribers who are in arrears must first pay up all arrearages to date. It would be well to avail yourself of this offer at once, as we can not promise that it will last very long. Notice that you take no risk whatever. We do all the risking. Address REV. W. C. BLACK,
512 Camp St., New Orleans.

P. S.—The machine will be shipped direct from the factory in the North

The Boers are further entrenching and strengthening their position at Modder river.

Secret meeting of Boer sympathizers are being held in various parts of Cape Colony.

The Mexican government will expend $7,000,000 in improving the harbor of Manzanillo.

The British government has accepted the offer of a further Australian contingent for South Africa.

As a result of the British reverses in South Africa the whole country north of Sterkstrom is in rebellion.

Gen. Joubert says the Transvaal government has been preparing for war ever since the Jameson raid in 1896.

Lieut. Thomas M. Brumby, flag lieutenant to Admiral Dewey during the Manila campaign, has died at Washington.

Gen. Buller has appointed a commission to inquire into the losses of the people of Natal resulting from the Boer invasion.

Baron Roberts has been appointed to the chief command of the British forces in South Africa, with Gen. Kitchener as his chief of staff.

Officials of the Bureau of Yards and Docks report that satisfactory progress is being made in the construction of the Algiers Dry Dock.

Representative Sulzer (Democrat) of New York introduced a joint resolution in the House recognizing the belligerency of the Transvaal Republic.

Rear Admiral Farquhar, commanding the North Atlantic squadron, has sailed from New York on the flagship "New York" for San Domingo.

The British military authorities have called out the remaining portions of the army reserve. The Seventh Division will proceed to Africa without delay.

Mr. Paine, of the National Republican Committee, withdrew his motion looking to the cutting down of representation in the nominating convention from the South, owing to opposition from Mark Hanna.

Mrs. Arthur Eliot Fish is the originator of the scheme for furnishing the poor of New York with fuel at a nominal rate. The plan is to be carried out by the Minerva Club, an organization of fashionable women.

Never within the range of the longest memory has Great Britain met with three such military reverses in a single week, and hence it is not surprising that notes of anxiety should be heard amid the general chorus of press expressions of grim philosophy and resignation.

Already the annual wagon loads of Christmas gifts are beginning to flow into the White House. They come from all sections of the country, and the majority are from persons personally unknown to both the President and Mrs. McKinley. Each gift that bears the name of the person sending it is acknowledged by one or other of President McKinley's private secretaries.

Major March, of the Thirty-third Infantry, has abandoned his pursuit of Aguinaldo, and has reached Bagnen, in the heart of the Grand Cordillera, where the range is 1000 feet high, and where food is scarce and travel almost impossible. Major March's command was depleted 20 per cent. by the two days' march from Cervantes to Bagnen, so he returned to Cervantes, Dec. 10.

Three hundred Japanese colonists located two years ago in the southern part of Oaxaca, Mexico, under authority of a concession granted by the Mexican government. The colony has been experimenting in tea growing, and has made such a success that 5000 more Japanese men and their families are to be brought to Mexico to join the original colony. Other tropical products are also raised by the colonists.

The British met another severe reverse in South Africa on Friday, the third in a week. Since last Saturday all three of their main columns have been hurled back—Gatacre's at Stormberg, Methuen's at Magersfontein, and now Buller's at Tugela river. Gen. Buller's repulse was the most important of the three, because he has a greater reputation as a soldier and a strategist than the other two, and because his command is much heavier both in battalions and batteries.

Assistant Secretary of the Navy Allen, having selected the place where the dead of the "Maine" are buried, is now making arrangements for the reinterment substantially on the same lines as those followed in the case of Santiago victims. It is expected that the President, the members of his Cabinet, most of the army and naval officers in Washington and a large number of persons will be present at Arlington when the final interment takes place, probably the last week in December.

A Serious Decision.

"Why CHILLIFUGE Won't Cure Chills"—is a question that brings to mind the story of a society of learned men formed for debating problems.

The question was presented: "Why a fish weighing ten pounds, put into a vessel of known weight, filled with water, did not increase the weight?" After hours of hot debate the fool of the club announced that it did, for while the debate had been going on he had tried the experiment.

MILLSAPS COLLEGE NOTES.

We are very much encouraged by the attendance at our college this session. Our roll shows that there are equally as many students in attendance now as there were at this time last session. Having weathered successfully three years of fever and epidemic, we feel confident that no adverse circumstances of any kind can ever hinder our progress in the future.

We are glad to know that some new apparatus has been ordered for the further equipment of our gymnasium, for we realize that the body, as well as the mind, needs development, each one aiding the other in the preparation for our life-work.

Rev. Jno. A. Lewis and Rev. W. E. M. Brogan, both graduates of Millsaps College, paid us a visit last week. Both have joined the North Mississippi Conference, and were given appointments at its last session.

Rev. J. B. Mitchell, who has been occupying the Methodist pulpit at West Point, Miss., has returned to college.

The senior class in geology made an expedition to the Rankin County Quarry, about sixteen miles from Jackson, last Saturday, obtaining many perfect and valuable fossils, which are to be placed in the college museum. A perfect fish of the perch species was found firmly imbedded in a piece of solid limestone.

The first issue of the Millsaps Collegian for this session will make its appearance this week. The editorial and business staff is as follows: E. H. Galloway, editor-in-chief; S. L. Burwell, literary editor; C. N. Guice, local editor; G. R. Bennett, Y. M. C. A. editor; T. W. Holloman, exchange editor; R. T. Liddell, business manager; H. G. Fridge, first assistant business manager; L. F. Magruder, second assistant business manager. We hope that the friends of the college throughout the State will help this enterprise of the students by subscribing for the magazine.

New walks have been laid around the college campus.

Several new residences have been built in the vicinity of the campus; among them is the residence of one of our instructors, Prof. E. L. Bailey.

We owe to the North Mississippi Conference many thanks for the gift of $6,000, a part of their Twentieth Century Thank-offering, which they have directed to be used in the equipment of Millsaps College.

The Carrollton Sunday-school, in giving $100 as a thank-offering, directed that it be used in the equipment of the Science Department of Millsaps College.

Some of our ministerial students went to Vicksburg to attend the session of the Mississippi Conference. XXX.

Beef Steak in a Bottle.

That fresh, juicy beef, ready for digestion, can be made into a delicious cordial is a marvel, but chemistry has accomplished it. Sick people at a distance from markets and needing the nourishment afforded by beef tea can procure Dicks' NUTRITIVE ELIXIR and find it the best liquid food and stimulant known. For loss of appetite, weak digestion, debility, typhoid fever, and consumption it is invaluable.

THE IMMORTAL THINGS.

BY PRISCILLA LEONARD.

Only the immortal things,
For the things of time are fleeting,
To and fro the pendulum swings,
Love and Death forever meeting,
Joy forever quenched in tears
Through life's swift and tragic years.

Only the immortal things—
Naught beside is worth endeavor,
Wide on their eternal wings
They upraise the soul forever,
From the struggle of the years
To their own unfading spheres.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From Our Regular Correspondent.)

Representative Little, of Arkansas, who has since he entered the Fifty third Congress introdnced at the beginning of each Congress a bili prohibiting the sale of intoxicants in the Capitol, has again introdnced the bill and it has again been referred to the Committee on Pnblic Buildings and Gronnds. In each of the preceding Congresses Mr. Little's bill has been pigeon-holed by the committee, and the same resnlt will follow in this Congress, unless something can be done to get action from the committee. I will not go so far as to say that the bill can be passed by the House, but am quite certain that if the temperance constitnents of the members of this committee will bring a little pressnre to bear on them the bill can be got before the House and the members compelled to put themselves on record for or against it. Following is the Committee on Pnblic Bnildings and Grounds: D. H. Mercer, Nebraska, Chairman; C. W. Gillett, New York; S. Bartholdt, Missonri; G. W. Weymouth, Massachnsetts; B. F. Howell, New Jersey; A. Stewart, Wisconsin; J. B. Showalter, Pennsylvania; W. A. Rodenberg, Illinois; J. H. Bankhead, Alabama; J. H. Little, Arkansas; W. G. Brantley, Georgia; J. Norton, Sonth Carolina; J. W. Smith, Maryland; C. R. Thomas, North Carolina.

Dr. Talmage, former pastor, preached the sermon, and Dr. Bryon Sunderland, pastor emeritus, gave the charge, at the installation of Rev. Donald C. McLeod as pastor of the First Presbyterian Church, to fill the vacancy made by the resignation of Dr. Talmage some months ago. The Constitutional qnestions to pastor-elect and people were read by Dr. Easton, and the charge to the people was given by Dr. Alexander. At the close of the services the new pastor held a reception and received the right hand of fellowship and a cordial welcome to Washington from his congregation and fellow-ministers of the Washington Presbytery.

Prof. C. A. Young, instructor in Hebrew at the University of Virginia, preached at the Vermont Avenne Christian Church, Sunday morning, on the completeness with which Jesus meets all the needs of humanity, and at night he discussed "Bible Teaching and Young Men." He said in part on the latter subject: "From the standpoint of culture alone, to say nothing of Christianity, every educated man should have a fair knowledge of the Bible. The Divine Library which we call the Sacred Scriptures contains the noblest biography and the best literature, surpassing the divine comedy of Dante, the great epic of Milton, and 'Plutarch's Lives,' and no education can be called 'higher,' however broad and varied, which neglects the literature which has exerted the greatest influence upon our Christian civilisation. The symmetrical education of our young men demands not only athletic training and intellectual discipline, but the development of the religious nature also. That our State universities should have religious influence thrown around them is in keeping with the past history of our country. True, we are thoroughly committed to the separation of Church and State; it is also true that we can not use State funds for religious instruction; but the law of our land is not opposed to the teaching of the Bible from the standpoint of history and literature. On the contrary, it desires the co-operation of the church in the higher education of the youth. To refuse to recognize the authority of the Bible in the development of our students would be contrary to the genius of our institutions, and even to the spirit of our laws."

The Anti-Saloon League, of the District of Columbia, is preparing to make a new assault on the liquor traffic. At the last meeting of the League a resolution was adopted to prepare a mammoth petition to Congress, which alone has authority over the District of Columbia, asking that the sale of intoxicants to be drank where sold be absolutely prohibited. The theory of those who instigated this movement is that Congress will recognize the right of a majority of the residents to control and will legislate in response to the petition, if it be signed by a majority. The signatures are to be asked for in a house-to-house canvass of the District, to be made in a single day, as the Church canvass was made a year or two ago, all expenses to be borne by the Anti-Saloon League. Great confidence is felt that the signatures of an overwhelming majority of the residents of Washington will be obtained for this petition.

Mr. F. E. Cleveland, the widely known blind lawyer of Connecticut, who is also Secretary of the State Board of Education for the blind, and Rev. H. R. Conden, the blind Chaplain of the House of Representatives, were the speakers at a unique meeting, in the interest of the establishment of educational institutions for the blind, held in Metropolitan M. E. Church. Both speakers agreed that the blind could earn their living if taught how, and cited cases where eminence as ministers, lawyers, physicians, etc., had been attained by the blind; and they were living citations themselves.

The adjournment of Congress for the Christmas recess will not stop the work of the Roberts Committee, as the committee has authority to sit during the recess. Several witnesses from Utah, including Dr. S. E. Wishard, superintendent of Presbyterian missions in Utah, have testified that Mrs. Maggie Shipp Roberts, one of Mr. Roberts' plural wives, was introduced by him as Mrs. Roberts to some and as his wife to others. Mr. Roberts objected to this testimony, on the ground that the committee had nothing to do with what he did prior to March 4, 1899, the date his congressional term began.

Washington, Dec. 20, 1899.

Report of the East Mississippi Female College to the Mississippi Annual Conference.

I am delighted to be able to give you a good report of the work of the East Mississippi Female College. This institution is now in decidedly the most prosperous condition it has been in at any time in its history. We have enrolled up to date this session 158 boarding students in the college, and over 300 matriculated altogether. We have the largest enrollment in music, in art, in dressmaking, and in stenography, and more in the college proper than at any time in any previous session. We have been compelled to secure a building adjoining the college to accommodate the large increase in the number of boarders. This building we have completely renovated, repainted, repapered the walls, added hot and cold baths, sewer connections, etc., putting it in fine condition, and have it filled with pupils and teachers. We have also added four new rooms to the north wing, have added several new pianos, and replaced much of the furniture with handsome new oak bed-room sets. We have also spent a considerable sum on repairs and other improvements, furnishings, apparatus, etc. All this has been done without calling on the Board of Trustees or any individual for assistance.

Besides these improvements, we have reduced the outstanding debt several hundred dollars, and have not made a dollar's increase of obligation. We have paid every teacher, officer and servant every cent of salary up to date, and some in advance, and met every financial obligation, without asking credit, or loan, or indulgence. We have made no bills, but paid cash for all expenses. Truly the Lord has been good to us. We are not getting rich, Mr. President. No one who has had the management of a boarding-school, with the great competition and the present low prices, will accuse us of this. But we are keeping out of debt, have an excellent faculty, are doing good work, and making good and useful women. We are not in this work for the money there is in it. If this were our aim, we would not be running a boarding-school. The same amount of money, business sense and management that it takes to run a boarding-school, and keep it in a prosperous condition at the present day, would make money in other lines of work. We feel God's call to train young women for him, and we are obeying the call by investing our all—our money, brains, time, talent, energy; yea, our whole life—in this great work for the Master. It is a very difficult, trying work, full of responsibilities and severe testings; yet somehow our Father is honoring the feeble efforts, and bringing success to it in every department. It has been a sure and steady growth ever since he called us to this work, and that amid most adverse circumstances. Only God could have given such success with such environment. Blessed be his holy name for his gracious manifestations to us in the work.

Along with the material improvements, we are continually raising the course of study. It is already as high as that suggested by the Commission of Education, and in some cases higher, but is not yet identical, as we have some studies not required in the report of the commission, and have omitted others they have placed among required studies. We are rearranging the course of study, and adjusting it to that recommended by the committee as rapidly as we can, not to make changes too radical. We have this year, with one or two exceptions, the same excellent faculty we have had for some time, with the addition of a teacher of science and history, who has just completed a year of special preparation in the University of Chicago.

The health of the college is almost perfect. Out of the 180 pupils, teachers and officers boarding in the building, there has not been a case of serious illness this session worthy of any notice at all. This is due principally to the excellent bored well water, the fine sanitary surroundings, and the best of overnight, regular habits, and plenty of good, wholesome, well-cooked food.

While the material and intellectual development of the school have been carefully looked after, the spiritual needs have not been neglected. Out of the 158 boarding students who have been enrolled this session, nearly all are church members; but, according to their statements, less than half were saved when they came; less than half had the witness of the Spirit to their conversion. Already 31 have professed conversion. These conversions occur from time to time during the session. Hardly a week has passed since school opened that we have not had some bright experiences among the girls in the college. Indeed, we have had some wonderful manifestations of the Spirit. Most of these occur in their own little meetings on Sunday nights, in their Young Women's Christian Association meetings, conducted by the students. Sometimes they occur in their bed-rooms, or sometimes in the college parlor, or office, or in a teacher's room. The very atmosphere seems to be pervaded with the Holy Spirit, and at morning and evening services, and even about our duties, his presence is felt. We take every step in prayer, and, as we believe, under the guidance of the Holy Spirit. Every teacher and officer is selected on our knees, and after much prayer for his leadings. Every letter written to patrons is sent out with prayer, and we ask the Father to send us only such students as he would have us train for him, and to keep away such as he would not have us teach. So, Mr. President, we never worry over the consequences. When yellow fever excitement and quarantine come, just a week before we are to open, and would seem to ruin us forever, sweep away our all which we have invested after much prayer, we leave it all in his hands, move forward and do our part, and he brings it all out right so beautifully and so sweetly. It is such a gracious Father that we have to bring the end out all right every time, when we fully trust him, never wavering nor doubting. He is so good to help us in the management of the girls. There has hardly been a ripple on the surface; hardly a show of friction during the session. He oils the machinery by his Spirit upon us. We are trying to do the work for the Master, and he helps in every detail of the work. We have 17 Bible training-classes, composed of about 90, or more, students, voluntarily joined together to study God's Word for self-help, and to prepare for Christian work. This is in addition to the regular Bible study of the class-room and to the one held on Saturday nights in the college chapel. Among these girls we have some of the finest Christian characters and best religious workers we have ever known. If the pastors utilize these workers and put them on duty when they return home, they will have excellent helpers, which are so much needed among young people all over the land. It is our one great aim to make noble, educated Christian women of the highest type. Of course, we do not succeed in every instance, but God has greatly honored the work, and set his seal upon it. To him be all the glory for whatever of success we may have attained.

Selections.

THE MAN AND THE OCCASION WILL MEET.

There is a great wave of prosperity sweeping over the land, and everything indicates that the whole country is now entering upon a new era of progress and material prosperity. This is especially true of the North and East and West. There the hum of industry is heard on all sides. Every interest and enterprise is feeling the impulse of the present industrial and commercial buoyancy.

Mississippi should, by reason of its great and varied natural advantages, enjoy a full measure of this prosperity. All that is needed now to push the State to the very front on the road to material and industrial advancement is a high-class, broad-gauge State administration. One that will look to the highest good of the people; that will consider the great industrial, agricultural and commercial interests of the State; that will seek to elevate the standard of official life, and that will use the great functions of government, not for selfish and personal ends, but exclusively for the welfare and well-being of the State.

We want the investment of capital in the State encouraged; we want to build cotton mills and factories rather than to cultivate personal and partisan politics; we want more railroad and better dirt roads; we want a development of the great timber interests of the State; in a word, we want our administration of the affairs of the State put on a basis that will command the respect and confidence of our own people, as well as that of our fellow-citizens of the other States of the American union.

The occasion is auspicious, and all the conditions invite just this kind of a State administration as the one thing needed to put the State to the front.

The governor-elect has been nominated and elected to the highest office in the State in a manner and under circumstances which could not fail to be gratifying in the highest degree to any man. He will enter upon the discharge of the responsible duties of the office with the good-will and good wishes of the people of the entire State. And the people already have the assurance of the distinguished gentleman himself that he is without pledge or committal of any sort that can stand in the way of a pure and independent administration of the great trust and responsibilities that are to be placed in his keeping.

The opportunity for advancing the welfare of the State by broad-gauge legislation and a broad executive policy stand unequaled in any previous epoch of the history of the commonwealth. Never before in the history of Mississippi have the people manifested such a deep concern—thanks to a magnificent and devoted press—on the subject of developing the industrial and material interests of the State. The people of Mississippi are looking to the incoming administration with confidence in the hope of the inauguration of a State policy that will place Mississippi far above petty machine politics, and in the line of progress and prosperity, and abreast of the best thought and ideas of the times. Such an administration will meet the approval and secure the support of the very best and most patriotic men in the State, and a golden opportunity is presented to the governor-elect to render the State conspicuous service, and to place his own name high on the honor roll of those public men who have served Mississippi in the past patriotically and unselfishly, and with fidelity to the great public trusts that have been reposed in them. Those who know the man best do not doubt for a moment his ability or his patriotism; nor do they doubt that he will fulfill the high expectations entertained for the success of his administration. To this devout consummation every patriotic son of the State—men who will not seek and who do not desire office—will yield an earnest and cordial support.—The Picayune.

(We heartily commend the sentiments expressed in the above. The standard here set for the chief executive is a high one, but who will deny that it is the right one? That Mr. Longino will measure up to this standard there is good reason to believe. His record in other public positions justifies the belief that in his administration of state affairs he will play the part of a statesman rather than a politician; that he will ever keep an eye single to the public weal.—EDITOR.)

A MINISTERING ANGEL INDEED.

The heroism to be found in life is greater than that in books, and it is not necessary to seek in other times striking examples of self-sacrifice. Father Damien devoted his life to the care of the lepers in the South Sea Islands. Rose Hawthorne Lathrop is devoting hers to the care of unfortunate sufferers from cancer in the slums of New York City. Mrs. Lathrop, the daughter of Nathaniel Hawthorne, and a most cultured and charming woman, left the ease and comfort and protection of refined home life and took up her abode in a tenement house attic, because she felt that urgent work was there, waiting to be done by somebody. In the home for incurables in Cherry street, into which her very small beginning has grown, Mrs. Lathrop received a representative of Success and talked of her work.

"I began very humbly, three years ago," she said, in a voice that was noticeable for its soft and musical quality. "The most unfortunate people in the world are those who, in addition to extreme poverty, are afflicted with cancer. All, or almost all, are incurable, and, therefore, the hospitals do not want them. They are a burden to their relatives; in this whole city there was no free home for them. Their disease is such that few care to shelter them. They are mostly well advanced in years. Helpless and shunned, the work of extending a hand to even a few of them, of cheering them, of putting a little sunshine and comfort into the last years of unfortunate lives, seemed to be worth the doing. I thought of it long. It would mean a total change of life—the beginning of a new life. It is difficult to quite sever old ties and associations, you know. To be frank with you, I thought that this undertaking would mean much self-sacrifice.

"But it has not been so. What has been lost has been counterbalanced by what has been gained—an uplifting purpose in life, and the satisfaction coming from relieving in some degree aged and weary shoulders from their burden of suffering. Why, when I or my associates are absent, even for a day, we are actually homesick to get back and to work. Instead of feeling it to be a sacrifice now, I am absorbed in the work, and find it difficult to understand why hundreds of others are not engaged in it.

"My first step was to take a course in the Cancer Hospital, here in New York. When that was completed I rented some very cheap rooms on the top floor of a Water street tenement, and took in one patient, an aged and homeless woman, who had been in the Cancer Hospital, but had been sent away because they could do nothing more for her, and room was needed for more urgent cases.

"Since my start I have moved three times, and each time into larger quarters. I have three associates now. That the work is growing, that we are finding the means to do more every year, is very encouraging to us, and often we need encouragement. Kindly interest helps us to keep on. But our constant regret is that we can not do more. We would like to have a home for men as well as for women.

"We greatly desire to extend our sphere of work, and hope to have in various parts of the city homes like this, and eventually a great home, where many of these poor people may pass their last days in comparative cheerfulness and comfort."—Success.

REV. J. W. McLAURIN.

Our community was very much surprised on last Tuesday when it was made known that the late Conference had transferred Rev. J. W. McLaurin from Canton to Gloster. His departure brings deep regret not only to his own congregation, but to the other congregations of the town and the entire community. His consistent, conservative and truly Christian demeanor towards our entire community, as well as his own church, merits the highest commendation of our entire people. We know his work in his own church has been most beneficial, and we feel sure he would have done greater things during the incoming year had he been restored. We voice the sentiments of our people when we say we deeply regret the change coming at the end of one year; but we wish for him unbounded success in his new field.—Canton Times.

THE SCULPTOR.

Chisel in hand stood the sculptor-boy,
With his marble block before him;
And his face lit up with a smile of joy
As an angel dream passed o'er him.
He carved it then on the yielding stone,
With many a sharp incision;
With heaven's own light the sculpture shone,
He had caught that angel's vision.

Sculptors of life we are as we stand,
With our souls uncarved before us,
Waiting the hour when at God's command,
Our life-dream shall pass o'er us.
If we carve it then on the yielding stone,
With many a sharp incision,
That heavenly beauty shall be our own,
Our lives that angel vision.

AN INFAMOUS COLLUSION.

MR. EDITOR: I heartily endorse your criticism of Bishop Nelson's attitude towards temperance in opposing prohibition. (NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE, Nov. 23.) This is an imbecile concession to the infamous rum power. The proposition is, "Since prohibition does not prohibit, let us license whisky." This is tantamount to saying, "Since the legal enactment against murder does not prohibit it, let us license it."

A few weeks ago this conversation occurred between the writer and other passengers of a local train that had stopped in the suburbs of a prominent town of Mississippi: Said a drummer, "This town is in a fearful condition." Said another drummer, "Yes, it is full of blind tigers;" to which a telegraph line repairer subjoined, "It is generally known that you can buy whisky in dry goods houses, groceries, at fish markets, fruit stands, etc." Some one queried, "What is the cause of all this?" to which reply was made, "A rotten city government." Another passenger superadded: "The bribery and perjury, which makes it possible for the blind tiger to exist, is worse than the illicit sale of whisky; and if I were commissioned with power to remedy the matter, I would punish the police and officials for bribery, and the municipal authorities for perjury, and when this is done the 'blind tigers' would not live a day."

So apparent is the "mystery" of this rum-devil egregiousness that the foregoing is the natural conclusion from a cursory view. Because the law against murder is often rendered fugatory from inexecution, shall we substitute it by a code of honor with a twofold purpose of mitigating the criminality of the crime? Would the mantle of chivalry palliate the heinousness of murder? a groan answers from the Dark Ages. Moral philosophy teaches us that a concession made to any demand of an opposing evil is but to yield that much to its ascendency. This whisky demon, like the Arabian camel, has his head in the tent, and is inciting bribery and perjury to get his body in. The plea of the anti-prohis is, "License whisky in order to control it, and dissipate the bribery and perjury." What! extirpate bribery by yielding to the object of its demands? Eradicate perjury by submitting to the object of its infamy? Control the camel by letting him bodily in the tent? Oh, yes; yield to the pressure—license whisky—and down goes the integrity of municipal administration!—down, the honor of the commonwealth!—down, the convictions of eternal right!—down, public veracity and fidelity! Triumph perjury! triumph bribery! reign whisky devil!

"But we want the revenue for our schools." All right; a bargain. Here, monster! is our boys; march them to the poor-house and penitentiary! Our girls; send them to shame and death! Take our national virtue, take our sunny Christian land, and pollute its balmy air with the foul breath of Gehenna!

Harry P. Crowell, manager of the great anti-prohibition fight of Pennsylvania, was asked by the Nebraska liquor dealers, "How did you manage, Mr. Crowell, to get so many ministers on your side?" "Oh," he answered, "that is the easiest thing out. No; I did not go to the preachers as I did to the politicians, but I always found out a good man in the church who could work the preacher with but little trouble, for half the preachers are cowards. Then I hired, for so much a name, some old, broken-down newspaper man or politician to go around with a petition and get the names of ministers and lawyers, which we published with fine effect. We talked about high license all the time. Never try to defend the saloon; if you do, you lose the influence of church members and ministers; but talk about the revenue, and, especially, 'Prohibition don't prohibit.'"

The rum casualties in the city of Meridian during the time of the recent Fair and Ringling Bros. Show was comparatively insignificant as to the number experienced on similar occasions under the saloon regime. God Almighty awaken the moral sentiment and patriotism of this great commonwealth, so that by one convulsion she may clear herself of parasites, and dash these contemptible "pot stills" and "blind tigers" out of existence. ROBERT L. PHILLIPS.

BRO. HENRY, AND ELSE.

Work on a district covering a fourth part of all the territory of a seven-district Conference is about enough to satisfy the average ambition for work in the period of one year. Seven thousand miles' travel, and two hundred and forty-seven sermons, with divers talks and exhortations, all accomplished in a period of eleven months, with one month out on account of sickness, is no small task—no easy job.

These and other matters being considered, I think neither Bishop Galloway, nor anyone else, can attach blame to the writer for asking to be returned to the ranks of "the circuit rider." And so it is. If the Lord and the people help during A. D. 1900, there will be results at Simsport and Marksville which will make us glad. The packing for the move is well on the way, and soon we expect to be domiciled in the parsonage at Simsport under circumstances which will sometimes tempt another disciple to "go a-fishing."

Well, at Monroe I read Bro. Henry's criticism of my views anent college-bred preachers. He calls for "facts." This means comparison of results from the labor of individual preachers by name. No general average will do, as Bro. Henry will see if he re-reads his criticism, now it has got cold. He compares the labor and its results of (I am not sure as to the exact numbers he gives) fourteen college-trained men with more than a hundred who had no collegiate education, and concludes the college boys have done most good. In this he does not consider a number of factors which enter into the results he names.

1. He makes no allowance for the fact that these college boys work principally in towns and wealthy communities, where the per capita contributions are always—and should be—larger.

2. He makes no allowance for the zeal of youth on the one side, nor the feebleness of age on the other. To make his comparisons prove what he wants to prove, he should take an equal number of men, similarly situated and in similar stage of moral and intellectual development. These things he must not disregard if he wishes to make just comparisons and cause conviction in the minds of his readers.

Be it understood I have never written in defense of ignorant and uncultured preachers. Such men are failures, to begin with. Such men never will and never did succeed. An educated minister may not be able to read Tacitus nor Xenophon, but he knows the gospel and the power of God, and has intelligence enough to preach "in a known tongue." Our course of study is not too broad, but our starting-point may be too high. "Received on trial" means that we have to deal in an unknown quantity as to heart and brains. J. A. PARKER.

A WISE SELECTION.

In electing the Rev. W. S. Harrison manager of our Orphans' Home at Water Valley, I am satisfied the trustees of that noble institution made a wise selection. Bro. Harrison has lived in Starkville for a long number of years, and has the respect and esteem of every man, woman and child in the place. He is a man of scholarly attainments, of extraordinary ability as a preacher, of practical common sense, and of the finest and most exemplary character. Though his name has appeared upon our Conference roll as a superannuate for several years, he is not by any means infirm. Aside from a chronic throat trouble—laryngitis—which unfits him for constant public speaking, he is healthful and vigorous. Sister Harrison also is admirably suited for the work which will devolve upon her in the Home. Domestic, practical, and kind-hearted, the children will find in her a true and sympathetic friend. The Methodists of Mississippi need have no fears or misgivings on account of the change in the management of our orphanage. Bro. Burton did well, and we regret to lose him, but the institution is in safe hands. This much I have felt impelled to say as Bro. Harrison's pastor.

Correspondence.

FROM BRO. P. A. JOHNSTON.

We are all more or less given to think, talk, and write about ourselves. I hope not so much so as to preclude this from the columns of the ADVOCATE.

I was profoundly impressed with my visit to the Louisiana Conference at Monroe. The sympathy and love as expressed by the brethren in my affliction humbled me very much, and made me feel very grateful indeed. You could see there was a compassion and tenderness in every one of them for me. One brother ventured the remark that I was the pet of the Conference. I said: "Oh, no, no, brother; they just love me and I love them." The sermons preached, the addresses made, the songs and prayers offered were all calculated to lift one heavenward, and feel that he was in the presence and company of the saints. There is not a more royal and loyal set of men on earth than the body of men that compose the Louisiana Conference. It was with a sense of loneliness and regret that I felt constrained to transfer from them. But after consulting with Bishop Galloway, I thought it best for me to do so. The Bishop readily agreed with me and so transferred me. May many blessings rest upon every one of them, and may our heavenly Father crown all their endeavors to advance their Lord's kingdom!

I was most cordially welcomed back into the Mississippi Conference, both by resolution in open Conference and a warm brotherly shake of the hand—many of the brethren saying, "You belong to us, and we are glad you have come home to be with, and one of us." I am not worthy of such honors. I could tarry only one day and night with them at Vicksburg, as I was so feeble. What a privilege to be counted worthy to have a place with such a body of men! I suppose while I am writing this Bishop Duncan is giving them their appointments and marching orders for another year. May our God go before them and crown every one of them with great success! Not many of that class to which I specially belong at this time answered to their names when called, being too old and feeble to stand the hardship of travel and the severities of weather, of storm and wind, incident to such this time of the year. They will all answer to the general roll call up yonder. What a privilege the church should feel to take care of them in their declining years. The church nor the world will never know what they have passed and are now passing through to do and suffer their Lord's will.

FROM BRO. KILGORE.

MR. EDITOR: Please say to the brethren of the North Mississippi and Mississippi Conferences, through the columns of the ADVOCATE, that if any of them desire help in their meetings, I would be glad to assist them as far as my time will go. My postoffice address is at McCondy, Miss. I will be very grateful if you will give this notice.

Yours fraternally,

E. G. KILGORE.

ITEMS FROM NORTH MISSISSIPPI W. H. M. SOCIETY.

The first item I mention is inserted by the "order" of our Conference secretary. She says: By Dec. 12, six weeks from the time of annual meeting, our annual reports will be out and in process of distribution. Can any Conference Society show a better record? The credit for this is due to our president, Mrs. E. W. Foote, who attended to the printing and mailing, but also very largely to our vice-president and editor, Mrs. J. B. Stone, who at the request of the recording secretary, prepared the manuscript, executing that important task so promptly and accurately that all delay was avoided.

The only new auxiliary for the past quarter is McCarley. Mrs. W. F. Long was elected president, with a good corps of officers and ten members.

The most complete report of the quarter comes from the secretary of Sardis district, Miss Julia Jones.

In compliance with Miss Bennett's request, letters of remonstrance against the seating of Congressman-elect Roberts were sent to Congressmen Catchings, Allen, Fox, and Spight. Messrs. Catchings, Allen and Spight sent courteous acknowledgments. Hon. Thos. Spight says: "Please present my compliments to your lady co-workers in this righteous cause, and assure them that I shall bend every energy to the accomplishment of the result so earnestly desired by them and the noble women all over this land."

The society at Boyle is striving with all diligence to provide a home for their preacher. On Dec. 8 they met at the home of Mrs. Boyle, and held what they styled "A Musicale and Experience Meeting." The house was beautifully decorated with bamboo vine, red haws, mistletoe, holly, and red, blue and white bunting. Each lady member had promised to earn a dollar, and now she came to tell how she had managed to do so. Some had cooked, some washed and ironed, some had nursed. One had sold pop-corn, another greens. Various plans had been devised, but the result—the dollar—was the end reached by all. The musicians of the crowd contributed their part to the enjoyment of the evening, and its close found the ladies with $31.30 as the result of the affair. This same society proposes to have a "Measuring Party" in February, from which we hope to hear.

Our new secretary for Winona district, Mrs. E. T. Buckley, writes as follows of Carrollton: "I will say to those who may not know, that Carrollton is the home of our brother, J. R. Bingham, a layman whose name and deeds are known all over Mississippi."

Mrs. B. says: "We did not observe the Week of Prayer, but made a contribution of $15. Of this sum, $5 made Sister Cunningham a patron of the Preachers' Wives' Loan Fund. The remainder enrolled the names of Bros. Cunningham and Sullivan on the Educational Endowment Fund. We have paid $5, pledged for us at the annual meeting, and added four names to the Baby Roll. As a thank-offering, we sent a barrel of clothing to the Orphans' Home, containing 106 ready-made garments and 198 yards of uncut cloth, 25 pairs of stockings, and some bedding, with other small articles. Usually such offerings are secured by solicitation, but this time a number asked the privilege of giving, and made liberal contributions. A very beautiful incident occurred in connection with it. A Presbyterian brother, who lost his wife last Summer (and has been converted since), saw in the weekly paper a little notice of the barrel. He brought two dress-patterns that his wife had bought for herself just before she died, and asked to be allowed to give them; said he thought it would meet with her approbation if she could know, and he wanted to do good with them. Surely, he felt 'the love of Christ constraineth me.' So we have 'cleared the deck' at Carrollton for the Twentieth Century Fund another year, and already some are planning and saving for their gifts for that."

Winona Auxiliary is moving forward. With a part of our contribution during Week of Prayer, we have placed the name of our new pastor, Bro. Park, on the Educational Endowment Fund. We are not quite ready for our Twentieth Century Offering, but hope to be in the near future.

Now, in conclusion, let me urge upon auxiliary corresponding secretaries the importance of reporting "regularly" and "promptly" to your district secretary. If she writes to you, courtesy, at least, demands a reply. Do not think because your society is small and weak, it does not matter about reporting. It does matter very materially, I assure you. Let us learn to be business women, and attend to the details of our work as we are so earnestly requested to do. And please send me any items of interest that come to your work. MRS. J. B. STONE.

The Christian Life.

THE GOSPEL.

The gospel is able to reconstitute society by reconstituting the character of individuals. Through its effect on persons it opens the way for vast national advances. It teaches not merely the highest themes, but all the themes that are associated with them and immediately pertinent to the interest of mankind. It teaches frugality and industry and honesty, by express command and by the divine example of Him who brought it to us. It turns men, as it has been forcibly said, out of the trails of blood and plunder into the path of honest toil. It is a gospel for every creature, that is, for every created thing, and gardens bloom in a lovelier beauty under its influence, and harvest festivals, of which the country is full to-day, are only its natural and beautiful fruit and trophy. It exalts womanhood, and by the honor it puts on womanhood and by the honor it puts on childhood it inaugurates the new family life in the world. It honors, as no other religion does or ever did, the essential worth of the immortal spirit in man, and it forces him, pushes him, crowds him, into thoughtfulness and educational discipline when it will not allow him to be manipulated into paradise by any priestly hand, but comes to him in a book and sets him to work to investigate its contents, to inquire concerning it, to look out widely around it and to inform himself by careful thought of what it is and what it means.—Rev. Dr. R. S. Storrs, in Western Methodist.

DANA'S TRIBUTE TO THE BIBLE.

One of the standard works on journalism is that of Charles A. Dana on "Art of Newspaper Making." In answering the question, "What books ought you to read?" Mr. Dana paid this tribute to the Bible:

"There are some books that are absolutely indispensable to the kind of education that we are contemplating and to the profession that we are considering; and of these the most indispensable, the most useful, the one whose knowledge is most effective, is the Bible. There is no book from which more valuable lessons can be learned.

"I am considering it now not as a religious book, but as a manual of utility, of professional preparation and professional use for a journalist. There is perhaps no book whose style is more suggestive and more instructive, from which you learn more directly that sublime simplicity which never exaggerates, which recounts the greatest events with solemnity, of course, but without sentimentality or affectation; none which you open with such confidence and lay down with such reverence. There is no book like the Bible.

"When you get into a controversy and want exactly the right answer, when you are looking for an expression, what is there that closes a dispute like a verse from the Bible? What is it that sets up the principle for you, which pleads for a policy, for a cause, so much as the right passage of Holy Scripture?"—Chas. A. Dana.

UNCONSCIOUS SIGNS.

Men carry unconscious signs of their life about them. Those that come from the forge, and those from the lime and mortar, and those from the humid soil, and those from dusty travel, bear signs of being workmen, and of their work. One need not ask a merry face or a sad one whether it hath come forth from joy or from grief. Tears and laughter tell their own story. Should one come home with fruit we say, "Thou art come from the orchard;" if with hands full of wild flowers, "Thou art from the fields;" if one's garments smell of mingled odors, we say, "Thou hast walked in a garden." But how much more, if one hath seen God, hath held converse of hope and love, and hath walked in heaven, should he carry in his eye, his words, and his perfumed raiment, the sacred tokens of divine intercourse!"—Henry Ward Beecher.

BEWARE OF MISJUDGING.

Perhaps it were better for most of us to complain less of being misunderstood, and to take more care that we do not misunderstand other people. It ought to give us pause at a time to remember that each one has a stock of cut-and-dry judgments on his neighbors and that the chances are that the most of them are quite erroneous. What our neighbor really is we may never know, but we may be pretty certain that he is not what we have imagined, and that many things we have thought of him are quite beside the mark. What he does we have seen, but we have no idea what may have been his thoughts and intentions. The mere surface of his character may be exposed, but of the complexity within we have not the faintest idea. People crammed with self-consciousness and self-conceit are often praised as humble, while shy and reserved people are judged to be proud. Some whose whole life is one subtle, studied selfishness get the name of self-sacrifice, and other silent heroic souls are condemned for want of humanity.—Ian Maclaren, in The Potter's Wheel.

We can not remember too often those pungent words of Dr. Alexander Maclaren that: "The worst and most fatal sins may be the small continuous vices which root underground and honeycomb the soul. Many a man who thinks himself a Christian is in more danger from the daily commission—for example—of small pieces of sharp practice in his business than ever David was at his worst. White ants pick a carcass clean sooner than a lion will." Alas! what great sinners we may be in small things! Little irritations of heart and speech, little meannesses in dealings, little tricks and insincerities, little jealousies and spites, little neglects of kind acts that we ought to do—all these are the little foxes that make wretched havoc with the vines. Instead, therefore, of trying to whitewash faults by calling them "weaknesses" and "infirmities," we ought to label them by their true name, of vices and sins. Everything that is not right is wrong, and a Christian's sins are doubly mischievous.—Cuyler.

Defeat makes the school in which most of us have to be trained. In all kinds of work men learn by mistakes. The successful business man did not begin with success. He learned by experience, and the experience was very costly. The true science of living is not to make no mistakes; but not to repeat one's mistakes. Defeat, when one has done one's best, and when one takes a lesson from his defeat, is not something to be ashamed of, but something to be glad for, since it sets one's feet on a little higher plane. Defeat which makes us wiser and better is a blessing to us. We owe more to our defeats, with the humblings of the old nature, the cleansing of motive and affection and the deepening of trust in God, than we owe to the prouder experiences which we call our successes.—Northwestern Advocate.

When things get beyond your control, when you face an unknown future, and when trying conditions confront you, remember that there is a governing God in Israel, and that it is his to bring light out of darkness, joy out of sorrow, and hope out of despair. Be patient and acquiescent. Let the Ruler of the universe and the Lord of the individual manage affairs in his own way and at his own time. Neither grow weary nor become too anticipative. Roll upon a covenant-keeping God your cares, taking his dispensations as they come, and multiplying sorrow neither by distrust nor by foreboding. God unravels the future day by day, hour by hour, and moment by moment, accompanying the distribution with his supporting and sanctifying grace.—The Presbyterian.

THE LESSON IN DEWEY'S SUCCESS.

In his success there are two lessons. One is for the young. In him they see the reward which the State has to offer to its best servants. From him they learn how feeble and poor are the results of selfish endeavor, of money-making, of self-seeking, compared with the glory that comes from working for the State.

But the best Dewey lesson and the best Dewey encouragement are for the old.

Dewey's success teaches that the chance of the man who is ready is never gone by.

He was sixty years of age—and unknown. A few months, and he would have been compulsorily retired from active service.

But he was on hand, doing his duty always, and always ready for any extra duty that might come along.

The extra duty came.

"Destroy the fleet!"

He destroyed it. He knew how to destroy it. Age had not weakened his courage. New-fangled methods had not driven him to the rear. He had kept himself all his life thoroughly in his one specialty.

The chance came, he seized it—and there he is in one day transformed into the greatest man in America.—Evening Journal.

URIAH T. BLACKSHER.

Died in Opelousas, La., St. Landry parish, Dec. 2, 1899, Uriah T. Blacksher, at the ripe age of seventy-seven years and six months.

Bro. Blacksher was born in Coneculh county, Ala., but was brought up in Sumter county. Shortly after the war he emigrated to Louisiana, and settled at Plaisance, St. Landry parish, and was a successful cotton planter.

Bro. Blacksher joined the Methodist Church in 1837, but was not converted until five years after at a camp meeting held in Alabama in 1842. This was really the commencement of his long and useful church life. He then and there immediately began to work for her advancement. He loved her altars, and sustained them with his substance. It was indeed his life-work. For fifty-six consecutive years he was one of her stewards, and died as president of the board of the Opelousas Church; in fact, filled every position that a layman could fill; several times elected to the General Conference, and was rarely left out of the lay delegation to his Annual Conference. The name of U. T. Blacksher is inseparately connected with Methodism in Louisiana. Especially is this true of the southwest portion of the state, that history could not be correctly or recorded without the mention of his name. Here was his field of labor; here his substance was given, and his energies expended.

About the last act of his life, as he lay suffering on what proved to be his death-bed, was to collect from his attendant physician five dollars for his pastor, and then to collect from another brother his subscription to the Opelousas Camp Ground—the last effort of his declining years, the child of his old age. He thus may be said to have died "with harness on." Three churches and the four camp grounds may be accredited to his energy and push in church work.

Bro. Blacksher was a man of strong convictions, with the courage to maintain and defend them. His perception was clear, his judgment sound, being blest with that rarest and best of all human gifts, "good common sense," which caused his long life to be a success. When the dark and turbulent days of '61 to '65 he was no drone nor idler, but did his part in those trying years, and was one of those who, at "his country's call," left peaceful pursuits, donned the grey, bid adieu to home and family, took his place as captain of a company, and for four long and weary years contended for the liberty of his people, the sovereignty of his State, the sanctity of his home, keeping step with the noblest company of men that ever answered a sovereign's call to arms; fell in line with those who knew how to suffer for the right, starve for bread, and die, if needs be, for the Southland that they loved so well.

U. T. Blacksher was "a Confederate soldier"—suitable epitaph to mark his tomb.

Bro. Blacksher was twice married: in 1847 to Miss Elizabeth Patton, of Alabama, and again to Miss Elmira Talliaferro in the year 1863, who also was a native of Alabama. Four out of seven children are left to mourn a father's death, and to emulate a father's example in the path of duty well performed.

DEPARTED.

Mrs. Louisa Ophelia Blocker, wife of Rev. R. M. Blocker, of the Louisiana Conference, M. E. Church, South, died at her home at Lake Arthur, La., at 5 P. M., Dec. 7, 1899, aged 45 years 11 months and 7 days.

Sister Blocker was the daughter of F. P. Welch, of Vernon parish, of this State. She was born in Arkansas, Dec. 31, 1854, and was reared in Western Texas and in Louisiana. She was married to Bro. Blocker, Oct. 12, 1871, and became the mother of nine children, one of whom passed in to glory at the age of three years.

Sister Blocker was converted and joined the M. E. Church, South, in 1872; was sanctified in 1888. She was a beautiful Christian character, living consistently and beloved by all who knew her.

For the five weeks preceding her death she suffered untold agonies, but withal retained her hope in Christ, and whenever conscious gave every evidence of her readiness to meet her God. About a week before her death she called her family together in a time of consciousness, and bade them good-bye, told them to meet her in heaven; had them to pray with her, then she herself prayed for her children as only a devoted Christian mother can. She then left messages for some friends, and this message for all her friends: "Good-bye; meet me in heaven." She scarcely regained consciousness after this time.

Rev. Manly, of Rayne, conducted the funeral services.

SENSITIVENESS IN THE MINISTRY.

Preachers, as a rule, are very sensitive to criticism. No one understands this better than the editor of a religious paper. They do not like to have their statements called in question in the public prints, or their position assailed. They are quick to take the written views of one another on the opposite side of a subject as personal and to reply to them in that sort of spirit. Lawyers go into the court-room or into the prints and hammer each other unmercifully, and then talk the matter over in private and have a big laugh at the expense of one another. It is the rarest thing imaginable for them to carry away the remnant of bitterness, or on account of their heated discussion entertain grievances. It usually passes with the occasion, and that is the end of it. Not so as a general thing with ministers. They come at one another with bristles up, say very sharp things, and when it is all over, the one getting the worst of the conflict feels that he has been injured, and he remembers it a long time.

Then again, it is a difficult matter for ministers to discuss a question in the paper without becoming personal and using sharp words. They do not always bite and devour one another, but sometimes they even do this, and then feel hurt when for the sake of the family peace the man at the helm closes down on the controversy. If the old blue pencil upon the desk of the editor were to tell all that it knows about the elimination of sharp words from communications it would prove an interesting story to a majority of the saints who are possessed of guilelessness of spirit. The brethren love to dig one another, but such brethren do not enjoy being digged in return. This ought not to be, for of all people preachers ought to learn how to bear and forbear and to give and take in a controversy. More than this, they ought to take it for granted that no one of them has all of the knowledge and wisdom touching any given subject of discussion. Controversy is not carried on for the personal victory of any one of the disputants, but to throw light upon a given subject. If one brother differs from another, it is not a personal difference, but a difference of judgment and of opinion, and when the matter is fully discussed it is better understood by those who want further light upon the subject. There is no need for this sensitiveness upon the part of preachers. It is out of place and does harm.—Texas Advocate.

AGED MINISTERS.

Your minister is "superannuated," is he? Well, call a parish meeting, and vote him a dismission; hint that his usefulness is gone; that he is given to repetition; that he puts his hearers to sleep. Turn him adrift like a blind horse, or a lame house dog. Never mind that he has laid aside his pen and listened many times and oft, with courteous grace, to your tedious, prosy conversations, when his moments were like gold dust; never mind that he has patiently and uncomplainingly accepted at your hands the smallest pittance that would sustain life, because "The Master" whispered in his ear, "Tarry here till I come."

Never mind that he has grown grey in your thankless service—that he has smiled on your infants at the baptismal font—given them lovingly away in marriage to their heart's chosen; and wept with you when death's shadow darkened your door. Never mind that the wife of his youth, whom he won from a home of luxury, is broken down with privation and fatigue, and your thousand unnecessary demands upon her strength, patience, and time. Never mind that his children, at an early age, were exiled from the parsonage, because there was not "bread enough, and to spare, in their father's house." Never mind that his library consists only of a Bible, a Concordance, and a Dictionary; and that to the luxury of a religious newspaper he has long been a stranger. Never mind that his wardrobe would be spurned by many a mechanic in our cities. Never mind that he has "risen early and sat up late," and tilled the ground with weary limbs, for earthly "manna," while his glorious intellect lay in fetters—for you. Never mind all that, call a parish meeting, and vote him "superannuated."

Don't spare him the starting tear of sensibility, or the flush of wounded pride, by delicately offering to settle a colleague, that your aged pastor may rest on his staff in grateful grey-haired independence. No! turn the old patriarch out! give him time to go to the moss-grown church-yard, and say farewell to the unconscious dead; and then—give "the right hand of fellowship" to some beardless, pedantic, noisy college boy, who will save your sexton the trouble of pounding the pulpit cushions and who will tell you and the Almighty in his prayers all the political news of the week.—Fanny Fern.

Putting food into a diseased stomach is like putting money into a pocket with holes. The money is lost. All its value goes for nothing. When the stomach is diseased, with the allied organs of digestion and nutrition, the food which is put into it is largely lost. The nutriment is not extracted from it. The body is weakened and the blood impoverished.

The pocket can be mended. The stomach can be cured. That sterling medicine for the stomach and blood, Doctor Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, acts with peculiar promptness and power on the organs of digestion and nutrition. It is a positive cure for almost all disorders of these organs, and cures also such diseases of the heart, blood, liver and other organs, as have their cause in a weak or diseased condition of the stomach.

There is no alcohol or other intoxicant contained in "Golden Medical Discovery."

Substitutions are imitations. Imitation money is worthless. So are imitations of Dr. Pierce's "Discovery." Get the genuine.

Mr. John L. Coughenour, of Glensavage, Somerset Co., Pa., writes: "I had been doctoring for about a year and a half, being unable to work most of the time. The doctor said I had heart disease and indigestion. My appetite was unusually poor, I was weak and nervous, and my heart kept throbbing continually, and I was short of breath. Finally I wrote to you for advice. I did not think your diagnosis was right, but I ordered six bottles of 'Golden Medical Discovery' and began its use. After using three bottles I began to improve slowly and soon went to work, and I have been working ever since."

Free. Doctor Pierce's Common Sense Medical Adviser, 1008 pages, 700 illustrations, is sent free on receipt of stamps to pay expense of mailing only. Send 21 one-cent stamps for the paper-bound edition, or 31 stamps for the cloth. Address Dr. R. V. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y.

PRAYER AND POWER.

Unless the teaching of the Scriptures be rejected, every Christian must admit that the connection between prayer and power in the spiritual realm it not merely alliterative, but of the most vital nature. After that memorable night of wrestling with the angel at the brook Jabbok, Jacob's name was changed to Israel, which means "Prince;" for "as a prince he had power with God, and prevailed." Apart from frequent communion with God, there is no spiritual strength nor joy. Only those who wait upon the Lord in prayer have access to the grace that enables them to stand firm in times of temptation and "rejoice in hope of the glory of God." Not every praying Christian is strong in faith and in the resistance of sin, but no disciple ever becomes a spiritual Hercules except in the training-school of prayer and Bible study. Without exception, the Old Testament worthies and the apostles and eminent saints of the gospel dispensation were men who poured out their souls to God in prayer. Abraham, Moses, David, Isaiah, Ezra, Nehemiah, Samuel, Elijah and others were distinguished for their fervency and perseverance in prayer. This was the secret of their splendid triumphs and of their surpassing courage. Cornelius, that devout and God-fearing Roman centurion, to whom the Lord granted so cheering a vision, we are told, "gave much alms to the people and prayed alway." How graciously God visited this earnest inquirer and his household! Imagine the Apostle Paul, if you can, neglectful of prayer, and priding himself upon his superior genius and strength of will in the battle against the forces of evil! He it is who exhorts the Christian to "pray without ceasing," and "in everything give thanks." His was the might that comes only through supplication.

The secret of the weakness and coldness of the average professing Christian is his prayerlessness. No wonder that doubts arise, and that evil habits and besetting sins will not down, when many give so little time and thought to secret prayer. John Wesley, who was one of the busiest and most successful toilers that ever lived, accomplishing during his career the work of well-nigh a dozen ordinary men, spent an hour each morning in praying and searching the Scriptures. When he emerged from his closet it is said that his face was radiant with the light of heaven. Martin Luther said that "prayer was the best book in his library, and the longer he expected his day's work to endure, the more time he devoted to prayer." Oliver Cromwell, Washington, Von Moltke, Havelock, Stonewall Jackson, and several other great Christian commanders, used to take their battle plans to the Lord in prayer.

So great is the pressure of business in these times, so manifold and dazzling are the allurements of the world, that Christians, in large measure, are becoming neglectful of this duty, while many who still keep up the form have almost entirely lost its spirit by reason of the hastiness of their devotions.

We seriously question whether any man can enjoy the favor of God who does not pray daily. Every morning and evening, at least, we should supplicate the throne of grace. As Dr. Hoss pertinently says, "He is a bold man who dares to begin any day without asking God's blessing, or to close it without invoking his forgiveness." The prophet Daniel used to pray three times a day with the window of his chamber open toward Jerusalem. When and how many times a day we should enter our closets each must determine for himself. Those Christians who have adopted the plan of communing with God morning, noon, and night, have derived wonderful benefit therefrom.

Not only should we have a regular time for prayer, and observe it as far as practicable, but when we come before God we should take time to compose our minds, and banish outside things. Sometimes the Christian is in the praying spirit when he enters the closet; but at others times it may require several minutes, or longer, for him to put his mind and heart in frame for acceptable prayers. How easy it is to drift into lip devotion!

Prayer is often unavailing because it is not earnest or sincere. Spiritual blessings are asked for, not always because there is intense longing for them, but because the believer recognizes them as good. God pays little heed to the half-hearted seeker; but those who come in the spirit of the Syro-Phenician woman are sure to have their request granted; not always, it is true, in the way expected, but in the way that is best. The weak disciple who, seeing the waves of sin about to close over him, cries out in agony, "Lord, save, or I perish," is as certain to be rescued as Peter was.

When we approach God in prayer our petitions should be definite and well-considered. "Do not," says Bishop Fitzgerald, "pray for everything in general and nothing in particular." As John R. Mott aptly phases it, 'Our prayers are not measured by their extent, but by their content." While the efficacy of prayer is far from being guaged by its length, yet it must not be supposed that brevity in devotion is generally commendable and advantageous. Oftimes it is necessary for the disciple to tarry long on his knees until his faith and consecration rise to the level where God is pleased to bless the suppliant.

Nor does true prayer consist entirely of petitions and supplications. In its highest form it is communing with God as friend with friend. It is taking with him and realizing his blessed presence. Thus practiced, it becomes the holiest exercise in which man can engage.

Gaudly does the poet Cowper embody the teaching of Scripture when he sings:

Prayer makes the darkened cloud withdraw,
Prayer climbs the ladder Jacob saw;
Gives exercise to faith and love;
Brings every blessing from above.

Restraining prayer we cease to fight;
Prayer makes the Christian's armor bright;
And Satan trembles when he sees
The weakest saint upon his knees."

THE ADVOCATE OF 1900.

The NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE will celebrate its fiftieth anniversary on the fifth of July of the incoming year, the first number having been issued July 10, 1850. We will get out a jubilee number containing many articles of interest. A more specific announcement will be made later. Several thousand extra copies will be issued. During the year we expect to make the paper more efficient as a Conference organ, and as a religious paper adapted to the wants of our people. As stated in our last issue, Rev. M. M. Black has been associated with us in the capacity of assistant editor. How much this means to the editorial department our readers will soon realize.

We urgently solicit the co-operation of all our preachers in extending our circulation. It will aid them much in this work if they will call attention to our premium offers. Our offers are extremely liberal and of a popular character. Sample copies will be sent on application.

LITERARY NOTES.

BY W. F. B.

The contributed articles in the December Critic are: Cupid and the Lady Contributor, a story by Katharine Pearson Woods; The Art of Fritz Von Uhde, by Chas. De Kay; Concerning Literature, by B. H. Hinckley; The Early Polish Drama, by Helena Modjeska, and The Stevenson Letters, by Isabel Strong.

Among the many interesting and timely articles in the December Forum are A British View of the Transvaal Question, by J. Castell Hopkins; The Status of Puerto Rico, by Judge H. G. Curtis, of the Insular Commission; The Trust Problem—Its Real Nature, by Prof. E. W. Bemis; Recent Developments in the South, by Leonora Beck Ellis; The Fundamentals of Fiction, by Prof. Richard Burton, of the University of Minnesota; Africa; Present and Future, by O. P. Austin, Chief of the United States Bureau of Statistics, and Zangwill's Play, The Children of the Ghetto, by A Cahan.

The December Open Court contains an important article entitled, Anticipate the School, by Dr. Carus. It gives many suggestions regarding the training of children.

The December number of the Cosmopolitan contains a story by A. C. Doyle entitled, The Crime of the Brigadier; The Cot and the Rill, by Frank R. Stockton; the second of Olive Schreiner's essays on The Woman Question; Miss Olga Nathersole's story of her early efforts, My Struggles to Succeed, and an article by Flora C. Briggs on The Child Brought Up at Home.

Joel Chandler Harris contributes to the Christmas number of The Saturday Evening Post an authentic account of the daring attempt to warn the Confederate Cabinet of the great movement whereby Grant and Sherman were to co-operate in crushing the Confederacy. How the attempt failed, and why it failed, are the subjects of a chapter of the little-known history of the secret service.

NEW BOOKS.

BEHIND THE VEIL. 18mo. Decorated cloth. 75 cents. Little, Brown & Company, Publishers, 254 Washington St., Boston.

A story curiously in harmony with the speculative inquiry of the day regarding the nature of life after death. Although its scenery and events are those which "eye hath not seen," yet the reader intuitively feels the reality of the narrative. The conversation between the man who wakens to find that he has passed into the new life and his friend who meets him reveals that the change is evolutionary, and that no violent contrast prevents itself between the conditions here and those encountered immediately after death.

VICTOR SERENUS. A story of the Pauline Era. By Henry Wood, author of "Studies in the Thought World," "Ideal Suggestion," "God's Image in Man," "Edward Burton," "The Political Economy of Natural Law," etc. 12mo. Cloth. 510 pages. $1.50. Lee & Shepherd, Publishers, Boston.

A most interesting piece of fiction of which the scene is located in that very dramatic period of the world's history, the Pauline era, and through graphic character delineation deals with the thought, customs, religious systems of that time. Its aim is to draw a true and well proportioned picture of the actual conditions.

With unimportant exceptions, Paul is the only historic character. Victor Serenus, and the other leading personalities that are employed, are representative creations.

While the historic framework is carefully preserved, there is a wide range of the fancy and imagination in the movement, and a wealth of mystical, psychical, and wierd phenomena deftly woven into the fabric of the story, in which the graces of the imagination stand out with great power in plot, action, style, and purpose.

APPOINTMENTS.

MR. EDITOR: In your list of appointments for Forest district, Mississippi Conference, as published in yesterday's ADVOCATE, there are two errors.

Clarksburg circuit was not left to be supplied, but was abolished, the several churches heretofore constituting that circuit being distributed among adjacent charges.

To Montrose circuit the Rev. W. W. Morse was sent as preacher in charge, with the Rev. O. H. Wingfield to supply a part of the work.

Yours faithfully,

T. L. MELLEN.

Forest, Miss., Dec. 22, 1899.

The late Robert Ingersoll, while in Mr. Beecher's study, at one time, saw a large globe standing on his table—a globe that showed, in elegant outlines, the contour of the earth's continents and seas.

"That is a fine globe you have there, Mr. Beecher. Who made it?" was Mr. Ingersoll's inquiry.

"Oh, nobody," answered Mr. Beecher.—Boston Transcript.

HOW TO TREAT THE OLD.

We do not know anything that requires more tact and more tenderness than the treatment of old men by those who are younger than themselves. Treat them as those whose day is past, as those from whom nothing may be expected in the way of labor, and you touch them where they are peculiarly tender and sensitive. Treat them as though you expected full work of them, and make no allowance for the infirmities of age, and you wound them again. In dealing with them, Scylla is to be avoided on the one hand and Charybdis on the other. But it is worth the trial to minister to one who has borne the burden and heat of the day, and who has sown for others to reap. Show a kind and thoughtful regard for his feelings; give him something to do that he can do; be respectful, deferential, reverential even, and you will reap a rich harvest of hope in a heart in which, perhaps, it was almost dead, and of gratitude and affection for yourself; the more so as the old man is beginning to distrust his own powers and sometimes asks himself the question if his day of usefulness is not past.—The Religious Herald.

POWER OF THE UNSEEN.

God's great men, from Abraham to Livingstone, have been men with whom the future has overshadowed the present. Nothing but this can save a man from becoming a slave to the present material life. There is a fascination about the wonderful material developments of the day which tends to draw men away from the unseen and make them satisfied with the visible. There is nothing which makes the heroic fiber of such men as Paul, Luther, and the Pilgrim fathers, like a sublime dissatisfaction with the present in the contemplation of the future. Such visions set men free from discouragement and oppression and fear, and make them able to stand fearlessly for the right. Mystics we all need to become in the sense of seeing beyond our beautiful earthly cities a city eternal, whose builder is God.—Sunday School Times.

SELECTING A JURY.

The fact that one of the courts of a great State has spent twelve days in the selection of twelve men to serve on a jury for the trial of a murder case, and that 504 talesmen were compelled to leave their business, in answer to a summons from the court, has once more emphasized the necessity of some change in the manner of selecting juries. The latitude which is now allowed the interested parties is so wide, and the restrictions which surround a talesman are so narrow, that the wheels of justice move very slowly. The accused in the case mentioned has already been in jail more than eight months. After all this delay it took twelve days to select a jury, and the trial may be prolonged indefinitely. To subject an innocent man to such an agony is the refinement of cruelty; to defer the punishment of a guilty one so long is a travesty of justice.—Zion's Herald.

ALARMING.

Canon Wilberforce delivered a temperance address in London the other day in which he solemnly declared that there has been an enormous increase of intemperance in England during the past 30 years. "The register-general's reports show that deaths from intemperance among men had increased 58 per cent. and among women by 100 per cent."

These figures are literally appalling! The case is not so terrible here, but it is bad enough. In spite of all the churches and temperance organizations and philanthropic people are doing, drunkenness steadily increases. And drunkenness in the slums is not our greatest present danger. It is the revival of tippling in high social circles—the debauchery not of the alley, but of the boulevard.—Epworth Herald.

Not accuracy nor speed, but accuracy first, and then speed is the law of successful effort. The man who tries to do a thing quickly first, and accurately afterwards, is hardly less wise than the man who is content to do a thing well without regard to the time consumed in doing it. If you want to go off on the next train, you need to be accurate in finding the way to the depot, but if you have no regard for speed you may get left.—Baltimore Advocate.

A NEEDED REFORM.

The Legislatures of the various States ought to enact laws prohibiting the horribly demoralizing posters of the theaters and vaudevilles. Just now they are portraying acts of murder, the stabbing of women and men; of countrymen introduced to scandalous scenes; and of villainies of all kinds. We do not see how boys could more effectively be taught that crime is heroic, and obscenity simply amusing. The streets of a city and the highways of the country are public property, and if they are thus employed to the detriment of public morals, and to the offense of decent people, the public and every citizen in the measure of his influence, is responsible for it. This thing has been cutting lower and lower, becoming more and more shameless and pernicious. It is time to stop it short.—The Observer.

If I owe a man a dollar and demand a receipt after I have handed over 99 cents, he either laughs at me or gets angry, depending on his disposition. It is doubtful if he could be argued out of his impression that the dollar is not paid until the last penny is out of my pocket and in his. Yet I might claim that the minute the cipher in $0.99 is changed into a one in $1.00 I have entered on the second dollar, none of which is part of my debt. He would reply that he did not care how the sum looked in writing, he must have that penny. The nineteenth century is not complete until its hundredth year is ended. That hundredth year has the first two figures belonging to the following century, for the same reason that the last cent of the dollar has a one on the left of the decimal point—because the first cent of the dollar and the first year of the Christian era were numbered not zero but one. This looks simple enough, yet some very able men have brought up the old question again in the attempt to prove that 1900 is the first year of the twentieth century. All their arguments come down in the end to this, that the date looks as if the century had changed. Things, however, are not always what they seem. Also some wise men are easily fooled.—Standard.

Is time a sacred thing to you? Do you realize that in its right use are bound up all your hopes and prospects of satisfaction and success in life? Is it a thing so sacred to you that you fully understand that if you spend time foolishly, you destroy self-respect; if you misapply it, you are parting with all prospects of success in life; if you abuse it, you forfeit the hope of wealth and fortune and honor in life; if you waste it, you abuse God's best gift and sin against him? He who rightly appreciates the value and sacredness of time will neither waste it with frivolous companions nor in the performance of foolish deeds. He will be choice both of his companions and of his actions. He will be afraid to do or think less than the best possible things at all times. He will walk circumspectly before the Lord, ever seeking to redeem the time.—Standard.

Religion is no haggard and stern monitress, waving you from enjoyment; she is a strong angel, leading you to noble joy. The Bible is not a book of repressions and prohibitions; it is a book of kindling inspiration. God would not have you crouch like a poor, timid, startled creature, torturing yourself with a terrified watch over your lower desires. He would see you stand erect and manly, like a victor, in heroic confidence, with these enemies beneath your feet.—Archdeacon Farrar.

I believe that the greatest revival that the United States of America has ever seen is at our doors. The trouble with many revival movements of recent years is that they were too shallow. I believe in the old Methodist revivals—those that transform many and set them to doing the Lord's work with all their strength.—Bishop Thoburn.

Some men are so excessively acute at detecting imperfections that they scarcely notice excellences. In looking at a peacock's train they would fix on every spot where the feathers were worn, or the colors faded, and see nothing else.—Archbishop Whately.

EPWORTH LEAGUE DEPARTMENT.

"ALL FOR CHRIST."

REV. THOMAS B. CLIFFORD, Morgan City, La., EDITOR.

MISSISSIPPI.

REV. HENRY G. HAWKINS, Madison, Miss., ASSOCIATE EDITOR.

It is just four months until the Mississippi Epworth Leaguers have their annual State gathering. We will be held to account for the way in which we spend these months. Shall we improve the talents already given?

The statistical report at the session of the Mississippi Conference showed that there are now eighty Leagues within the bounds of the Conference. This is four times as many as there were a few years ago. We are coming up; but still our work in this direction is very imperfect, and in a very crude state. Workmen are needed; young men and women who will lay this cause as a burden on their hearts. Not much prominence was given to the Epworth League and Sunday-school interests at the recent session of the Mississippi Conference. It seems that these causes must depend for their inspiration upon the special gatherings devoted to each during the year.

The New Hope League on Vaughan's circuit raised thirty dollars on the Conference collections during the past year.

We missed the face and words of Dr. H. M. DuBose at the Conference at Vicksburg, but we hope to see him at the Epworth League Conference to be held at Vicksburg in April.

The Mississippi Conference Board of Education, in its recent report, urged the pastors to make use of their Epworth Leagues in raising the Twentieth Century Fund. Let the forces be rallied; the time is short.

The nineteenth century draws to a close. The changes among men and the nations during its latter years have been many. The world is making awful strides forward. But the young people of to-day whom the Father may spare to live long in the world shall see yet greater changes. Indeed, their hands will turn the wheels of change. Will you, my reader, prepare yourself to take a part, or will you skulk away to your tent and be a mere spectator of what others do?

MANLY HOME.

For the next week's issue of the ADVOCATE we will furnish a full report to date of amounts paid in on the Manly Home. I am glad to say that Bro. Manly is now in his new home, and it is newly paid for—that is, within a hundred dollars. Let the brethren send in their contributions at once. R. M. BLOCKER.

In order that a watch may give good service it must have a mainspring well adjusted to its requirements. It is the same with a human being, and the only mainspring that can cause a human being to give satisfactory service is the Spirit of the living God.—W. S. Casemore.

MEMOIR OF MRS. PRESTON COOPER.

Lucretia Finch Eppes was born in Newberry district, S. C., Nov. 4, 1814, and died at the home of her daughter, Mrs. L. S. Burdine, near Enterprise, Miss., Nov. 22, 1899. She was the grand daughter of Edward Finch, of the noted Bethel Academy, a Methodist School in South Carolina. In the year 1794 the South Carolina Annual Conference was held at the home of Mr. Finch, and was presided over by Bishop Asbery.

The subject of this sketch joined the Methodist Church early in life, and at the time of her death had been a member seventy-five years. She was twice married; first, to Mr. Middleton, and after his death to Rev. Preston Cooper, late of the Mississippi Conference. Mr. Cooper was a man of deep piety, of great force of character, and of superior talents as a preacher. In his day he filled the most important appointments of his Conference with great acceptability. He was the founder of Cooper's Wells, near Raymond, in Hinds county, Miss. He died Aug. 1, 1858. Mrs. Cooper was a widow 41 years.

Our departed sister was the mother of ten children, the youngest of whom is the Rev. Inman W. Cooper, president of Centenary College, Jackson, La. Upon his worthy shoulders the mantle of his illustrious father has fallen. Mrs. Cooper was known and loved by a wide circle of acquaintances, who saw in her many excellent traits of character, among the most prominent of which was unselfishness. She loved her God supremely and her neighbors sincerely. In the spirit of self-sacrifice she devoted her life to the good of others. Like her Savior, she recognized the fact that she came into this world not to be ministered unto, but to minister, and she did it wisely and well. But her labors on earth are ended, and doubtless in a rich reward in heaven. She retained the use of her mental faculties to the last, and just before her departure repeated the comforting words of the Psalmist, "The Lord is my Shepherd," etc.

At her request she was buried in Edwards, Miss., by the side of her little granddaughter, Florence Cooper, who died twelve years ago. Her death saddened many hearts below, but gladdened many above. May her children and grandchildren, without an exception, meet her in heaven!

W. B. LEWIS.

Mr. J. M. Lee, Jr., who has for many years been land agent for the Queen and Crescent system at Monroe, La., has been appointed industrial commissioner with charge of the location of factories and various industries. It is the intention of the management of the Q. and C. to vigorously push the location of factories of all kinds on the lines of the roads comprising that system, being fully assured that progress and success are to be attained along that line of improvement.

Mr. Lee will continue to have his headquarters at Monroe, La., and will bring to bear the experience and knowledge gained in many years of service practically in the same line of usefulness where his abilities have been fully shown.

The Rev. Thos. J. Newell, of the Memphis Conference, has had published an account book for stewards, which for cheapness and convenience is not surpassed. It can be had of him at Brownsville, Tenn.; G. W. Bachman, Winona, Miss., and the Methodist Publishing House, Nashville. Price 5 cents each.

From Bro. Griffin.

Rev. M. L. Burton is still treasurer of Orphans' Home, and Enterprise, Miss., his postoffice, to whom all remittances should be made. My address as agent for the Orphans' Home will be Summit, Miss. W. T. GRIFFIN.

TAKE TIME BY THE FORELOCK.

Owing to an increase in the price of paper, we will not be able to continue the very low prices at which we are now offering our premium Bibles. The present rates, however, will continue until the first of February, unless our stock becomes exhausted. Those who want Bibles, or who expect to want them any time soon, would do well to order at once, as the increase in prices is likely to be permanent. All dealers will be obliged to make an advance in prices, unless their prices are already too high. Even if your subscription has not expired, it would be wise to renew at once, and take advantage of our present prices on Bibles. We invite special attention to our Combination Bible. It is the very best edition of "the Book of books."

REV. W. C. BLACK,
512 Camp St., New Orleans.

My character to-day is, for the most part, simply the resultant of all the thoughts I have ever had, or all the feelings I have ever cherished and all the deeds I have ever performed. It is the entirety of my previous years packed and crystallized into the present moment. So that character is the quintessence of biography; so that everybody who knows my character—and there is no keeping character under cover—knows what for forty or more years I have been doing and thinking Character is, for the most part, simply habit become fixed.—Rev. Chas. H. Parkhurst.

How often in the prayer meeting we hear a man pretending to address the Almighty, while he is in fact trying to explode a bomb for the special discomfort of his neighbor a few pews away! Others drag into their prayers all sorts of information, which they impose on the Lord and those who are listening. Real prayer is something very different. It is the earnest cry of the soul clearly directed, and never goes to the dead-letter office. A good many churches would stand a better chance for a revival if a stop could be put to the dead-letter prayers.—From "Anecdotes and Morals."

A happier world is always a better world; and if it be the true man's duty to make the world better, so far as in him lies, there rests upon him an obligation to promote the happiness of the world also. This can be done only if he be happy himself. You might as well expect a snow ball to warm a room as an unhappy man to cheer others. Happiness, then, is really a personal and Christian duty—first, to be happy oneself, and then to make others happy.—Zion's Herald.

Centenary College.

Our college is in debt to Bishop John C. Keener, D. D., for two boxes of valuable books. The gift is timely and greatly appreciated. The interest of our senior Bishop has been an inspiration to the friends of Centenary College. A royal welcome awaits him when he is able to visit us. We have the promise of quite a number of boys after the holidays. The faculty has leased the Pharr Hall to Robt. W. Vaughn, who will furnish meals at $8 per scholastic month. Our faculty is giving eminent satisfaction, and the work of the college progresses finely. We trust our friends will send us special contributions for Centenary on the Twentieth Century Fund. We trust that our friends while contributing to the Twentieth Century Fund will not forget to pay the interest on the endowment notes. A new obligation does not make void an old one. We would appreciate gifts of books, old or new, and current literature.

President Centenary College

URIC ACID

Causes More Diseases in the Human System than Any Other Poison.

To Prove What Swamp-Root, the Great Kidney Remedy, Will Do for You, Every Reader of the "CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE" May Have a Sample Bottle Free by Mail.

Science has demonstrated that in a few days' time you brew enough Uric Acid in your body to produce death.

Your kidneys are your only salvation.

BECAUSE when they are well they filter out this deadly poison.

So when your kidneys are sick, you can understand how quickly your entire body is affected, and how every organ seems to fail to do its duty.

They are all being slowly poisoned.

Uric Acid starts in the system more different kinds of trouble and suffering than any other form of poisoning. It irritates the nerves, makes you dizzy, restless, sleepless and irritable. Causes rheumatism and neuralgia, pain or dull ache in the back, joints and muscles; makes your head ache and back ache, causes indigestion, stomach and liver trouble; you get a sallow, yellow complexion; makes you feel as though you had heart trouble; you lack ambition, get weak and waste away.

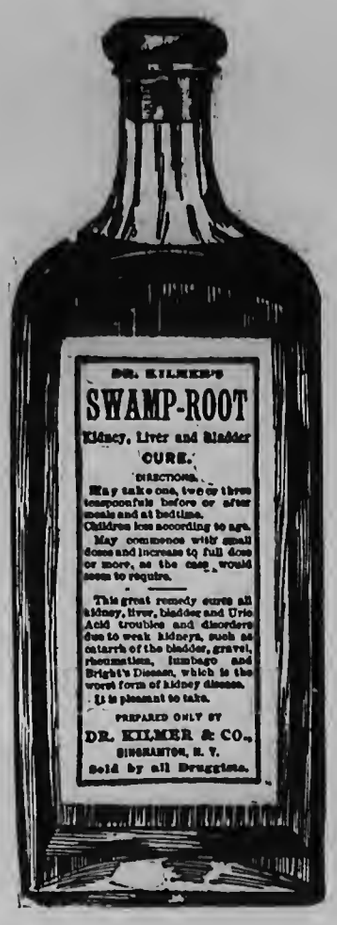
The cure for these troubles is Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, the world-famous kidney remedy.

It instantly relieves the congested, over-worked kidneys, and gradually brings them back to health. In taking Swamp-Root you afford natural help to nature, for Swamp-Root is the most perfect healer and gentle aid to the kidneys that is known to medical science.

Healthy kidneys keep down the excess of uric acid, and you soon feel the benefit in new health and strength.

Swamp-Root should at once be taken upon the least sign of ill-health. It will make you well and is for sale the world over in bottles of two sizes and two prices, fifty-cent and one-dollar.

Swamp-Root is used in the leading hospitals; recommended by skillful physicians in their private practice; and is taken by doctors themselves who have kidney ailments, because they recognize in it the greatest and most successful remedy that science has ever been able to compound.



DR. KILMER'S
SWAMP-ROOT
Kidney, Liver and Bladder
CURE.
DIRECTIONS.
May take one, two or three teaspoonfuls before or after meals and at bedtime.
Children less according to age.
May commence with small doses and increase to full dose or more, as the case would seem to require.
This great remedy cures all kidney, liver, bladder and Uric Acid troubles and disorders due to weak kidneys, such as catarrh of the bladder, gravel, rheumatism, lumbago and Bright's Disease, which is the worst form of kidney disease.
It is pleasant to take.

Two Verdicts.

"After a fair and impartial trial you are judged guilty by this court, and you are sentenced to be hung by the neck until you are dead." The solemn tones of the judge, the despairing face of the prisoner, and the painful stillness of the court-room, makes it a scene of awful impress. Now turn to a brighter scene at the home circle. A mother radiant with joy over the recovery of a child snatched from the clutches of Malaria. An entire family rejoicing, and praising the merits of Dicky Chillifuge, and giving their verdict that Chillifuge is without an equal for swiftness to cure.

TAKE NOTICE

That we are now handling two different styles of the Holman Bible in Bourgeois type. One we sell to paid-up subscribers at $1.50, the other at $1.30. The $1.30 Bible is substantially the same we have hitherto sold at $1.50. The one we sell at $1.50 is a far better Bible than has ever been sold at such a price. It is a marvel of cheapness. KEEP PUSHING.

Keep pushing, 'tis wiser
Than sitting aside
And dreaming and sighing,
And waiting the tide.
In life's earnest battle,
They only prevail
Who daily march onward,
And never say fail.

With eyes ever open
And tongue that's not dumb,
And heart that to sorrow
Will never succumb;
You'll battle and conquer,
Though thousands assail.
How strong and how mighty
Who never say fail!

Keep pushing and pushing,
And elbow your way,
Unheeding the envy
That seeks to betray.
All obstacles vanish,
All enemies quail,
Before the strong-hearted
Who never say fail.
In life's rosy morning,
In manhood's firm pride,
Let this be your motto,
Your footsteps to guide—
In storm or in sunshine,
Whatever assail,
We'll onward and conquer,
And never say fail.

OVER-STATEMENTS.

As asserted by these women, not one of them was ever startled by some sudden occurrence, but always "frightened to death." Never a women because of a delayed meal felt the condition of hunger, but was "almost starved." She is never cold, but "positively frozen;" and so to the end of the chapter. The frequency of a woman's nearness to death is so marked, in her conversation, that when the critical time comes we imagine she ought, from familiarity with the sensation, to shuffle off this mortal coil with inexpressible ease and grace. And perhaps it is from this claimed familiarity that she is able to hoodwink the king of terrors, for she lives to be a hundred much more frequently than falls to the lot of men.

This potent spell, this charm of the inexact, cast over us in early life, is the fountain-head of the all-prevalent insincerity that marks more or less every individual's career; and ungallant as it may seem to make the statement, this brief dealing with plain facts necessitates that women are to be placed in the front rank in this regard. Not a new bonnet at Easter or new dress at a reception but calls forth the "How lovely!" and "Perfectly exquisite!" that ripple charmingly from rosy lips, but did not bubble up from the heart. Alas! the fair creatures, when they reach home, say to themselves or to their sisters, of this same bonnet or dress, "Wasn't it horrid!" And in the crowded street, when they meet their acquaintances, every one for the moment is their dearest friend, and the sole pleasure of the morning had been to meet them; out of hearing, how frequently this dearest friend is stabbed in the back! How very wonderful and incomprehensible is this power of the inexact, and how very unnecessary.—Lippincott's Magazine.

A SUGGESTIVE ACTION.

One of the good deeds worth recording is that of certain of the owners of the Newport News, Hampton, and Old Point Railway. Last December the company was shown to have a surplus to its credit in the bank of twenty-four thousand dollars. Mr. Darling, his wife, his son, and his son's wife own two-thirds of the stock. They proposed to the stockholders to divide the surplus among the employees, to whose faithfulness much of the success of the road was, of course, due. The other stockholders objecting, Mr. Darling and his family divided their share, being sixteen thousand dollars. Miss Grace Hones, formerly a teacher in the Hampton Institute, tells the story in The Boston Transcript: "At half-past two o'clock on Christmas morning, after all the cars were in and housed, the employees, at the call of Mr. Darling, met at the power house, for what purpose they knew not, for they had already received their usual Christmas turkey. Here they found Mr. Darling awaiting them, and he proceeded to present each one, from the cashier in the office to the track greaser, an envelope containing a check, in amounts varying from fifty to one thousand dollars, according to the time each employee had been with the company. The effect upon the men can be better imagined than described. More than one shed tears of joy. Among them were several hard-working men whose little homes were still cumbered by a mortgage, and through their tears they beheld the magic piece of paper that would wipe the debt out and leave them sole possessors."—The Churchman.

SOMETHING EVERY GIRL SHOULD CULTIVATE.

If there is anything girls should cultivate it is repose. Simply do not allow your feet to swing and your brows to pucker, but compel face and feet to mind your will, and will to be calm and tranquil on the outside if not beneath the surface. A result of this will be that the looking quiet, and moving gently, and holding yourself in control, will bring about a restful condition of mind. You will feel better and be less nervous if you put down the expression of nervousness.

Indigestion is at the bottom of half of our maladies. Schoolgirls should eat plenty of good food at the right times, and should avoid too many sweets. Many a headache and fit of the blues can be traced back to a pound of candy, delicious candy, but too much for the stomach to manage. Bonbons and caramels and all such tempting confections should be eaten after a meal as dessert, not munched all day between times.

One more hint. Never put off writing a letter of thanks the very first day you receive a gift. No matter how small the courtesy shown you, return it in a little graceful note.

In taking leave, thank your entertainers for the pleasure they have given you, and as soon as you reach home write a note to your hostess again thanking her, and assuring her of your safe return.

A POINTER FOR BOYS.

Edward W. Bok, editor of The Ladies' Home Journal, gives the following, among other reasons, for having never tasted liquor: "Another thing which led me to make up my mind never to touch liquor was the damage which I saw was wrought by it upon some of the finest minds with which it was ever my privilege to come into contact, and I concluded that what had resulted injuriously to others might prove so to me. I have seen, even in my few years of professional life, some of the smartest, yea, brilliant, literary men dethroned from splendid positions, owing to nothing else than this indulgence in wine. I have know men with thousands of dollars per year, occupying positions which hundreds would strive a lifetime to attain, come to beggary from drink. Only recently there applied to me, for any position I could offer him, one of the most brilliant editorial writers in the newspaper profession—a man who two years ago easily commanded one hundred dollars for a single editorial in his special field. That man became so unreliable from drink that the editors are now afraid of his articles, and although he can to-day write as forcible an editorial as at any time during his life, he sits in a cellar in one of our cities writing newspaper wrappers for one dollar per thousand."—Exchange.

THE PEOPLE WHO ARE LOVED.

The people who win their way into the inmost recesses of others' hearts are not usually the most brilliant and gifted, but those who have sympathy, patience, self-forgetfulness, and that indefinable faculty of eliciting the better natures of others. Most of us know of persons who have appealed to us in this way. We have many friends who are more beautiful and gifted, but there is not one of them whose companionship we enjoy better than that of the plain-faced man or woman who never makes a witty or profound remark, but whose simple quality of human goodness makes up for every other deficiency. And if it came to a time of real stress, when we felt that we needed the support of real friendship, we should choose above all to go to this plain-faced man or woman, certain that we should find intelligent sympathy, a charitable construction of our position and difficulties, and a readiness to assist us beyond what we ought to take. If you could look into human hearts you would be surprised at the faces they enshrine there, because beauty of spirit is more than beauty of face or form, and remarkable intellectual qualities are not to be compared with unaffected human goodness and sympathy.—Watchman.

Mothers, train your boys to be neat in the house. They should be taught to look after themselves, and to keep their hats and coats in their proper places. A boy can help clear away after a meal, sweep the floor, polish the stove, or wash the dishes, just as effectively as a girl. He, as a rule, is stronger. He will love his home more, and when he becomes a man, and has a home of his own, he will respect his wife all the more for having been taught to respect his mother and sisters.—Selected.

A Small Beginning.

A little snow ball on the summit of the Alps, rolled up by the winds, moves slowly downward. Gaining in strength and size, it grows rapidly to giant proportions, and finally becomes the frightful avalanche, destroying everything in its path. Consumption begins with a little cough, a trifling pain, a passing flush on the cheeks. This is but the beginning of the avalanche, consumption, that knows no pity, recognizes no distinction. Just at the beginning thousands commit the error of not checking and curing the disease by using MARSDEN'S PECTORAL BALM.

OBITUARIES.

Obituaries of 200 words published free. For all words in excess of that number send one cent per word.

McGEE—SARAH ANGELINE COWSERT was born in Pickens county, Ala., Aug. 11, 1835. Here she resided twelve years. Moving with parents to Holmes county, she resided at Goodman five years. Removing to Winston county, Miss., after four years she was married to Henry Bonner McGee, March 9, 1852. They lived near Durant till 1867, when they moved to Acona, where they resided till death. Mrs. McGee joined the Baptist Church in Winston county, but joined the Methodist church at Acona with her husband. In 1876 they moved to their present home near Tchula, where she died Wednesday morning at 1:30 o'clock Aug. 9, 1899.

Mrs. McGee was a woman of great energy and force of will. She was noted for economy and good management; was a fine housekeeper and had strong business sense. She was quite attractive in person, and kept a neat and tasteful house. She was hospitable, and enjoyed entertaining her friends. Her home and heart were alike open to her guests. She was a real helpmeet to her husband. She was fond of reading, and never ceased to be interested in people and books. She was a faithful loyal church member. She loved her church and its ministry. She was a devoted woman. She loved the prayer and song and sermon of the sanctuary, and the devotion of family circle and the closet. After a life unselfish toil and sacrifice for those she loved, she has gone to the rest that remains to the people of God. N. G. AUGUSTUS.

GRANTHAM—FRANCIS ALBERT GRANTHAM was born Nov. 14, 1849; joined the Methodist church in 1879; married Mrs. E. L. Buchanan, Dec. 20, 1880, and died Oct. 15, 1898, at his home in Baldwin, Miss.

In the church, as well as the home of the deceased, is made sad. Our dear brother loved the songs of Zion, and for many years his voice was heard in the choirs of church and prayer (Bath-shoo). He was a devoted husband and father and his gentleness at home, his love for God and the church, his kindness to and for the ministers, his religion in business affairs are worthy of imitation. He taught not so much by precept as by example. He lived the truth, never intruding himself upon the views and opinions of others, so that, without exception, the sweetness, the amiability of character, impressed and elevated his associates. His occupation was the culture of flowers and with the rarest and the beautiful often adorned the house of worship, lending this influence to the glory of God. His service was controlled as to unkindness toward his neighbor. If he had no word of commendation, he was silent. A lover of God, the church and humanity has left us. Sweet, gentle spirit, loving and kind, thou hast gone from the thorny paths of earth to the beautiful fields, the flowery plains of rest beyond.

J. F. EVANS.

BAILEY—RICHARD C. BAILEY was born in Amelia county, Va., March 18, 1821; married Mary H. Robertson in 1841; professed religion and united with the church the same year; BEAM—The subject of this obituary, Mrs. MOLLIE BEAM, was born Oct. 9, 1844. She was the daughter of Alexander and Lucretia Carruth. She had six brothers and two sisters, all of whom are living but one brother. The Carruth family are Methodist.

Sister Beam was converted Oct. 28, 1864, and joined the Presbyterian Church in the town of Summit, Miss. She was an active Christian. She was very gifted in prayer, and always cheerful and hopeful. On Dec. 13, 1883, she was married to Mr. C. W. Beam, who was a widower with several children, and some of them small. She was a kind wife, and very much devoted to her step-children and the children born to her. She loved the Methodist Church, but said, "I do not think that it is necessary to change churches." On Aug. 28, 1899, after about one week's illness, she died at her home in the town of Summit. She leaves a husband and her step-children, and a host of relatives, to mourn their loss. How they will miss her! I trust that her beautiful life will help those that survive to appreciate the opportunity of doing God's will, and that they may so live that they will meet again to part no more. We pray God's blessings on all the bereaved. B. H. RAWLS.

Tylertown, Miss.

BOLDEN—Mrs. M. L. BOLDEN was born Aug. 4, 1834, and died Nov. 10, 1899. She leaves behind her three children to mourn the loss of a loving, faithful mother. She was on a visit to her son-in-law, S. A. Lewis, and while there was taken ill. She was sick but a few days, and was conscious to the last. On the morning of the tenth she told her loved ones that she would like to live until the next day, that she might see her daughters once more, but said she would not live later than ten o'clock of that morning, and just a few minutes before ten she quietly passed away. She said, "It is well with my soul."

It was the privilege of the writer to know Sister Bolden for several years, and a more devoted Christian one seldom meets. She never missed a service when it was possible for her to go, and she was ready for every good word and work. Not only did she give her time, but she gave liberally of her small means to the cause she loved so well. For her death had no sting; it was only to sleep in Jesus, to awake in the city of God.

May her beautiful life be a light to illumine the pathway of the loved ones left behind, and may they all meet in peace at last in that home where there will be no parting and no more tears! G. A. GUICE.

LANKFORD—Miss E. J. SAUNDERS, daughter of W. P. Saunders, was born in Marion county, Ga., May 2, 1847. She, with her parents, moved to Laurel Hill, Neshoba county, Miss., near a fine school at the old Presbyterian Church (known as the Carolina Church). She entered that school, obtained a classical education, was a perfect belle in society; professed religion and joined the Cumberland Presbyterian Church in the year 1863, thus beautifying her life by her walks of piety, and was married to Mr. J. H. Lankford in the year 1567; was blessed with four children—two girls and two boys—named respectively Eva, Lula, Abbie, and Emery. Later on in her life she, with her affectionate family, moved to Walnut Grove, Newton county, Miss., and thus too far to her church, or to attend her meetings, joined the M. E. Church, and remained. About the first day of December, 1899, she contracted pneumonia, bore her afflictions without a murmur, and at 9 o'clock A. M. the end came, when her spirit took its eternal flight from whence it came.

J. A. MCNAIR, M. D.

Gilbert, La.

BAILEY—JOSSIE A. BAILEY, daughter of Kennon and Lola Bailey, was born Jan. 9, 1892; died July 30, 1899.

ETHEL O. BAILEY, daughter of Kennon and Lola Bailey, was born May 7, 1894; died Aug. 17, 1899.

These two little lights only lingered a sufficient length of time to entwine the tendrils of love about the hearts of parents and loved ones; then were hurried in rapid succession to the spirit world. To the sorrowing parents and remaining children I would say: They're happier now, and have only gone to a brighter world, and wait to welcome you there.

Acona, Miss.

PENN—From Mansfield, La., Sunday, Nov. 19, 1899, little SARAH PENN, only child of Rev. J. V. and Caro Minor Penn, entered on the rest which He bought for her who lay in a manger at Bethlehem. She was born at Boligee, Ala., Dec. 23, 1895, and was an attractive, beautiful baby. There was a touch of seriousness in all she said and did. Her pose, "who lived with God in heaven," was a real personage to her, and the dream of her short life was of the time when she and little mother could be with him. Just as her babyhood dream was realized may the purpose of her life be accomplished through "Him who knows the end from the beginning." LULA GAULDING WATKINS.

The Combination" Bible.

A SUPERB EDITION

of the Holy Scriptures, showing at a glance at the foot of the pages all changes made by the revisers.

New Type. All Proper Names Self-Pronouncing. The Most Valuable Collateral Matter.

There is a steady and increasing demand for first-class Bibles. Everybody is anxious to obtain a copy of the best edition of the Holy Scriptures. Old editions are constantly being replaced by Bibles that are in every way more attractive, and there is practically no limit to the demand.

OUR "COMBINATION" FEATURE.

Hitherto the King James and Revised Versions have been printed in parallel columns, but this makes comparisons of texts tedious and unsatisfactory, and makes the book very unwieldy. We have overcome this difficulty by "combining" the two Versions on the same page, showing at a glance in foot-notes all the Changes Additions and Omissions made by the Revisers.

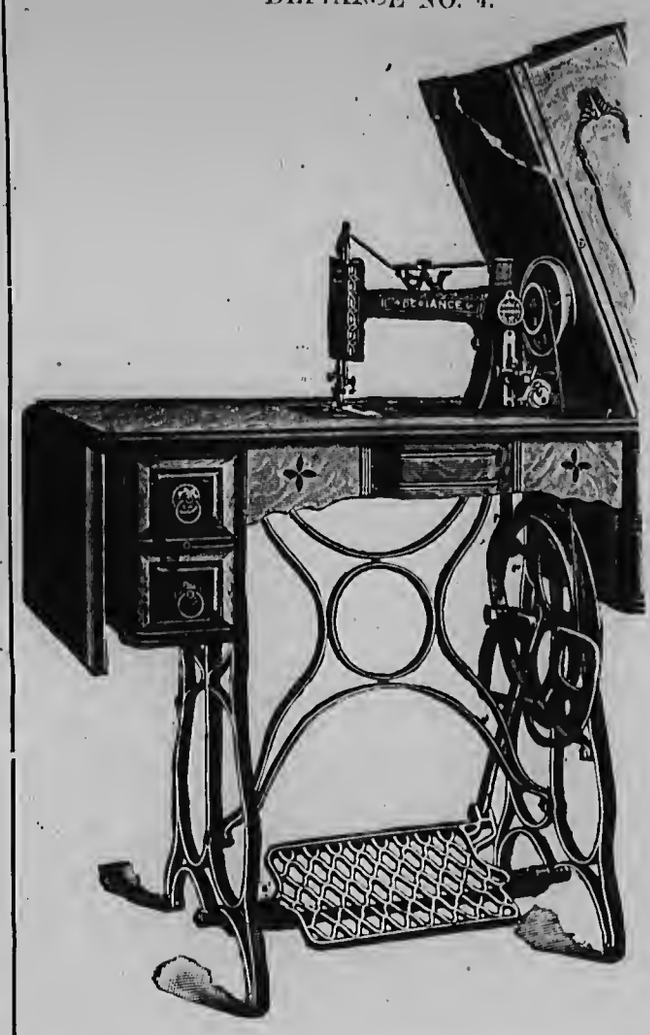
THE OLD VERSION PRINTED IN FULL.

The King James Version is the basis, and this Version is read straight along from the text, while the Revised Version is read from the text in combination with the foot-notes. Our "Combination" Feature has met with universal approval and is strongly endorsed by all leading Divines and Biblical Scholars.

It is only by a comparison of the two Versions that the greatest benefit can be obtained from reading the Holy Scriptures, and this comparison every reader can easily make by our simple arrangement for showing the changes made by the revisers. This is the

New Machine O

DEFIANCE NO. 4.



The Defiance Machine is the perfection of simplicity, durability, speed, strength and ease of operation.

Construction. It is constructed of the best material in use, every bearing, without exception, being of steel or case-hardened.

The Mechanical Devices of this machine are a combination of tried mechanical principles. In detail it differs materially from other machines. Its simplicity is at once apparent and its great durability is admitted by the best mechanical experts.

The Arm is large and roomy, 8x5½ inches in the clear.

No Vibration. This machine does not vibrate. Its motion is easy and quiet.

Lock Stitch. It is a lock-stitch shuttle machine.

Speedy, Light, Quiet. It is as speedy, light and quiet-running as any shuttle machine manufactured.

Double Feed—Positive Four-Motion. The double feed possesses advantages over all others. Its very shape and form obviates all the disadvantages arising from double feeds as they have heretofore been constructed, and combines in this machine all the advantages of both the single and double feed, doing away with the objections to either of them.

The operation of the feed mechanism is positive, giving an accurate four-motion movement to the feed without the use of springs.

The Needle Bar. This machine has a self-lubricating needle-bar, which is always kept clean with cloth, and oil can not drop on the work and soil it.

The Needle is absolutely self-setting. No screwdriver is required in setting, a thumb nut being used instead.

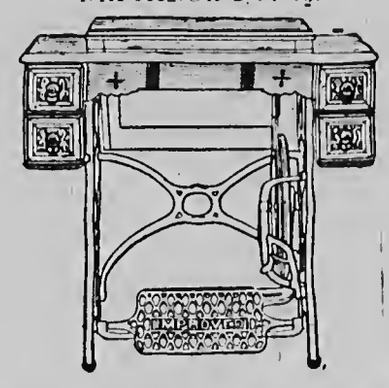
The machine is self-threading. Put in the bobbin, draw the thread towards you, through the slot and, it is done.

The Loose Pulley for winding the bobbins without running the machine is so arranged as to admit of an instantaneous stoppage and starting of the machine without stopping the main movement—a valuable improvement peculiar to this machine.

Automatic Bobbin Winder. The bobbin winder operates automatically, winding the thread on the bobbin regularly and as evenly as the thread on a spool. Can be operated without running the machine.

Extra Attachments, in velvet-lined case, sent free with each machine; 1 Tucker, 1 Hemmer, 1 Foot shirring plate, 1 Hammer set (4 widths) and Binder, 1 Braider (Foot and Slide), 1 Tucker, 1 Feller (one piece), 10 Needles, 6 Bobbins, 1 Wrench, 1 Screwdriver, Oil Can filled with oil, 1 Guage and Thumb-screw, and a Book of Instructions. The Book of Instructions is so profusely illustrated and answers the purpose of a competent teacher.

DEFIANCE NO. 7½.



This cut shows our new and popular style, the No. 7½ Defiance Iron Cabinet perfectly protecting the machine from dust, and making a convenient and ornamental stand. When machine is ready for use the head is in same position as on ordinary style; when through using, it requires only the turning over of the leaf of table, and the sewing machine head drops into the case or cabinet below the top, completely out of sight, forming a handsome table with highly polished drawers.

No. 3 Machine, drop leaf table, bent cover, case of one drawer at each end and center drawer. Dealer's price, $32. Our price, $18.

No. 4 Machine, drop leaf table, bent cover, case of two drawers at each end and center drawer. Dealer's price, $34. Our price, $19.

No. 5 Machine, drop leaf table, bent cover, case of three drawers at each end and center drawer, making seven drawers in all. Dealer's price, $36. Our price, $20.

No. 7½ Machine, Drop head cabinet, case of two drawers at each end and one drawer. Dealer's price, $38. Our price, $23.

All the woodwork is of the best quality, either Light Antique or Golden Oak Finish. For Walnut Woodwork add $2.50 above list prices.

The Mexican Supreme Court has announced a decision disbarring John B Wellcome from practice, because he paid $10,000 to State Senator Clark to influence his vote for United States Senator.

The Duke of Marlborough, the Earl of Warwick, the Earl of Dudley, the Earl of Lonsdale, the Viscount Galway and other members of the English aristocracy have volunteered for service in the campaign against the Boers.

The Interstate Commerce Commission has extended the time within which railways must comply with the requirements of the safety appliance law in using automatic couplers and power of train brakes on freight cars to Aug. 1, 1900.

Gen. Wood formally took charge of the governor general's office in Cuba last week. His first act was to accept the resignations of the members of Gen. Brooke's advisory cabinet, who had rendered themselves obnoxious to the Cubans.

MOZLEY'S LEMON ELIXIR.

A Pleasant Lemon Tonic.

Cures indigestion, headache, malaria, kidney disease, fever, chills, loss of appetite, debility, nervous prostration, heart failure and appendicitis by regulating the Liver, Stomach, Bowels and Kidneys.

Mozley's Lemon Elixir

Cured me of indigestion. I had suffered for ten years. I had tried almost every medicine, but all failed. Since taking Lemon Elixir I can eat anything I like.
W. A. GRIFFITH.
Reevesville, S. C.

Mozley's Lemon Elixir

Cured me of indigestion and heart disease after years of suffering, when all other remedies and doctors had failed.
N. D. COLEMAN.
Beulah, S. C.

Mozley's Lemon Elixir.

I have been a great sufferer from dyspepsia for about fifteen years, my trouble being my liver, stomach and bowels, with terrible headaches. Lemon Elixir cured me. My appetite is good, and I am well. I had taken a barrel of other medicine that done me no good.
CHARLES GIBHARD.
No. 1515 Jefferson St., Louisville, Ky.

Mozley's Lemon Elixir

Cured me of enlarged liver, nervous indigestion and heart disease. I was unable to walk up stairs or to do any kind of work. I was treated by many physicians, but got no better until I used Lemon Elixir. I am now healthy and vigorous.
C. H. BALDWIN.
No. 98 Alexander St., Atlanta, Ga.

MOZLEY'S LEMON HOT DROPS

Cures all Coughs, Colds, Hoarseness, Sore Throat, Bronchitis, Hemorrhages, and all throat and lung diseases. Elegant, reliable.

25c at druggists. Prepared only by Dr. H. Mozley, Atlanta, Ga.

A Serious Decision.

"Why CHILLIFUGE Won't Cure Chills"—is a question that brings to mind the story of a society of learned men formed for debating problems.

The question was presented: "Why a fish weighing ten pounds, put into a vessel of known weight, filled with water, did not increase the weight?" After hours of hot debate the fool of the club announced that it did, for while the debate had been going on he had tried the experiment.

Beef Steak in a Bottle.

That fresh, juicy beef, ready for digestion, can be made into a delicious cordial is a marvel, but chemistry has accomplished it. Sick people at a distance from markets and needing the nourishment afforded by beef tea can procure Dicks' NUTRITIVE ELIXIR and find it the best liquid food and stimulant known. For loss of appetite, weak digestion, debility, typhoid fever, and consumption it is invaluable.

* C. A. Snow & Co., Patent Lawyers, opposite the United States Patent Office, Washington, D. C., who have actual clients in every city and town of the United States and Canada, report that never before in their 25 years practice has the work of the Office been so well up to date. They claim that patents can now be procured in less than half the time formerly required.

EXTRA GOOD ORGANS

"Epworth organs cost more to make than the common kind. But our direct-from-factory selling saves that heavy middle expense. By saving in the selling, we put more in the making.
The more people know how good the Epworth is—and how we deal—the more our business grows. Write for catalogue today.

Winona, Miss., Dec. 20, 1899.

"My grace is sufficient for thee." However weak, through sin or through sorrow, we may be, we have God's precious promise that his grace will be sufficent for us. Even then if we seem entering death's dark valley, that grace can either bring us back to life, or sustain us through the shadows, or into the sunshine of Jesus' presence.—Sunshine.

All men are our brothers; and when we injure them by lies, which cut like a sharp razor, by sneers, by innuendoes, by intrigues, by slander and calumny, by hatred, malice and all uncharitableness, by want of thought, or by want of heart, by the lust of gain, by neglect, by absorbing selfishness, we are inheritors of the spirit of the first murderer.—Dean Farrar.

FERRY'S SEEDS

Thousands of gardeners depend on Ferry's Seeds every year and never suffer disappointment. Cheap substitutes bring loss, not paying crops. It pays to pay a little more for FERRY'S SEEDS. Ferry reads per paper everywhere, and always worth it. Always the Best. 1900 Seed Annual free.

A GOOD INVESTMENT.

Viola, Ky., Dec. 4th, 1899.

Dr. D. M. Bye,
Indianapolis, Indiana.

DEAR SIR:—

I should have written to you long since, but have waited to see if your treatment had made a permanent cure. I will now give you a statement of the case. Received the second course of treatment about the first of April and followed your directions closely, and in a short time the Cancer sloughed out and in a reasonable length of time took place healed nicely, and to-day no one could tell from my father's appearance that he had ever been afflicted with such a horrible thing as he was suffering with twelve months ago. My father now looks only four months of being 70 years old, and I feel that I never can be able to express my thanks and gratitude to you for relieving him of so much suffering, and I feel better over what I paid for his relief than any investment I ever made, and I will ever consider you one of the greatest benefactors of mankind.

With best wishes for your success I subscribe myself,
Your friend and brother,
JOHN W. MOORE.
